I don't know how else to say that is not what transpired. It is not even a matter of opinion, it's a matter of record. All there was on the evening, one week ago Tuesday, was a request to the committee chairman on behalf of this member to rule a motion presented by the Liberal Party out of order. The chairman of the committee ruled, after an hour's debate, that the matter was out of order. His ruling was challenged. We upheld the chairman's ruling. We then immediately moved a motion establishing a steering committee in an effort to establish the order of business the resources development committee would deal with.

That was subsequently upheld and they immediately met on Wednesday morning to consider the order of business. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk came in here Thursday afternoon, almost 48 hours later, and said to this Legislature, "because his members and the members of the New Democratic Party have voted to postpone any consideration of this matter by the committee."

Sir, it's not what happened. It is not in dispute. That is imputing motives to the party across the House and to this party. That we were trying to obstruct the consideration of a matter which my friends to the right considered important. We too considered it important, and that is why the steering committee met Wednesday morning, 36 hours before my friend raised this matter in the manner in which he did.

I say to you, sir, that I do not get thrown out of this building readily. In 12 years, that was only my second time out. I don't relish it, I'm sorry.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He almost holds the record.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you, sir, that I think it's time the Speaker might look at what transpired there and look to standing order 19(d)(9) to see if our privileges and our integrity have been kicked around, if I can use that term, by our friends to the right.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize to you and to this Legislature, not because of what I said—I'm sorry, I can't do that. I apologize because I have made everyone feel uncomfortable; I have broken the great rules this place operates by. But I cannot sit by and accept that we tried to prevent a matter being discussed, and my friends to the right saying they are the only ones who want to look at it. I remind you, sir, that it was this party that fought the great battle of uranium in Elliot Lake and they didn't join in. We didn't get involved in that.

I just say that I cannot accept what he said. I will apologize to the House for what I have said, but I will not withdraw my remarks to that member.

Mr. Nixon: With respect, may I just speak briefly, Mr. Speaker? I'm sure you are aware we could have a lengthy, perhaps interesting, debate as to what the importance of the course of events referred to by the member for Sudbury East actually entailed. I don't intend to involve myself in that at this time at all. There may be another occasion, but I doubt it.

Mr. Speaker, if you feel that something on my part was imputing motives, then it is obviously up to you to rule on it. It may or may not be brought to your attention by one of the other members. That is entirely your business. Then I will respond, as I see fit, when that is brought to my attention.

With respect, I would put to you that what the honourable member has said is completely unsatisfactory at this stage. An apology to the House is one thing, but the business of the House must surely consider the position I find myself in and, really, it is a very difficult position indeed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Speaking to the point of order, I hope I can be relatively objective in that we are not involved in this dispute. I listened to the arguments and I think the member for Sudbury East is correct. It is uncomfortable for all of us in the conduct of the affairs of this House. There are occasions when, as the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has said, we are on occasion provoked into making statements which, on reflection, we perhaps question. I may have done this on occasion myself. I can't recall any occasion, but I may have done so.

As I understand the rules of the House, a member is entitled to say another member has made a mistake. It is quite proper for the member for Sudbury East to say to the House that in his view the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is in error. This is said to us five days a week and on weekends. I think that is quite proper. I would say with respect and perhaps with some personal urging to the member for Sudbury East that it is one thing to say an honourable member is wrong and that he has made a mistake—which in this case could be right; I don't know, I wasn't at the committee. It is another thing to suggest that he is not telling the truth.

I wonder if in some way the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk on reflection perhaps felt he was in error and if he then were to suggest maybe he had made a mistake, and if the member for Sudbury East were then to say, "I made a mistake in suggesting the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk was not telling the truth," to me this would perhaps be a potential resolution to the problem. I would hate to see this hanging over us for the next three or four days.

Mr. Speaker, your interpretation of the rules is correct. I am not sure there is anything further you can do under the precedents of this House or any other parliament. I would be very reluctant to have this become a matter for the House itself to deal with. I am just suggesting that if it is possible for those two honourable members to suggest that maybe one was in error and the other was in error in saying that the other wasn't telling the truth, because it was in fact an error and not any attempt to tell something other than the truth, we would have perhaps a solution to this problem.

Mr. MacDonald: Before you reply, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's comments compel me to rise. I have been thrown out of this House only once. Ironically, it was the day after my celebrating my 20th anniversary in the House. It was totally unplanned and I want the House to recall why, because it has a relationship to what has happened here.

I had raised with the then Minister of Agriculture and Food on a number of occasions statements he had made with regard to the bankrupting of BC because of its farm income stabilization plan. I got a letter from the Minister of Agriculture in BC indicating that that simply wasn't the case. I read the letter in the House. I said to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: "If you continue to repeat that statement across the province of Ontario," which he had been doing ad nauseam, "it will be tantamount to a lie," which I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, was totally and wholly a factual statement beyond challenge. It would be tantamount to a lie because I had provided the evidence to show it wasn't the truth.

I was thrown out of the House because I had used that little dirty word "lie." I had said it was "tantamount to a lie," if it continued to be repeated.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the parallel that is emerging now. The member for Sudbury East is convinced that what the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said was not what happened in the committee. The member for Brant has repeated it, repeated it and repeated it. The member for Sudbury East says a repetition is tantamount to a lie, because it is not what happened in the committee.

Mr. Bolan: With you it's either black or white.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no black or white. If a statement that is challenged repeatedly and then described as a lie is not the truth, it is a little precious that we in this House should suddenly use the use of the word "lie" as a trigger word and automatically the person is thrown out of the House.

Mr. Speaker, if you are going to review what the powers of the Speaker perhaps should be, beyond just naming the member and sending him out if he does not withdraw it, I suggest there has to be some mechanism for examining the validity of the contention.

Mr. Bradley: In other words, we're all allowed to call each other liars?

Mr. MacDonald: The proposition that a person should be thrown out of this House for describing an untruth as a lie, I repeat, is precious.

Mr. Cunningham: You've been here too long.

Mr. MacDonald: When you've been around here for a little while, you'll learn some of the facts.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the member for York South has presumed that the definition he would place on a certain word, or how it might be dealt with, has been raised in a way that I think somewhat clouds the issue.

It would appear to me that one of the things a member may not do, as is cited in item (d)10 of rule 19 to which reference has been made, is charge another member with uttering a deliberate falsehood. That is, I believe, simply a statement which every member in this House, all of our guests and those in the galleries understand.

Uttering a deliberate falsehood is lying; if that word is used, it must be withdrawn if we are to have any semblance of continuing order in this House. If that rule is broken, then the matter of using insulting language—in item 11—or speaking disrespectfully of Her Majesty or of others in authority—in item 12—or whatever it may be, will all come apart. We will have lost whatever civility we could hope to have in this House.

It is regrettable, just before the adjournment of what has been a lengthy and certainly a demanding session, that items like this have to come forward to strain the balance of goodwill that exists in the operation of this Legislature.

If I had to accept the view that words once used in that way must not be withdrawn, I for one would be very disappointed in the operation of the Legislature. It would be a disappointment which perhaps is beyond the ability of the Speaker to sit in judgement upon but one which I would hope all members would personally share.

To continue in this impasse is an embarrassment to all of us. If the member for Sudbury East believes, as he quite clearly does, that the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk was wrong, was in error, was inadvertent in his view of what went on in committee, was inaccurate, whatever it might be, that is fine. But to say that he believes the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk lied—as he said—is in my opinion, I regret to say, not an acceptable way of conducting parliamentary practice.

It is not just the use of one word, as the member for York South has said. It is a concept, the acceptance of which is going to be very destructive to the future of the House. I would certainly hope, in what experience I have had in this Legislature, that the member for Sudbury East would withdraw his remarks so the matter could come to an end. Those who wish to write a book on the subject and peruse the details of what was said in Hansard or in committee will be at liberty to do so, but at least the work of the House will be able to continue.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make two or three points. One is to remind all of us that the remarks that have been made have been directed to all of us and it is the assembly that is being held somewhat in contempt by the remark of one honourable member but, in fact, it reflects on us all. You indicated, sir, in your ruling that you had looked through Erskine May and the standing orders and found that what had been done yesterday was to the full extent of your authority. But, I would say that you were looking at the precedents, as I understand, and I would draw your attention to page one of the rule book, item 1(b) which states: "In all contingencies not provided for in the standing orders, the question shall be decided by the Speaker or chairman and in making his ruling the Speaker or chairman shall base his decision on the usages and precedents of the Legislature and parliamentary tradition."

Sir, I have been in the Legislature now for 12 years. There have been many occasions when, in the heat of battle, one honourable member has accused another of deliberately misleading the House or has called someone a liar. It is my own personal recollection that there was not one single occasion during that time, or as far as I have been able to check before that, when such a remark was made that it was not withdrawn by the honourable member at some point or other. I stand to be corrected but certainly in the greatest number of cases, at least, that I can recall, that charge has been withdrawn.

Mr. MacDonald: You are wrong.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would suggest, sir, that while I may be wrong in one or two isolated incidents, if we accept your ruling, sir, and the member for Sudbury East does not withdraw, we, in fact, are setting an extremely dangerous precedent for the future whereby any honourable member can break the rules, call any other honourable member any particular name, get himself thrown out and return the next day.

I say to you, sir, that I believe this to be an extremely dangerous precedent and one that we should not allow to happen.

Mr. Renwick: I rise with some considerable reluctance but my understanding is that the matter has been now transmuted into a challenge of the ruling of the chair by the Liberal Party. If the member for Kitchener or the member for Rainy River wish to challenge the ruling of the Speaker that the rules of the House have been complied with, will they please say so and not continue to exacerbate the situation. If they want to challenge, there's a procedure for challenging the ruling of the chair.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If I may, I am not challenging the ruling of the chair—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member—

Mr. T. P. Reid: —I am only asking that the member for Sudbury East would do the honourable thing.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said and I want to thank all honourable members who have contributed their views and their sentiments on this impasse.

The explanation given by the member for Sudbury East I find doesn't help me one bit, inasmuch as he bases the reason for his action on something that happened elsewhere, in a committee. It's not within my purview, as the Speaker, to decide what happened or what did not happen, or to place an interpretation on events and happenings elsewhere.

I don't think you would want the Speaker to intervene in something that took place in a committee and the problem we are facing now is a difference of opinion between two honourable members of this House about something that happened elsewhere. I hope members appreciate that the chair can't be, nor would you want it to be, involved in deciding the right or the wrong or the proper interpretation of something that happened elsewhere. So I find that the explanation or the intervention by the member for Sudbury East does not help me one bit.

In the generosity of spirit demonstrated by all honourable members around here almost all of the time, I thought the contribution made by the Premier offered a solution to the problem. We do have differences of opinion. This is the place for airing those opinions. Quite often they are quite divergent, even with the same set of facts. The kind of conclusions drawn from the same set of facts can be diametrically opposed; we appreciate that. But it requires civility, it requires a certain generosity, and the only thing I can do is see that the rules of the House are lived up to.

I can only remind the member for Sudbury East that the rules of this House have been offended and ask if the honourable member does not wish to reconsider, in the interests of having an orderly House, so that we can leave here at one o'clock today, saying, "It was resolved; there was an accommodation made," and so that we can come back here on Monday, saying, "It is business as usual. We feel a lot better about it."

Just to repeat what I said earlier: If you wish the chair to intervene any further, these are your rules, they are not mine; I interpret them to the best of my ability. My advisers have concurred that there is nothing I can do at this point, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. Nixon: If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, you indicated in your comments that you felt the Premier had offered a solution. I listened to the Premier carefully, as I did to the other people who expressed their views. He indicated that perhaps if there were a withdrawal from myself, as the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, it could be followed by some sort of withdrawal from the member for Sudbury East. I say again, I am prepared to withdraw any terms, sir, that you felt were unparliamentary or incorrect, and I do that without equivocation.

You also said, in your first reference to this, at the time the member for Sudbury East left the House, that we must presume—and I will tell you, sir, in this particular instance you are, as usual, entirely correct—that we must presume a member believes he is saying and doing the proper and correct thing at the time. However, the use of the word "liar" is something entirely different. Without feeding that particular fire, I assure you, the member for Sudbury East and all others that if there was some reference in my question or some action in a committee which was incorrect or unparliamentary, I withdraw those comments and apologize for them.

I have already said to you, sir, that having searched my mind and not being brought to order for imputing motives or any other matter, I am and was satisfied that those positions were correct. But if I have offended an individual, then certainly I do not want that offence to continue, because I agree with my colleagues who have indicated clearly the business of this House will otherwise either disintegrate or begin to disintegrate.

How can House leaders consider the business of the House in the future, how can we meet with the special committee of the election expenses group to consider these matters, when one member has said another is a liar and will not withdraw it? Surely your advice to us all to settle this—and this was probably our last opportunity so to do—must not be allowed to slip past.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I share the concern that originally provoked this matter on behalf of the member for Sudbury East, and that is that we were finding great difficulty in working out a means by which we could bring to the attention of the House, and get corrected, information which was wrong or incorrect. If I hear the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk correctly, he is now saying that the information he gave to the House was wrong and he is prepared to withdraw that.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not what I heard and I am sure that is not what the honourable member intended to say.

If members are going to make any reference to anything that happened outside the House, I must reiterate it is not within my purview to settle it. I hope members will restrict their remarks to the thing that is distressing the House here this morning, as opposed to something that happened elsewhere.

Mr. Cassidy: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: In the House the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk made reference to what had happened within the committee. He has just said if there was anything he said in the House which was incorrect or unparliamentary, he is prepared to withdraw it.

Mr. MacDonald: And he imputed motives.

Mr. Cassidy: When I said just now does that mean he is prepared to say he was wrong, there was a great uproar on behalf of the members of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's because you didn't understand.

Mr. Cassidy: It seems to me, as the Premier has suggested, if the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is prepared to correct a statement he made in the House last week, which started all this off—

An hon. member: Either you can call a member a liar or you can't. That's the question, right there.

Mr. Cassidy:—and to state that it was incorrect, at that point he opens the door for my colleague from Sudbury East to also clear this matter and allow us to get on with the regular business of the House. I call on the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk to proceed with what he appeared to offer to do just a minute ago.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my statement is clear. You are the person who is the judge. There really can be only one other speaker and that is the member for Sudbury East. If he does not choose to speak, I would suggest we proceed with our business.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Come on Elie; just say he was wrong.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the Premier and I have listened carefully to my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, and the thing that disturbs me and that I ask you to look to, is item 9. I am not asking you to look at what transpired outside but what was said in this Legislature. What was said in this Legislature is what I consider to be erroneous. That is, "because his members and the members of the New Democratic Party have voted to postpone any consideration of this matter." That was said in the Legislature, and that did not happen.

Mr. Rotenberg: Say he's in error.

Mr. Martel: How do you expect me to withdraw? It was very deliberate; he was in the committee with us.

Hon. W. Newman: Be a man for a change; try and be a man.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: I would prefer to be kicked out every day than to withdraw—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already said I cannot, nor will I, discuss anything or place an interpretation on what was done or said elsewhere, or place an interpretation in this House of something that was done elsewhere. There is nothing more I can do. Any other action will have to be taken by others than this chair.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. Roy: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: My point of privilege involves the question

I raised on Tuesday last with the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson). She will recall I asked about the position taken by the four school boards in the Ottawa-Carleton area pertaining to the creation of her French-language board.

Reporting on the discussions that had taken place, the Ottawa Citizen quotes the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) as having said, "The only reason the four boards in Ottawa-Carleton voted in favour of a French board was that French-language education is a nuisance." He went on to say, "Their motives for wanting a French board are not altruistic; they just want to get rid of French-language education."

I checked with the chairmen of the four boards in the Ottawa-Carleton area and all four chairmen deny these statements, saying they are complete fabrication. They say the statements by the member for Carleton are untrue.

Having made these statements, I think it important that the member for Carleton know that such statements are an insult not only to the members of the board, but also to the parents and children—French- and English-speaking—in the Ottawa-Carleton area who are involved in this program. I would think the member should apologize to the members of the board, as such statements are an embarrassment to all of us, including, I am sure, the members of his own party.

In these circumstances I think if the member has any honour he should withdraw and apologize to the members of the board. Otherwise, I think he is really raising questions about his ability to represent one of the Ottawa-Carleton ridings.

Mr. Speaker: It is usually customary when a member has something of that nature where he calls into question a statement by another member, to do that member the courtesy of withholding comment until he is present, so we may get both sides of the situation. There is nothing the chair can do under these circumstances.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DISCOUNT PRACTICES

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in compliance with your request yesterday, I have an answer to a question which is rather lengthy, so I will do it as a ministerial statement.

The member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) asked me two questions about two weeks ago and I would like to answer them. He has referred to press reports concerning the inquiry into discounts and allowances.

As I have already indicated, staff of my ministry are attending the royal commission hearings and if it appears that any of my ministry's regulations are being broken, appropriate action will be taken. The apple commission was notified by the Farm Products Marketing Board immediately of the gist of Mr. Warnock's comments at the inquiry. Later, the actual transcript of the comments made by Mr. Warnock, president of M. Loeb Limited, was forwarded to the apple commission for formal comment.

I will be receiving a report from the Farm Products Marketing Board as soon as the board hears from the apple commission. Apparently there was some delay in getting the full transcript, and this has now been looked after.

The member raised a supplementary question concerning the sale of juice apples by apple packers. I am sure the member is aware that for the sale of fresh apples to packers, growers make their own contracts with the packers. The terms and conditions of a contract are strictly between the buyer and seller. The commission is not involved in the arrangements being made. The contract is for the sale of fresh apples and any apples culled are a byproduct.

Culling is an expense to the packer. The price recovered from apples sold for juice will often do no more than offset the expense of handling. If a grower believes he should receive compensation for culled apples, it is his responsibility to make such arrangements with the packer at the time of contracting. Most if not all growers are aware of this part of their contract with packers.

The apple commission, including directors and committeemen, met recently and decided against changing the present method of contracting. There have been no direct complaints to the apple commission from producers, or raised by directors to the commission. The Farm Products Marketing Board has received no complaints.

However, the commission will be holding local meetings in each of the districts prior to its annual meeting in July. If the member believes other growers share his concern, he should raise it at these meetings with the producer-directors of the apple commission.

Marketing boards are set up and run by producers in a democratic framework. If producers, like the member for Kent-Elgin, believe changes are necessary, it is within their power to make them. So far, apple producers apparently do not feel the need for the changes the member for Kent-Elgin would seem to suggest.

VALENTYN MOROZ

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House because of the other issue that took some time, I thought I would presume to make a brief observation and introduce a very distinguished person to the members of this House.

I think we in our own province and throughout Canada really do cherish our freedoms and the opportunities they provide to us, both for ourselves and for our families to grow and to realize our goals and potential. I think that is why we can all feel sympathy and concern for the millions of people behind the Iron Curtain and elsewhere where freedom of assembly, freedom of opinion, freedom of religion and freedom to dissent are really mere illusions which are betrayed in day-to-day oppression and lack of respect for human dignity. That is why we all understand and hold great respect for those very noble individuals whose humanity and love of freedom and dedication to human dignity transcend everything else.

In your gallery today, Mr. Speaker, we are honoured with the presence of such a man. Valentyn Moroz is a symbol of freedom, civility and dedication. Recently released from the Soviet Union, Mr. Moroz is visiting our country to thank the thousands of Canadians who worked in so many ways to help bring about his release from the Soviet Union and the prisons he knew and endured for so many years.

He is a constant reminder of the importance of public pressure, pressure to secure and advance international human rights. He is also a reminder to all of us of the need for constant vigilance to preserve the freedoms which we in this particular country enjoy and perhaps too often take for granted. As long as the human rights of individuals are threatened anywhere in our world, and as long as the cultural, the religious and political freedoms of any human being are constrained, then the freedom of all of us to live in freedom and dignity is jeopardized.

Valentyn Moroz is a man who has placed human dignity above everything else, including his personal safety. The Ukrainian community of Ontario is especially proud of his efforts, but I know that all Ontarians join the members of this Legislature today in extending a very warm welcome to our distinguished guest.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a few remarks on this occasion and in respect to this hero, this fighter for freedom of people throughout the world, I would like to address some in his native language.

(Translation:)

As Leader of the Opposition and the Ontario Liberal Party, on behalf of myself and my colleagues, I welcome you, Mr. Moroz, to our province and to the free world.

(End of translation.)

I want to say that today is a very important day in my life because of the visit of Valentyn Moroz. This is a man who has spent a third of his life in the most dreadful of Soviet prisons for no crime other than to be a historian who believes in the nationality of the Ukraine and who believes that people should be free to express their view of history and should be free to tell their fellow citizens of their origins and their past and to help them aspire to a free future.

He has been treated to the worst indignities imaginable. He has been sent to the worst prisons in the Soviet Union. Psychiatrists acting in the employ of the state have been used to try to create a form of imprisonment under the guise of treatment or diagnosis, and yet he has survived, and his spirit has survived. The efforts of people throughout the world to secure his freedom have finally paid dividends.

Everyone is honoured by having in our presence a man who has suffered more than any of us have ever suffered or should ever have to suffer. He has done so for us, not just for the people of Ukraine, but for everyone who believes in dignity and in freedom. We are greatly honoured, every one of us, that he should be with us. I think we should pay tribute to those hundreds of thousands of people of Ukrainian origin and of all other origins who fought so hard for his release.

(Translation:)

I wish you every success, Mr. Moroz, in your difficult task, but may we both live to see a free Ukraine.

Long live Ukraine.

(End of translation.)

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, in one of Canada's other non-official languages, I want to say:

(Translation:)

Valentyne Moroz, I was appointed by the leader of my party (Mr. Cassidy) and my colleagues to welcome you to the Ontario Legislature.

We have 125 members and three political parties, which do not on occasion agree with each other. Despite that, this parliamentary institute stands and works, and democracy works.

I know and all other people who are members of the Legislative Assembly know about your life under oppression. We also know how you fought for the Ukrainian people and how you have suffered for that under the Soviet authorities. At the time when you were locked up, my colleague, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta) and other members were sending telegrams to the Soviet authorities demanding your freedom. We are very happy, therefore, that you were able to come to Canada and be with us today.

Finally, I and all the other members of the Legislature wish to extend to you best wishes in all your endeavours in your life.

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, as a member of this Legislature and a Canadian of Ukrainian heritage, I'm very pleased to join with our Premier and the opposition parties this morning in welcoming our distinguished guest, Mr. Valentyn Moroz, in the Ukrainian language.

(Translation:)

Mr. Moroz, as a Ukrainian member of the government of Ontario it is a great pleasure to welcome you to the great, free land of Canada.

We of Canadian-Ukrainian heritage cannot express in mere words our feelings to you for the amount of pain and suffering you experienced for the rights and liberties you believed in and the cause for which you would not give up.

We are very happy that you were freed from the clutch of Moscow and that you are now here in this country. Our prayers to God go with you in the undertaking of your great work to further the cause of all the Ukrainian people.

We wish the best for your wife and daughter and hope you will soon be reunited with them. May the good Lord bless you.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, if I might just have her attention for a moment.

In Hamilton, there is a young lady by the name of Emily Seigel who has multiple sclerosis and has worked as a secretary-bookkeeper with a particular store. She has just been fired, and it's her contention that she was still quite able to do her job. She wants to know what recourse she has, to whom she might appeal to indicate the fact that she is capable of doing the job and to rule on whether or not she has suffered discrimination.

This is a case very similar to that of Mr. Morrissey, the diabetic teacher who was refused employment in Sudbury, I believe, and the case of the truck driver which, of course, comes under a different act that I discussed with the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

What shall I tell Mrs. Seigel? Is there any recourse? How can it be that in the province of Ontario, two years after the model Ontario Human Rights Code was propagated here and brought to our attention there appears to be no legal recourse for a person of this kind?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, through you to the honourable member, I am as indignant as he is to find that in this day and age there is not that degree of understanding amongst those who do employ handicapped people. Of course, there is the recourse to the Ontario Human Rights Commission, but I would like to take this on in a very personal way. If the information can be directed to me I will certainly see what can be done to ensure that this kind of thing will not continue to happen to those people who suffer any degree of disability.

Mr. S. Smith: Recognizing the humanitarian concern of the minister, is she unaware that the human rights commission has no standing in matters of this kind because, in this day and age, her government has still not brought forward the amendments to the Human Rights Code promised for years now which would give the human rights commission some reason to look into these matters and some power to compel that the person be rehired in an instance where it turned out that the person was discriminated against?

Why must we wait in the cases of both Mr. Morrissey and Mrs. Seigel? Why must we wait any longer in Ontario before debating amendments to the human rights code in this House which would make it absolutely illegal to discriminate against a person based on a handicap when that handicap has nothing to do with the ability to perform a given job?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I think we're all eagerly awaiting that day when it is enshrined in the human rights code that, indeed, there will be no discrimination against any handicapped person in this province.

Mr. Warner: Bring in the amendment. It's the minister's job to bring it in.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As the member knows, the ministry is considering recommendations and, hopefully, they will be brought forward in the very near future.

Mr. Warner: The minister sounds like a member of the opposition.

Mr. McClellan: The minister says, "In the near future." Mr. Speaker, we had the report Living Together, I think, two years ago. Let me ask the minister to give the members a simple and unequivocal commitment here today that the very first piece of business in the fall session will be the amendments to the human rights code which have been promised, and promised and promised and never delivered?

Mr. S. Smith: Why wait until then? What about bringing them in on Monday?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member knows I'm in no position to give any such commitment.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, because of the nature of the reference, may I redirect a supplementary to the Minister of Education?

Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: Does she intend to take any action with respect to the decision concerning Richard Morrissey given that a school board and a teaching position are involved?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, as a result of attempts to investigate this matter, that the school board itself has not dealt with the problem at this point. It will be dealt with by the board at its first meeting next week. This has been a personnel policy established by the personnel staff of the board and it has not been, in fact, addressed by the board itself. It will be, I think, on Tuesday of next week.

We have asked for further information about the problems which, apparently, this young man is having in terms of whether there is any reason to suspect that the potential problems with his vision, and which I gather was the matter concerning the personnel officers most acutely, could or would impede his capacity as a teacher.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I would like to redirect the question asked of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development to the Premier. Will the Premier undertake that either now or as the first piece of business in the fall, we will have before us the amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code for which we have been waiting for two years?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of redirecting going on this morning.

Mr. di Santo: But no commitments.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Provincial Secretary for Social Development has already answered that question.

Mr. Warner: Yes, she'll do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She didn't say that.

Mr. Warner: But she will do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought the member would have learned a little something from some of the discussions earlier today; I thought perhaps he might have learned something from the things that were said.

Mr. Warner: I learned a lot. I learned that you won't do anything to amend the human rights code.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't say to me that the provincial secretary said nothing, because that is not what she said.

Mr. Warner: She will do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She did not say that.

Mr. Warner: She did not make a commitment to bring in the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere just be quiet?

Mr. Warner: "Be quiet" is better than "resign."

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Resign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This question really had been asked previously as well, if memory serves me correctly. The very excellent document that was read to members of this House a short period of time ago contained references to proposed amendments.

Mr. McClellan: An historic document. We remember it well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Those amendments will be forthcoming.

Mr. Warner: When?

GM SETTLEMENTS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, stemming from his comments regarding the General Motors of Canada Limited engine matter and how this minister certainly wasn't "going to sell the consumer down the river," and so on and so forth. He may not have sold consumers down the river, but he has left them precious little with which to paddle.

May I ask the minister why it is he prefers to have the individual consumers clog the courts with 1,100 individual law suits and why they should have to go through the expensive, difficult and costly process of taking on this giant corporation one person at a time? Why has the minister not instead instructed his director to take action against the company to obtain restitution on a mass scale for all those who have purchased these engines under false pretences? Why has he not speeded up the class action matter in Ontario, given the fact that would be by far the best way to proceed and yet he knows no substantive class action has ever won in Ontario because of the fact it is so difficult to proceed under the present rules?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I must inform the Leader of the Opposition he is badly mistaken. There is a rather substantial case which has been affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Ontario. His Lordship, Mr. Justice Dubin, was one of the justices in the Firenza case, and the court certainly did exactly what the member said it didn't do. I commend that case to the member.

Mr. S. Smith: I know the case very well.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Why would you say a thing like that, if you know the case very well?

To come back to the original question, the member might bear in mind that the 10 Attorneys General of Canada—each provincial Attorney General—discussed this matter and had a common position. They were all being asked to sign this immunity from any action for General Motors. At that time the financial end of the matter was being negotiated by my director, but notwithstanding that, the Ministry of the Attorney General had the overall direction. That's why we didn't enter into things.

In terms of what we may do in the future: The member may have put his finger on what I may or may not do. I will tell the member this. We are not going to get into the same situation as the United States, where New York state peddled early for a very minor amount and then some other states came along and peddled for a higher amount. I believe California is now in exactly the same position as we are.

With regard to the remarks I made yesterday about the individual owner, all I am saying is that the individual person who bought such a car, notwithstanding what we have done to this point and notwithstanding what we may do in the future, is in no way precluded from taking any action whatsoever. He may decide that the compensation being offered by General Motors is not sufficient. Indeed, we are very concerned.

What happened to the person who had to have that Chevrolet engine in the Oldsmobile car constantly repaired? Who is going to pay for that? The remainder of 36,000 miles isn't going to pay for it.

So there are a great many areas. In no way, shape or form are we suggesting that each one of these people go into the courts.

The member is quite right; it would clog them up. But if they want to, surely the Leader of the Opposition isn't suggesting to me or to my colleague the Attorney General that we preclude them from doing it. We can't.

By the same token we are not going to give General Motors of Canada immunity from trying to peddle a no-name car under the name of Oldsmobile, Buick or Pontiac.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, of course General Motors should not be given immunity. But why stop there? Why doesn't the minister protect the 1,100 owners by taking action such as he says I might have put my finger on—I am not sure what he means by that. Why doesn't he have his director take action on their behalf to obtain restitution?

Second, why does he not speed the matter which was referred, I believe, from the Attorney General to the Law Reform Commission—the matter of improving the possibility of class action in Ontario? Surely he is not satisfied with the present situation which, according to Professor Jacob Ziegel, the consumer law expert, has never succeeded on a substantive basis in Ontario. Why does he not speed that matter so that the 1,100 people who have those engines will be able to take action as a unit rather than one at a time?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I thought I explained that. First of all, until very recent times, the Attorneys General of the 10 provinces had a common front. They were handling the matter. I said we were negotiating and dealing with General Motors on the economic side—I will say it for the third time—because the Attorneys General of the 10 provinces of Canada were deciding a common approach against General Motors on the issue.

In terms of class actions, I don't buy Ziegel any more than I buy a lot of people. But I would also suggest the matter of class actions for people or consumers in general is a matter for the Ministry of the Attorney General, not for this ministry. I don't think the honourable member is suggesting I can change the law.

To put it very clearly, and I hope this meets the concerns of the Leader of the Opposition, neither I nor my director of business practices is satisfied with the offer of compensation General Motors has made. We do not think it meets the needs of the 1,100 people we know of. The Attorney General, even this morning, has informed me that under no circumstances will he, as Attorney General, ever sign that document. Under no circumstances will I ever sign a secondary release, and finally under no circumstances will the Attorney General, in his capacity as Solicitor General, sign that document.

What that means is General Motors had better come in to see me and see that what they are going to do for those people is acceptable. If they don't come in, we will do something that will get pretty swift justice for the 1,100 people.

Mr. S. Smith: What? What are you going to do?

Hon. Mr. Drea: You knew that before you asked the question.

Mr. Renwick: Would the minister clarify for the House the nature of the grant of immunity General Motors has requested, apart altogether from the civil aspect of it? Is this an intrusion into our jurisdiction of the American practice of a grant of immunity from prosecution, both criminal and quasi-criminal, that was asked for? Would the minister, or his colleague at the minister's request, table the form of the document setting out the immunity that is requested so we can look into the matter?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am not a solicitor, but they have asked for three things: one of the releases I would have to sign is that we would never investigate; second, the Attorney General has to promise in the bulk of his release no criminal or quasi-criminal prosecutions, and then in the last paragraph it says no civil—

An hon. member: This is blackmail—nothing but blackmail.

Mr. S. Smith: You can't assure that anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Order, just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is what I said yesterday. That is what they have suggested—not only suggested; it has been typed and sent to us. As a matter of fact, they don't even give this minister his right title. They treat the whole matter with an air of aloofness. It is sent to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, because they presume this is the title used by most ministers across Canada, so we can fill in the blanks.

I presumed somebody might very well want these documents tabled. The Attorney General, I understand, released certain correspondence yesterday. There is a letter of March 23, 1979, from General Motors of Canada directed to both myself and the Attorney General which sets out the proposal in detail. Incidentally, it comes from a gentleman who calls himself their director of government relations.

Then there is the "Minister of Consumer Affairs" document and another document from the Attorney General to fill in the blanks. There's another one for the owner and there's the final release. Would that be sufficient for what the honourable member wants?

Mr. Renwick: For the time being that would be quite adequate. I think it probably would answer my question.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism which relates to the government's buy-Canadian policy and relates in particular to what the minister told me back on May 31, when he said, "If you have evidence to the contrary," that the 10 per cent procurement policy has been violated, "I would like to receive it."

I have now had a chance to look at a submission by Canadian Applied Technology with reference to the rejection of their tender for the Nanticoke equipment which was raised in the Legislature yesterday. They point out specifically that their project was 82 per cent Canadian content compared to 30 per cent for the project that came from Texas. They point out specifically that the evaluation committee which rejected their submission on technical grounds made a visit to Radian in Texas, a company that had not done business in Canada with the ministry before.

Mr. Speaker: Could the honourable member frame his remarks in the form of a question?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I'm just concluding, Mr. Speaker. The committee did not even visit the Canadian company to assess its technical competence. In view of that gross oversight by the technical evaluators, and in view of the policy the minister enunciated in this House, and it has been enunciated before, will the Minister of Industry and Tourism intervene in order to ensure this particular tender is called again so the Canadian company can get a fair chance to get that contract and build up its ability to serve the Canadian market for pollution control equipment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I say to the leader of the third party that I know he's very concerned in this matter, as indeed am I. I had the opportunity to go back and look at the file in some depth yesterday, or at least a portion of the file that related to my ministry's efforts, which were quite extensive I might add, to ensure the interests of that company were protected. I might say, having gone through that file I think I could do a fairly adequate job in assuring the House and making it easier for me to assure the House our Shop Canadian program is in place.

However, if I were to do that, I must say to the leader of third party that in order to give an effective defence of the decision made, it would probably not be in the best interests of the Canadian company to go into extensive detail as to some of the severe reservations the government had in making that decision. In that spirit, I would be pleased to make available on a totally confidential basis to both the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the third party, most of the information we have at hand, or at least that portion which is not confidential from the company. Then he might make his own judgement at that time, as to the extent to which he wants to debate certain of the conclusions reached on the floor of this assembly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Rather than trying to bring the leader of the opposition and myself into his confidence, in view of the questions raised and in view of clear indications the buy-Canadian policy of the government has been forgotten in this particular case, why will the minister not agree to get the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) to call the tender again to ensure that the technical competence of this company is evaluated by a direct visit rather than by just looking at some documents, and to ensure that Canadian suppliers in the pollution control industry are not permanently shut out by ministry policies in violation, in fact, of recommendations that have been made in reports to the government as recently as last fall?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I say that I am quite satisfied that every appropriate opportunity has been given to that particular company to try to convince the persons making the decision in this government, all of whom were unanimous, that its product met all the standards required by the ministry. That included visits by an evaluation and selection committee to represent a cross-section of the relevant discipline. The membership was as follows: a representative of the Ministry of Government Services, computer services division; a representative of Environment Canada; and three representatives of the air resources branch of the Ministry of the Environment. Further work was done; I have several pages outlining the process, which involved extensive senior staff participation of my ministry. The final conclusion, which was unanimous, was the one that was made: for very good technical reasons, the firm Radian should be awarded the contract.

I only want to repeat to the member that every opportunity was given to the company to come in and make its representations. The company did that. It had several meetings. It clearly did not go away satisfied—but every effort has been made to satisfy our staff that the company had a chance to present its case. Indeed, it was incumbent upon us and the Ministry of the Environment to check out the operation of Radian, with which they were not that familiar, and so they made an on-site visit there.

Again, before the leader of the third party suggests that we reopen the bidding, I have to say to him that if there were evidence it was not carefully scrutinized, then that might be appropriate. I might also say to him that I am not trying to take him into my confidence in a large way, but I think I do trust him enough to give him some details with regard to the reservations that the technical experts had about the proposal of this company. If he does not want that information, I will not send it over, but I think he should see it before he pursues this matter a heck of a lot farther. He may conclude that pursuing this a heck of a lot farther on the floor of the assembly may not be in the best interests of the company. He may conclude they are, but he may conclude they are not. Perhaps he will wait until he gets that information.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: The minister has referred to a unanimous decision. Is he aware that it is the company's view that it was told by officials of the Ministry of the Environment, after the bidding went in favour of the Texas company, that its system was adequate to do the job, its bid was the lowest and its references from previous contracts were as good as those of the winning bid? That was a direct quotation from these people.

Given that, would the minister not agree that the company ought to have the right to decide whether the matter should be made public? The minister has made a sort of veiled threat that it would hurt the company's interests if all these matters were to be made public; that the company would not like it. Why should the company not decide? If the company decides that it should be made public, will the minister make public the reasons for accepting the bid of the Texas company rather than that of the Canadian company, instead of leaving the company sort of accused of having something dreadfully wrong with it but having no opportunity to hear what it is and to answer it publicly?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that the company has had every opportunity to hear what the reservations were. It had every opportunity to meet those reservations. It knows very well, and to the last detail, the reasons given by staff. It was told all of the reasons given for rejecting its proposal; so the company has all that information.

If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to take up with the company the reasons it was given and come back here Monday or Tuesday and raise with the Minister of the Environment and/or myself the validity of those reasons—which the company has already—then he may feel free to do that. I was just assisting him in obtaining that information.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the first question: How can the minister say there is no evidence that the government has violated the procurement policy and the 10 per cent factor when we know that Microfilm Recording Company Limited, a wholly Canadian-owned company, has been able to sell its readers to only three ministries after putting pressure on the Premier, and when the president of the company, Mr. Pickett, says his company's readers are much lower in price than the American readers that the government is buying right now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, the member is expanding the entire question to certain other proposals, which he hasn't even specified, made by one particular company which alleges it should have got a contract under the procurement policy. I can really only repeat that the fact that a company bids on a project and the fact that it is the lowest bidder and the fact that it is Canadian is not the entire story.

Obviously there are questions of suitability and quality that come into play, and I know the member would be criticizing this government, quite properly, if machines were purchased or facilities purchased which didn't suit the particular project in mind. If the member has any specifics I wish he would send them over and I would be pleased to take them up with my colleagues.

MEMBER'S COMMENT

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a point of personal privilege with respect to what transpired this morning and in the last couple of days. I want to make just one point, Mr. Speaker. I want to make the point that I think what my friend, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), said in the Legislature the other day was totally—was factually incorrect, let me put it that way, inaccurate, and I think wrong, but out of consideration for all of my colleagues in this House I want to withdraw the use of the word “liar.”

TEACHER LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. The minister must be aware of the very large number of layoffs of teachers across the province as a result of the cutbacks policy which has been decreed by the Ontario government, such as the layoff of 214 elementary teachers and 181 secondary school teachers in the North York Board of Education. Does the minister not agree that the quality of education in this province is being undermined by the cutbacks which are being imposed because of this government's policies?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not simply a matter of restraint in the area of funding of education; it is a very real matter of declining enrolment, a matter which is of concern to both boards and to the teaching federations.

The statement that the cutbacks in teacher employment are the direct result of only one of those problems is not factually correct. Boards are, of course, having to look at the way in which they staff the programs for which they are responsible, and in most instances I believe that most boards are doing this quite responsibly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If I can be quite specific about the Bathurst Heights Secondary School in the borough of North York, where the enrolment is dropping by 10 per cent—

Mr. Rotenberg: The city of North York.

Mr. Cassidy: —from last September, but where 21 out of the 85 teachers on the staff are being laid off, effective in September, and that is a quarter of the teachers; where 17 regular courses are being discontinued in September, including history, geography and art in grade 13, politics in grade 12, business organization, basic auto mechanics and grade 10 Italian; where the number of students in each science class will go from 25 this year to 36 pupils per class in September, and where 10 of the English-as-a-second-language programs are to be cancelled because of this reduction in teachers, does the minister not agree with me that in the case of that particular secondary school the quality of education for those 1,050 students will be seriously undermined because of this government's cutbacks?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would think that the decisions which have been taken by the board, if those are the final decisions which the member is reporting—and I am not at all sure that they are, because I have not had any such information from the North York board—are probably based upon sound and factual information, upon the requests for programs, upon the requirements of the students within the area, and I think that they have probably been taken with due consideration of all matters that need to be examined.

Mr. Rotenberg: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre referred to the borough of North York. I would point out to him it is now the city of North York.

Mr. Speaker: That is really not a point of order.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Education keep any kind of record of the school boards across the province—the Ontario Teachers' Federation has identified two or three of them—which are reducing their staffs at a considerably higher level than the number of students is declining? There are cases where there is, for example, a four per cent reduction in students and an eight or nine per cent reduction in teachers. Is any record of that being kept?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware the projections which are made are just that—they are projections. The final decisions regarding the staffing patterns will not be made until later in the summer when the enrolment is more clearly available to the boards, the requests for courses and programs within the schools have been established a bit more clearly, and the boards know how much flexibility they have in terms of providing the appropriate numbers of teachers for the programs which are required.

That information will be available to us when the boards provide it to us. What is being said right now is that they are projecting what they may be doing.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister monitoring it now?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That will not be factual information until the end of the summer.

Mr. Cassidy: No, the decisions are being made now and they won't be reversed.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would remind the leader of the third party, the final decisions about staffing and program in North York have not been made at this time.

Mr. Grande: Final supplementary: Does the minister agree that the needs of children in this province at this time—in terms of special education and English as a second language—are not going to be met in September in the light of the firing of the teachers that is taking place at this time?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, if one looks at the special needs of children specifically, if one is a member of a school board, and if one attempts to make decisions based upon the needs of the children, then I think the right decisions will be made. I think that is what most boards are attempting to do—

Mr. Cassidy: No, because of your cutbacks.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —as a result of the activities which they have been carrying out.

Mr. Grande: Who is responsible for education in this province?

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I want to defer to one of my colleagues but first, I know, for instance, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) is here and possibly some of the other ministers but they are inside the lobby. I would suggest a message be sent to them that we have some questions. I defer to my colleague from Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if I might, several of my colleagues are with Mr. Moroz. I see the Premier (Mr. Davis) has returned so I suspect they will be back very shortly.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, perhaps I might complete the record: I am reminded by someone back here that I failed to address one very important part of the leader of the third party's questions with regard to whether or not anyone visited the Canadian Applied Technology facilities. I wanted to correct that; I forgot that part of the question.

Those facilities were visited three times by Ministry of the Environment staff and Ministry of Government Services staff both before and during the tendering process. All of their products were seen, both in preparation and under test prior to delivery. So the site was visited on three occasions.

FOREIGN PURCHASES OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: In his recent investigation of the foreign land sales in Kent county and in Huron county he presented a figure showing a percentage of land that is held by foreigners.

But I would suggest to him that a more meaningful figure is the percentage of recent sales that have gone to foreign owners. I would ask if the minister would investigate this aspect of it.

Hon. W. Newman: We did do figures in 1976. We updated those figures to about a month ago. The report is being written and I will be glad to table it in the House, next week hopefully, so that all can see it. I also know there is some concern which was brought to my attention yesterday by an honourable member who feels there might be somebody looking at buying considerable quantities of land. We hope to look into that also next week as soon as we can contact the person. We are watching it very carefully on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary. Does the minister not realize that when our land is bought in this manner, excessive prices are paid for the land and that therefore makes it very difficult for our own citizens to buy land due to the new value established. Why doesn't he make a firm commitment to the people of Ontario that he is not going to allow the wholesale sale of our very important resource, our farm land, to people outside of our borders? Why doesn't he make a commitment and a statement to the people of Ontario instead of being wishy-washy on this most important issue?

Mr. Warner: Make it part of the buy-Canadian program.

Mr. Riddell: You're selling out Ontario by selling farm land.

Hon. W. Newman: It is great how things can get blown out of all proportion by references to wholesale selling off of the province of Ontario's agricultural land. We have done a study, and when it comes out it will show that less than one per cent of land has foreign addresses—not necessarily foreign owned. A lot of people from Canada could be living outside of the country and still own the land here. Just keep that in mind because that will be in the report.

Mr. Mancini: The study will show it's all sold.

Hon. W. Newman: The member talks about the excessive prices they are paying for land. When the report comes out, it will show that anybody who is buying land is paying approximately the same prices as the Ontario farmers are paying for the land they are buying. Not only that, we have a 20 per cent land transfer tax in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Some members opposite were opposed to that.

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, they were opposed to it.

Interjections.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I just make the point that it is not what has happened; it revolves around what is about to happen in this province. I cite as an example—

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, I have a question and I will put it very rapidly.

Since a major real estate firm has indicated that 30 out of 33 potential buyers were German buyers interested in buying farm land, since 500 to 600 acres have recently been sold to foreign buyers in the Collingwood area, and since 300 to 400 acres have recently been sold in the Simcoe area to German purchasers, does the minister not feel that this is rapidly developing into a major problem in Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: For many years land has changed hands and people from other countries have bought land here. A lot of Canadians have bought land in other countries too across the world.

Mr. Gaunt: But not farm land.

Hon. W. Newman: There is a reciprocal arrangement between Ontario and the northern United States because they do buy farm land back and forth there.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Canadians buy land in the south.

Hon. W. Newman: I suggested during my estimates, and I said it before, that I want somebody to come forward and give me evidence that this was actually happening or about to happen.

Mr. Gaunt: I have just given it to the minister.

Hon. W. Newman: This member did. He gave me the name of a real estate firm yesterday which we are trying to contact so that I can personally talk to them next week.

Mr. Gaunt: He wants to talk to you.

Hon. W. Newman: I want to talk to him too. We are trying to arrange a meeting. There has been a lot of talk going on, and our figures do not prove there's any major problem.

COLLEGE DAY-CARE CENTRES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. I want to ask the minister if he shares my concern and the concern of my colleague—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He?

Mr. Martel: You said "he shares."

Mr. McClellan: She. I said "she." I couldn't possibly say that.

An hon. member: Could there be any confusion in anyone's mind?

Mr. McClellan: I want to ask her if she is concerned at the decision taken by the board of governors of Seneca College to close their day-care centres at both the Finch and the King campuses. If she has that concern, will she undertake to meet as quickly as possible with the president and governors of Seneca College and ask them if they will review their priorities, firstly, in an attempt to keep that day-care facility open, and secondly, as to whether there are some resources the ministry can provide to Seneca to enable this excellent facility to remain open?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have communicated with the president of Seneca College about this matter and was informed that as a result of an arrangement which Seneca was able to make with York University it did, at very low cost in terms of the provision of the program, decide to rent space at York in order to accommodate all of the students within the early childhood education program. The benefit of that being at York is that there are other programs which could be both complementary and supplementary to the early childhood education program for Seneca students.

At the same time, I was informed that York itself has a day-care centre—within this complex at York—which will provide the direct clinical experience, I suppose one might call it, for the students.

The decision taken by Seneca board at this point, I gather, was on the basis of the fact that they required more space at the Finch campus in order to accommodate more students in other areas. It was only by transferring an entire program—

Mr. McClellan: It's a question of priorities.

Hon. Miss Stephenson:—that they were able to accomplish this.

Mr. McClellan: Dubious priorities.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In actual fact, out of its own operating budget last year, Seneca spent approximately $100,000 in support of the day-care centre. Although there is a fee paid by those parents whose children are in the centre, that does not begin to cover the cost of providing the service. Seneca simply felt that unless it could extract that amount of funding from some other source it would not be possible to carry on with the centre.

The centre which they have established at the Finch campus is an excellent facility. It has provided an important service for the parents in the area of excellent care for those children. I think there are a number of parents within the group who would be very willing to attempt to provide the extra $900 per year per child which it costs at the moment to ensure that the centre remains where it is.

The students in the early childhood education program at Seneca are concerned as well because, while they believe they will have just as good clinical experience at their new site, they are aware that there is little alternative within the specific area of the Finch campus of Seneca for an alternative day-care program. Therefore, we're exploring this on a number of fronts in order to try to solve the problem.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary: Surely it is the height of irresponsibility for any organization to close down a day-care centre accommodating, I think, 82 children, on two months' notice. Surely the minister can speak with some urgency to the directors of Seneca College that they have no right to close facilities on which parents are dependent, without making provision for quality alternatives. Surely the minister agrees with that and surely—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that, indeed, the board of Seneca College is attempting to ensure there will be alternative provision at this stage.

Mr. Warner: Yes, when?

Mr. McClellan: No, they're not. Eighty-two kids are going to go to York.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I suggested alternative provisions within the area of the Finch campus.

Mr. McClellan: Where? Tell us where. Tell the parents where.

OTTAWA BEEF COMPANY

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I'm wondering, in view of the fact so many beef producers in eastern Ontario depend on the Ottawa Beef Company for the sale of their beef, and that company ceased killing there some two weeks ago, what is taking place now? I know the minister met with a delegation of beef producers from eastern Ontario about a week ago and I am wondering what has transpired since that meeting took place.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the member for Renfrew South's concern. There are other members who are very much concerned as well because there is not the killing capacity in eastern Ontario for beef. We have been in touch with the Ottawa Beef Company on a personal basis. I sent one of my senior officials down to talk to them. I will be sending them a letter today making some sort of suggestion to them in order to try to get the plant opened again so the farmers of eastern Ontario will have a place to send their cattle to be slaughtered.

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Attorney General and the acting Solicitor General.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I'm not.

Mr. Roy: Is the minister no longer the acting Solicitor General?

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is the Solicitor General. Where have you been?

Mr. Roy: He is the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think all members know to whom the member is directing his question.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I know, but the title is important. He is also the chief law officer for the crown.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right.

Mr. Roy: I'd like to ask the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, whether he agrees with the policy of his national leader, Prime Minister Joe Clark, that the RCMP will be allowed to break the law as long as cabinet approves? Would he advise the House whether he has that sort of policy in Ontario where police forces, OPP or others, will be allowed to break the law if he or the cabinet or a designated minister approves? Is that his policy in Ontario? Does he agree with the national leader?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that is the policy of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Roy: That's what he said. Then what is his policy?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't believe for one moment that is his policy but I can assure the honourable members of this House, once again as I have in the past, that I have advised not only the RCMP but all police forces in this province acting within the jurisdiction of Ontario that if there are any breaches of the law they can expect to be prosecuted. We are not tolerating any breaches of the law whatsoever.

Mr. Roy: A supplementary: The new Solicitor General at the federal level—someone the members all know; the Premier knows him well—is dear Allan Lawrence.

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mention them all and we will applaud them all.

Mr. McClellan: You are applauding because he is gone.

Mr. Roy: I hardly consider that enthusiastic over there.

Hon. Mr. Drea: A great man.

Mr. McClellan: That was an applause of relief.

Mr. Roy: After his swearing in as the Solicitor General he was quoted, apparently in the Globe and Mail of June 5, 1979, as stating the policy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: By whom?

Mr. Roy: By the Globe and Mail.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: By whom?

Mr. Roy: It's from the Ottawa bureau. I won't get personal. He was quoted and, in fact, I saw him on television.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member please put his supplementary or I'll recognize someone else?

Mr. Roy: Yes, but they're interjecting and I'm trying to give the details. He was quoted as saying he approves of that policy that the RCMP may break the law in the national interests provided ministerial approval is first obtained. The Solicitor General, Allan Lawrence, said that yesterday.

Having said that, is the minister prepared to advise him that the rule of law still applies in Ontario and if anyone breaks the law in Ontario, be it the police or anyone else, he will prosecute?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just said that, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what Mr. Lawrence has said on the subject as the new Solicitor General. I'm sure I will hear from him personally in due course.

There is one other thing I would like to mention. I indicated my position in relation to the law and the fact that the police must act within the law. The RCMP have assured me they will act within the law in this province. They have never suggested to me that it is necessary for them to break the law. I just want to make that clear.

Mr. Warner: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, I raised this issue more than a month ago with the Attorney General. I asked him to send a letter at that time to Joe Clark. Why did he not send a letter indicating that this government is opposed to the RCMP breaking the law and, further, that there should not be cabinet approval when illegal acts are committed by the RCMP? Why did the minister not send that letter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The national leader of the Conservative Party, as he was then—and is now; but he is also the Prime Minister of Canada—is well aware of the position of this government.

AUTO PACT

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that Canada's auto trade deficit with the United States for the four months ended in April 1979 totalled $766 million, compared with $269 million in 1978, because of the decline in passenger-car shipments from Canada to the United States and a rise in the imported parts deficit, which in four months amounted to $1.6 billion, is the minister in a position now to express his opinion? Has the government developed any plan to correct the worsening situation in the auto trade? Or does he agree with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), who said on June 5 that with the auto pact we have improved our position rather than making it worse?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer was quite right at that time, and the situation alters in cycles for a lot of reasons. The important thing we can do is to try to reduce the extent to which the cycles affect us.

I might add to the member that one of the things that was high on our agenda in our recent trip to Japan was to emphasize to the Japanese auto makers which are going to be locating assembly operations in North America—we hope a couple will be in Ontario, but certainly there will be a great number in the United States—that it would be only fair and equitable to do a great deal of auto parts purchasing from firms in Canada. That is the sort of positive government action which I think will serve to reduce that deficit which the honourable member is talking about.

Mr. di Santo: How can the minister say the Treasurer was right the other day when the minister knows the trade deficit has amounted to $7 billion since the inception of the auto pact?

In view of the fact that Mr. Julius Katz, US Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, questioned the other day about whether Canadians are getting a fair deal from the auto pact, and in view of the fact that the Premier of the province on February 14, 1978, at the first ministers' conference, said if we had balanced the auto pact we could have created from 15,000 to 20,000 new jobs and a further 10,000 jobs with new investments, can the minister tell us, three months after his statement in this House on March 15, if he finally has a position on the auto pact?

Second, how does the minister think investments will come in this area, with the worsening of our trade position?

Third, how can the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The honourable member had a three-part initial question; now he is enumerating. I think he has enough on his plate right now. Does the honourable minister have a response?

Mr. Bradley: Yes or no will do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, the Treasurer was right. Second, I would remind the honourable member that his national leader, his provincial leader and his party have now agreed that the auto pact should not now be renegotiated. I think one of the reasons they have acknowledged that is that while—

Mr. Warner: That is not what he said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Your leader has; check it, David, check it.

I know one of the reasons they have concluded that is that while there is that overall deficit from the start, the fact is that most intelligent observers of the situation conclude we are substantially better off now than we would have been if we didn't have the auto pact.

Mr. di Santo: I have a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. At no point did I indicate that we are asking that the auto pact be renegotiated, and I ask the minister to correct the record.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Has the minister had any ongoing negotiations or discussions with Chrysler Canada in an attempt to convince that company to manufacture or buy four-cylinder engines manufactured in Canada, rather than purchasing from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do plan to visit Mr. Iacocca sometime in the next two or three weeks. Discussions have been undertaken. The president has agreed to see me sometime in that period of time. In fact, he indicated, notwithstanding how well the members know me, that he'd be anxious to meet with me. We hope to have that meeting in the next couple of weeks, as I say, with a view not only to that particular question but to get a better handle on what their overall future plans are for Canada to ensure we get our fair share of future assembly, production and sourcing.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker: In the light of his concern for the number of accidents on Ontario highways and the resulting injuries and deaths, would the minister speak to his friend, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), in an attempt to persuade him to have routine maintenance on the Queen Elizabeth Way done at some time other than the daytime when the flow of traffic is very heavy, to avoid accidents, to avoid aggravation, to avoid the fact that once people have gone through from the three lanes into two lanes, when they get out of that they tend to speed up and exceed the speed limit and create the need for more law enforcement officers? Would he speak to the minister about that so that he will not have to have as large a budget for new police officers?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't understand the second part of the question, but I assume what the member for St. Catharines is stating is that these mechanical checks are causing problems when conducted at certain times of the day. In view of his statement I will discuss this matter with the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

GM SETTLEMENTS

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Earlier in the question period the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations made the point that there has been a successful class action in Ontario. I have in front of me the judgement. It is not in fact a successful class action at all. What it is is an action—which is still being further appealed—at the Court of Appeal as to whether or not a class could possibly be constituted in a certain instance.

It is not in fact an instance where a class did launch a successful suit against a company; not one penny has been collected. It merely is a decision of a judge of the Court of Appeal that, in a certain instance with certain ways of doing it, there might be constituted a class, but it is not a successful class action. I think it's very important to know that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not being a solicitor, I'm not going to get into splitting hairs on the matter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Splitting heads, yes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The truth of the matter is in the Firenza case, which incidentally was General Motors, Mr. Justice Dubin, and I forget the other justice, in the Court of Appeal wrote one paragraph in there which, if it doesn't legalize class actions and call for them, then I don't know what does.

An hon. member: Are you going to lay an information for fraud against GM?

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to file dissatisfaction with the answer of the Minister of Industry and Tourism because he did not address himself to the points that I raised in my question.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member can give the table reasons in writing for his dissatisfaction, and that debate will take place next Tuesday evening.

MOTION

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved that the general government committee be authorized to meet concurrently with the House on Monday, June 11.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 141 to 153, 182 to 184, and 204, and an interim answer to question 197 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2743.)

Mr. Speaker: Before orders of the day, the member for Renfrew South has a point of something or other.

PRESENTATION TO PREMIER

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the opportunity of attending a reception, at which time the book written by Stan Obodiac, The Polish Pope and North America, was unveiled. Mr. Obodiac wanted me—and I assured him I would—to make a presentation to the Premier of one of the first copies of this great book autographed by Mr. Obodiac. It is very timely, because this week the pope has been visiting his homeland and has had a tremendous reception and acceptance.

Mr. Obodiac has written some nine books ranging from The Soul Speaks to Red Kelly.

The present pope is well known in Canada and the United States, having visited both countries in 1969 and 1976, and knows more about Canada and North America than any of his predecessors, because he met people mostly and not high officials.

At this time, it is my pleasure to present one of the first copies autographed by Mr. Obodiac to the Premier of Ontario.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

On vote 602, intergovernmental affairs program:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a very brief comment about the question of federal-provincial relations, because I will be required in that never-ending committee on the landlord and tenant bill.

I want to say to the minister that having read his comments—not having had the opportunity to be here when he made his opening statement—about the present course of the discussions on constitutional matters, they raise a very profound and deep discontent within myself about the exclusion of this assembly from any participation in the elitist constitutional industry of the country. That industry has now ground to a halt. We have all of the papers that are before us with respect to constitutional matters. I have a resolution standing on the order paper in my name with respect to a committee of this assembly to study those papers and to make recommendations to this assembly about what the policies of the government of Ontario should be.

The minister will be pleased to know that in the round robin that has been continuously going on, since I was had by the House leader and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs some weeks ago on the question of my private member's public business, the resolution which now stands in my name will be transmuted on Monday into a resolution standing in the name of my colleague, the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor).

It seems to me that to the extent that the rules provide we will have an opportunity in this assembly, either because the government adopts the suggestion put forward in that resolution that there be a committee of this assembly and makes that announcement prior to private members' public business next Thursday, or my colleague, the member for Lakeshore, will be debating—and I hope that I would participate in that debate —the merit of having such a committee. I would trust that then we would have a resolution of the matter, the resolution of the matter being the approval of the assembly, unless 20 members of the government party stand for the purpose of blocking a reference of constitutional matters to a committee of this assembly.

I personally cannot understand why the government treats the question of constitutional change in Canada and national unity as, first of all, its sole prerogative and, next to that, the sole prerogative of the bureaucracy and the elitist academic community of Canada, and why it is not possible for this minister graciously to consent to this assembly being involved in those discussions in a meaningful and positive way.

I say further to the minister that if he believes that somewhere down the road there is going to be referred to this assembly some form of constitutional change or amendment which has been subject to the agreement of other governments in Canada and that we are to be made patsies in this assembly with respect to the approval of constitutional change, he had better disabuse himself of that thought.

I trust I have made my remarks clear. I have been extremely patient over some 18 months now, speaking to the Attorney General on the matter with respect to so many of the matters related to constitutional change, speaking very briefly in the estimates of this ministry last time, and having put the motion on the Order Paper on the understanding, as forecast in the throne debate and in the throne speech, that the government was going to put a resolution on the Order Paper with respect to constitutional change and national unity.

I have clearly indicated both to the government House leader and to the minister that it was our intention at the time when the government placed its motion on the Order Paper that the motion standing in my name would be withdrawn and reappear in the name of the leader of this party as an amendment to the government motion. Since that time we have had a game of footsie, or whatever you want to call it—interminable discussions in a circuitous fashion, so that now we do not know what the position of the government is.

My colleague, the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) is in his place. The member for Ottawa East and I met with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs just two or three days ago as the last stage of this ridiculous charade we are being put through. We put forward a very reasonable proposal. Nobody agreed to it, though I was prepared to agree to it. The proposal basically was quite simple, recognizing the exigencies and the demands on all of the members of the House with respect to committee work during the summer period.

The proposal was that before this House rises for the recess that such a committee, in substantially the terms of the resolution standing in my name, would be appointed by the assembly. It would be a small committee. Bearing in mind the demands made on all the members, we were thinking of perhaps two members from this party, two members from the Liberal Party and three or four members from the government party, or it could be larger if there are more members interested in that who have a sense of its priority over the demands of other areas of committee work.

That committee would be appointed. There would be an organizational meeting, or perhaps one or two meetings, simply for the purpose of seconding with the agreement of the minister the appropriate persons from his ministry to act as an independent staff for the committee and to give that staff an opportunity to work out how the various studies and proposals would be digested by this committee at an appropriate time. We could give them six or eight weeks to work out a plan and process for that committee and have the committee start its substantive and meaningful discussions at Labour Day.

That would permit the committee to make an interim report later on in the fall session, a report that would be of some significance. Whatever the government's ruminations may be about its motion as proposed in the throne speech, perhaps at that time the assembly could not only debate the government motion, but could debate it in the light of a report having been made by members of this assembly with respect to all of the numerous studies of the governments of Canada, of various political parties and other interested groups in Canada, so that we in this assembly would have some sense of participation in what is going to take place.

There was a second aspect to my resolution which I have conveyed to the minister, to other members of the government and to colleagues in the Liberal Party. Another aspect was that this assembly as a representative assembly should have a committee which should go to the province of Quebec to meet with colleagues in the National Assembly for the sole, simple and uncomplicated purpose of sitting down with a counterpart committee from that assembly and saying, "Look, we want you to stay in the game, we want you to stay in Canada. Let's talk; let's exchange views." More importantly, its purpose would be to indicate clearly from one non-partisan representative committee of this assembly to a representative non-partisan committee of the National Assembly that this assembly representing the people of Ontario wants the people of Quebec, through their representatives, to know that we give a damn about whether or not they stay in.

Those were the two purposes. What is wrong with that? What impedes the government continuously from accepting that proposal? Why does it constantly put up obstacles to any inclusion in a meaningful way of this assembly in this ongoing debate? Do we have any role or don't we? If this reconstitution of the Confederation in Canada is of that kind of importance, surely this government could take its lesson from the Confederation debates at the time of the original Confederation of the country.

Then the Parliament of Canada and the members of the Parliament of Canada were fully involved, as anyone can see who reads the debates of the Parliament of Canada leading up to Confederation. Anyone reading those debates would know that members of that Parliament went to New Brunswick, to Nova Scotia and to Prince Edward Island. I don't know whether they went as far as Newfoundland, but they met and talked with colleagues in various cities and places throughout those provinces to show them there were very real and tangible benefits for the Maritime provinces to join in Confederation and to unite in a united Canada.

What is wrong with this phlegmatic, passive, Anglo-Saxon community in Ontario getting up and demonstrating in some clear and unequivocal way to the National Assembly of Quebec that we have an interest in having them stay in the game?

I don't want to go on very much longer because what I am now going to say is, in a very synoptic way, what I said in the budget debate, which I am certain the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has not read. Therefore, I want to repeat it briefly to him.

I am sick and tired of political leaders in Canada saying we are all agreed on national unity, therefore there is no need to discuss it. I tried to draw the analogy and I tried to say very clearly that we are all agreed that there should be full employment in Canada, but that doesn't mean we don't discuss how we achieve full employment. Different leaders in the political world express differing views about it.

We all agree that there should be economic growth in Canada, but that doesn't mean that because we agree on the goal we are all agreed as to the way in which that goal is achieved or that debate and discussion of it are stultified by some suggestion that as we are all agreed on that goal, we don't have to discuss it.

We are all agreed on many goals for the province of Ontario in this society, but the nature of politics is that you discuss how you achieve those goals. You try to do it either by persuading a sufficient number of people to accept your views or by reaching some form of consensus with respect to the procedures which are going to be followed to achieve those goals.

To the extent that it is possible for me to participate in a minor way through this assembly, I for one do not want to be in the position where from now until the time of the referendum there is no meaningful relationship between this assembly and its counterpart in the province of Quebec. For me, that means we are allowing ourselves to be mesmerized and placed in a rigid, inflexible, doctrinaire position which has no place in a political process of the sensitivity and importance that this renewal of Confederation has for all of us.

My final remark is very simple and very brief. I happen to be one of the persons who believe very firmly that you cannot divorce the fundamental economic societal problems from constitutional reform. I think it is fair to say that many of the economic problems, intransigent problems, that we are faced with in the province of Ontario, are a result of the structural design of Confederation which impedes the solution or the reasonable solution of those economic problems. This attempt somehow or other to divorce economic matters from the constitutional structure of the country and the way in which the various parts of the country relate to each other is, to my mind, an integral part of what we are about.

I think it may well be that all of us are faced in the constituencies that we represent with people who basically say: "We don't believe any longer that anything can be done about the major problems facing us. We don't really believe that any government can do anything about employment or inflation or any of those problems. We simply are now extremely sceptical, if not cynical, about the capacity of the political process to assist in relating to those major problems which are having such a debilitating effect upon the creative capacities of people in Ontario and elsewhere in Canada."

I have voiced my discontent and my frustration about the way in which the government has persistently and consistently treated this assembly on the matter of the involvement of members of all parties in matters related to the fundamental nature of Confederation. When it is all written, I don't want it to be said that I sat in this assembly and had no part in that. I speak not only for myself, I am certain I speak for many other members of this assembly as well.

I want a definitive statement from the minister as to what the government's intentions are with respect to this question. I do not want to be told that it is a matter subject to further discussion by the House leaders. The House leaders don't make the policy; the government makes the policy. The government comes to the decision, and the House leaders of this assembly will in fact agree to such a committee if the government says it wants to have such a committee.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Do you want me to respond to these questions of an administrative, procedural nature before members go on with discussing the substance of some of the matters? Perhaps I will anyway.

I disagree with the last statement the member for Riverdale made. I think he simplifies the issue too much when he says the House leaders do not have any involvement in this matter. The House leaders do have a very distinct involvement in helping in the orderly running of this House. One of the matters that has to be decided is how many committees we can have in this House and what is the role of the committee. To some degree, and I realize my opinion may be different from my friends, this House itself is becoming completely irrelevant as everything goes on in committees. Our original thinking was that what we needed was a good debate in this House, a real debate in this House on this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did you back off on that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: We haven't backed off; that's still our opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: It was in the throne speech, and you backed off six or eight weeks ago. Don't try to kid us.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There are two reasons why we haven't had that debate yet. One of those particular reasons is the federal election was being held on May 22, and we decided among ourselves—as I recall with the agreement of all parties—that it would be better not to have the debate until after the federal election so that we would not become embroiled in some of the issues that were being discussed at that particular time.

Further, it was made very clear to us that, basically, the thrust of the third party was going to be to not have the debate in this House but to put forth a motion to send the matter to a committee. In other words, they were diametrically opposed to the kind of idea that we saw of a real debate in this House and wanted, rather, to have it go to a committee.

Mr. Renwick: Both.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Therefore, basically, we would spend our time debating the idea of a committee rather than debating the substance of the matter in this House. The member says both, but he knows that procedurally if you're going to send a matter to a committee, if the resolution is put to send the substance of a resolution to a committee, and it passes, why would you then have a five-day or six-day debate?

Mr. Lawlor: The background, the structure; for a hundred reasons. We do it all the time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member for Lakeshore now says there are lots of reasons, but I can tell him that if that had happened the immediate response would have been: "Why are we going to waste the time of the House with a matter that is going to be thoroughly discussed in committee?" Within a very short time the matter would have been sent to committee, without a long debate in this House.

I'm not saying there isn't merit in having a committee, that may be so; but we thought on this particular matter there was merit in having a real debate in this House—something of which, incidentally, we have very few.

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed. It's the equivalent of second reading and then sending it to a committee to get into the detail.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We have very few real debates in this House; perhaps it's time we started getting back to real debates where we debate matters rather than all coming in with our prepared speeches. The only time we really have real debates is on estimates material and on some of the bills.

In other debates it's a series of prepared speeches, which are good in their place but which are not the essence of real debate on a subject as important as this.

We really were saying we wanted a real debate in this House, and we have not moved from that position. Somehow the impression around was that what we were suggesting was an afternoon and an evening. It was certainly never in my mind that we would have a limited debate such as that, but if it took five days or six days or seven days, we would continue on until every member of this House had a chance to express their views.

That debate is still planned, and I think most members agree we should have it.

Mr. Lawlor: I think you should convene a special summer session.

Hon. Mr. Wells: A lot of us agree it probably should be a little closer to the referendum in Quebec, and the fall would probably be a better time to have it.

I want to say that I do not—and I want it very clear—I do not believe that the members of this assembly should be excluded from the discussions on these very important matters; referendum, strategy, constitutional reform and all those matters that are of uppermost concern to us today. I happen to be one who agrees wholeheartedly with the member for Riverdale on his premise that there is a relationship between the economic problems we face and constitutional reform.

I do not in any way agree with the statement that some people put to me, that goes something like this, and we've all heard it; "Don't be worrying us about constitutional reform and those things. What we need is just to worry about jobs and getting the economy back on the rails." Certainly that's one of the uppermost problems we face today, but it is related to constitutional reform, which is related to the situation in which we find ourselves in Canada today and the effects that situation is having on the economic growth of this country.

So it's a big circle. There are two completely unrelated issues that can be separated and placed in separate compartments, with one put on the shelf and left with nothing done about it in the hope that the other will solve the problems. They are interrelated, I agree with that; which is why I consistently have believed we must pay just as much attention to where we're going in a restructured federalism to what we see as a strategy vis-à-vis the Quebec referendum and what we see as a future constitution for Canada, because what happens in economic matters is very related to these particular questions. Therefore the whole idea of debating these matters and concerning ourselves with them is of just as much importance as the concern with economic matters.

I believe this assembly should be involved in these matters, and indeed just a few months ago during the consideration of these estimates last year we had what I thought was a very good debate on this particular vote at that time. It was with that thought in mind that we put the proposition forward in the throne debate that this assembly should have a further full debate on the matter.

I might say also that because we believe this assembly should be involved, we try to make available to the members of the assembly all the material that comes to our attention. With that in mind we sent out a memo recently to all members of the Legislature asking what various reports and documents they wished so they would have background either for the debate or for their own use. It disturbs me that only one member of the Legislature has replied so far and asked for the material. I know the members who will probably speak today don't need to reply to the memo because they already have the material, that is those who are most directly concerned with constitutional matters; friends such as the members for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and others, I know, have already most of the documents. Still, we received only one reply from the members of the Legislature. I hope others will avail themselves of the opportunity to get the documents: the best-offer drafts that came out of the constitutional meetings, the various reports of our advisory committee, the Pepin-Robarts report, the Canadian Bar Association; all of these things are available. We have them in the intergovernment affairs secretariat, whose vote we're now discussing. They're there to assist all of us in being better informed on these matters, and also in formulating our own opinions and putting forward our own positions.

In finishing up, Mr. Chairman, all I want to say is that we haven't, at this point, said no to a committee. I think that the first proposition was that a committee should sit over the summer. We did not think that was a good idea. I think most of the members of this House felt there were enough committees which would be sitting over the summer and to have another would not be a possibility in practical terms.

The thrust for another committee came out of a meeting I had with the member for Ottawa East and the member for Riverdale. As I said to them both this morning, it has gone to the House leaders, because the House leaders do have a responsibility, along with those who organize the business of this House, to find out what times the House sits and whether there are possibilities for other committees and so forth. Based on the kind of discussion that comes back from that we will have something definite. Certainly, on behalf of the government, I will give a definite opinion as to our feeling regarding a committee. If it is physically possible to do it, I have no objection to sitting down and discussing these matters with any members of the House at any length of time.

We could look at it in two lights. It has been suggested we need a committee so that committee could go and visit the members of the National Assembly in Quebec. That would be a possibility.

Another possibility that could be explored, quite apart from a special committee, is the idea of an interrelationship between this assembly and the National Assembly in Quebec so we can understand each other, member for member; so they can understand our feelings, desires and hopes for what they will do, and so they, on the other hand, will try to tell us what they feel and think should happen. But that could be organized on a much larger scale by the House itself organizing exchanges. If our ministry could facilitate that, I would be most happy to do that. I am separating that from committee studies.

I was thinking the other day we could organize an exchange involving all those members, even those who do not have the time or really a first-priority interest in that committee as a permanent committee they might want to sit on but who would be very interested in visiting the members of the National Assembly. Perhaps some time in the fall we could organize an exchange visit between the members of the Legislature—not the government—and the members of the National Assembly. That could be done through the Speakers and their offices, with them providing the exchange vehicle so that it does not become an intergovernmental affair but one of one legislative body to another. That would be my reply to the member for Riverdale at the present time.

As I say, on the matter of a committee, it was my understanding that our House leader was going to discuss it with the other House leaders; perhaps we will have some response on it next week.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments pertaining to the comments made here this morning by the member for Riverdale and the minister.

First of all, responding to the minister's comments about sending out a questionnaire to members of the Legislature: considering the volume of paper we get, it is quite possible that is not the most effective way to gauge the interest of members of the Legislature in constitutional reform or in a constitutional debate. The minister will recognize we get questionnaires ad infinitum. It may be, with so many of them coming in, that some of our staff is engaged to send those directly to the wastepaper basket. I would hate to think we were gauging the interest of all members of this assembly by the response to that questionnaire.

The second thing I would like to mention is that I was pleased to hear the minister talk again about the question of constitutional reform, saying that it is an important topic and, with the economic problems being solved, we will have no further problems in this country. I must say to the minister—and I think I have said it on a number of occasions since 1976—that the interest of the government has not always been such that it has been altogether encouraging for us who have taken a deep interest in national unity and constitutional reform. The approach taken by the government, except in the recent past, has not been one to make us all that enthusiastic.

I would remind the minister that the election of the Parti Quebecois took place in November, 1976 and we're approaching the third year of that government. It's only for a year now that we've had a ministry that is going to start focusing on that. This is only the second set of estimates dealing with the administration of intergovernmental affairs. Before that, the ministry was a mish-mash that included Treasury, Intergovernmental Affairs and all of this. We felt at that point there was insufficient focus.

I would remind the minister as well that the position taken originally by the government and by the Premier (Mr. Davis) after the election of the Parti Quebecois was not one to enthuse too many people in the House; there was confusion at first and the position of the government was not all that clear.

I recall, if not this minister then certainly some of his colleagues and members of the cabinet, clearly saying that once we solved the economic problems there would be no further problems and that we would for all intents and purposes have taken care of the unity of the country. Constitutional reform was not going to be a problem if we solved the question of inflation and if we solved the question of jobs. There has been confusion, and I've been extremely critical of the government on that score.

I congratulated the minister at the time he was appointed because he was someone I felt would perceive the overall implications of this. I am pleased to hear the minister say that solving the economic problem will not solve our constitutional problem at this time. Those who think that solving the economic problem is going to resolve everything in this country should think back to when the rise of nationalism in Quebec took place. It was in the better years, in the 1960s when unemployment was low and when inflation was not a problem. Those who think solving the economic problem is going to satisfy those who crave constitutional change in Quebec or elsewhere are confused indeed. Look at the province of Alberta, which wants constitutional change. Certainly it doesn't face economic problems that are of much concern as compared to those of some of the other provinces.

I would go a step further in speaking to those who feel that the economic solution is a solution to all our problems. Those who think they can contain the rise of nationalism or the craving by the majority of Quebecers or other Canadians to have constitutional reform, those who think they can curtail that desire which is often expressed in nationalistic terms by either economic reform or economic reprisals are misled indeed. In fact, when there is that craving based on nationalism, it's not going to be economic threat or economic reform which is going to satisfy that sort of appetite. We have too many precedents in other countries, on other continents, as evidence of that.

Talking first of all about the resolution, I was one who felt we should have been debating these issues in the next session immediately after November 1976. We should have been involved in that; unfortunately we were not. This matter has dragged on and on. Apart from occasional debate on a bill where all members participated, we've had very few discussions dealing with constitutional reform in this assembly. Considering the priority of things and considering how we spend our time here, I felt that issue should have merited, and should have warranted more attention on the part of the government and on the part of the members of the assembly.

Having waited all this time, I felt that if we were going to discuss a resolution, then let's discuss it at a time where it's going to have maximum impact. It seems to me that the maximum impact one can have out of a unanimous resolution coming out of this assembly would be at the time of the referendum, when they are discussing the referendum. I don't know if my colleagues agree with me on the frustrations that as Canadians we are just sitting back looking at what is happening in the province of Quebec. We have a party whose main principle is independence, and this independence is based on what they call souveraineté association. Association, of course, involves association with Ontario; we should not just sit back and let a particular spokesman, Levesque in these circumstances, interpret what the association is going to be all about while we, in Ontario, who are the main partner of this association, would just sit back and not say anything.

I felt that it was important, extremely important, that having waited this long, for God's sakes, let's have the resolution at a time when the message can be clear to the people voting on the referendum in the province of Quebec. My suggestion has been, first of all, let's not have it at a time during a federal election when again that issue would be clouded, the waters would be muddy, it would be confused and maybe lost in the overall debate of a national election.

Secondly, as I said, we can expect the referendum this fall. We should have it at that time so that for those who are discussing the various options in the province of Quebec the electorate in that province be well informed as to the position of Ontario, of the members of the assembly representing the people of this province, at the time they are going to make a decision on the referendum.

Moving from that point, Mr. Chairman, to the issue raised by the member for Riverdale about his committee, I felt and I agreed with the minister that, first of all, the resolution should not be debated here for a few days and then sent to a committee and at that point the impact of it, I felt, would have been lost.

Having said that, I have always agreed and I have told the member for Riverdale, and my colleagues I think are in support, that the idea of a committee looking at constitutional reform, studying the various options and reports that have been forward now for the last two years, both at the provincial level, or Pepin-Robarts at the national level, the Canadian Bar Association report and so on, was something that was worthwhile.

The member for Riverdale has said we have committees on every conceivable topic, some of which I must admit—and my colleagues may not agree with me—that on a priority list I would certainly not list as high as constitutional reform. We should have a committee, and the importance of this committee, as I see it, is that we in this assembly would be saying, as the government has said repeatedly to Levesque: "If you are proposing something like souveraineté association, independence and association, we in Ontario"—as the Premier has said—"if you are talking independence, association is not an option that you can be discussing with your people because we are not for it."

The importance of the committee would be so that we can have something positive, not only negative; that we just don't say: "Look we are not interested in association," but that we make it very clear from this committee that we have something positive to offer, that we in Ontario really believe in constitutional reform and that we are not satisfied and that we are prepared to listen to those who are not satisfied with the status quo, we are prepared to listen to them as long as the option, as Ryan has said repeatedly, is based on federalism.

I agree with the setting up of the committee. We have heard here this morning the various views as to the practicality of having the committee at a particular time. As I understand the discussions that have taken place, both the minister and I expressed to the member for Riverdale that we were in favour of the committee. The problem with the committee this summer, though, is that with all the committees that have been structured we just don't have the bodies to be on that committee in the summer.

I personally have agreed with the member for Riverdale and I certainly have no objection that we name the committee now, that we decide about the structure, that we have meetings possibly to decide the structure of this committee, the number of members to sit on the committee and so on and that the committee start its work in the fall. I think that the suggestion is a good one. I am convinced the House leaders will look at this option and will see fit to accept it if it is the will of the members of the assembly.

I can understand the frustration of the member for Riverdale. I see no reason why a commitment on the part of all parties should not be made to say we are going to have the committee and that its role will be as the member outlined in his resolution. I agree with the member for Riverdale that in the past the government has not involved the members of the assembly very much in constitutional reform. That is something the government has basically decided on its own.

I will just give an example: it has continually been the position of this government that repatriation of the constitution should not be done unilaterally by the federal government. That position was changed only in the last conference in February of this year. That was quite a 180-degree turn, but none of us had ever been aware of that—

Mr. MacDonald: Not even Joe Clark was told before they made the announcement.

Mr. Roy: Yes. Of course, I can understand—

Mr. MacDonald: Quite an exercise in co-operative federalism.

Mr. Roy: I can understand they would not advise him, because at that time Joe Clark was pretty confused as to his constitutional position.

Mr. Lawlor: What do you mean "at that time"?

Mr. Roy: Nevertheless, it is an indication the government has not involved us very much. I think this committee is one way members of all parties can be involved. Let's look at those reports. I think it would be extremely helpful to the government. I would think the government should jump at this chance to get input from all members of the assembly.

But I want to make it very clear I don't agree with accusations that the minister somehow has delayed the resolution. I was one who discussed it with him and said we should not have it during the federal election. I don't mind putting it on the record that I felt the resolution should be put forward at a time when it would have maximum impact in Quebec. I felt the closer to the referendum the better it would be. If that happens to be this fall, then I am all for it.

So I am not going to be one who is going to accuse the minister for agreeing with suggestions that I made to him. But I would say we need a commitment on the part of all parties in this House that this committee, as the member for Riverdale has said, be structured and that we participate in it.

In deference to some of my colleagues, I, as a member—and I think many people are aware of my priorities—don't see many things more important than that issue in the coming years here in this country. I think this committee is an excellent idea, and if we can set it up, talk about the general terms of it and have it start working in the fall, then we are all for it.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, since the inception of the Party Quebecois in office, there has been a recurrence in stirrings of quite a deep alienation. We have done damned little, as English-speaking people, to mollify that, to come to terms with it, to seek accommodations; on the contrary, we have always sat on high horses and scowled.

But coming closer to today, what the honourable member has just said is perfectly true. For three years, for mysterious reasons, the government has scouted, circumvented, hung back, truncated, not dealt with, this issue in this House. The occasions upon which we have been asked to make any contribution to the matter have been rare indeed. It has been even rarer that the minister has made any. It is past the initial phase where we held olive branches out, where we said we wanted to keep the country in its integrity and that we were prepared to make overtures and go to some length in order to do that—these were vocables, mere words. They had to be said and thank heaven they were, but they have to be fleshed out too; they can't be left as empty gestures.

What you did the other day was part of the same act. You repudiate, as we all do, sovereignty association. We may have to come to terms with it some afternoon, but we do so most grudgingly. We seek the alternatives, but do we seek the alternatives or have we sought the alternatives?

Two reports have come forward. I leave out the bar association report; I haven't studied that one. There are two reports to which I wish to give high praise, something which hasn't been done.

Again, we have had a whole federal election campaign. How much and to what extent by any party in that campaign would you have anticipated there would have been some debate on this whole issue of the powers of the constitution? You wait upon events. You expect something to happen. What happens? An emptiness. They circumvented the issue again. Why? For a hundred reasons. Because it is not opportune. It is never opportune to deal with tough issues that are going to burn or wound some element in government.

Since this is the only forum in which one can speak to any extent, let's deal with your government. You got a report by the name of the Pepin-Robarts report back in January. A Future Together, it is called. I put it to you, that is an excellent report, in this sense at least: It is the foundation, the thing we have been looking for, in order to put our teeth into the issue and come to something concrete rather than the sentimental gestures going around at the present time. You do not seem to be prepared to address yourself to anything else.

I would have thought Johnny Robarts would have held prestige, and would have had impact on this government, but apparently not. Apparently he is on the shelf too. In this area, I just don't know the minister's thinking. I respected Robarts in this House for his astuteness and his integrity. He got on the commission working with Mr. Pepin, and to give as many points away if you will, not giving points away, but as I see it, he came to a rational revision in the light of human history 100 years after the event, a reallocation of the pie. You may not like the particular tenor, the particular division and the concurrences they have set up, but at least they tried. They put some definition into the issue for the first time.

Let me just mention before I forget that a few months after, there was a report from Ian Macdonald, previous Deputy Treasurer of this province, now president of York University. He introduced a small report with respect to the Senate and matters of that kind which are, for my money, quite peripheral to the real issues involved here. Then, in April, he came along with a major report which I have here in front of me.

A most curious thing happened. What that Macdonald task force, which was financed and promoted by this government, came up with was curiously coincidental with Pepin's and Robarts' findings. These reports complement one another; sometimes they reinforce one another; they certainly don't run contrary to one another as one might possibly expect.

With respect to the increase of provincial powers, they recognize the tenor in this country. It may be somewhat regrettable that if this country is to hang together, there will be some erosion of federal powers. It is a price that has to be paid as I see it. It is not even a high price. It is mostly in cultural matters that it has to take place.

No one, for instance, in the area of taxation, I would think, would take any issue with the fact that the provinces might have both forms of taxation, direct and indirect. The stuff founded on John Stuart Mill and imported into our constitution, giving full amplitude to the one government, the feds, and keeping the provinces in a position of subordination in this particular way, is out of date, silly. And, not in force; we trespass upon it constantly. Gasoline tax is a case of quite indirect taxation.

To recognize the facts of life and the economic impacts in a developed economy in the light of a contemporary world is the first task of this report and the first task that we have to carry forward.

Therefore, a committee of this House is necessary. It's almost impossible, it's too intricate to debate it here—I want to do a bit of it before I'm finished. To get the picture, to work one area, for instance, the powers of reservation in the federal government, or the multiple powers under the BNA Act as they stand at present, and to play one against the other to see how they dovetail, fit in or even clash, and where the resolution will lie, that all has to be done in a committee among people who are interested.

I agree as far as timing on the thing is concerned. I think my colleague, the member for Riverdale, has indicated that that committee should not convene until after Labour Day when the other committees of the House are completed—or when there is a certain amount of elbow room—but convene it should and must, and I would ask for the minister's full participation and assistance in seeing that it does.

Many of us are intensely interested in the problem. We think we can make a contribution. We think that a certain amount of unanimity in that kind of a committee will certainly eventuate. We think that what will be said coming out of that committee would have some kind, we trust, of impact upon the province of Quebec and those who totally dig in their heels and are recalcitrant in this way. They don't even believe we're very intensely interested. They haven't very many grounds so to believe. As I say, throughout the whole election campaign there was hardly a whisper.

When do we address ourselves to the hard facts and the difficult issues that are involved in a way that shows we mean business? Gestures and empty mouthings have lost their effectiveness at this time in history. We would have to indicate what kind of a constitution we would be prepared to negotiate.

I suspect that with some tough negotiation we could come to very substantial agreement with even elements of the Parti Quebecois in Quebec as to the distribution of these powers. They have conceded certain things in monetary policy. Sure, they want to exercise vetoes which is inadmissible, but in the areas of immigration and of trade, there are all kinds of possibilities, but no articulation has been made. We have left it all up to them and their saying, "Well, we'll do this." But it's too narrow and the debate has to be opened up. We begin opening up debates by opening up ourselves, by opening up debates here in this particular forum.

At some point I would suspect we should send a delegation down. The New Democratic Party, from our own caucus, has had members on two occasions make goodwill visits to the province of Quebec to meet as many people as they possibly can, people in high positions in that province, to indicate that here in this assembly there are numerous individuals who are deeply concerned, even some people quite wracked over the possibilities of the issue.

And there is this cursed business of philistinism in the English-speaking press, of doing everything by numbers—the numbers game:

"A poll was taken and only 24.6 per cent said they were in favour of independence." Then all the complacency sets in. We twiddled our thumbs.

That minority there is a concentrated, dedicated crew. The people who run the world are such people. It's those who make up their minds with grim determination, come hell or high water, that a certain end is going to be achieved, who move a populace. In the modern world, where people seem so pre-occupied and lackadaisical over so many issues, that's exactly what happens. We have to forfend and offset that and have people of equal dedication holding this country together. All the flatulency and all the ingrained complacency which I feel is involved in this thing is quite by the board.

Again, I ask the minister to share, in this sense, whatever the statistics may show, we are in grim peril in terms of the integration and the holding together of this country. If the future possibilities of this country begin to disintegrate, it will disintegrate. It is a very difficult country to govern. There are artificialities. We have tried to engender an internal spirit, which has no definition yet. Our writers and artists have not been able—as happens with other nations—to delineate the fundamental attitudes of this people, its temperamental references, its emotional tenor as a nation. I'm sure it's there, but it's there in a state of quiescence. It's bubbling in Quebec a bit, but the sense of quiescence in the rest of the country is deeply disturbing.

As I said, I want to make some reference to points in the Robarts report, because I don't want to be accused of the thing I'm accusing you of—namely, that I'm not getting down to business and putting my finger on elements that have to be discussed and that I'm avoiding discussion for whatever reason.

When the Pepin-Robarts report came out it was received with faint praise. It got very little press. It got very little attention. In Ottawa, you could well understand it. Trudeau simply put it in the bottom vault. It didn't say what he wanted it to say.

His ideology—and at least it rises to the dignity of a concept—is that a very powerful, continuous central government is necessary, and there will be no sacrifice of powers at the central focus whatsoever. The provinces may howl around the door, but he is going to hold at the Ottawa focal point the primary powers in this country—economic and otherwise. There's a certain lordly air about that, the crown prince of Bessarabia is going to run the show. He's been repudiated for that imperial stature. We all find that.

But the report has also helped to alienate Quebec and to sharpen the issues of division in this country; there's no question about it. You just don't approach that. When the glaring facts of life with respect to fisheries policy, with respect to language rights, with respect to immigration—as to who has control and who doesn't—with respect to television, in the French language or otherwise and the auto-determination as to who produces the programs and with respect to the whole gamut of the constitution are in question because of technological change and because of the changing evolution and tenor of our people, you just won't come to terms with it.

What happened to you fellows, what happened to the Ontario government, with all the prestige that I would have anticipated John Robarts would have brought to this thing? You too have sat enormously quiet about it. Probably the reason for your doing so is that you're not quite sure. It's not because, as I say, your thinking has risen to the dignity of a concept. It's not conceptual yet. We're trying to give it substance, form and meaning. Besides, it didn't suit your purposes.

To the extent that it had any articulation at all, it ran counter to certain basic, emotional feelings, the subterranean kind. I call it the United Empire Loyalist complex. It might offend certain segments of this province to give any cognizance to, or even to weigh the possibilities of Pepin-Robarts, and it will. It can't be helped. You have to make your choices. Do you desire to keep this country in some form and know in which way you're willing to negotiate and offer? The whole position of the Parti Quebecois ought to have been well anticipated by this time by saying, "This is what we're prepared to do."

I say to you, what we're prepared to do at the end of the day, and I would hope it would come out of such a committee as a recommendation, would go a long way to consolidating this nation and to meeting the legitimate demands of the recalcitrant elements in the province of Quebec. We haven't even tried. We've done nothing. And when people inveigh, as they have done, in the House against the failure to call a debate, the failure to deal with the issue over a long period of time now, it's a part of that tenor, a part of that flow of events moving in your party.

You're usually fairly forthright and you come forward with fairly developed policies. At least you give us something to sink our teeth into. In this issue—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't wish to interrupt the member but I do draw his attention to the time. I'm enjoying the remarks, and I'm sure the House is enjoying what you're saying too, but I do draw your attention to the time.

On motion by Mr. Warner, the committee of the whole reported progress.

The House adjourned at 1:04 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

MARKHAM AREA SCHOOL NEEDS

182. Mr. Stong: Will the minister act upon the request of the Community Association for Unionville Secondary Education (CAUSE) to provide a new high school in Unionville? Will the minister review the development applications which provide for approximately 3,000 new homes in Unionville, 2,000 in Risebrough and 3,300 in Markham, the result of which will not only overcrowd both Markham District High School and Thornlea High School, but would call for the immediate construction of a secondary school in the Unionville area? Will the minister immediately undertake to satisfy the need of the secondary school students in Unionville to be educated in their own community? [Tabled May 16, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The Ministry of Education is pleased to receive input from local community groups such as the Community Association for Unionville Secondary Education, however, the decision to request the construction of new school facilities remains the responsibility of the local school board.

(b) The York County Board of Education is reviewing all development applications in their jurisdiction. This information is used by the board in setting their priorities for school additions. The York County Board of Education in their 1979 capital forecast placed a proposed new secondary school in Unionville in a low priority position, number 14.

When, in the opinion of the York County Board of Education, there are sufficient students to warrant a new high school in Unionville, no doubt the board will apply to the Ministry of Education for approval to build. The present forecast by the board projects the need for a school in Unionville in 1984.

183. Mr. Stong: Will the minister act upon the request of the Risebrough Community Association in the community of Markham, Ontario, to provide new and adequate school facilities to meet the growing educational needs in that area? Will the minister inform herself of the situation which now exists, in that projected figures indicate that by September 1, 1979, 1,000 units of the 1,130 units being built will be occupied producing approximately 480 students seeking educational facilities? Will the minister review the present policy which requires kindergarten children in grades one to five being bused to school in Richmond Hill and which also sees children in grades one to five being bused to a small school where gymnastic and library facilities are non-existent? Will the minister immediately review and provide adequate facilities in this community to meet the educational demands which will be in existence by September 1, 1979? [Tabled May 16, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The Ministry of Education is pleased to receive input from local community groups such as the Risebrough Community Association, however the decision on whether or not new school facilities are needed, their size and location, is the responsibility of the local school board.

(b) The York County Board of Education is monitoring all new housing in the area and is developing enrolment projections to be used in setting their priorities for future building needs.

(c) Until a new subdivision is established, the size and location of new facility requirements are unknown. During the development period children are often bused to available space in nearby schools which allows the school board time to plan their new facility needs.

(d) When the actual need for additional accommodation for the Risebrough area is known, the York County Board of Education will apply to the Ministry of Education for approval to build.

184. Mr. Stong: Will the Minister of Education cause an investigation to be made into the overcrowding conditions which exist at the German Mills Public School in Markham? Will the minister explain the policy of the ministry which appears to prefer the busing of pupils to distant empty classrooms in the regional municipality of York rather than construct new facilities or add on to existing facilities where circumstances warrant? Will the minister review the policy of the ministry which requires that prior to the building of a school, there exist sufficient number of children in the area to equal 80 per cent of the projected capacity of the said school and apply that formula to the building of a school on the Flowerdale site in the town of Markham, in order to accommodate the excess enrolment in the German Mills Public School which is equal to 123 per cent of that school's designated capacity? Will the minister review the immediate need for a new school on the Flowerdale site in the light of projected figures over the next five years which indicate that school-age children in the area will increase to approximately 900, and which figure does not take into account the fact that there is presently before the Ontario Municipal Board an application by a developer to build in the area an additional 190 townhouses? If this project is allowed to proceed the projected figures indicate that school enrolment will not decline until 1995. Will the minister initiate a policy which would provide architecturally acceptable but movable school buildings to accommodate the shifting need of the school population? How does the minister reconcile the ministry's policy of fiscal restraint which includes busing and which dictates against the welfare of children, with the more important need of providing adequate facilities so that the educational and social needs of children may be properly met in their own community environment? Will the minister therefore satisfy the needs of the children in the German Mills area of Markham and build a second school on the Flowerdale site? [Tabled May 16, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The Ministry of Education is presently monitoring the situation at the German Mills Public School in Markham.

(b) When circumstances warrant, new or additional facilities are authorized. As subdivisions are developing, children are often bused to empty facilities elsewhere in the jurisdiction while new student places are being planned and built.

(c) The German Mills Public School has a capacity of 616 pupils. The present enrolment (April 30/79) is 731. The extra pupils are housed in eight portables with a capacity of 270 pupils. The additional 115 pupils is not a sufficient number to warrant the construction of a new school.

(d) An addition to the Bayview Fairways Public School is planned by the York County Board of Education. This will relieve overcrowding at the German Mills school and provide sufficient accommodation to meet expected enrolment increases.

(e) The Ministry of Education encourages the use of relocatable school buildings. These are presently available and being used by a number of school boards.

(f) Adequate facilities will be provided as the need is evident. Busing of pupils to schools with empty space is an efficient use of facilities as an interim measure.

(g) The ministry, in co-operation with the York County Board of Education, is working to satisfy the need for additional school accommodation in the German Mills area of Markham by allocating money for an addition at the Bayview Fairways Public School, which is adjacent to the German Mills area.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

141. Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister of Health not know or does he not agree that general hospitals cannot provide the specific kind of care or services that psychiatric hospitals can and do; that they attend upon and to different and distinct groups of patients in terms of length of care and the seriousness of the emotional disability? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

142. Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister of Health seriously contend that the Queen Street facility can or will into the future meet the projected increasing demands for hospitalization for the mentally ill as is documented in the McKinsey report and as set out in the OPSEU brief which points out a deficiency of beds almost before you begin? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

143. Mr. Lawlor: What about the day care and particularly the outpatients services at Lakeshore? Does the Ministry of Health seriously pretend that the present needs, much more the future requirements, of these people will begin to be met? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

144. Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister of Health not recognize on the basis of your own statistics that a new hospital will be necessary, no matter what, within a foreseeable time; and at a very much greater capital cost, including the acquirement of land, than as recommended in the role study? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

145. Mr. Lawlor: How can the Ministry of Health possibly close the special observation unit which attends to patients under Lieutenant Governor's warrants? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

146. Mr. Lawlor: What is the Ministry of Health thinking about in removing the dialysis unit to Whitby when the patients are located at the other end of the world? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

147. Mr. Lawlor: Since it was found impossible over a two-year or greater period to find a location for the child and adolescent care unit and that institution will remain on the grounds, what basis is there for a belief that the numerous other units can be accommodated elsewhere in the Lakeshore area? Where? And, in particular, the present valued and necessary alcoholic program? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

148. Mr. Lawlor: What disposition does the Minister of Health intend to make of that building which was financed and constructed by the volunteers, who have been such a valuable asset to this hospital? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

149. Mr. Lawlor: Cannot some use be found by the Ministry of Health for the workshops and rehabilitation equipment and facilities fairly recently erected on the premises at considerable cost? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

150. Mr. Lawlor: In short, and as constantly new questions arise, does the Minister of Health not realize or even acknowledge that he is in the process of making a gross and irreparable blunder which his government will soon learn to regret, in his unplanned and ill-considered move to close this facility against the best advice of his own hired consultants, $120,000 worth, and the numerous, most directly involved social agencies and individuals? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

151. Mr. Lawlor: Is the Minister of Health not now prepared to reconsider the closing of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital on the basis of the numerous observations and comments made at public meetings, by way of correspondence and by briefs submitted, particularly by the Ontario Public Service Employees Union? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

152. Mr. Lawlor: Since I am often awakened at 3:00 a.m. in the morning by someone calling about a problem, and this has been known to happen to many other members of the Ontario Legislature, does the Minister of Health really feel that such a disturbance of his sleep constitutes adequate grounds for closing the institution, as he intimates by his repeated, soulful reference to this matter? And in particular, does a fire arising out of actions of a patient in the special observation unit so constitute any or adequate grounds? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

153. Mr. Lawlor: Will the Minister of Health not give good consideration to the perfectly reasonable suggestion made by the member for Lakeshore that a planned, phased approach to this whole problem would be the best solution for all concerned? That is to say, that a new psychiatric hospital having, say, about 150 beds at its completion, be gradually constructed over a period of five to 10 years and that at each stage of completion, the more serious patients be moved from the older quarters into the new thereby retaining the full complement of present in and outpatients services without disruption and located on such portion of these extensive grounds as would free the balance for such approved community purposes as would meet the needs of the area? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: These matters were thoroughly discussed by the standing committee on social development upon reference of the annual report of the Ministry of Health to that committee. In particular, see my contributions to the committee on Monday, May 14, and Tuesday, May 15, 1979 (Hansard, pages S-442-453 and S-457-475).

X-RAY EQUIPMENT OPERATORS

197. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Ministry of Health advise how many persons are employed as operators of X-ray equipment in Ontario? Of these, how many are registered radiological technicians under the Radiological Technicians Act? [Tabled May 24, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: More time is required to provide this information and an answer will be tabled on approximately June 22, 1979.

PCV LICENCES

204. Mr. Conway: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications provide a list of all PCV class R licences granted in region four since September 1, 1978 to the present date? [Tabled May 28, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: In response to the member's question, attached is a listing of class R operators who have been authorized to provide a service to region four, Eastern Ontario. All of the licences were either issued or amended subsequent to September 1, 1978.

Three qualifications are made with respect to this listing, namely:

1. The government automated statistics file from which the listing was extracted includes only the original date of issue of the licence or the most recent date of any subsequent amendments without an indication of which applies. It is, therefore, not possible without a review of all of the original licence documents to confirm whether the licences are newly granted or amended. If the member requires such a distinction, the search of the approximately 100 licences will be made.

2. The maintenance of the automated listing was discontinued as of April 12, 1979 and thus includes no issues/amendments after that date. As for the above, a manual search can be carried out at some considerable expense of time.

3. The listing consists of any operators authorized in region four regardless of the place of residence of the operator.

Class R PCV operator listing, region four, granted or amended September 1, 1978 to April 12, 1979: Stamp, Ross E.; Buckhorn

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

Mr. Speaker: If I could, I would like to have the attention of all honourable members for a moment or two.

On Thursday last, June 7, the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) asked me to consider as a point of order whether the government was, in fact, complying with standing order 32(c) in not tabling as part of the compendia on the introduction of government bills those opinion polls which the various ministries have had taken from time to time.

I have considered the question very carefully and I fail to see how I can be expected to know what was, or what was not, the background information considered by a minister and his staff when preparing legislation. The minister tables what he considers to be the compendium required by the standing order, and there is no way that I can look behind his decision.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GUIDE TO THE LEGISLATURE

Mr. Speaker: I would also like to bring to the attention of all honourable members that this coming Thursday morning between the hours of 11:15 and 11:45, I have arranged for a photograph to be taken on the front lawn of all members and staff who work in this Legislative Building. Her Honour has graciously consented to take part, as has the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) and the leader of the New Democratic Party. This photograph will be used in the first photographic guide to be produced on the Legislature, which will be released early in October. I am enthusiastic about this event, and I think all those employed in this building will want to be a part of this permanent record.

I would also like to point out that official photographs for the handbook will be taken during question period in this chamber on Thursday afternoon from a number of vantage points, and I would suggest that all members be present, if humanly possible, at that time.

Mr. S. Smith: May I rise on a matter of privilege, please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I don't know how your privileges could have been abrogated by either of those statements, but go ahead.

Mr. S. Smith: Just thinking of that mass of people on the front steps shook me.

MEMBERS' ANNIVERSARIES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise because I understand that today is the 20th anniversary of the election to this House of certain members. In particular, to begin with, I want to mention the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman), who is celebrating his 20th anniversary. I want simply to say that member has been a very forthright and forceful representative for his constituents and has conducted himself in this House, and in his personal relationships with members of all parties, in a very gentlemanly way and has been a real credit to the entire political process in the province of Ontario.

As members know, he is a man who contributed greatly to our country in the training of gymnasts as well as in his educational career. While not wishing to take excessive time to go into all his contributions, I want simply to say that he has served Windsor well, he has served Ontario well, he has served Canada well, and we trust he will have many more years to serve all of us in this Legislature.

While I am on my feet, may I also say a word about two members opposite who are also celebrating their 20th anniversary. We certainly want to wish both of them very well. One is the member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Rollins), who is in his seat. The other is the member for Brampton (Mr. Davis), who is not here at the moment, but who we all wish only the best at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as a student of the classics, I am sure you know that when great events occur there are signs and portents, usually meteorological portents. Anyone who experienced the rain storms of last night or the tornado that occurred over Brampton will know that there was some kind of a heavenly commemoration of the event that occurred 20 years ago to the member originally for Peel and now for Brampton.

I might say, in congratulating him on his 20 years of service, along with the member for Windsor-Walkerville, that of course that does not necessarily mean we wish him as many years in the future as we have wished him well for the past.

Mr. Breaugh: Twenty and out.

I do want to say, though, that since he has been in the House for only 20 years we resolve not to hold him responsible for everything that has been done by the Conservatives over the time they have been in power.

While I am on my feet, I might mark the fact that Saturday last was the 24th anniversary of the election to this Legislature of my friend and colleague and our former leader, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), along with the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton). They have spent 24 years in the House.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, on this occasion when we are recognizing the anniversaries of certain members elected to this Legislature, I think we are also recognizing the birthday of probably the oldest living former member of this Legislature, the former member for Renfrew South, the Honourable Thomas P. Murray, who celebrated his 99th birthday yesterday.

Mr. Murray happens to be the grandfather of the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway). Just Thursday morning last we were at Sutton Place at the Ontario Forest Industries Association meeting. They remarked in their opening talks that morning that because of conditions in the industry back in the early forties that association had been formed.

I have before me the minutes of the meeting that took place on March 12, 1940, at which the Honourable Peter Heenan, then Minister of Lands and Forests, and other notable members of the Legislature, including Mr. Murray, and representatives of various forest industries were present. At that time, they discussed the many problems facing the industry. From that meeting was born, I believe, the Ontario Forest Industries Association. I am sure Mr. Murray played some part in that. Yesterday the honourable gentleman celebrated his 99th birthday.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: On rising today on behalf of the government, I would first have to concur with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party and my good friend from Renfrew South.

On this side of the House, we feel very proud that 20 years ago this particular election took place. I would have to say I was quite actively involved in that election on June 11, 1959.

Mr. Breaugh: For which party?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The House would really not believe me if I openly admitted to them that I worked for all the parties on that particular day.

Mr. Breaugh: That doesn't surprise me a bit.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I was the returning officer. I would have to admit that I did have some personal feelings with respect to it.

Mr. McClellan: Recount.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The Premier of Ontario was elected to the Legislature at that time. Since his election there have been many changes in Ontario and he has played an active role in those changes. We in this party, as part of the government, believe our Premier will continue serving, serving, and serving again. When one looks back over at these three members who were elected 20 years ago, one sees they have now successfully completed six elections. That in itself is a record. We are very proud, first of our Premier, but also of all three of them. We offer our congratulations to all of them on the service they have given to the people of Ontario and to their own home ridings.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition. I heard some of his comments through one of those mechanical devices and I do say to him that they were probably the most objective observations he has made in recent years.

As I was moving through the offices, I heard through another speaker the observations of the member for Ottawa Centre. I do thank the two leaders opposite for their kind words. I thank my colleague, the former returning officer in Lambton county.

Mr. Nixon: He is the returning officer in Peel.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, although I would say to the former leader of the Liberal Party during my first election, thinking back, I wish the member for Lambton had been the returning officer in Peel.

I also want to extend my best wishes to those others who share this anniversary with me on both sides of the House. I know I speak for them when I say it seems most days like only yesterday. Other days, it seems like quite a bit longer.

I would also like in this House, Mr. Speaker, through you, to say a word of appreciation to the citizens of the now city of Brampton, the then county of Peel for the support I have enjoyed from them for this relatively short period of time. I listened carefully to the observations of the Minister of Government Services. While no one can predict with any degree of accuracy how long one stays in public life, I can only say while there are some days I maybe feel a little differently, I have always enjoyed the fellowship in this House, the spirit of competitiveness and the fair play usually demonstrated by the members opposite. I do wish to express my appreciation to them on this occasion.

Twenty years in any person's lifetime is a substantial part thereof, and yet I think I can speak for every member in this House when I say I can't think of many other professions, callings or vocations where one gets the same sense of satisfaction as one does in public service. I really have very few, if any, regrets for the time I have spent in public life. I say that on a personal basis. It doesn't necessarily reflect the views of my wife, my five children, or the two dogs.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members opposite, my appreciation.

Mr. B. Newman: On this most important day in my life, I would like to first thank my leader, the member for Hamilton West, for his kind comments as well as the leader of the third party, the member for Ottawa Centre, and the other two members who have had the opportunity of making a few comments.

Not like the member for Lambton who was once a returning officer, I happen to be very fortunate in being a returning member, for which I thank the good citizens in the great riding of Windsor-Walkerville.

When one looks back at political life, I could say I'm one of the successful failures. In 20 years I've been successful at elections but never have been successful in taking those 15 or 20 steps over to the other side of the House.

Mr. Nixon: Next time.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh come on Bernie, any time. Any day.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Then it would be the most important day of your life.

Mr. B. Newman: But hope springs eternal in the human breast and I know in the not too distant future the good citizens of Ontario will see that not only myself but the rest of us here in the Liberal caucus have that opportunity of seeing what it is like over there and looking at our counterparts on this side of the House.

Mr. Bradley: In fact, you will want to join us then.

Mr. Hennessy: I've got my own party.

Mr. B. Newman: One of the nice things in public life is that you have the opportunity of meeting so many nice people on a personal basis. You meet citizens who may have problems and others who may not and as a result of one's political position, be quite often able to render them assistance.

Another very pleasant thing is you meet so many nice ladies and gentlemen right here in this Legislature.

Mr. Nixon: That covers about 10 per cent.

Mr. B. Newman: I want to thank each and every one of them for the kindnesses they have extended to me in the past and for the kindnesses I know each of them will extend in the future.

Mr. Rollins: I would like to take this opportunity of thanking the Leader of the Opposition and our Premier for their kind remarks.

My riding was Hastings East when I started. Later it was Hastings, and at the present time it's Hastings-Peterborough. I have been very fortunate to have the support of the good people of those rural ridings. It has been a pleasure working with elected members of different political views, always with the one objective of working on behalf of the people of Ontario in a progressive way. After all, how could they do anything else under the leadership we have had from the previous Premiers of Ontario for that last 20 years?

I can only say that being elected here has given me a lot of experience. I have tried to serve the rural people, and sometimes I believe the Premier wonders what will happen next in the rural ridings. However, rural municipalities and the positions they take have been an objective of mine and will continue to be so.

I would like to thank you for this opportunity of saying a few words on this very memorable day and what it means to me after being elected at the same time as our Premier. I have had the greatest respect for his views and the objectives he's had for the people of this province and I will continue to do so.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: I have two brief points of privilege I would like to raise in the House. Last Friday, the Minister for Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) stated that Ministry of the Environment officials had visited, three times, the company Canadian Applied Technology, about whose loss of contract we were inquiring in the Legislature. The minister said all of their products were seen both in preparation and under test prior to delivery, so the site was visited on three occasions.

We have talked to the company and to their knowledge, neither during nor before the final award of that contract were there any such visits to their premises by officials of the Ministry of the Environment.

X-RAY EQUIPMENT OPERATORS

Mr. Cassidy: Also on a point of privilege, last week the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) responded in writing to a question which came from me about operators of X-ray equipment in the ministry's chest X-ray clinics. The minister said in his written reply that discussions are underway with the Ontario Society of Radiological Technicians to find a method of upgrading the unregistered employees to enable them to become members of the OSRT. The response indicated that all but nine of those employees are now unregistered.

We have spoken to the president of the Ontario Society of Radiological Technicians who tells us that no such discussions of the kind mentioned by the Minister of Health are taking place with respect to upgrading unregistered employees. A training course offered by the ministry to those employees is not recognized by the society and will not be accepted by them. This is a misstatement by the Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to document the dates of meetings that were held. I know that within the last month or so, Dr. Rorabeck wrote to the society to confirm various discussions. I will be glad to document dates to confirm this.

The understanding of the people who advise me is that they are to come back to us with a proposal as to how to assist those people who meet the present regulation but who are not registered in the society to become registered.

EMISSIONS OF TRITIUM

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would like to deal with the questions raised in this House on May 31 concerning the level of tritium in the drinking water of the town of Pickering. I would also like to deal with some additional questions which members have had and may have concerning emissions of tritium from Rolphton, Pickering A, Bruce A and Douglas Point. Before dealing with these questions, however, I would like to provide members with some background information concerning tritium.

Tritium is a type of radioactive hydrogen which emits very weak radiation and which interacts with the tissues of the body only if it is inhaled or ingested. Of all the radioactive substances known, tritium is considered the most innocuous, for the following reasons:

1. The amount of radiation released when it undergoes radioactive decay is less than that released by any other nuclide:

2. It does not constitute an external radiation hazard, because its radiation does not penetrate the skin;

3. It is eliminated from the body rapidly—one half is eliminated every 10 days; and

4. It does not concentrate in any particular organ of the body.

Tritium is produced in nature by the interaction of cosmic rays with the earth's atmosphere and, therefore, is found naturally, in varying quantities, in air, water and vegetation. Naturally-occurring tritium is one of many radioactive substances which emit ionizing radiation to which mankind is constantly exposed.

Nuclear generating stations can and do emit tritium into the environment, in both airborne and water effluents. These emissions are the result of very small but unavoidable heavy-water leaks. The result is slightly higher levels of tritium than would otherwise be the case from naturally occurring tritium alone.

To protect the public, the Atomic Energy Control Board has established two types of limits: one dealing with the maximum levels of radioactive materials in any effluents emitted from nuclear generating stations (these are called "derived emission limits"); the other dealing with the maximum level of radiation which a member of the public can be exposed to as a result of the operation of nuclear generating stations (this is called "the maximum permissible dose of ionizing radiation").

The derived emission limits set by the AECB or tritium are as follows.

1. For tritium contained in airborne effluents, an annual average of 0.3 nanocuries per litre; and

2. For tritium contained in water effluents, an annual average of 5,500 nanocuries per litre with no short-term emissions to exceed 10 times the annual average.

For honourable members' information, nanocuries per litre is a measure of the level of radioactivity in a litre of air or water; a nanocurie is one billionth of a curie.

The maximum permissible dose of ionizing radiation set by the AECB is 500 millirem per year. This is about five times the level which would be received from naturally occurring ionizing radiation in Ontario. In some areas of the world, the level which would be received from naturally occurring ionizing radiation is 5,000 millirem per year or even higher.

As members are aware, Ontario Hydro has established an operating target for its nuclear generating stations. That operating target is to remain within one per cent of the annual derived emission limits and the maximum permissible dose of ionizing radiation set by the AECB.

Ontario Hydro monitors the airborne effluents and water effluents from its nuclear generating stations to determine the level of any emissions of radioactive materials, including tritium. Airborne effluents are sampled continuously and measured daily. Water effluents which are likely to have become radioactive in the course of normal operations are sampled and measured before, and continuously during, their release. Water effluents which are not likely to have become radioactive in the course of normal operations are sampled continuously and measured weekly.

In addition to its station activities, Ontario Hydro monitors the drinking water of the Bruce nuclear power development and the towns of Deep River and Pickering and just recently commenced monitoring the drinking water of the towns of Port Elgin and Kincardine. At Pickering, Port Elgin, Kincardine and the Bruce nuclear power development, the drinking water is sampled weekly and measured monthly. At Deep River, the drinking water is sampled and measured on a spot basis, but no less frequently than monthly.

I have attached to this statement a series of tables showing the following:

1. The average annual emissions of tritium in airborne and water effluents from Rolph-ton since 1973; Pickering A since 1971; Bruce A since 1976; and Douglas Point since 1973;
2. The average annual level of tritium in the drinking water of the town of Deep River since 1975; the town of Pickering since 1973; and the Bruce nuclear power development since 1975;
3. The average level of tritium in the drinking water of Port Elgin and Kincardine for the first quarter of 1979; and
4. The level of tritium in Lake Ontario at various times over the past 30 years.

As members will note, none of the average annual emissions of tritium from Rolph-ton, Pickering A, Bruce A or Douglas Point A has exceeded Ontario Hydro's operating target of one per cent of the AECB derived emission limits. As members will also note, the average annual level of tritium in the drinking water of the towns of Deep River and Pickering over the period 1973-78 did not exceed two nanocuries per litre. To put this into perspective for members, a person would have to drink the towns' water for about 450 years to receive a level of radiation equal to a single chest X-ray.

Mr. S. Smith: Which X-ray machines are you speaking of?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Finally, members will note that the level of tritium in Lake Ontario has varied over the past 30 years. For example, prior to the commencement of the foreign nuclear weapons testing programs in the 1950s, the level of naturally occurring tritium in Lake Ontario water was about 0.02 nanocuries per litre. These nuclear weapons testing programs raised this level to about 10 nanocuries per litre in the early 1960s. However, by the late 1960s, the level had receded to about 0.75 nanocuries per litre, and today the level varies from 0.25 to 0.50 nanocuries per litre, depending on where one takes samples.

I should point out to the members that the figures for the emissions of tritium in the airborne and water effluents of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations, shown in the attached tables, are annual averages. Over the course of a year the levels of the emissions can and do fluctuate. Normally, these fluctuations are small. However, there can be, and sometimes are, short-term emissions which are higher. For example, during the period of the recent and much publicized heat exchanger leaks at Pickering A earlier this year there were short-term emissions of higher concentrations of tritium in the station's water effluent. One of these emissions—in fact, the only one in the history of Pickering A—exceeded the AECB's short-term release limit of 10 times the annual derived emission limit.

That emission occurred during an 80-second period on February 28, 1979, when the level of tritium in the station's water effluent reached 40 times the AECB's short-term emission limit. I should emphasize to the members, however, that both before and after this 80-second emission the level of tritium in the station's water effluent was less than one per cent of the AECB's short-term emission limit.

For members' information, Ontario Hydro sampled and measured the drinking water of the town of Pickering for a period after this short-term emission. The samples showed that the level of tritium in the drinking water of the town of Pickering rose to a level of 60 nanocuries per litre, or about one per cent of the AECB limit, for about six hours. This compares with the average level of tritium in the town's drinking water for the first quarter of 1979 of 2.6 nanocuries per litre, or about 0.05 per cent of the AECB limit.

Ontario Hydro has advised me that it notified AECB of the short-term release promptly after it happened. As is Hydro's usual practice, details of the release will be made public in Pickering's quarterly report for the first quarter of 1979, which will be released soon.

Finally, I would like to describe briefly to the members the level of radiation from tritium to which a person residing in the vicinity of one of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations is likely to be exposed. There are three ways in which a person living in the immediate vicinity of a station can receive a radiation exposure from tritium: in the air he or she breathes; in the water he or she drinks; and in the food he or she eats.

Ontario Hydro estimates that a person who resided continuously at the boundary of Pickering A during 1978, drinking only the town of Pickering's water and eating food-stuffs grown in the immediate vicinity of Pickering A, would have received a radiation exposure from tritium of less than two millirems, and a total radiation exposure from all radioactive emissions of between two millirems and three millirems.

Again, to put this into perspective for the members, this would be a radiation exposure equivalent to the additional radiation exposure a person would receive during a one-way jet flight from Toronto to Vancouver.

Finally, I would like to advise the members that extensive research has been carried out on the relative biological effects of tritium, both in Canada, at the Chalk River and Whiteshell nuclear establishments, and in other countries. A bibliography of this research is attached to the statement.

VICTIM AID SERVICE

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that beginning this month, your government, through the Ministry of Correctional Services, in co-operation with various community agencies, will be piloting a new service to help the victims of crime. The region of Peel has been selected as the test area for this victim aid service.

I am confident all members agree on the need for such a service. For too long, people who have had crimes committed against them have often been the forgotten losers in our criminal justice system. Our discussions with various groups in Peel, ranging from police and judges to the volunteer bureau and the local social services department, confirm strong community support for this new initiative.

For $40,000 in its one-year trial period we will be able to offer direct, concrete help to victims through community resources, rather than inventing a new government bureaucracy at great expense to the taxpayer.

Robert Thompson, a former United Church minister, and a Brampton probation/parole officer, will be the project co-ordinator. Working with him will be 20 people from the Brampton Volunteer Bureau, who will be able to assist up to 250 victims of crime over the next 12 months.

The Peel regional police will let our co-ordinator know, on a 24-hour basis, when assistance is needed. The trained volunteer aides will then provide a number of vital community services. These include cleaning up property damage, resecuring victims' homes, contacting friends and relatives and, in certain instances, providing crisis counselling to ease emotional stress.

They will steer victims through appropriate government agencies for assistance in temporary housing or babysitting services. They will disentangle financial problems by contacting creditors if debt payments will be delayed. They will contact employers if victims require time off work. They will help to file insurance claims. And, in incidents of personal injury, they will assist victims in filing applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

The project will offer aid in the trial process, where victims will be counselled on such matters as subpoenas, and their responsibilities as witnesses. Referrals for legal assistance will be expedited when required, volunteers will offer transportation to and from courts, an escort service during court proceedings, and will help collect witness fees or arrange child-care services. If a judge orders an offender to repay the victim, the volunteer will facilitate the collection of restitution money.

This project is consistent with other efforts by the Ministry of Correctional Services to recognize the rights of victims. Our probation and parole service has extensive community involvement and, as project co-ordinator, is a logical bridge between the criminal justice system and the volunteer movement in helping victims through the trauma and disruption of being robbed or vandalized.

If the new victim aid service is as successful as the agencies in Peel and this government believes it will be, we will extend the program to other Ontario communities.

Experience shows that the most effective and human way of delivering justice to the victims of crimes is through community participation. Common-sense caring by qualified volunteers can transcend bureaucratic or legalistic technicalities. Consequently, the Peel victim aid service is another important step by this government in attempting to ensure a fairer balance of justice for both offender and his victim.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment on the subject of the company, Canadian Applied Technology, whose bid was turned down by his ministry in favour of Radian Corporation of Texas.

The minister received a letter from the company, dated April 24, 1979, which itemized seven items and contained 12 questions. The minister should know while he was absent, the Minister of Industry and Tourism offered to make public the reasons why this company was turned down but suggested he would rather just tell the leader of the third party and myself privately, because it might hurt the reputation of the company.

Does the minister know we've been in touch with the company and they are quite willing to have any statement the minister might wish to make made publicly, provided the minister does them the courtesy of answering their seven items and their 12 questions, all of which seemed quite reasonable to me? Will the minister, therefore, undertake to provide those answers and also to make public the reasons why this bid was turned down?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When I was away staff did follow up on the question. I think the situation, as I understand it, is as follows: The company is quite prepared for that information to be released on a confidential basis to the member and the leader of the third party; at the moment, there is not full agreement to releasing it publicly. The member and I may not hear exactly the same thing from the company.

On that basis, I think we'd be wise to get permission from the company in writing to be sure there can be no doubt about it. I have no reason why we wouldn't release it to the public, but I do think it's only fair that the company should so direct.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, and subsequent to the point of privilege raised by the leader of the third party, I think perhaps the point of privilege should be responded to in this fashion: I didn't have the information at that precise time, but as I understand it the evaluation team, as opposed to people from the ministry, is perhaps our area of disagreement. It is perhaps correct that the evaluation team per se did not visit the company, but there is no doubt the staff of both our ministry and of the Ministry of Government Services did indeed, visit with the company, so I don't think there is any doubt the company has had a visit by our staff and MGS staff during the tendering process, on three occasions.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: It's obvious the minister is correct that we'll have to get something in writing because he and I differ. Is the minister interested in knowing that an hour ago the company informed us they are quite willing to have the matter made public if he gives them an answer to items one to seven and questions (a) to (l)? I'll table this document if the minister likes so all members can have access to it.

Will the minister provide precisely those answers of which the company has spoken, in which case I am quite certain the matter could then be discussed in public instead of in a private huddle with the leaders of the two opposition parties and the minister?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Certainly I'll review that file. I am not at all sure many of those answers weren't given during our visit. I can't recall instantly whether that letter was prior to or post our visit. Certainly, when that information is there, we don't worry about making it public. If that's the member's concern, it's no problem at all.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain why this Canadian company, which is already well established, should have been turned down only two and a half months after the report by the Minister of the Environment called the Pollution Control Equipment Industry in Ontario, recommended specifically a review of government purchasing power? It contained a report on the possibility of import replacements and a directive to the Ministry of the Environment to further support the Canadian pollution control equipment industry. Does this contract mean the minister has just simply tossed this report out the window or is there a commitment in his ministry to ensure the development of a Canadian pollution control equipment industry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, we did not toss that report out; and yes, there is a commitment in our ministry, a very significant commitment. Since the member is asking for the information that really is relevant to the answer I have given to the leader of the Liberal Party, we'll supply that at the same time.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the government House leader, the Deputy Premier. Does the government House leader know how many government bills and policy statements have been brought before this session of the Legislature which have been based in whole or in part on public opinion polls paid for by the taxpayers of Ontario? Why were these polls not mentioned in the compendium of background information which, according to our rules, accompanies each bill or policy statement?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the House leader knows of no such bills that have come before the House or statements based on any information derived in that way.

Mr. S. Smith: It's interesting that the House leader would say that, considering that the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague) suggests that these are very fundamental matters and that half a million dollars has now been spent on 23 different polls, all of which have been totally irrelevant to anything that was brought before the House this session by way of bill or policy statement. That's quite a remarkable admission.

Let me ask the Premier, by way of supplementary, since the government has published studies and reports by professional consultants from time to time, when it consults the public through opinion polls, why does it feel that it has to stamp the results "secret"? What's the distinction between professional consultants and consulting the public of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition really knows the answer to that question himself. There is a very real distinction in terms of getting a consultant, say, in the health field or the engineering field to give some advice on a specific subject that relates to his professional competence. The Leader of the Opposition, perhaps better than some, must know through his personal practice that he can give professional advice to either a patient or to an institution which might not represent his point of view as it relates to other issues.

I think there is a very real distinction between the retention by government or government ministries of consultants—which we don't do very often, incidentally—to advise on a specific and sometimes technical subject, and the sampling of the public point of view on sometimes sensitive issues which, as the House leader points out and which I say most sincerely, does not really find its way into specific legislation. I have to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I see a very real distinction. I really don't see a parallel at all.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary of the Premier. Will he say what mechanism exists in government in order to make sure that the results of these public opinion surveys about what people in Ontario think about major political issues are not transmitted to the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario either directly or by government ministers who may have had access to those opinion polls?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I guess the best answer to that is that it's no secret. The member's own party does a certain amount of sampling of public opinion on occasion.

Mr. Cassidy: And we pay for it, not the people of Ontario. It's not out of the public purse.

Mr. Hennessy: Hopalong Cassidy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member would just be patient for a moment or two, I was going to explain something else.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He can't. The motor in his mouth doesn't shut off.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I happen to know very factually that the Liberal Party of Ontario on occasion samples public opinion on issues, et cetera.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course we do and we pay for it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to tell both parties opposite that the Progressive Conservative Party also does the same thing, for which we pay. We pay for it out of party revenues. We don't use public funds.

Mr. MacDonald: You ignored the question totally.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Since the Premier and his deputy have admitted in this House that none of those polls found its way into this Legislature either by way of policy statement or by way of legislation, would he not agree then that this has been a total waste of the public money and would he discontinue this practice immediately?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm never totally familiar with the private sector experience of the member for London Centre. I understand that he has some. Whether it is marketing or trying to understand what the public is thinking as it relates to his product, et cetera, I don't know. But I've got to tell him that it is a practice in many institutions and in many organizations to try to determine the attitudes of people. To say that this investment is a waste is a fallacy.

I think it's also important to understand—and this is what makes it difficult in government—that government policy has to be predicted too on the basis of what government feels is right. This could be totally contradictory on occasion to what might be indicated by a poll where the various issues aren't properly explained. All of us have sufficient experience with polling to understand that it is not an exact science. A lot depends on the way a question or series of questions is worded. While they can be helpful, at the same time they aren't necessarily definitive.

This is why the House leader said what he did. It is also why I would reiterate that any government which predicates its policy or its legislation on the results of specific poll information, I think, is making a strategic error, apart from any other rationale. I think it would be unfortunate for the member for London Centre to say government ministries don't have an obligation to get some sense of how various programs within those ministries are impacting upon the public. That is part of our responsibility. It is something that is not unique to this government. It is done by the vast majority of governments—

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you share it then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because it is confidential. When we poll people, or when whoever does it, it is not done on the basis of the information becoming public, nor is it our intention to make it public.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to return to the question I raised a minute ago. Since it is the taxpayers of Ontario who are paying half a million dollars for these various opinion polls whose titles have been given to us in reply to written questions, can the Premier say what mechanism, if any, exists to ensure the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario doesn't benefit from those surveys, either by getting direct access to the results or by getting indirect access through what it is told by government ministers who see them? I think it's a very important question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can give the honourable member this very simplistic answer. I don't say this in any sense that would be provocative. Having been involved in what our party does—and I don't say this to belittle in any fashion the polls that have been done for government—the polls we do are, I think it's fair to state, primarily issue-oriented and primarily or fundamentally far more comprehensive than the polls done for various government ministries.

I can't say whether subconsciously the information one gathers from whatever source doesn't have an impact on a person, but I can tell the member this: In terms of the Progressive Conservative Party, our determinations are made in a political sense on the basis of the polls we conduct. As I said, by and large these are more comprehensive than anything done by the ministries of this government.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Premier states the reason these polls are confidential is because the data is collected under some assurance being given that these matters would be kept confidential—that's what I understood the Premier to say—

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, not solely.

Mr. S. Smith: That's one of the reasons then. Allegedly the data was collected with an assurance the matter would be kept confidential. What does the Premier think of the fact that one of those polls was used by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) in his speech material and was in fact released to the public? Was that a breach of confidentiality?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some polls—there are some on that list—where one could say releasing the information would be quite appropriate. I don't intend to start differentiating among the various polls. Our policy and our posture are very simple: We're going to debate—and I think it will be an interesting debate—that these are done for purposes of government; they are not done for any partisan reason, I can assure the members. Some day I will show the members opposite our party polls and just how comprehensive they are. We don't need the polls done by government, we really don't.

Mr. Eakins: You skate like Otto Jelinek.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I happen to know some of the people who do the polling for the party across the House; I happen to know some of the results, and I happen to know they don't need to know any of the information contained in these polls either for the purposes of their activities. I know what that party does need in its polls. I do know what it does need, and that is a little better results. I understand that.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Premier, since in reply to questions he has twice felt unwilling or unable to give an explicit assurance that the results of those polls do not go directly or indirectly to the Conservative Party, can one assume that they do?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for York South is too experienced to make that sort of assumption. He knows full well they do not.

VISITOR

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I just want to mark the presence in the gallery today of Bob Rae, the new MP for Broadview.

Mr. MacDonald: And he won't be an overnight guest either.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right; he is going to be around for some time.

WINDSOR METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. In Windsor last Friday the coroner, Dr. D. J. Broadwell, stated the bed situation was a factor in the death of Anthony Turski, who died shortly after being refused admittance to the Metropolitan General Hospital. Now that the independent coroner's inquest has finally got to the bottom of this case, does the Minister of Health agree with the coroner's conclusion?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have before me a copy of the verdict of the coroner's jury. In point of fact, in the two pages before me they do not find a cause-and-effect relationship between the unfortunate and untimely death of Mr. Turski and the bed situation.

Secondly, it does not indicate to me—and, of course, I do not have the transcript in front of me, as it only happened Friday—at least I understand the testimony of the two doctors indicated that the gentleman's condition was not of an emergent type that required either holding at the hospital or phoning one of the other four hospitals to try to find a bed in the community.

Beyond that, the overall question of beds, particularly in that community with respect to that one hospital and its relationship to the total hospital community, is a matter that is before the courts and one which I do not intend to prejudice in any way by making comments which would in any way prejudice the outcome of that once the application has been heard, and it has not been heard to date.

reply that he rejects the comment of the coroner, who said in summarizing the evidence to the jury that the bed situation was a factor in Mr. Turski's death.

I would like to ask the minister, will he accept the coroner's jury recommendation in this case that there should be further study as to why beds are being closed across the province? Will the minister undertake to perform such a study to determine whether there are other hospitals across the province where a situation like Mr. Turski's could occur again, and will he undertake to halt the cutback in hospital beds across the province to prevent similar terrible cases occurring?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: So far in all this debate of the last 10 days only one side has been heard. Of course, the purpose in asking for the adjournment last week was to ensure that there would be an opportunity to see to it, through affidavits and cross-examination and examination of same, that all the facts on both sides would be put forward and would have their airing.

Beyond that I really cannot comment further, except to say I am eager that this matter get before the Supreme Court at the earliest opportunity in order that these concerns can be cleared up.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that Dr. Yomjinda, who attended Mr. Turski, stated he would have admitted a high-risk patient such as Mr. Turski if a bed had been available, and that apparently there is some discrepancy as to whether beds are or are not available? Would the minister have some set guidelines implemented by the hospitals throughout Ontario indicating clearly that there are or are not beds?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member is getting, in no small way, into the area of medical judgement. Second, with regard to the question of bed availability, not just in that hospital but in that community, these are matters which will be explored in depth in the examination of existing affidavits and in the provision of other affidavits in the matter before the Supreme Court. That's why I say only one side has been heard from to date and it's quite important none of us in any way prejudice the outcome of the matters that will be heard by the tribunal.

Mr. Warner: They have to fight you in court to get decent health care.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You don't even know what health care is.

Mr. Warner: I do; this government doesn't.

Mr. Cooke: I'd like to ask the minister if he is aware this death occurred in Metropolitan General Hospital before the 25 beds were closed at Metropolitan on April 1, thereby making the situation worse? Second, I would like to point out to the minister, I attended the coroner's inquest. The statements made by the coroner were very clear. The lack of hospital beds was the reason this man was not admitted into hospital and it was a contributing factor to this man's death. It's about time the minister took responsibility for his own actions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I really don't need the lecture of the latter part from the honourable member.

Mr. Swart: You sure do.

Mr. McClellan: You certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The facts speak for themselves. The coroner's jury report does not make the comment which the honourable member attributes to the jury in his statement of today. He said in his statement of today that the jury said that; the jury did not say that. There is the coroner's jury report; there is the report.

Mr. Warner: Your irresponsibility, your cruel cuts are hurting people and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I don't think they will listen to the member anyway.

Mr. Warner: They obviously don't listen to you down there either.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is an extremely serious matter. It is one that I would like to debate today, but given the fact the matter is before the Supreme Court, that is the forum chosen by a particular party in which to have all the facts examined, and that is where the facts will be disclosed.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege Mr. Speaker: I want to point out to the minister that the coroner's jury said and I quote: "High risk patients should routinely be admitted to hospital." I'm sorry, this is a summary. "High risk patients like Mr. Turski should routinely be admitted to hospital." It made that recommendation in addition to recommending more beds. I think the minister's statements are not correct at all when he tries to suggest the coroner's jury did not put its finger on the lack of beds as contributing to this death.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the point of privilege.

Mr. Warner: You are a disgrace to this House.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Warner: You are a disgrace to the people of Ontario, an absolute disgrace.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere will please stop interrupting. While your colleague from Windsor-Riverside was trying to place his question you interjected four or five times and that's completely unnecessary.

Mr. Villeneuve: Make him withdraw what he said.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The fact of the matter is that in identifying the cause of death, it was listed as heart attack and the means was listed as hardening of the arteries. In fact, in identifying the cause of death, the jury did not connect the death with the bed situation. Now, let's be factual.

MINIMUM WAGE DIFFERENTIAL

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Since the provision of tips is given as the reason for lower wages under Ontario's minimum wage laws for waiters and waitresses in the food and entertainment industry, and in view of the arbitrator's findings that the waiters and waitresses at Noodles and the Courtyard Cafe have had to give 20 per cent of their tips to other employees in those establishments, will the minister now end the discriminatory provisions of the minimum wage laws that keep waiters and waitresses to a minimum wage of only $2.50, which is well below what's paid to other people working in industry in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, the member for Ottawa Centre should also point out that the arbitrator in that particular case specified that the situation of the restaurant was peculiar, that in other situations it wasn't 20 per cent but the nature of the trade in that restaurant, to his mind, that justified that particular allocation.

I would remind the honourable member that the question of the minimum wage is constantly under review, and when that issue comes up again I will be pleased to review it and give it some consideration. But he well knows the reasons for the tip differential that were given the last time the minimum wage was revised.

Mr. Cassidy: Since there are certain establishments here in Metropolitan Toronto where as much as 50 per cent of the tips given to waiters and waitresses has to be passed on to other employees within the establishment, won't the minister recognize that in fact waiters and waitresses don't benefit from the tips in the way that the minimum wage laws presume? Why will he not, therefore, act now in order to eliminate the differential and ensure that people working in the hospitality industry are able to get decent living wages on which to survive?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Again, the member well knows that the question of the distribution of tips among other employees who assist in the service of food is a custom in the trade. As to the question of the tip differential, as I mentioned, that's a matter that will be reviewed when we review the minimum wage again.

Mr. Mackenzie: Is the minister aware that in some restaurants in Toronto, cooks are subsidized by the waitresses by as much as $300 a month, and does the minister not recognize that this undermines the very principle he is trying to establish in terms of a lower wage for waiters and waitresses because they get the tips or are supposed to get the tips? Further, in some restaurants, there is no accurate record kept of the total amount of the tips and the waiters and waitresses are not aware of whether they are getting 40 per cent, 50 per cent, or more or less of the money. How can we have effective collective bargaining when it is undermined by this kind of transfer of moneys to other occupations that were not meant to be covered by the tips?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, information of that sort is always of value when one goes to review the matter of the minimum wage and I will be pleased to receive validated comments and supported statements to that effect.

GLENLEA CLINIC CLOSURE

Mr. J. Reed: My question is for the Minister of Health. Is the Minister of Health aware that the Glenlea Clinic in the town of Acton will be closing its doors permanently on June 22, which will leave approximately 6,000 people, or half of the population of the town of Acton, without medical care?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have not been made aware of that. I would be glad to discuss it with the member. I am not aware of the circumstances as to why they are closing. I don't know the physicians who operate that centre.

Mr. J. Reed: By way of supplementary: The minister, then, is obviously not aware of a letter to the patients of Glenlea Clinic from the doctors, which was reported in the press as saying that the costs of running the medical centre were escalating faster than the increases paid by OHIP and that was the reason for the closure. May I ask the minister as well if he has any mechanism in place to deal with the situation which will become an emergency by the end of the month?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, in the two most recent sets of negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association for the period from May 1 to December 31, 1978, and for 1979, in both cases the schedule of benefits was weighted in favour, relative to other sections of medicine, of the general practitioners. Secondly, if the member is saying that there's a practice of 6,000 people waiting, I really wouldn't think there would be much difficulty in attracting other general practitioners to that community. I will be glad to sit down with the member and discuss this with him and take it up with representatives of organized medicine in that regard, but I really don't think that such a large potential clientele, as it were, is going to go unattended for very long.

TRANSIT BARGAINING

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. My question relates to my continuing concern about the fate of public transit in Metropolitan Toronto. I rather think since the Premier seldom answers an original question I will go directly to my supplementary question.

My supplementary question is: As the ghost at the bargaining table, what arrangements is the Premier going to make to provide the kind of funds to the public transit system in Toronto that will permit both fair fares and fare wages to be paid by that commission?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the member for Riverdale's going to his supplementary question prior to the rhetoric of his opening question. His supplementaries are usually more relevant than the opening question, so my answer will try to be the same.

I am not at the bargaining table. I have made it very clear that I am hopeful that these negotiations will be carried out to a successful conclusion in a spirit of goodwill, good faith, et cetera. I make it quite clear that in no way is the government involved, except through the auspices of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) and those people who are qualified and competent to assist in the negotiations.

Mr. Laughren: A ghost is there.

Mr. Martel: Is Michael Warren not going to be there?

SCHOOL BOARD FUNDING

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Education and it concerns the unhappy state of educational finance in Renfrew county. Given the sparseness of the population and the remoteness of schools in that county, and given the fact that at least one of the boards, the separate school board, has had to engage in a very large-scale layoff of teachers, can the minister indicate whether or not she will consider giving that particular board and the boards in the county of Renfrew a special designation, such as a northern board or small board, to alleviate the burdens which are theirs as the result of their peculiar geographic and demographic situation?

Mr. Breithaupt: The Parry Sound syndrome.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the honourable member knows, we have already estimated a special weighting factor for boards of a certain size or smaller, where the decline in enrolment is greater than the provincial average. That weighting factor will be available to boards in that category. Certainly that is the first step in a number of steps which I hope we will be able to take in the not-too-distant future in order to try to relieve some of the problems which are facing small and remote boards particularly, but indeed some larger boards as well, in meeting the twin challenges of declining enrolment and limited access to financial resources in order to provide for their needs during the period of declining enrolment.

Mr. Conway: Appreciating what the minister has said, but recognizing, as the local trustees and others have, that the weighting factors that have already been introduced will not be sufficient to deal with the problems which threaten quality education in my county—

Mr. Foulds: Your county?

Mr. Peterson: Grit county.

Mr. Conway: —I am wondering whether or not the minister might more fully act upon a criterion which, for example, in the ministry's young travellers' program designates all of the county of Renfrew as a northern board, and whether she might not extrapolate that criterion more generally to the financial transfers for my county and the boards therein.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting suggestion. I will very seriously consider it, yes.

DOMESTIC WORKERS

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that this very evening, after five weeks in Canada with two different families, an English nanny, Lorraine Sears, leaves for England on British Airways? Is he aware that the reason for her going, very disillusioned with Canada, is the clear exploitation of working conditions—long hours and wages more than 25 per cent less than she was promised before she left for this country—and two nights literally of terror, which saw her threatened with rape and assault and led to the police being called?

Will the minister not agree that labour rights cannot be separated from human rights? In view of the support for those rights expressed by all members of this House last Friday, will the minister not agree to give a clear indication of support for a bill brought into this House that would guarantee that domestics would be included under such limited protection as there is under the employment standards in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I understand that the Premier and the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) gave a clear indication on Friday that a human rights code revision will be presented to this Legislature.

Mr. Mackenzie: When?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As soon as possible. I may say to the member the very issue he raises is one that is of concern to me too. When the bill is presented to the Legislature the question will be reviewed.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: That doesn't answer the question as to whether or not the protection provided under employment standards will be extended to domestics. Is the minister prepared to look at some means of legislating that the contracts signed, not only by domestics but by other immigrants coming over on work permits, can be enforced in Ontario, which is not now the case?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The question of revisions to the Employment Standards Act is being reviewed at the present time. I can't tell the member right now exactly what matters will be raised when and if revisions are brought into the House, but I may tell him that that is an issue which will be considered as well.

GUELPH COMMUNITY RESOURCE CENTRE

Mr. Worton: I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. Is the minister in a position to verify correspondence that has come from a member of the Guelph city council and also, I understand, from the Guelph police department, and to give them assurance with regard to recent abductions and rapes that have taken place involving employees of the resource centre? Does the minister have any suggestions for preventing such occurrences in the future?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for his question. I am aware of the concerns being expressed by some members of the Guelph city council and by the local chief of police over some incidents arising out of the community resource centre located in Guelph, near and related to the Guelph Correctional Centre. I should point out that it is not the Guelph Correctional Centre we are talking about, but one of our privately operated community-based operations. There are 32 very successful ones in the province.

We have some very grave concerns and I personally have serious concerns about the operation of this particular one. I am very concerned, particularly about what has happened, because it represents a black mark if the allegations and charges prove to be the case. These are very grave concerns for all of us that we can have this kind of blemish on our community resource centres.

We have to keep in mind that we do not get into a situation where we end up restructuring them all for a deviation in only one area. In expressing my concern, I have ordered a complete and very thorough investigation into this particular operation and into the manner in which we can make sure this kind of incident does not recur.

These incidents were very bizarre incidents and the individuals who have been charged are not the kind one would anticipate would be involved in this type of behaviour. They were individuals who had been charged with fraud, breaking and entering and other property offences. One would have to assume that they were ready for reintegration into the community. In one case, the individual would have been back in the community by August of this year.

I assure the member that these members will receive proper justice in their trial, but in the meantime we are making a very thorough investigation of the operation of this centre.

Mr. Worton: Supplementary: The minister is aware that there has been intervention by the police department on a number of occasions during the eight months this resource centre has been in operation? This is what concerns me. The police must have had some feedback about the difficulties encountered in that resource centre, and I would like the minister to take this into consideration when he makes his investigation into the operation of that centre.

Hon. Mr. Walker: The member can rest assured that we will leave no stone unturned in the matter.

HUNT'S-WOMAN'S BAKERY

Mr. di Santo: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the workers of Local 461 of the Retail Wholesale Bakery and Confectionary Workers Union working at Hunt's-Woman's Bakery have been on strike since March 12, 1979; that despite their attempts to reach an agreement they were confronted on May 1 with an offer from the company which amounts to an ultimatum; and in view of the fact the company now says the plant has been sold by the owners, the DelZotto family, to one of their construction companies, does the minister still think a solution is possible? If he does, what action has the ministry undertaken?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I have to confess I don't have the details of the matter the member raises immediately at hand—

Mr. Laughren: But are you concerned?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: —but I'll be pleased to look into it and report to him within two or three days.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the seriousness of the situation and in view of the fact the company has made clear that as far as they are concerned the plant is closed, but at the same time, they refuse to release to the Unemployment Insurance Commission a statement to that effect, which is preventing the workers from getting unemployment insurance benefits, will the minister call the company on their responsibilities and ask them, at least, to relieve the workers from this further undue hardship?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to review the matter and do whatever is appropriate. If the matters are as outlined by the member for Downsview, I certainly thank him for bringing it to my attention.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The member's privileges are really in dispute today.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, it's a bad day, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of the Environment stated earlier today that the Ministry of Government Services and his ministry have both visited Canadian Applied Technology, the company which was in question during questions today. Half an hour ago we talked to the company. We found out from the company there had been no visit, only a delivery, during the course of the tendering period, but that there had been perhaps a visit prior to the tendering period. There had been an evaluation trip to the Texas company and not to the Canadian company. I wish for once the government would start to get the record straight.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I have this brief here, and I don't think there's any doubt that we are straight and that again the leader of the third party is wrong. I am more than prepared to put the dates forward when those meetings were held.

On the first rebuttal to the point of privilege, I tried to deal with it as gently as possible because I think there was an honest difference of opinion about whether we ever visited with them or not. The fact is we have, and I make that very clear. I'll be glad to put the dates on the table if the member will withdraw his accusations.

HEALTH BOARD-COLLEGE DISPUTE

Mr. Peterson: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. Is he aware of a situation wherein the Health Disciplines Board ordered the College of Physicians and Surgeons to direct a particular doctor to attend the offices of the college to receive a severe admonishment? That happened on January 3 of this year. On February 14 the college replied to the Health Disciplines Board, saying, "The complaints committee does not consider that it is appropriate to admonish the doctor."

Is the minister aware of this clear defiance of authority and what is he doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I met with the chairman of the Health Disciplines Board within the last two weeks, and he made me aware of that. It is something the board and their solicitor are taking up with the college and their solicitor. Once a resolution has been determined, whether it's between the college and the board or whether it's something that has to be stated as a question to the courts, I'll be glad to inform the member in the House.

Mr. Peterson: Would the minister not make it clear to this House now who is in charge and who has the responsibility and the authority in this type of situation, where clearly it appears this patient's rights were not fully looked after? The Health Disciplines Board agrees with that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Health Disciplines Board, on advice of their counsel and supported by the ministry, takes the view they have the authority to order what they did.

Mr. Peterson: What's your opinion?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I just said "supported by the ministry." The college takes another view. This matter is being discussed between the chairman of the board and the college, and hopefully it can be resolved without having to take the case to the courts.

Mr. Peterson: One final supplementary: Would the minister be prepared, on the resolution of this problem, to bring a full statement back to this House so everyone clearly understands the lines of authority?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, I would be glad to.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Laughren: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism who continues to claim that increased foreign ownership of our economy creates jobs.

Does the minister know that fully 41 per cent of the 108 approvals of foreign ownership in the Ontario economy this year alone have been in the three key sectors of electrical products, chemicals and machinery?

If he does know that, is he also aware, as we have been trying to convince him for the past year or more, that it is in these particular sectors that the degree of foreign ownership is causing a decline in the number of jobs?

Could the minister explain to us what it is that leads him to believe that in the long run there will be more jobs created in those sectors with increased foreign ownership? What kind of convoluted logic is he using?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know it's more comfortable to deal with these things as though they were all the same types of applications and all the same firms, but the raw figures really don't tell one very much because in many of those instances we may have been facing a situation where the alternative to having that foreign takeover or that foreign transfer might have been the closedown of the Canadian operation.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: You can intervene in other ways.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In some instances one multinational is buying out another multinational. One may have seen instances there in which any combination of circumstances could have created a lot more jobs for Canadians because of the suppliers who otherwise would have lost the companies they were supplying. In other instances, one might have seen us being able to abstract through the FIRA applications undertakings which never before were available to source some of the products in Canada.

The main point the member can take out of all of that is that to presume that all of those transfers created a loss in jobs is no more valid than my presuming that all of those transfers caused more jobs to be created. One has to look at them one at a time and see what the specific circumstances were behind all of those applications. If the member's position is that all of those cases should have been turned down, then I would like to hear that because then I would be able to assess how many jobs would have been lost if we had adopted his policy.

Mr. Laughren: I don't know what the minister is talking about when he talks about raw figures. We have all the detailed press releases from the Foreign Investment Review Agency which give us the details on every single one.

In view of the fact that more than half of this year's applications have been for foreign investment from companies that simply wanted to set up a warehousing distribution kind of operation here to import more goods and distribute them to the Canadian market—

Mr. Speaker: We've had one editorial comment and one "in view of."

Mr. Laughren: —will the minister undertake to block all those applications which are strictly designed to increase warehousing and turn us into a nation of warehousemen?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not if the net effect of blocking that application is to cost jobs that otherwise we might have for this province.

Mr. Laughren: What a lot of nonsense!

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Since 70 of the 108 FIRA approvals in 1979 have been in the Toronto area, how can the minister claim that regional development is being promoted by his policies, when only six were approved in eastern Ontario and four in northern Ontario, while only one of those in eastern Ontario is in manufacturing? The rest, as my colleague said, are in warehousing and sales.

Mr. Martel: It sounds like the Robarts plan from 1967—all in southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First, I would remind the member that that's exactly the same question that was not only asked of me but answered by me on Friday. Second, if I read the member properly, she is asking for more FIRA approvals for eastern Ontario. I'll certainly see if I can respond to that concern on her behalf.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, the point about regional consideration is that quite seriously one can't look at the raw figures and presume that those six in eastern Ontario were a lower percentage, for example, than the ones in Toronto. The other point is to analyse whether those six applications would have received the same treatment if they had occurred in another part of the province.

If the member would like to canvass each of those six with me, I'd be pleased to respond to them to the extent that I can. But I can assure the member that applications from those parts of the province are looked upon quite differently in terms of how we assess their importance to that particular part of the province than they are in Toronto.

Ms. Gigantes: What good has it done us?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, there are more applications approved in Toronto because there are an overwhelmingly greater number that come from Toronto.

[3:30]

Mr. R. F. Johnston: But the results speak for themselves.

Mr. Laughren: You're a sellout artist.

CONVENTIONS

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. As the convention business has a substantial economic benefit to a community in which that convention takes place as well as spin-off effects to neighbouring communities; and as the Republican convention for 1980 is slated to take place in the city of Detroit, and the city of Detroit—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. B. Newman: —is also attempting to encourage the Democratic convention to come in; and as these conventions could have substantial—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. B. Newman: —economic benefits to the city of Windsor, would the minister join with the Windsor Star and the city in their attempt to encourage the Democrats to come into the city of Detroit?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be happy to do anything I could to encourage the Democratic Party of the United States to have their convention in Windsor. Indeed, I'd speak to all my very many friends in that party, particularly over the summer period. I'm willing to go anywhere necessary to convince them—together with the Windsor Star and, perhaps, the local member.

I think, in exchange, we should put ourselves in a position to assure them that any major political conventions in Canada would, in turn, consider Windsor as a logical site, although that would exclude the NDP which, of course, does not have large enough conventions to overflow Windsor.

I'm sure the member could see to it his party would consider it. My party would consider it and together we may succeed in getting both great American parties to have their convention there. I might add, in case the leader of the third party has a supplementary, if he wants us to encourage any of the minor parties in the United States to go there, we would be pleased to consider that as well.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister prepare special materials through his department, using his staff, that would entice some of these parties to come to Detroit so they would naturally come to Windsor and we could sell them on visiting Ontario and Canada?

Mr. Conway: Give John Connally a special suite.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We'd be happy to do that, particularly to remind them of the great facilities available in the great city of Windsor. In fact, we would probably arrange to have a special tour of Windsor, including the new Ford V-6 engine plant so we could show them the extent to which we are happy to receive from time to time some investment of a calibre important to the great city of Windsor. We would be happy to co-operate and do everything we can.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, as there is no convention centre in Windsor large enough to hold an NDP convention we're in danger of having to take ours to Detroit. On a somewhat more serious note, however, and slightly off conventions but still in the area of encouragement of tourist interest in Ontario as it affects those who go to Detroit, would the minister consider—as his predecessor did, but he unfortunately arrived at no conclusion—that at least in the Renaissance Center in Detroit there be an Ontario government tourist information centre outlining the many advantages of coming to Ontario, let alone the many advantages of coming to Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be happy to look into that as an alternative in view of our new programs to promote tourist information centres and develop more of them.

With regard to the first question, I'd be happy to help the member with that problem. Perhaps we can push two telephone booths together and see if we can accommodate them.

CHEMICAL PRICES

Mr. Swart: My question is of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I thank him for remaining for these few moments. Is the minister aware the average price of the seven leading fruit tree and grape sprays used by the farmers in the Niagara Peninsula has increased between 20 per cent and 25 per cent this year over last year? Recognizing the serious impact this has on the farmers when they are already under attack from imports, I'd like to ask him what investigation he has done, if any, and what steps he has taken or will take to limit or roll back those increases.

Hon. W. Newman: As the member well knows, this comes under federal jurisdiction. Just within the last few days we have issued a price list for all chemicals here in Canada, and also the corresponding US price list.

Mr. Kerrio: Talk to your kissing cousins.

Hon. W. Newman: Sure I will. At least I might get some co-operation. Certainly I am aware of the fact there have been price increases on some chemicals, and decreases on others. The list is lengthy. I can't tell the member each individual price but I have a master list. If he would like to see it, I will be glad to let him have it.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I got an answer to my question on what the minister intends to do about it.

Might I ask specifically that he would investigate the increase in the price of thiodan which has gone up 80 per cent this year? I would like to send a bill over to the minister, if I may. How would he expect the fruit industry in the Niagara Peninsula to compete with the American fruit industry? Where the increase over there has been less than 10 per cent, it has been between 20 and 25 per cent in this country.

As the minister is well aware, action has been taken to prevent the farmers from going to the United States to buy their insecticides over there. Will the minister take up with the new federal government measures to protect the farmers here or rescind that law that was passed by the last federal government?

Mr. Riddell: You always got co-operation from Eugene Whelan.

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, sure. I don't deny it. I would like to explain to the honourable member there have been some increases in some of our chemicals.

Mr. Nixon: Tory times are hard times.

Hon. W. Newman: I am well aware of the price of chemicals. I am also well aware of the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. I believe Mr. Whelan said at the time he closed the border—and if the member will look at the record he will find I said the border should not be closed unless we had competitive prices on both sides, taking into effect the dollar value. The border was closed and there are certain chemicals that have gone up in price dramatically here in Ontario. Some are equal to and a few of them are below the US prices allowing for the difference in value of the Canadian dollar.

We can't just make broad brush-stroke statements about certain chemicals. I happen to know some of them have gone up. Sure they have gone up. Other costs have gone up too. I am well aware of that.

I will be talking to the federal minister about the whole chemical industry, whether we are talking herbicides, pesticides, insecticides, fungicides or whatever it may be. If the member would like to have a look at that list so he will better understand it, I will be glad to let the member see it.

Mr. Swart: Have you seen the list?

Hon. W. Newman: I said we would look into it—okay?

OHIP CLAIMS PROCESSING

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Health: In view of the fact some residents of the province of Ontario have to wait four, eight, 12, 16 or 20 weeks or more sometimes to receive a cheque from OHIP to cover costs of medical care incurred outside this jurisdiction, or to cover costs of claims in situations where doctors have opted out of OHIP, is the minister satisfied with the efficiency of the operation at OHIP in relation to this particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is one of the reasons why, a number of years ago, the ministry decentralized the claims processing to the district offices, so as to improve on the processing.

Mr. Haggerty: It hasn't improved.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, in fact it has improved. Where the documentation is straightforward, then the normal turnaround would be about five or six weeks, but where we require additional information—and many of these cases come across my desk as members write to me about them—where perhaps we need more documentation from a hospital or from a physician in the States or in Europe or whatever, that can delay the matter, but we do try to process them as quickly as we can. After all, at OHIP we do process something in the order of a quarter of a million claims per day.

REPORT

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Villeneuve from the standing resources development committee reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amounts to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food be granted Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980:

Ministry administration program, $5,594,900; agricultural production program, $110,395,600; rural development program, $11,231,000; agricultural marketing program, $12,846,500; agricultural education and research program, $28,470,200.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 192 and 203 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2792.)

On vote 602, intergovernmental affairs program:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on Friday last, I was arguing and making some representations to the government and particularly to this minister, seeking to prevail upon him to give cognizance and put into effect, a committee of this House. Since I am speaking on the matter in private members' hour on Thursday, I will not place any greater emphasis on that particular aspect of the constitutional question today.

However, there are one or two matters and I won't be long in touching on the overall constitution, particularly as it lends weight or gives some direction as a secondary consideration to what such a committee would be called into question to do and the validity of calling that committee into being. It has a monumental task to perform, one that is requisite and one that, as I said on Friday, has been ignored by the government of this province.

The basis of that, the material on which the committee can chew, has now been in a wide way forthcoming to the committee. I gave some praise to the Pepin-Robarts report along with the Macdonald report, which in substance followed upon it, and was substantially in line with it. I commented upon how coincidental that was and how rewarding it was to see these two diverse bodies appointed by different levels of government finding a certain curious correspondence in their recommendation. None of this has been given cognizance or any degree of affirmation or even any degree of public debate with respect to a reformulated constitution which is badly needed by this country, particularly if we deliberately intend and are sincere about holding this country together.

These reports, along with the bar association report, would be the subject matter that would basically start us off on deliberation on, parsing and analysis of those reports. For the first time in our history some concrete, hardrock definition of the issues involved are delineated and set forth for whoever may wish to work them over.

It's not enough and hasn't been enough for the Premier of this province to go to winter carnivals and slide down slopes in order to show an abundance of good will towards Quebec. He has also come home and subverted, in many instances, the so-called good intent in this particular regard. Coming to grips with the issue in an honest way has never taken place and has been circumvented throughout.

I think it is the prime responsibility of this province and the adjoining province to give leadership and to possess some form of vision with respect to what is taking place here. The destiny of the country is at stake and, as I said on Friday, it is not to be diminished because one grapples at straws. One finds in the English-speaking press certain reporters saying that there is an erosion in the ranks of the Parti Quebecois, that the gravamen of the population is against division and all these sorts of things. I won't press on. I think that is totally fallacious.

After the event, ministers of the crown, including this minister, will strike their breasts and say, "Oh, why weren't we more on the ball? Why didn't we get on top of it? Why didn't we do everything in our power to bring about some kind of accommodation and some kind of understanding so that at least the members of this House and people of Ontario had a grasp of the issues?" I put it to you that that is presently lacking because of basic complacencies operating in this whole area.

All I wanted to do for a few moments—and I won't go into it in any depth, as that is the job of the committee—is to make reference to the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity. I would like to refer to page 126, recommendation 34, which says: "A new distribution of powers should, whenever it is desirable or needed in order to fulfil the objectives of dualism and regionalism, recognize the distinctive status of any province or make it possible for a province to acquire such a status."

In line with that, it says: "In a new distribution, the powers allocated to all provincial legislatures should provide the framework which makes it possible for Quebec to fulfil its additional role and responsibility with respect to the French heritage in its own territory."

The French-Canadian fact is there and has never, in my opinion, been given due weight. We have scouted it. There is a refusal to address ourselves frontally to the issue involved there. On any occasion when my party gave certain proposals, I suppose we suffered badly in the election in this particular regard.

Mr. Nixon: That was back in the two-nation days?

Mr. Lawlor: Back in the two-nation days. I don't think the authors of the report would wish to talk in that terminology because they were burned too or noticed the burnings that took place elsewhere. Nevertheless, they say that the Quebec fact has its own peculiarities, its own cultural history, its own form that we must be cognizant of getting along with and of recognizing. We English-speaking people refuse to do so. There is a peculiar quality in the English—never in the Irish—of not coming directly in line with and looking eyeball to eyeball to the issue.

Quebec is different. It has in some ways a more splendid heritage than we have, and internally the young people of that province have a deeper sense of their history than we happen to have, by and large. As to the whole cultural aspect of the matter, it is far more tangible and alive to them from day to day than the amorphous kind of thing. We English are groping towards some definition. It has been so often talked about it is no use particularly flagellating the issue, as it hasn't come to pass. Some of our authors say that loneliness, the northern woods and isolation, is the prime Canadian characteristic. I don't know.

In any event, in this section they say, "In the distribution of powers, provisions should be made for the possibility that some provincial governments other than Quebec may wish to assume, now or in the future"—that is their way of getting around the two-nation concept—"some or all of the powers in the cultural domain recommended for Quebec.

"Should the other provinces not wish to avail themselves of such a distribution, powers related to this additional role and responsibility of Quebec should be allocated to Quebec alone."

That seems to me perfectly sensible and in line. Otherwise, one is blinding oneself or, ostrich-like, not facing realities. What will eventuate from blindness will be division. It is in the cards. That may not happen in the next referendum but we all fear and anticipate a recurring phenomenon for years ahead. This thing is deep-rooted, therefore, it must be lanced at the source. We must try to reach a mutuality of definition with respect to the issue.

I said on Friday this would go a long way. I don't adopt all these recommendations by any means. Let me take one, number 39, that residual powers should be assigned to the provincial legislatures.

As we all know, the peace, order and good government clause and the residual power is now left with the federal government. I think it should be left there, not reposed as residual power in the provinces. That would be, in my opinion, disruptive. It is the very kind of thing I would like to sit down with my colleagues and with experts appearing before us to explore, to weigh, to become more informed on as to where that residual power should finally rest. In a way it is a superficial issue; in another way, after the powers are defined according to the way they want to do it here, there may not be too much residual power left.

In any event, recommendation 37 says, "The use of a list of exclusive powers for Parliament and a list of exclusive powers for the provincial legislatures should be retained in a new Canadian constitution." But what those exclusive powers are, are not identical, by any means, with what the Privy Council and the Supreme Court of Canada have set forth over the years with fairly myopic judgements and tendentious approaches to the matter which have seriously, in my opinion, disoriented our constitution, particularly when the adjudications were made overseas and which are followed as precedent to this day.

Recommendation 38 is about concurrent jurisdiction; the concurrencies of jurisdiction, when they both operate in certain fields, et cetera. But, the field is divided and with some nicety and detail set forth as to which jurisdiction will operate where. It is in the Macdonald report too and again very much in line with what we have:

"(1) Concurrent jurisdiction should be avoided whenever possible through a more precise definition of exclusive powers. (2) Wherever powers are concurrent, a federal or provincial paramountcy should be stipulated." Then they proceed to do that to a degree.

Recommendation 40: "In devising a new distribution of powers, the following steps should be taken: (i) broad areas of governmental activities should first be identified. Such broad areas might include external affairs, defence, economic policy, transportation, communications, natural resources, administration of justice and law enforcement, the status and rights of citizens, culture, health and welfare, habitat and the environment.

"(ii) within each of these broad areas, specific subject matter should be arranged in related groups. Under culture, for example would be grouped legislative powers over: language, education, schools, universities, archives, research, exchanges, copyrights, books, films, arts, leisure, marriage and divorce, property and civil rights.

"(iii) jurisdiction with respect to each specific legislative power should then be attributed, exclusively or concurrently, to an order of government according to the criteria established in our previous recommendations. For example, regarding immigration, provincial legislatures should have exclusive jurisdiction with respect to settlement and integration of immigrants; the federal Parliament should have exclusive jurisdiction with respect to deportation of aliens and public safety; jurisdiction should be concurrent with provincial paramountcy with respect to selection criteria and levels of immigration to the province . . ."

That is something which does not occur these days, and something which the Treasurer of this province (Mr. F. S. Miller) has taken grave umbrage with, namely, the federal government takes all the credit with respect to the coming in of immigrants to this country, but the costs and logistics of the whole damned thing are borne by the various provinces, and overwhelmingly by Ontario, much to the hurt of the Treasurer of this province, which should be compensated or given some allocation by the federal authority, which caused the burdening to begin with. So for the first time they tried to divide it up.

Mr. Nixon: A strange theory of immigration. I didn't know the New Democratic Party thought immigrants were burdensome.

Mr. Lawlor: It is burdensome when they arrive in the province without homes and without provisions for their lives—when nothing is provided for them.

Mr. Haggerty: They want brand-new homes when they come in, eh?

Mr. Lawlor: Don't be picayune, my friend. This is the only debate in this House that I know of where you can exercise a degree of statesmanship. All the rest is petty bickering.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe that's why the place is vacant.

Mr. Lawlor: Even with the bickering, it is vacant.

To conclude the quotation: "... and with federal paramountcy with respect to the recruitment of immigrants abroad and the admission of refugees."

Finally: "(iv) areas could be either exclusive, when all powers are attributed exclusively to the same order of government, as in the area of defence, or shared, when some of the powers are attributed exclusively to each of the two orders of government, or concurrently to both."

In the area of taxation policy, recommendation 41 says: "Both the central and provincial governments should be granted equal access to tax sources, with the exception that customs and excise taxes be an exclusive central power. The provincial right to use indirect taxation should be qualified to ensure that the impact of such taxes does not fall upon persons outside the taxing province."

Then they talk about the emergency power and how it should be operated. They talk about the constitution of the House of Commons on the basis of proportional representation. They have long sections on linguistic rights as to the attribution of these rights, how they might be administered and in which areas.

The role of the Senate is given some cognizance—the reformed Senate, as we all know, which the Pepin-Robarts report calls the Council of the Federation and which the Macdonald report calls a House of the Provinces. Curiously enough, that has to be looked at in depth, if only because these two astute men, the only persons in this country who have really done first-rate work in the field and are thoroughly clued in, indicate this is the feasible possibility for the future with respect to the Senate.

Why has everyone shied away from it? Alberta, one would think, would be all in favour; but quite the contrary. Of course, no one quite knows where Ontario stands on these things; that is precisely what the debate is about today and why it would probably be more in the government's interest to have the committee, if for no other reason than as a shield against coming to grips and seizing this by the horns.

I have severe doubts about that House having provincial representation and veto powers operating. Nevertheless, it is well worth exploring. When are we going to explore it? I don't see any learned articles being written. I don't see great debate going on in the "op-ed" pages of the local newspapers. It seems to me a thundering silence reigns over this whole issue.

For these various reasons, and in order to explore this and half a dozen other issues which very easily could be taken up and a good many hours be spent talking about where concurrency would operate, how it might operate, et cetera, and exchange views across the House in this particular regard. Rather than do that, let us have a group—and the people who will go on that committee, I'm sure, will go on only because of their intense interest in the problem on all sides of the House.

I would hope that Ontario would raise its stature in this whole area far above anything it has accomplished thus far and will not, by process of omission, be judged in history as having failed at this most critical time in our history.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of an agreement being made that we are having a constitutional debate per se to the exclusion of other matters. With your permission, I want to deal with three matters.

The first matter has to do with the projected committee that has been very much a subject of debate during the last session and the first part of this session, dealing with the estimates. The minister indicated in his response, I believe to the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), that this matter had been put to the House leaders and that it was found difficult, if not impossible, to arrange a summer committee for the purpose of the review of our provincial responsibilities to national unity and any constitutional change that might be associated with it.

I do not want to misquote the minister—and I do not have Hansard here—but I want to make it clear to anyone who might be interested—and it appears from the people in the House today that very few are—that I see no problem in scheduling an additional select committee this summer.

For one thing, it could be, and probably should be, a relatively small one. The terms of reference would deal with matters that have been raised by members who have spoken before me. Frankly, it has not been raised specifically with the House leaders on the basis of whether it could or could not be handled by way of scheduling.

Secondly, I believe it could be accommodated if it were the decision of the House that such a committee ought to be established. Personally, I believe it should. I agree with the statements by previous speakers. When the matter comes for debate in the House, I would hope that, the resolution will be that such a committee be established.

I cannot readily understand why the government is so resolutely opposed to such a committee. The reasons given by the minister, I believe on Friday, didn't seem to ring very true to me. They seemed to be rather superficial, relating simply to getting the bodies to man such a committee.

It is true that the government party has some special problems this way, and the government whip has certainly made it clear that there may be some problems in that connection. But, speaking for our party, I believe we could man such a committee without a problem; and I would expect that the members who would be associated with such a committee would certainly be interested and knowledgeable.

Having said that, I do not intend to express personal views as to what the committee should discuss or perhaps to make a guess as to what their recommendations should be. But I do agree as well with my colleague from Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), who did express a reservation about the committee; that is, it is liable, through the press coverage of its discussions, to detract from the impact of a debate that might be and should be held in this House at the time when the referendum in the province of Quebec would be very much before the people there and the people of Canada. I think that is a significant point, that we would not want to detract from an impact of a debate in this House, perhaps approving—unanimously, I would hope—a resolution indicating what the stand of this province would be.

However, I do not believe the committee needs to interfere in that respect. Frankly, if such a committee is struck, I would hope it would not be simply to discuss a resolution put to the committee and to the House by the government in terms more or less based on the statement in the speech from the throne.

If a committee is so struck, I would hope it would have much broader terms of reference, in which, after doing whatever studies it might require—and there has already been reference to the Pepin-Robarts report and the Macdonald report, which certainly would be valid documents to examine—I would hope it would come in with an all-party recommendation for once so the House could then debate the proposed recommendation from the committee in the kind of debate we all envisage as having value.

Not many members would agree with me, I am sure, but in my view, while we all acknowledge the importance of the subject, we must also acknowledge the boredom it engenders, not only in the community at large but in this House. I hesitate to say that. Perhaps I am reflecting only a personal view. Yet our experience has been just that. In the past there have been very few members whose views on the constitution were sufficiently interesting and progressive they could command the attention of more than a handful of members in this House. With great respect to those who have already spoken—and I found their views interesting myself—Elmer Sopha, the former member for Sudbury, when he was talking about the constitution and the future of Confederation, long before it was fashionable so to do, could command a great deal of interest and press response.

The minister's two advisers, Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Greathed, have been here let's say for a significant number of years, and could probably recount as well as any the course of the debates and the events associated with it and the waxing and waning interest in the subject. It has been a part of their professional responsibilities to maintain their interest and to meet with representatives from other provinces and the federal government on a continuing basis. They are certainly expert in their opinions and their responses in this connection are certainly valuable and much respected.

Even going back to 1967, John Robarts very properly and logically stimulated debate in the province, and to some extent across Canada, through the Confederation of Tomorrow conference. Still, I felt the debates in here were strangely sterile. Since I was a new leader of a party myself, probably my contribution was just about as sterile as any other. But while the individuals who were speaking seemed to be caught up in their own views, it seemed to be almost impossible to interest the community at large in what the Legislature thought about this.

Certain political points were made. The member for Lakeshore who has just spoken indicated in an oblique way how politically unpopular the concept of two nations turned out to be after the NDP embraced it. And yet even that lack of popularity was a very political manifestation in my view, and didn't seem to involve the people of this part of the nation in the controversy it should have.

I don't want to belabour the point, but if we are fooling ourselves that we are going to have some great debate in this House in which the people of the province are going to be caught up and for which the television cameras will come in to hear the views as they emerge from our lips, we are kidding ourselves. The best debaters here are hard-pup if they want to express their views in a way of that kind of significance.

A resolution of the House, however, which puts in reasonable terms, even believable terms, that sovereignty association is an unacceptable alternative as far as we are concerned, would be important. However, we can say unacceptable as much as we want, but there is no doubt if Quebec, and God forbid, followed the course advocated by Rene Levesque, and we had done everything we could to stop it but still it had gone forward, I have a feeling we would not build a wall along the Ottawa River and say, "We told you if you followed that course of action it was unacceptable to us." When it did happen we would find ourselves probably responding in a slightly different way.

That's why I say this resolution, and the importance of it, may be seen in some jurisdiction as an approach to constitutional grandstanding. That's the sort of thing the committee may or may not come to grips with.

The fact the minister has rejected the possibility of such a committee I hope will be reconsidered. Perhaps it will be reconsidered in the light of the resolution put on the order paper just today, to be debated this Thursday—a significant course of events, I thought.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Having, however, heard the member for Riverdale express himself in something less than outrage but also deep concern, was the fact that his cogent arguments put forward over many weeks—in fact months—had simply been turned gracefully aside by the minister and various spokesmen for the government. This indicates I suppose that he, with the co-operation he always gets from his colleague from Lakeshore, had found a means whereby the matter would be put to debate in this House. Frankly, I for one welcome it.

I would hope this resolution is accepted by the House, even though it is worded in a somewhat awkward way. I'm not this party's spokesman in this connection, but if it is accepted, I hope the minister will see his way clear to accept the will of the House. What damage can be done in giving the members of this House a forum to review the matters that have already been before us? Perhaps we can come up with a recommendation to be debated in the fall in what I consider could be a very timely and important way.

There are two other matters that I want to refer to briefly. The second matter has to do, not with our constitutional responsibilities but with the minister's other responsibility—that is, dealing with the municipalities.

The minister made a speech—no need for any concern about this as far as his advisers are concerned—some weeks ago in which he indicated to one of the municipal organizations he was approaching—at least in his own thoughts—some solution to the continuing problems involving the requirements for annexation involving some of the municipalities—obviously Brantford and Brantford township are the ones in my mind.

If one of the alternatives is going to be the vehicle of private legislation, with the Legislature acting as a court in this connection, I hope before that position is accepted as ministerial policy there is a chance for further debate in the House. The situation involving Brantford and Brantford township seems to have, somehow, de-escalated. At least, there doesn't seem to be the heat in the controversy there was the last time it was discussed in the House and yet in many respects they are no closer to a solution of their mutual problems.

As the minister is no doubt aware, a very substantial initiative is being taken by the city of Brantford in downtown revitalization and that, very properly, is occupying their views. I strongly suggest that when and if his policy is going to be enunciated here, involving not only Brantford and Brantford township but the four or five situations in the province which have been pressing themselves on the minister for his attention, if not a solution, we have an opportunity to discuss it further before something comes forward chiselled in stone. That would make for a more academic debate rather than a viable debate in which we work together to hammer out the kinds of solutions that we would all choose.

The third point, and the minister might want to respond to this more directly: I notice in this vote there is money being made available for analysis and advice. I haven't got the words before me, but it occurs to me it would be in this vote the ministry's advisers may be using the procedure of sampling and public opinion analysis which was very much the subject of questions today and at the end of last week.

I would like some information from the minister if, during the past year, a polling procedure has been used, for example, to get the views of our citizens having to do with matters in the purview of his ministry. If so, we would like to hear whatever information can be made available about that—as to how much money was spent and what consultants were employed. We'd also like to know what the intention would be for the utilization of the money in this vote we are debating which would lead the minister to make a retainer leading to a public opinion survey; what the types of questions might be and what the aim of the expenditure of the money would be, as far as administration and policy is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh, would you like me to reply?

Mr. Chairman: It is entirely up to the members.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to return to federal-provincial relations, et cetera. If the minister wants to reply to those two secondary questions in face of this great, momentous issue of statesmanship that was pre-occupying us for a moment, fine.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Just quickly, I will reply so that we don't forget those two questions, Mr. Chairman.

On the matter of the policy regarding annexation, as I said in my opening remarks, I indicated to the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario about six or eight months ago some broad ideas that could be explored to help solve this problem we have with annexations and amalgamations, a problem which is brought about because the process we have has become so time consuming and so costly. They took up that challenge and have been meeting, and indeed had a gathering not so long ago to bring forward some suggestions of a new way of handling these matters. The Association of Municipalities of Ontario has also been doing the same thing as have some of the other municipal groups.

We are pooling those ideas all together through the Municipal Liaison Committee. They are then going to present them to me; we are going to digest the various suggestions. I have set as a time frame for some announcement on my part as to some new procedures, some time in the summer, probably late summer.

I don't think they will involve any kind of mystical solution which will solve all our problems. It will basically be a better and less expensive and less time-consuming way of handling the same problem. I can assure my friend they will not involve this Legislature acting as a court in the matter, because I don't view that as the solution, at least not in the very initial stages. It may be that at some time and in some place bills in this Legislature to effect changes may be the solution in some particular areas, but certainly it would not be something which would be done immediately in any process and there would be plenty of time for this House to discuss anything of that nature.

In answer to the second question, the answer is, yes, we have conducted a public opinion survey. Part of the money for that is in this vote and we do not have any plans to conduct any further surveys at the present time.

Mr. Nixon: If you will permit me, I would like to ask a further question about that. Is the minister prepared to make all or part of that survey available?

Hon. Mr. Wells: At the present time, no, Mr. Chairman. We have a general government policy on this. The general government policy is that these surveys are kept confidential and are used by us in general determination of those things that are occurring in the general population, so therefore that is the answer I must give you at this time.

Mr. Nixon: With your permission, I want to pursue the matter of the surveys with the minister just briefly, because the Premier in his statement in question period certainly left me confused. He said the information was elicited on a basis of confidentiality. Yet that doesn't make sense if the surveyor goes out to a person in the street or someone selected as a representative of the community, that is, not by name but perhaps on a statistical basis, their views are solicited with respect to certain matters that must concern this minister. They may or may not have to do with our attitude towards Quebec or a change in the distribution of powers, a change in the allocation of taxing, having to do perhaps with our representation in Ottawa, whether we should have something to do with the Supreme Court and the Senate.

It seems incredible to me that the Premier would indicate that this has to be confidential because somebody's views would be made public. If I know anything about public opinion surveys, and I'm not an expert and I've certainly been led astray by them in the past, nobody's name except a surveyor's is there. The information elicited, which is basically the opinion on these matters expressed by the people in Ontario, should surely be made available to the members of the House as well as the minister and his advisers.

I think it was perhaps the member for Riverdale or the member for Lakeshore who spoke in derogatory terms and was deeply critical of the kind of survey information published, I believe, on page two or three of that weekend supplement, or a few months ago in Maclean's, indicating what the people of Canada, and more directly the people from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and certain other areas, thought about national unity. I agree with him entirely. He was critical because the questions and the information elicited were so superficial. Surely, if we're expected to provide the money for those surveys no significant reason has yet been given why the information can't be tabled. The implication really leads some members, as the member for York South in his responses in question period, to believe the questions deal with matters that are political on a partisan basis. Otherwise, the Premier's reasons for not revealing are incomprehensible.

I would suggest to the minister as strongly and as reasonably as I can put it to him that the information ought to be available here. It would then undoubtedly be reported that the government has found through their surveys—and they are paying a lot of money for them, and on that basis they must be professional—that the people in the province have these views which are, I wouldn't say the basis of the government policy but at least they form a part of it.

I hope the minister understands this issue is going to have to be pursued. I know he cannot by himself change government policy, but surely he must see how irrational and unacceptable those arguments are to those of us who are members of the opposition side. They just don't make any sense.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Can I just respond quickly to that question? The honourable member indicated he had some experience with polls. He knows very well from some of his experience with polls, and we're not now talking about polls this government does but those polls used at election time, that certain parts of them are pulled out and are used at those particular times to create sometimes erroneous impressions. Usually, the whole series of questions is not reported. Wrong impressions or erroneous impressions are received by the general public.

Mr. Nixon: That's true of anything that goes on.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, parts are pulled out and with polls the danger is very great that wrong impressions will be created perhaps—maybe not, maybe not.

Mr. Nixon: But what about the member here?

Hon. Mr. Wells: He would read it all. I'll just give you my personal philosophy but I view the use of polls as another method of finding out and keeping in touch with people and what people think.

Mr. Nixon: Yet you don't want us to read them.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm speaking for the polls we've done here, the one we've done in this ministry. We did a number in the Ministry of Education. Some of the ones in Education, in any event, are published and you've had them and you've seen them. You're shaking your head?

Mr. Nixon: I haven't. What kind of an argument is that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, several of them were done under research grants and are available in the legislative library and so forth. One of them was part of that very massive Interface study, the whole one third of that study was a poll—

Mr. Nixon: Anybody can waste money.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —done on what people's impressions were of the education system of secondary education and so forth. But the whole idea is to synthesize from a testing of public opinion some ideas of what the public is thinking about various matters. I can assure you it helps a person who is trying to develop policy to put forward to his colleagues, to be able to have that as one of a number of sources and information areas that come in.

Mr. Nixon: What about a member who is expected to respond to that policy, such as an opposition member?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I could argue with my friend that he perhaps doesn't need them, but it probably would be of some help to him at times too.

Mr. Nixon: You're patronizing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The point I wanted to make to my friend was that these are not used for political purposes and are not dispensed to political parties and used in the manner of the polls the political parties use themselves. In fact, they are used for quite different purposes, and the kinds of questions are quite different.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, it wasn't my intention to deal with this issue—I want to get back to the noble heights of constitutional reform—but since this has been raised, I want to speak to it.

May I say to the minister that the government's position on this is totally indefensible. If the government is spending public moneys for polling, based on the argument—for the moment I'll accept it, although I'll advance my reservations in a moment—that it is doing it for policy formation, and if it is getting information that may or may not be interpreted, the House is entitled to get that information and to debate the interpretations and the misinterpretations.

The government hasn't got a monopoly on the use of something for which public funds have been spent. The sooner the government wakes up to this, and cuts out the game—or, if it wants to continue it because it thinks it is useful, makes the information available to the House so that the members of the Legislature, the editorial writers out there and everybody else can have it—the sooner its position will become defensible.

Let me come back to the Premier's reply this afternoon—and I shall choose my words as carefully as possible. Twice he evaded replying to the question as to whether or not this information was handed on to the Conservative Party so that it might at least interpret it as it sees fit for their partisan purposes. When I backed him into the wall, he said, "No."

Mr. Chairman, let me say this: The Premier may have set up mechanisms. He may have done, as Leslie Frost said to cabinet ministers on certain occasions, "Don't buy Northern Natural Gas." That didn't stop them; they did, and two of them had to get fired out of the cabinet. It is inconceivable that the substance of those reports doesn't get out and eventually into the hands of the Conservative Party, which then has the right to interpret them and use them as it does.

Quit the dissembling. Cut out the shenanigans. If the government is spending public money on polling, the House is entitled to the results of those polls. Don't engage in some sort of obfuscation of the issue by saying, "If you take a poll, you may extract a portion of it and misrepresent it." If the government has carefully prepared a poll and all its questions, it can table those questions in the House along with the answers, and we in our ignorance, or lack thereof, will make an interpretation which will be just as legitimate as the government's interpretation or misinterpretation. I will leave the issue there, but the government's position is totally indefensible; the sooner the government cuts it out, the sooner it is going to keep itself from getting deeper and deeper into trouble on the issue.

Let me get back, if I may, quietly, to the issue of constitutional reform; I want to start out with the committee. There has been a lot of discussion on the whole issue of the committee. The government, by its stonewalling over a period of two or three years, and particularly the last two and a half years since the Parti Quebecois was elected in Quebec—indeed, I am not going to stop there; the House, where a majority sit on the opposition, has done a disservice to this country in that we have tolerated the government's stonewalling in not having an opportunity for repeated discussions of what is one of the most important things in the life of this country: the prospect of constitutional reform; what this nation's reaction should be to the emergence in Quebec of a party that is dedicated to splitting this nation down the middle.

The minister advances reasons as to why we can't do it now. You can always advance reasons. But surely it is ludicrous that we have had select committees looking at everything from tile drainage to God knows what, yet in the face of a Premier who speaks of this issue as being an intensely important one, we have never been able to establish a select committee to look at this. There is an obvious contradiction here. Let's stop the stonewalling.

Let's have a select committee and let's not even buy the excuse of the member for Ottawa East that it would be better to leave it now because we might sort of pre-empt prematurely the publicity that should be focused on the eve of the referendum; that is just another excuse. God help us, if the issue of the reshaping of this nation isn't worthy of something now and a repetition four months from now when the referendum comes up, then it's not worthy. I am convinced it is worthy. So that Liberal excuse is just as phoney and just as much stonewalling as the excuses the government has been giving.

Let me come to the point of view that has been expressed by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk with regard to the limited interest. As I look at the yawning emptiness of the government benches over there, his point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yours are the same.

Mr. MacDonald: I agree, but I will tell the minister that this is potentially a very interesting topic but, because of the manner in which he has treated it, people don't take it seriously in this House. There isn't a single topic in a single ministry, a single critic on the government side or a government backbencher who is interested in the topic, that cannot in some way be related to the constitution, particularly when one gets into the whole issue of the redivision of powers and so on.

If we had some ongoing mechanism, whether it be a committee outside the House making periodic reports, whether it be more regularly scheduled debates on this issue within the House, then one would develop an interest. Then the minister might leave the impression with those serried backbenches and the opposition majority over here that this is important enough that they should take an interest in the matter. But we have short-changed this vital issue at a critical stage in Canadian history. And the province of Ontario—the dominant province, as some historians have described it on occasion; certainly a key province in the original shaping of Confederation and inevitably a key province in the reshaping of Confederation—has so totally frustrated an opportunity for debate here which would develop an interest among ourselves and then develop an interest out among the public that, I submit, we have done a grave disservice to the people of this province.

Therefore, my hope would be, along with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, that when that resolution comes before the House on Thursday and it gets a majority vote, this government is not going to treat a majority view of this House with contempt, because the government's actions in the last three or four years add up to a contempt for this whole issue.

Let me just pick two topics. I am picking them in part to deal with the substance, but, equally important, to illustrate the reason we should have a committee and why that committee should be an ongoing one—two very important issues in the whole process of constitutional reform.

To begin with, the topic I want to touch on briefly is the issue of entrenchment of individual rights. When the bill was brought in by the former government in Ottawa, interestingly enough there were a couple of sections in that bill that Ed Broadbent pointed out when he made his representations on behalf of the New Democratic Party to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons studying the bill. Section 5 of the bill says: "In a free and democratic society there are certain rights and freedoms which must be assured and which must, if they are to endure, be incapable of being alienated by the ordinary exercise of such legislative or other authority as may be conferred by law on its respective institutions of government." That seems to be a pretty strong statement, that one is going to have certain rights entrenched and that government or a Legislature at one point by whim or by decision is not going to have the right to supersede or to undercut or to violate those entrenched rights.

Then we move on to section 25. Listen to it, Mr. Chairman. "Nothing in this charter shall be held to prevent such limitations on the exercise or enjoyment of any of the individual rights and freedoms declared by this charter as are justifiable in the free and democratic society in the interests of public safety or health, the interests of peace and security of the public, or in the interests of the rights and freedoms of others, whether such limitations are imposed by law or by virtue of the construction or application of any law."

As Mr. Broadbent pointed out, on the one hand, you have an assertion that these entrenched rights should be inviolable, and then you have another section which says they can be violated. In some fashion or other, we have got to come to grips with this. In the wake of the War Measures Act of 1970, we have to come to grips with it.

One of the interesting things about this issue is that there are divisions within parties, and I am raising this frankly. I think those divisions within parties and between parties should be threshed out so we can perhaps come to a closer understanding of the matter. Let me illustrate it with regard to my own party. The New Democratic Party has been for quite some time, as passed by resolutions at conventions, in support of the idea that individual rights should be entrenched in the constitution. But Allan Blakeney, the Premier of Saskatchewan, has expressed serious reservations with regard to it. Why? Let me quote him. I suggest to you that his words are worthy of some thought.

Speaking to the conference last November, Allan Blakeney said: "I want to be clear. The issue here is not human rights per se. Saskatchewan is in favour of human rights. Indeed, we are proud of our record. One of the first bills of rights in any jurisdiction in Canada was adopted by the CCF government of Tommy Douglas in 1947; a Fair Employment Practices Act, a Fair Accommodations Practices Act, a human rights commission, an ombudsman, a legal aid system that is second to none in the world. The issue is not rights per se; the issue is the entrenchment of rights.

"To entrench rights in the constitution is to put them for all practical purposes beyond the reach of the Legislature." Then he goes on to add, "I, for one, am not convinced that it makes much sense to transfer to the judiciary the power to decide sensitive questions of social policy." There is a problem, there is a dilemma. Somebody once said, not wholly inaccurately, if I do not offend you, Mr. Chairman, that those who sit on the bench usually represent the views of the last generation in terms of social policy, not this generation. It is in the nature of the entrenched conservatism of the judiciary that maybe that is the case.

Do we want people whose views on sensitive social issues are a generation behind the times to be, in effect, making the law of the land? Or should it be made in the Legislature among elected representatives of the people, who presumably reflect the views of society at this given time?

Allan Blakeney points out, for example: "For 25 years the Saskatchewan government has 'discriminated'"—and he's got that word in quotes—"in favour of Indians in granting fishing licences and trapping permits in northern Saskatchewan. Recently, we signed an agreement with a uranium company for a new uranium mine in the north of our province. That agreement requires that by 1982 50 per cent of their employees be 'northerners,' defined as people who have lived in the north for 15 years, most of whom will be Indians, status and non-status. With an entrenched bill of rights, policies like those could be struck down by the courts as being discriminatory on the basis of race."

How do you come to grips with this problem of establishing a balance? The general argument that has been advanced with regard to entrenching human rights in the constitution is that you protect these rights and they can't be violated. I sometimes wonder whether the people who advance this argument are aware of the history. Our neighbour, the great United States of America, has these rights entrenched in the constitution.

May I remind you of the notorious Dred Scott case in 1857, in which the court applied the due process clause of the fifth amendment as a guarantee of property rights, holding invalid an act of Congress excluding slavery from certain US territories? How fascinating—or how shocking.

May I remind you that in 1905 the court struck down a statute limiting hours of employment in bakeries to 60 hours a week and 10 hours a day, finding it to be an interference with the freedom of contract, protected by due process? How fascinating.

Or may I remind you that in 1918 there was a court decision invalidating legislation aimed at suppressing child labour in factories where children under 14 were employed, because it violated property rights, or contract rights, or something of that nature?

Or may I remind you that in 1923 there was a decision of the court holding unconstitutional federal legislation which attempted to establish minimum wages for women in the District of Columbia?

In other words, the history of the United States is replete with cases in which the Supreme Court used one or another argument to violate human rights, to deny the assurance of human rights. So don't for one moment get drawn in on the proposition that you get it entrenched in the constitution. I don't know the answer to this dilemma. I'm very frank with you.

When this was thrashed out I remember seeing one of the CBC programs in which Allan Blakeney was tackled pretty vigorously because of the contradiction between the general position of the New Democratic Party in wanting these rights to be entrenched and his position. He said that there is a possible reconciliation. You can have in the constitution a so-called "notwithstanding" clause—notwithstanding what is spelled out there, a provincial Legislature would not be denied the right in advancing of some affirmative action program to discriminate in favour of the Indians, for example, in employment.

That may be the answer. I don't know. All I'm saying—and this is the reason why I raise it, apart from the substance of the issue—is that this is the kind of thing that should be thrashed through in a committee. This is the kind of thing that should be debated in this House. It should have been debated two or three years ago, maybe 10 times in the last two or three years, but it's never been debated.

Let me move to another issue—and I want to deal with it superficially because it obviously gets into so much substance, and now is not the time to pursue it—this whole question of what we're going to do about the Senate. Interestingly enough, the majority of people today recognize that the Senate is useless and it should be eliminated, as it now stands.

Mr. Nixon: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald: You don't know how many of your fellow Liberals are sitting there as bagmen with a lifelong pension.

Mr. Nixon: I say again, hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear. Okay. Very good.

Mr. Worton: It's just a difference of opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: I just wanted to clarify that, and now I've established a community of opinion—

Mr. Nixon: Paul Martin criticized me for that even more strongly.

Mr. MacDonald: What we have had proposed on one hand by the Advisory Committee on Confederation and on the other hand by the federal proposals are two different things—the House of the Provinces and the House of Federation—which are really going to institutionalize the regional differences and tensions which presumably the new structure is going to resolve. Again, as Ed Broadbent, in some very wise comments to that joint Senate-Commons committee, said: "The result is an abomination which meets neither regional nor democratic requirements."

It's not democratic and it's not any assurance of a resolving of these regional tensions and differences. It just provides a mechanism through which an institution may be perpetuated, not resolved, because there is not within that body the real opportunity for their resolution.

So—and I throw this out just for your thoughts—if we want to have a democratic procedure, and if you want to have a resolution of those difficulties, I suggest that the two proposals that have come from the so-called Macdonald committee, the Advisory Committee on Confederation, and from Ottawa, the House of Federation and the House of the Provinces, neither of which does it, that again the proposal put forward by Ed Broadbent is worthy of consideration. Namely, you eliminate this second chamber. It's as useless as the appendix, which is not an integral and necessary part of the human body or of the body politic.

What you can do to give a more democratic reflection of the will of the nation is, as Broadbent suggested on behalf of the New Democratic Party, extend the House by some 80 members who were chosen on the basis of proportional representation so that all parties will have representation from all regions. They won't find themselves virtually euchred out of the picture as all parties are in some areas. This gives a balkanized country, a regionalized country, with no real national parties that can help reunite the country. That sort of a House of Commons could rectify that.

It would be great fun to go into the detail of the proposals that came from the advisory committee and others, but I won't. I put this forward as an illustration of the reason why we should have been debating two or three years, why we should be debating now, and why we should be debating this fall our thinking on these issues. Then we would be in a position to play a part in the reshaping of our constitution.

Our forefathers played their part, with the Fathers of Confederation providing the leadership in shaping the original Confederation. We have the challenge of reconfederation that's going to take place—I hope in the 1980s.

Let me in conclusion, make one or two general observations: In my view—and I think here I am on common ground with my colleague from Lakeshore—there was implicit and explicit in the Pepin-Robarts report a healthy, open-minded, tolerant kind of approach. It was an approach which acknowledges the legitimacy of self-determination on the basis of a clear vote on clear issues, as far as Quebec is concerned, so we are not going to be sending the troops in, and neither are we going to be building walls along the Ottawa River if perchance they were to vote that they didn't want to remain in Canada. But it asserts as vigorously as possible that it is our conviction—certainly it is our conviction in the New Democratic Party—the interests of Quebec and the interests of this nation are not going to be served by Quebec separating into another country. That would infinitely complicate our life on the northern half of this continent. Therefore we should be building these bridges.

My friend from Lakeshore pointed out that because there has been no opportunity for debate, the minister came up with an interesting idea that we should maybe have an exchange between members of the two Legislatures. I judge this would be primarily a social thing, and I don't denigrate that wholly, but I think much more can be done.

I was on one of the groups—the working party or whatever you want to call it—the New Democratic Party sent down to Quebec, and it was very fascinating. In a two- or two-and-a-half-day period we met some 10 or a dozen economic, social and political groups and talked through issues of common concern. Some of them were Pequistes; some of them were anti-Pequistes. We came away with a greater appreciation of the issue and they came away, I think, with some appreciation of what the views of the people of Ontario are.

I think that's the kind of thing that should have been going on. I would hope if we have a committee that does this, we will not only have an exchange visit between the members of the Legislature in Quebec and here, as was done back in 1964—it was something of a buildup for the Confederation of Tomorrow conference—but we also can have working committees that can come to grips with the thing around something other than just a cocktail glass. I'm not deploring the cocktail glass. Human relationships can be strengthened in and around the cocktail glass, I acknowledge, but I think something more substantive than that can be done.

The only other general point I would make is that on issues like entrenching human rights or on what is the best way to get a more democratic resolution of the tensions and regional differences within this country, such as I was referring to a moment ago, I for one think it would be unwise for anybody at this point to have conclusions that are etched in stone or dogmas that they're going to fight for throughout.

My whole approach to what is likely to happen in this reconfederation process is that inevitably it is going to be something like the process from 1864 to 1867. Then you got people together, people with the most disparate views, people who were personally and politically bitter enemies, the Sir John A. Macdonalds and the George Browns. They faced the reality of a nation that didn't exist. Then it was a collection of colonies that hadn't achieved a viability for political life, whereas now the prospect is of a nation that is going to be split. These differences will be submerged among those who have the common good in mind, as happened then.

If we go into those negotiations, as inevitably they're going to develop in some fashion or other in the next few years, it is wise for us to go in saying there are certain goals we want to fulfil and there are certain mechanisms, options one, two, three and four, for achieving those goals. But we should not be so irrevocably wedded and committed to any one, because I venture the prediction that people will go in there and, in the process of compromise and negotiation, they will come out with something that before they went into the negotiations they would never believe or admit they might be associated with. That's the essence of compromise. That's the essence of the whole negotiating process.

There are many things that you and I, from our particular advantage and approach to the issue, at the moment may think are either intolerable or undesirable but, ultimately, as part of the process we are going to be willing to accept because it will be necessary to accept it to build a restructured Confederation for the next century and, hopefully, it might work at least as well as the one we had for the last century.

I will leave the matter there. I hope a committee is established. I say it with a great measure of regret because there is nothing I would more dearly like than to be on that committee—and I won't be able to because I'm tied up with another committee. It's with great generosity that I say someone else can have that spot and I, green-eyed with envy, will take my seat and read their report and say; "Damn it, if I had been there, it might have been just a little bit better or at least a little bit different."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister wish to reply to that at this time, or does it require a reply?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, I'd like to make a few comments, Mr. Chairman. I always enjoy hearing the comments of my friend from York South also those of the members for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and Lakeshore on the constitution. As a matter of fact, the one reason why we have great doubts about a committee is that we know the member for York South won't be there on it. If he was going to be on it, we would have no problems with it.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, come on, that's the lamest excuse you've given me and, God knows, you have given a lot of them.

Mr. Ashe: We'll give him a release from the Hydro committee.

Mr. Nixon: We can turn Hydro over to the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes).

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'd like to just quickly deal with a few of the matters. Although there are few members here, we have had another interesting discussion. I draw my friend's attention to the fact that this is the second discussion we've had in this House on constitutional matters since the House began last fall. I just assumed this role as Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs last August. So in less than a year we've had what I would consider two fairly major exchanges in debates in the estimates on this particular section.

I must admit I can't recall when the estimates of the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs used to go through before whether this kind of debate occurred or not. I haven't had time to check and see that, but last fall and now at this particular time on this vote we've had a debate. As I recall, last fall 10 or 12 members of this House took part in what I thought was a very interesting, uplifting and inspirational debate on this particular subject.

I don't think we have been complacent. My friend from Lakeshore says we have been very complacent on this whole issue. We may have been complacent to the extent that we have not had a committee of this House, but as a government and as a province interested in, first of all, bringing about some kind of constitutional reform in this country and developing a process that we can use as the Quebec referendum comes closer, we have not been complacent. In fact, I think we have been anything but complacent. As I indicated in my opening remarks, there have been—

Mr. Lawlor: You have done precious little.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You think we have done precious little? I know you have made some comments in jest about the whole discussions being in the hands of the bureaucratic elite. I can't recall the exact phrase you used, but if you were to ask the staff of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs if there has been precious little done in the last eight months, I am afraid they would say you are very wrong. There has been more done in the last year or eight months in this whole area than probably occurred in three or four years before.

As I indicated to you, there have been two federal-provincial conferences held on constitutional reform. There was a series of meetings—

Mr. Lawlor: They achieved nothing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I disagree with you. I don't think you can say they achieved nothing.

Mr. Lawlor: They got bogged down on economic issues.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They have started down the road to laying the groundwork for more significant achievement.

Mr. Lawlor: There may be a fair amount done behind the scenes. By the way, I'd like to have whatever you can give me; you offered all kinds of papers.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All right. We will send you all the papers we have. Anything that was achieved, I think you saw it publicly manifested in the television coverage and the reporting of the last first ministers' conference. Since that time, because of the federal election, there has been a hiatus on any discussion and most of the activity taking place.

I think the groundwork was laid significantly to carry on the kind of discussions I saw, and I must say I measured them only from my involvement in these discussions and other discussions on things not related to the constitution, but the kind of attitude the provinces brought to that particular task suggested to me that we can keep the ball rolling, to use the vernacular term, and keep the process going.

It is not necessarily going to be over in a short time, but I think we can keep it going. What I sense you want is a greater involvement in it, and that is a very valid position to put forward. Certainly we cannot be in a position of arriving at conclusions and agreements on a new constitution for Canada which does not have the groundswell understanding and involvement of all the elected members in all the provinces across Canada. We must be sure we develop that.

You also put forward the proposition about wondering what Ontario's position is and has been, particularly in these last series of discussions which have gone on and in those discussions which will go on shortly. I think the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), probably unknowingly, in a few words epitomized the position Ontario has put forward. It may or may not be agreed to by all members of this House, but we did not go forward in any of the meetings or discussions with any positions etched in stone.

We did take that position for the very valid reason that many provinces over the years have viewed Ontario with a little distrust because they thought eastern Canada, being the economic centre of Canada, was always trying to get its own way, that we come in with the propositions and everyone is expected to accept them, because that feeling to some degree persists out there across the country; and for the other reason that we felt our position should be one of honest broker in the constitutional discussions that were taking place, that we, having studied the positions, should try to take a posture at the various meetings of bringing together the different elements that were present at the discussion table, at the negotiating table, to try and arrive at, as again my friend from York South said, a position that would be acceptable to the greatest number of people.

In other words, we didn't come in and say: "This is the way it should be. We're going to try and convince you that you all should agree to this." We came in and said: "Look, there are certain overall principles we think have to be adhered to, but within those overall principles"—and I think they were outlined in the speech from the throne—"there's lots of room for all of us to sit down and talk about the division of powers, and what the Senate should be like and what the Supreme Court should be like. Let's see if we can get a consensus, at least of a majority of the members of this federation." That really is the position we have taken. We've tried to draw together, out of the discussion, a lot of different ideas and to come up with what might be acceptable to Ontario and to all of the members of the federation.

We haven't been successful. The conferences haven't been successful in doing that in a great number of areas, but—and I'll be glad to send the honourable member the documents from the meetings on the 14 items—we have arrived at consensus on some; we've arrived at just about consensus on some others; and with a little more discussion there are others on which we can arrive at some general agreement. There are others on which we stand quite far apart, but they are going to have to be worked upon.

With that position having been stated, that is, of us acting as the honest broker trying to facilitate discussion and bring together the provinces and federal government in Canada to try to help arrive at some positions that are acceptable to all, why, then, did we put forward the proposition for patriation of the constitution? If necessary, unilateral patriation without amending formula. We put forward that position, which began to look more like a position that was etched in stone rather than a conciliatory position, for the very reason that I think some members have brought out in this debate, which was that a lot of people in Canada really don't see constitutional reform and constitutional discussion as important, because as was indicated in the debate on Friday, people say to us: "Why are you worried about constitutional reform? Why are you worried about a constitution changing certain powers when what you need to worry about in this country is jobs, and the economy and so forth. We can think about that somewhere down the road, five or 10 years from now." They say this without realizing that they are all intertwined, and what happens constitutionally does have an effect on the economic future of this country.

Also, you can talk to people—and I've talked to them and I know the honourable member has—and you say: "Are you interested in keeping Canada together?" The answer, of course, is a very resounding: "Yes, sure, I want to do everything I can to keep this country united." Then you say: "Well are you interested in constitutional reform?" Then they reply, "No, I'm not interested; what's that got to do with it?" People don't even realize that the essence of rebuilding this federation is tied up to a renewed constitution; that's the way, the peaceful way, we can do something constructive to keep Canada united. Therefore, by suggesting the bold act of patriation, we felt that if a government in this country, a federal government, could say to the people of Canada through a joint address of the Senate and the House of Commons: "We're going to bring the constitution back to Canada. After 112 years our constitution, the British North America Act, which is now an act of the British Parliament, along with those other things that are connected with it that make up the constitution of Canada, we're going to bring it back here and henceforth, from here on in, the constitution of Canada remains here in Canada"; we could then proceed down the road of renewing that constitution, not with a view to going to Westminster to bring about the changes but making them right here.

We do it even without an amending formula. If we can't arrive at an amending formula we leave all those matters concerning an amending formula just the way they are and we bring the constitution back here. Those things still stay; we operate under the same ground rules but we have the constitution here.

Perhaps that act of bringing the constitution home will be enough to make at least a majority of the people of Canada aware this is an important task we are on and it is one that we should be concerned about. It is one that holds within its promise the future of Canada, not only as a united country but as an economically-sound country. So for that reason we adopted that stance at the conference that was held last February.

The federal election is over. The Quebec referendum is coming. We still believe that—

Mr. Lawlor: You forgot to tell Joe.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh he knows. You mean we forgot to tell him the federal election is over? I think he knows.

Mr. Lawlor: You forgot to tell him about repatriation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think he is aware of that. Flora certainly is. The present Minister of External Affairs, I recall, sat very diligently through all the public sessions of the various first ministers' conferences, and I am sure she will be able to share her views very eloquently on what went on.

Anyway, we now face the Quebec referendum, which is to be announced shortly. We have had the federal election; the new government is in place and the ministers who will be concerned with constitutional reform and federal-provincial relations have been appointed. I think we now have to pick up where we left off. We have to re-establish our steering committee of federal and provincial ministers. We have to prepare for a ministers' conference which will ultimately lead to another first ministers' conference; we have to keep the process continuing because we have the base from which we can operate.

The base has been indicated by my friend in his discussions, and by many people here in their discussions. I think the base for operations is the work that has gone on in the continuing committee of ministers on the constitution. The work is there in the Pepin-Robarts task force report.

However I may say it was very interesting to watch Jean-Luc Pepin on Question Period last night. He indicated he believed he would no longer be responsible for federal-provincial relations or the constitution in the shadow cabinet the Leader of the Opposition set up. He hoped he would be in something completely different; he seemed to want to get away from being responsible for this area. He also, I think, changed position slightly from the one he had held a few months ago that the report represented an entity that linked all together. If I recall correctly, he said last night you could take certain sections or pages here and there but not worry about some of their other recommendations.

I have always felt, since I first read this report, that it offers good background material for any group studying a renewed federalism in this country. It is a very valuable source of information. I think something forgotten by many people is that it represents a report that was developed after very extensive public hearings. It represents the work of the committee after they sat in province after province, all across this country, and listened to people from every walk of life talk about what they wanted in Canada and how they thought the country should be restructured. So it represents the synthesis of a lot of opinion from a lot of people; and that is something that many of the other reports that have been written do not contain.

We also have the two reports of the Ontario Advisory Committee on Confederation. I would like to say a couple of words about the Ontario committee, because of course that has been one of our approaches in government. We do not believe all the work on Confederation or leading up to the various conferences should be done completely in government, so Ian Macdonald was appointed chairman of the Ontario advisory committee, which is a committee that advises the Premier and the cabinet of this province.

I would like to read the names of the members of that committee so members of this House will know who sits on the Ontario Advisory Committee on Confederation: Judge Rosalie Abella of the family division of the provincial court; Gail Cook who is an economist; Rodrigue J. Bilodeau who is chairman and chief executive officer of Honeywell Limited; Dr. Jean Noel Desmerais of Laurentian Hospital; Ken Dryden of the Montreal Canadiens, who is also a lawyer; Robert Duffy of the editorial board of the Toronto Star; the Hon. George Gale of the Ontario Law Reform Commission; Robert Kymlika, dean of social sciences, University of Western Ontario; Roland Michener, former Governor General of Canada; Hugh Peacock of the Ontario Federation of Labour; Anne Michele Meggs who is a former assistant secretary of the committee; Robert Simeon, director of the Institute of Intergovernmental Relations at Queen's University; and Frank M. Vasilkoti, president of Triarch Corporation Limited.

Other members have sat on that committee and for various reasons are not now sitting, so there are others I should name, although I do not have their names here, who have taken part in the preparation of the report.

I also recall the Destiny Canada conference held at York University in June 1977. This was our ideal—the government and York University and the Ontario Advisory Committee on Confederation and others—to try a vehicle through which we could get across to the public some of the things that were happening in this particular area. I think it was a successful conference.

I also draw the attention of the House to the fact there is a very important series of booklets prepared by the province of British Columbia on constitutional problems. Any discussion of background papers on the constitution should not neglect the significant contribution of the province of British Columbia, which for the first time many of us can recall has put down in very precise terms the kinds of things officials there see as their perspectives. It is a very well-written series of booklets. I suppose the only criticism I might have is they tend to fall into the category of etched in stone. Sometimes when we sit down at the table they are pulled out and they say: "We said this in our booklets," and it is a little hard to move them off the position in their booklets. I suggest that probably could be done with good debate. Their proposals represent, I think, another very important source.

There are many others. The Canadian Bar Association has done a lot of work in this particular area. Except for their misguided idea about the monarchy, I think they have a very good report. It provides good background for anyone studying these particular matters.

Mr. Lawlor: After all, most of them are Queen's counsel.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is right. I would also like to say the tenor of the kind of discussion that goes on at meetings on the constitution and on constitutional reform was presented very well here a few minutes ago by the member for York South when he talked about the conflicting opinions in regard to entrenchment of human rights, and "the charter on human rights" as that matter has come to be called.

I note he put forward Mr. Broadbent's position. As I recall, Flora MacDonald and the federal Progressive Conservative Party in those days also put forward a position very strongly for entrenching fundamental human rights in the constitution. Then, measured against that, there are the opinions of Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan and Premier Sterling Lyon of Manitoba, and to some degree that of Premier Bennett of British Columbia.

No one is against human rights. I suggest all of the provinces in one way or another have legislation on human rights. They have advanced legislation on employment practices and so forth. They have guarantees of legal rights. The kinds of rights we are all talking about are not in question; it is the way we handle them. Do we entrench them in a constitution or do we not entrench them. I think that has been the question that has been before us at many meetings. It is one for which we have not yet found an answer, and I don't know that we have any magic answer at the present time.

I don't know whether the members of this House have seen the proposed Ontario draft for discussion by first ministers. It is what we call the mini-charter of human rights. It was a draft that would replace the very long draft that was in the former federal piece of legislation called Bill C-60. Ontario, incidentally, was the only other province I can recall that actually put forward an alternative draft at our meetings.

In other words, we tried to hit a position in between the positions; on the one hand of a very detailed charter of human rights entrenched in the Constitution, as was in the federal Bill C-60; and the position of many of the Premiers, that basically we could be seen to be limiting human rights by entrenchment. We tried to come in with an in-between position, just for discussion. Certainly, at this point, it has not been accepted by all the provinces, but it has provided a starting point for some entrenchment of fundamental freedoms and certain language rights in education.

I think that shows just some of the detail and scope that must go on in these discussions. I welcome the comments we have had in these estimates so far. We are going to have an opportunity to debate the idea of a committee. It hasn't been completely rejected, as some of the members have said in this House. As I recall, the last words I uttered on this matter were that the House leaders were going to take a look at it. My friend the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) is not here—

Mr. Worton: He has gone to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He has gone to discuss it, has he? Good. I didn't want to leave the impression that I had said the House leaders had said it couldn't be held during the summer, I think when the members for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and I had a discussion about it. The member for Ottawa East and I found some resistance in our own caucuses to any more committees during the summer, not by the House leaders but by our caucuses. We really found that the schedule for the summer was such that it would be very difficult to schedule another committee.

That being as it may, the suggestion was that perhaps the fall would be an early enough time to start in. That was the final suggestion we were left with, that a committee organize now and start meetings in the fall. That was the suggestion we were taking back to look at and which I think all parties were going to take a look at. I thought perhaps the House leaders, who meet regularly and also have to schedule these things and make sure they work, were the group that could discuss the matter and see where that idea should go from here. I think that's where it stands. We will have to wait and see what results from that discussion, and then from the discussion among all the parties.

With those remarks, that is all I would like to say at this time on that particular item.

Vote 602 agreed to.

On vote 603, local government affairs program:

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I was going to touch on the matter that was raised by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), and discussed under the previous vote to some extent.

This is not the greatest constitutional issue but, in terms of unity, harmony, cohesiveness, the ability to plan our future, decisions to grow rationally and sensibly and so on, all these things seem to hang in the air right now while everybody in the municipal field is waiting for the minister to make up his mind.

The minister did indicate in his opening remarks, and to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, that he will be coming through with some kind of timetable or some suggestions or some solutions and that he hopes to make that announcement late in the summer.

It bothers me—and I think it bothers members of council as well—that, in effect, what the minister is suggesting is that he's going to have more discussions that somehow, somewhere, he's going to get these councils together from adjoining municipalities and they're going to sit down and come up with a rational answer that will be satisfactory to everybody.

I want to point out to the minister that they've been sitting and talking and talking for 11 years or 12 years now. They've had committees; they've had fact-finders; they've had committees within committees—in other words, you name it, and they've had it. They've gone through the various possible methods of communications of which one can conceive to come to a solution to the problem, and they're no closer to a solution now than they were 10 or 15 years ago.

That's why, when I hear the minister say, "We're going to come to it again, but we're going to have these consultations and we're going to have all these other things," it seems to me what we're embarking on here is another exercise in futility. We could continue with these futile exercises, I suppose, if the minister finds it fascinating or if some other people find it fascinating—and perhaps some people do. I don't think the minister's people do. I don't think the people in the ministry find it fascinating, and I don't think the minister is finding it fascinating; neither do the urban municipalities that are faced with problems find it fascinating to continue talking and talking. At this time they are looking for solutions. The necessity, of course, is that there are pressing problems.

There are problems of planning, urban growth, development, sewage, environmental problems, land-use problems—all the problems associated with the municipal administration. This is not new to the minister. He's aware of it and he knows it. It has been brought to his attention on many occasions, and he has acknowledged it in the speeches he has made.

But somehow I want to impress upon the minister that there is frustration up there. It's not just frustration within the municipality of Brantford; it's not the only one in the province. There are a lot of other urban municipalities that are feeling this frustration.

They came to the minister at a meeting a year ago and stated their views. They expressed what the problems were. I think the minister was aware of them. The Premier, who was there, was aware of them. The Attorney General, who was there, I am sure was aware of them. Here we are, a year later, and the minister is promising us that, some time late in the summer, he's going to come up with a definitive statement.

I don't know what the minister's definitive statement will contain, but I'm going to take him at his word. After 15 years, I suppose another couple of months isn't going to bring about the end of the world or bring about a calamity.

However, I want to caution the minister and warn him that there are people out there who are watching this thing, who want some answers and who want some action. They don't want to see the ministry—which has to provide the leadership in this case—sliding all over. The ministry is not moving forward; it is going sideways, like a demented crab. Every time the ministry comes to a problem, it slithers to one side or the other side. The ministry is not meeting the problem head-on.

There's no question that there will be some animosity. Certain people don't want annexation; other people want different processes to take place, or whatever. But nobody seems to agree totally as to what they want and how things should be done.

But we do have some patterns established. We have some past experience about what works and what doesn't work on a municipal level, and surely with all that expertise and all that knowledge and everything else you've got, with all the king's horses and the king's men that you have within your department, I hope you will come through by the end of the summer, as you say, with something that a municipality can latch on to and say, "All right, we have an annexation problem, we have to resolve it," they can latch on to this, you set up a process that will, within certain reasonable time frames, come to some kind of conclusion.

The minister has made some comments before, and could I just get assurance from him that this time, once and for all, he is really going to tackle the problem head on?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, certainly we are going to tackle the problem; we've always believed we should tackle the problem. I draw to my friend's attention, though, that he and the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk can't agree in this House on what would be a solution to the problem. Brantford township and Brantford can't agree on what should be a solution to a problem, and we are expected to come up with the so-called magical solution. Some of them that were in that brief that the urban municipalities gave to us eight months ago or so, would perhaps make the city of Brantford very happy, but they would make Brantford township very unhappy.

Some of the solutions that we might contemplate here could perhaps leave a lasting effect in the community that would be detrimental for many years to come. The question that I have to weigh is, what's worse, something that could create that kind of division and detrimental effect or the kind of situation that has just been indicated to me by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, that there appears to have been a bit of cooling-out of the situation there, and certainly from his point of view he doesn't see it as major a problem as he did.

I don't think that's right; it may not be as visible at the present time, but I can tell my friend from Brantford that I'm getting as many letters as I know he is and as many calls about what's going to happen and how can the situation be handled.

I just want to underline, first, that we will come forward with our suggestions for a different way. I also want to underline that they are not going to be some magical solutions that are necessarily going to solve everything. I want to also underline that they are going to take the goodwill and the hard work of people involved to make them work and that's the kind of thing, I think, that in any annexation or amalgamation is necessary if you have two violently, unalterably opposed groups.

It's very difficult. I listen to both sides in my office many times and it becomes very hard to know who to side with. You listen to the urban municipalities and you hear their story and it all sounds very plausible and very feasible. Then when the other group comes in and tells you how they are just trying to live their lives and get along and they are suddenly being grabbed at by somebody next to them, you become very sympathetic with them. Then you have to sort of try and bring balance into the whole thing, and that's what we are trying to do.

Also for that area, of course, if they felt that the normal route was acceptable to them, of course that's not out of the question either, but we have assumed that they don't want to go the normal OMB route in the Brantford-Brantford township area, so we are trying to come up with something that will be a little different. I might tell my friend that in the Barrie-Innisfil township situation, where they have been through all the normal routes and all the expense and all the time, we are still trying to find some way to perhaps bring that to some conclusion, and that is very difficult again, to get all the people to agree to some kind of process. While people out there think we have some kind of power that can automatically, if we say something, turn off the most violently opposed person and make him a very docile conciliator, that doesn't happen very often, and it's very difficult sometimes to change people around and get them to accept those kinds of positions.

However, you do have my assurance that we are working on it and, the way I see it, based on the kinds of comments and suggestions we'll get from the various municipal groups, when we come up with our suggestions for a different method and way of handling these matters I am sure that Brantford and Brantford township will be the first area we will want to try the whole process in. That should be towards the end of August.

Mr. Makarchuk: You don't sound too reassuring to me. I don't know what the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is talking about when he says the situation has cooled off. You've got a letter on file and, if you want, I can read it to you to give an indication of the continual frustration they feel. There is an element of frustration in council.

As you said, we're not going to pacify everybody and everybody is not going to be happy about the situation. If you talk to the people in both places and explain the problem to them—and there has been a considerable amount of effort to explain the reasons for certain actions being taken—you'll find out they are basically reasonable and receptive.

It depends on to whom you listen. If you listen to the reeve of Brantford township, who I consider—and I say it in public as I've said it before—the most destructive element in the whole of Brant county in terms of trying to rationalize and bring some kind of satisfactory conclusion to that area. It's unfortunate that we have to get into the feeling that we'll listen here and listen there, and we continue doing this thing, but we never resolve the problems.

The problems are increasing. It's detrimental to the community in just about any way you want to look at it from the civic point of view. The people realize it. It's not only the people in the city of Brantford who realize it, but also the people living outside the city, outside the boundaries but still in the urban areas of Brantford township, who realize the situation and are prepared to look at it.

It's not like going into an annexation for the benefit of some individual. The decision is there for the benefit of the whole community. It's not for the benefit of the councillors in Brantford township or the benefit of the councillors in the city of Brantford. No one gets any kind of personal gain out of this situation. It's strictly a desire on the part of the people up there who see certain needs in the community, who are concerned about the community and who are trying to meet those needs so that the community can continue to function and grow.

As Harry Truman used to say, "The buck stops here." Somewhere you have to put an end to the passing of this buck. I admit that we don't expect magical solutions, neither do I consider you the wizard of IGA. However, we are looking for solutions and in the final analysis we have to go to the ministry. There is nowhere else we can go.

Brantford township has indicated in the letter that was sent to you recently that if there is no final solution by August it wants to go the OMB route, frustrating as it may be and expensive as it may be. That should indicate to you the feeling of those people who are trying to run the city. And you're not helping them a damn bit.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Some of my predecessors in this government came up with the so-called magical solutions from 1968 to about 1974-75. We don't have too many of you over there wanting to acknowledge they were magical solutions. That was the very essence of regionalization and regional government and restructured counties. It was to provide what was supposed to be a much better way of handling this particular problem.

I gather that no one in Brantford is suggesting a restructured Brant county with Brantford as part of it and everyone working into that particular situation. My friend is not suggesting that we do that?

Mr. Makarchuk: I'm not suggesting that you have to go the whole hog. There have been some suggestions that there could be a restructuring that would possibly satisfy most of the people in the county. If you talked to the people in Paris, they're interested in annexation; if you talk to the people in South Dumfries they're interested in some type of annexation or new agreements. Talk to the councillors in those communities. But, basically, outside of Brantford township, I think, every municipality in Brant county, is prepared to look at something different. They will acknowledge that we have problems that have to be sorted out. Somehow they have to be dealt with.

This ministry is the only one which can help to arrive at some resolution for the simple reason they have been doing exactly what you are suggesting they should be doing, continue the talking. They have been talking, ministry officials have been talking with them, officials' officials and so on and it becomes perpetual motion in discussion.

One can't operate the province or the city on just talk alone. Sometime someone has to make a decision. Somewhere you have to arrive at some conclusions and start implementing decisions in tangible planning matters, environmental matters, sewers, waters, transportation corridors, all these kinds of things—fringe business developments, particularly if you have a downtown development you are trying to make viable. All these are important.

If they are not dealt with now, when are they going to be dealt with? When you do get around to dealing with them later on, chances are it will be too late. The whole area will have been ruined by procrastination and inactivity.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As I indicated in my first remarks, I recognize the problem and we are hoping to come up with something soon.

I want to point out, when we tried those solutions which I think are working—that is, the regional governments in this province—every time we have tried those we have been accused by some members of the third party and members in the official opposition of being arrogant, of being autocratic, of contradicting local autonomy and so forth. They were the so-called magical solutions to solve the problems of urban expansion, or resources for everyone, to do an adequate job of preserving agricultural farm land and rationalizing it with industrial land and so forth. They were to be the better way to handle the situation.

We have stopped doing that because it hasn't proved to be the better way from the point of view of those people affected, who don't see it as any better way. I must say I think regional governments, on balance, looking at all the pros and cons, have been effective and have done their jobs in the province.

Mr. Haggerty: Would you say that applies to the Niagara region?

Hon. Mr. Wells: As it applies to the Niagara Region, yes, I would say that. I think the regional government is fine in the Niagara region. What is needed are a few changes of attitude.

I went down to the Niagara region. A little more industry is required down there—and not industry on the good agricultural vine-lands and tender fruit land, but industry in the member's end of the Niagara Peninsula. It doesn't take any wizard to see that. I drove around in one day down there a few months ago and saw that.

Mr. Haggerty: That is not the way the official plan is geared, though.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think you have to effect some change and I think the member for Brock (Mr. Welch) sees that too. I hope the member for Welland-Thorold sees that, also. There is great potential down there but somehow, people have been scared off from the Niagara region. Industry thinks if it goes there it will be encroaching upon tender fruit land.

Mr. Swart: Industry isn't that knowledgeable throughout the Niagara Peninsula. Three-quarters of it is not unique.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I know it isn't, but with respect to my friend, they have had such a problem with some of the people there over the years, they finally said, "Why bother even considering that area?" That is the attitude that has to be overcome and what I would like to help overcome so that some economic development can go into the Niagara Peninsula.

Mr. Haggerty: You can always make it crown land.

Mr. Mackenzie: To get over it you would get rid of the rest of the land.

Mr. Makarchuk: I don't want to get into the argument of regional government, but the big problem with regional government is the fact that taxes went up. People weren't that uptight about the restructuring or the new administration, but when their taxes went up, they were fed up with it. Everywhere it was put in place, that's the way it was implemented, instead of bringing in some reform in the tax system and everything else so the people didn't have to carry an extra load. Then probably it would have been found regional government would not have met with the hostility it has met with in the areas where it has been put into place.

I want to point out, in the Brant area, for example, where there are 90,000 people, there are five municipalities, five councils—they go on forever—and the point is they are spending. The per capita public spending in Brant right now, as of the last report that we did locally, is more than it is in the regional governments. That's something the minister should look at some time and point out when somebody is criticizing him about the spending in regional governments. In Brant, where we have no regional government, per-capita spending is higher than in the Niagara region, plus a few other regions, and we haven't even got the advantages or disadvantages.

Mr. Ruston: You are responsible for the Municipal Act and you made an amendment to it last December with regard to municipalities having a right to make agreements to put services in mobile home parks on agreement with the owners and the municipality. Have you or the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) looked at the system now whereby you are assessing mobile homes but the basis of collecting tax is by the owner of the mobile home park?

This is fine in that it can be paid in one lump sum, but there are some real ramifications to that in that they are finding in some cases that the taxes are not being paid on time. The owner of the park in one or two cases has not paid the taxes on time, while at the same time the owners of the mobile homes have.

In a couple of cases under rent review the park owner borrowed money to pay the taxes and yet the money had come in to him from the mobile home owners. The rent review officer allowed that as an expense. So, in effect, the people had paid their taxes on their mobile home while the park owner had said he had to borrow money to pay the taxes. He paid the taxes with what he said was borrowed money and the rent review officer allowed the interest and so forth to be a part of the rent increase.

It can happen the other way too, if the owner pays his taxes every three months, as in most cases they are collected three or four times a year or sometimes six times a year. In some cases, maybe they're not paid properly so that the owner could be paying the taxes when he hasn't collected on the mobile home.

I am wondering if the minister has had any representation or thought of the idea of having it so that each mobile home owner pays his own taxes on the same basis actually as business tax is paid for by a tenant who is running a business?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't recall us having that proposition put forward to us. I'd be glad to look into it and see what the pros and cons of it are. I can't recall anyone suggesting it to us, but I'll look into it.

Mr. Isaacs: I have a number of questions for the minister arising out of my colleague's comments about the Brantford situation and arising also from the minister's opening statements.

I'd like to take the Brantford situation, first of all, and expand that because I think that it's a very fundamental problem facing municipalities in Ontario at the present time. It's unfortunate that we're talking about it now as if it were a new problem because the problem of local government restructuring and more particularly of annexations, has been with us for a very long time. We don't seem to me to be any closer to a solution now than we were 15 or 20 or perhaps even 35 years ago, though I wasn't around then to know what the problems were.

Until we identify what local government is supposed to be doing, what its responsibilities are and why it exists in certain defined units, I think we're going to have the problems we're facing at the present time. I hope the minister will take a look at that area and try to come up with a definition of what a municipality is and what it's supposed to be doing.

It seems to me that when we're dealing with annexations or restructurings at the present time, there are at least two major issues that arise all the time. One is property taxes and the other is planning. It's probably taxes that come first.

In the Brantford situation, in the Sarnia situation and in all the restructurings that we've been through that have arisen for whatever reason, the people who are to be annexed or absorbed into another municipality always have the impression that their property taxes are going to go up, and in every situation that I have been able to research they have been right. So we have a situation where it is to the financial disadvantage of the people who live in the area to be annexed that they get involved in this kind of situation.

I think that is unfortunate, and I think it relates to the overall problem of property taxes and what property taxes are supposed to be doing in this province. I think if we could identify that property taxes were to pay for the services people received we would be making a big step forward in terms of eliminating that problem from consideration when dealing with municipal restructuring.

I could go on a lot more about property taxes but I don't intend to, because we have spoken a lot about them already and there is so much that could be said. We could take up all the time of this vote, and I don't want to do that.

The other point I mentioned was one of planning. We are in a situation where annexations result from the desire of municipalities to expand their urban boundaries. Cities and large towns fill up the major part of the land available to them with urban land uses, then they turn around and say, "Where are we going to grow?"

As we know, the whole property tax wealth syndrome in this province is based on growth. That may or may not be a good thing. I certainly have some reservations about it, but the minister commented a few minutes ago that growth was needed in Niagara, it was needed in Welland and Thorold and some of the other areas where it makes economic sense, where it is not doing any harm to the land use that is available—namely that of fruit farming.

That's true, but if there is to be growth in Niagara, where is that growth coming from? The odds are it is coming from Burlington, or even more likely that it is coming from eastern Ontario and northeastern Ontario, areas of the province which probably need urban growth, industrial and commercial growth, even more desperately than does the Niagara Peninsula.

I would suggest that while we have municipalities competing among themselves for growth that is available in the province of Ontario, then while we might be benefiting the residences of one particular municipality—and I say “might” because I am not convinced we are—we are probably doing harm to the province as a whole.

We would be better in the long run if we established an official plan for the province, as has been suggested to the minister by the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, which laid down the growth centres this province is to have, established very clearly the priorities the province is to have, and put over that a tax structure which meant that it was not to the financial disadvantage of a municipality not to grow and there was no great financial advantage to a municipality to grow beyond its reasonable needs.

At the moment we are seeing a situation where the immediate returns to a municipality in terms of tax income from industrial and commercial growth may be beneficial. They certainly appear to be so at first glance, but when you take into account the additional services that are needed for that industry and, more importantly, the services that are needed to satisfy the sprawling urban growth that we are seeing around a lot of our cities, then in fact the growth may be counterproductive.

When we are having to build new schools to satisfy the residential growth in new urban areas, when we are having to spend a fortune—as metro people know probably better than anyone else—to provide transit services to urban sprawl, when we are having to provide transitional grants from the province to deal with relatively minor reorganizations of services, then in those situations and many others I do not think we are doing anybody a favour. We may be doing at lot of people in the province a disfavour by allowing relatively uncontrolled growth, at least uncontrolled insofar as it is arising through competition between municipalities rather than as a result of proper planning.

I really want to suggest to you that in co-operation with your colleague, the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) and the other ministers concerned, you sit down and look at the proposals for an official plan for Ontario, not just for the Toronto-centred region but for the whole of Ontario, to begin to identify what is going on in the municipal arena and where growth and planning are the responsibility of the municipality and where they are the responsibility of the entire province.

As an aside I want to say I think the white paper that has been recently introduced by the minister's colleague on the Planning Act is a big step forward. It is at least saying responsibility for planning rests primarily at the municipal level. I think that will cause a considerable amount of respect to grow for municipal councils. It will finally get us away from the syndrome where municipal councils are just a step in the whole planning process and put us in a situation where local taxpayers take municipal elections very seriously and realize when they are electing their local council they are electing the people who will decide the future of their municipality.

That is a good thing, but I do not think it can be allowed to proceed unless there are fairly stringent guidelines and a reorganized system of conditional and unconditional—hopefully mostly unconditional—grants for municipalities so we get away from the competition for growth we have right now.

My second point relates to the matter of environmental control. I am concerned that the problems we have with waste disposal, both residential and industrial waste, have now been handed carte blanche to the municipalities. I do not believe the average municipality is capable of dealing with them. I do not believe the sort of changes we need in the way we handle waste materials are within the capability of any but the very largest municipalities. I have my doubts as to whether they are within the capability of those municipalities, because at the moment at least, there is no financial incentive to a municipal government when dealing with waste disposal. There is financial incentive to the province to deal with waste properly because we save money in the long run if we put in place the kind of recycling and resource recovery we should have.

Because it has been handed to the municipalities, I hope you will see it as resting in part within your portfolio and that you will interact with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) in order to ensure environmental matters get the priority they have to have in this great province of ours.

Having dealt with what I see as the overall problems that face us, I want to address a number of more specific problems municipalities, citizens and taxpayers have brought to your attention over the last years. I hope I can elicit from you a fairly clear response as to the direction the government is taking.

The first concern I have relates to the matter of local boards. At the moment we have a considerable number of local boards with responsibility for a great range of services. Most of those local boards are run by appointees rather than by people who are elected, although in some cases elected officials serve on local boards and that satisfies me. If I can take just two of the many examples available, the first is conservation authorities.

While a conservation authority is undoubtedly a very effective and necessary body for dealing with water resources, erosion and landfill problems within a watershed—and it is effective because it is removed from the electoral process—I want to suggest it is far less effective when it begins to compete with municipalities in the provision of recreational services of all kinds. I am very concerned that we seem to be getting into a situation where conservation authorities are setting up camp grounds and parks of various kinds that have nothing to do with conservation. They are there solely to satisfy the recreational needs of a region.

I hope you will take a look at that and make sure the conservation authorities don't become some kind of upper-tier parks committee. I hope you'll ensure those responsibilities for the provisions of parks and recreation are left fairly and squarely with elected bodies, while the water conservation functions are retained by the appointed bodies.

The second example I want to use is that of library boards. I know it is one about which there is a great deal of debate, but I cannot understand why library boards continue to occupy the special legislative status they presently have and why libraries and the conditional grants that go with them should not become part of the unconditional funding general responsibilities of a local council. A local council should decide whether or not it wants a library; if it decides it does, let it decide how that library should be run.

That is something I have fairly strong views about, and I hope the minister will respond fairly clearly as to the long-term direction his ministry is taking in this area.

Mr. Philip: The minister can make his views known in the justice committee on that private bill that's coming before us.

Mr. Isaacs: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Wells: What's that?

Mr. Isaacs: Another area that has been under review for at least the last two and a half years relates to the matter of licensing. We have heard promises or threats, depending on which side you are on, that the government is going to introduce legislation that takes away much of the clout a municipality now has in the area of licensing. More importantly, it will take away the additional source of revenue that licensing has become for many municipalities.

There are certainly two sides to this. But I hope the minister can tell us when this debate is going to enter the public arena, rather than being in the back rooms of either his ministry or the Ministry of the Attorney General, wherever it is at the moment, so we can come to a clear and concise description of what functions municipalities should have and what functions should either not happen at all or should be retained by the provincial government.

One specific area of licensing I know is of great concern to a number of municipalities is that of pinball machines. I hope the minister will tell us what plans he has for either permitting municipalities to deal with that, or of permitting some kind of provincial government control of that whole area.

The next question I have for the minister relates to matters under the building code. Very commonly, we are getting into situations now where municipalities are coming into problems as a result of their relatively weak enforcement of the building code. If municipalities were to enforce the building code as I believe they should, to ensure that every building in Ontario met 100 per cent with the standards laid down in the building code, then they would be facing tremendous expense. This expense would have to be met by the taxpayers of the entire municipality, because the municipal council has no way of recovering it either from builders or from those who are purchasing the buildings that are put up.

Given the programs we have had for provision of low-cost housing and given the needs that industry and commerce have for low-cost buildings at this time when land cost forms such a high percentage of the cost of new construction and of new homes and factories, I believe we have to move to a new system for ensuring that buildings meet the minimum requirements. I hope that the minister can enlighten us somewhat and provide, for the information of municipalities and purchasers of new buildings, information that the government is taking a look at this and is considering new ways of ensuring that buildings meet the standards so that municipalities don't get involved in horrendous costs and what could be long drawn out legal suits.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will the member move that we rise and report?

Mr. Isaacs: I will do that. I do have a few more minutes of remarks and I will proceed with those next day.

On motion by Mr. MacBeth, the committee of supply reported a certain resolution.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

DECLINING ENROLMENT

192. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry indicate what efforts beyond the funding of the Commission on Declining Enrolment it has undertaken to assist local school boards to deal with declining enrolment? Will the ministry indicate the cash value to local school boards of these efforts? Secondly, in view of the recent reports that the Premier has stated that the province has not lessened its commitment to education even though the proportion of the provincial budget allocated to education has declined from fiscal 1975-76 to fiscal 1979-80, would it be accurate to calculate the province's savings from declining enrolment by calculating what the province would have contributed had it maintained funding at the level existing in fiscal 1975-76 and subtracting the present level? If this is not the case, will the ministry indicate how much money the ministry has saved as a result of declining enrolment and what benefits accrue to local school boards as a result of declining enrolment? [Tabled May 17, 1979]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The method of financing school boards in Ontario reflects the ministry's efforts to assist local school boards to deal with declining enrolment. It includes special provisions to offset the high cost of operating both small schools and small school boards. The amounts provided increase automatically as enrolment decreases. All boards with a total elementary and secondary school enrolment of less than 4,000 pupils receive a weighting factor to offset the additional administrative costs experienced in the operation of such boards. All boards with small isolated schools receive a weighting factor to offset the additional administrative and instructional costs experienced in the operation of such schools.

In addition, all boards with an elementary or secondary school enrolment of less than 4,000 pupils that experienced a drop in enrolment between September 1977 and September 1978 in excess of the provincial average of 3.0 per cent elementary and 0.7 per cent secondary, receive a weighting factor to offset the fixed costs that cannot normally be reduced during the first year of the drop in enrolment. The total amount provided by the small schools and small school boards weighting factors in 1979 is approximately $7 million. Twenty-six elementary school boards and 17 secondary school boards receive assistance with respect to declines in 1979 with a total of approximately $500,000 being provided for 1979 (fiscal 1979-80).

(b) The ministry is unable to relate, with any precision, the proportion of the balance of $6.5 million that relates specifically to declining enrolment.

(c) It would not be accurate to calculate as savings to the province from declining enrolment the additional amount that the province would have contributed as transfer payments had it maintained in 1979-80 the 1975-76 proportion of the provincial budget allocated to education.

(d) Funding in 1979-80 takes into account current conditions for 1979 including increases in per pupil operating costs (8.47 per cent elementary and 7.71 per cent secondary), decline in enrolment (3.0 per cent elementary and 0.7 per cent secondary), and the growth in the assessment base upon which taxes are raised (3.2 per cent over 1978).

The difference between current funding which is based on the conditions identified above, and funding based on hypothetical conditions can not be considered as savings to the province.

SCHOOL BOARD REPORTS

203. Mr. Bounsall: Will the Ministry of Education clarify its position on access of members of the Legislature to the reports submitted to the ministry by elected local school boards? Can members of the Legislature and staffs have immediate access to these reports, particularly the annual June and

September board reports, required by the ministry? If for any reason the ministry imposes restrictions on access to the documents, will the ministry explain: (a) the reason for the restrictions; (b) the procedure for having these restrictions waived? [Tabled May 28, 1979]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The Ministry of Education honours all requests for access to information which it collects. However, in sharing information the ministry must ensure that there is no breach of trust.

To reflect this philosophy, the ministry has an understanding with school board officials, school principals and others who submit periodic reports in accordance with the Education Act, that we will release information only at the level of aggregation which will ensure that there is no breach of confidentiality. When the request is at the lowest level of collection, such as the record of an individual student or teacher, the authority of the person who supplied the information is a necessary prerequisite for the release of the information to any other party.

With regard to financial data, the Education Act, section 179(3), provides for access to a board's audited financial report at the board's office. The financial statements for a board involve more than 40 pages and the board's estimates are over 25 pages long. The copies received by the central office of the ministry are active working documents used to validate grants, develop the subsequent year's grants plan, et cetera. Any member of the Legislature can examine these documents, but arrangements should be made in advance to ensure that the specific items required are available at a predetermined location and time.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

TREASURY BILLS

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that the two opposition leaders have received their copies of my statement since mine just came to me. It is here and being distributed.

The province of Ontario is discontinuing its weekly sale of 91-day treasury bills in line with its reduced net cash requirements and improved cash flow outlook for the fiscal year 1979-80. The treasury bill program was started in 1971 to provide a flexible medium in the province's overall financing strategies. It has enabled Ontario to borrow for shorter periods at competitive rates of interest, to meet temporary financing requirements without resorting to the creation of long-term debt in the public market.

The program was suspended temporarily in 1974 and reactivated in July 1975. By March 31, 1976, Ontario's treasury bills had risen to $325 million outstanding, but by October 1976 this had been reduced to $130 million as the weekly tender had been lowered to $10 million. To provide the temporary financing for the six-month reduction of the retail sales tax in 1978, the weekly treasury bill program was increased to $25 million, and it again reached maximum outstandings of $325 million by July 19, 1978.

Thus, as noted, reduced net cash requirements and improved cash flow have enabled the province to reduce this part of Ontario's public debt. On April 24, 1979, the weekly tender of $25 million was reduced to $10 million. Effective June 13, 1979, the program is discontinued. All outstanding treasury bills will have matured by September 12, 1979.

Mr. Roy: You are trying to gain from correcting your own mistakes.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer fouled everything up six months ago.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Energy. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, when we were discussing Babcock and Wilcox boilers and my question as to why they were not bonded, the minister in his statement on May 25 said:

"Mr. Speaker, with respect to whether a performance bond should have been required, I am advised it is not the normal practice in the industry to require a performance bond from companies which build this type of sophisticated equipment, unlike the normal practice in the construction industry where a performance bond is required from the contractor."

How sophisticated a piece of equipment is a chimney at Wesleyville, which was not bonded and which has left Ontario with a bill of about $1.5 million or even $2 million or more because of the fact the company building it went bankrupt?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really don't know, Mr. Speaker. A chimney doesn't sound like a terribly sophisticated bit of machinery to me, although some industrial chimneys have a lot of rather sophisticated equipment as part of them with scrubbers and things like that. However, the real question is what Hydro's financial position will be as a result of the bankruptcy of the company, as I understand it. I expect to have detailed information on that.

I am aware that Hydro had undertaken to have the job completed by another company. They have not settled with the bankrupt company and I assume they would not pay for any work that has not been done. I will have more detail on that and, as soon as I have, I will convey it to the House.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, while the minister is checking on this, perhaps he will reflect on the statement made by Mr. Gordon of a bonding company which bonded other projects by Taylor Engineering, including one in Metropolitan Toronto, a $1.9 million contract. It says: "Poor Ontario Hydro. The job wasn't bonded and they are going to end up paying quite a bit."

Could the minister let us know what is going on at Ontario Hydro that they seem unable to perform even the most normal and routine business practices in a way that will protect the public interest? Could he report on precisely what the loss will be to the users of energy in Ontario as a consequence of this blunder?

Mr. Hennessy: Without the newspaper the Leader of the Opposition would be lost.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I indicated that I would do that. I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that in many cases some large companies which have a lot of construction, in effect, decide to self-insure themselves. I know that it is the case in the construction industry where, if a bond is required, everybody's bid is a little higher because they have to pay the bonding company.

I can understand the representative of one of the bonding companies saying it was unfortunate they weren't bonded because, obviously, the bonding company didn't get the premium on the bond. However, that is not to say that merely calling for bonds is an unnecessarily expensive practice.

Mr. S. Smith: What is it to say then? Hydro is bonding its own contractors. Is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I just point out that not everybody has bonds, even though in retrospect sometimes they may have wished they had.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister undertake to have Hydro's policy with regard to performance bonds tabled in the Legislature and made available to the public? Would he also undertake to publish details of all Hydro contracts that are not currently completed and that are worth more than a quarter of a million dollars, where no performance bond has in fact been required, with an explanation of why?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That question might properly go on the Order Paper. That would take some time to get.

Mr. Cassidy: We want an undertaking now.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: As the minister responsible for energy to the public of this province, will the minister inquire from Hydro why they are being so cavalier with the taxpayers' money and why they don't require standards from their contractors that any other contractor in this province involved in construction work requires, namely, a bond? Is he going to inquire for us why they do not protect the taxpayers' interests?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I said I would get the information I think the honourable member is asking for.

ACID RAIN

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of the Environment: Is the minister aware of a study in New York state regarding acid rain in the Adirondack region which indicates there can be harm to the drinking water as a consequence of leaching, not only from natural bedrock but also from metal piping in the distribution system?

In particular, is he aware of an article by LaBastille which suggests that even in copper distribution systems there can be a problem, not only from taste, but also from toxic metals that might be released from the soldering in the joints?

If he is aware of that, why did he write to the Toronto Star in April saying that as long as the system itself is made of copper there is no danger from acid water within the system itself?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of that particular study. There is some degree of uncertainty as to the effect of the joints as described. Perhaps on further reflection it could be safely assumed that statement is not a total reflection of the fact. It has a very minuscule effect; nevertheless, perhaps what the honourable member states is correct.

Mr. S. Smith: May I ask whether the minister intends to offer any advice to the areas particularly hit hard by acid rain? I think, for instance, of the cottage areas in Ontario where this is quite a problem. Will he be offering advice that these people flush their systems prior to using the drinking water? Will he be testing any of the drinking water for lead in particular and for copper to some extent? Will he be checking the municipal water supplies in cottage areas where people are on a municipal supply rather than on a well to be sure that the matter of acid in the water is being properly buffered and regulated so as to avoid a problem of this kind as has appeared in the Adirondacks?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would suspect that most people in the normal use of their system would likely flush it out in the spring for obvious reasons. The taste of water, if it were left there, would be fairly poor. Most of the time, of course, it is drained in the fall and very little water stays there because frost conditions would burst the pipes. It is obvious that for various reasons the system either is not in use in the wintertime or is flushed in the spring.

It would be an almost impossible job to notify all those cottagers. I think the fact that the issue is raised might be sufficient notice. I do not think I could say to the Leader of the Opposition that I could envision writing every cottage owner; it would be perhaps impossible. But the logic of his argument is fair, and I think people should use that caution, yes.

Ms. Bryden: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the minister if he received the telegram from the resources development committee notifying him that in drafting our report we had decided that acid rain is a national emergency and asking him to pass this on to the other environment ministers he was meeting with on the west coast. Did he receive that, has he passed this on and are they prepared to take any federal-provincial action?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that strays quite a way from the original question, Mr. Speaker; however, I am more than pleased to respond to the question. The Thursday of the conference was devoted to matters of environmental concerns, and the first paper was rescheduled at the request of Ontario so that acid rain would have the greatest prominence on the schedule. Canada presented the paper, and I had the pleasure to respond to that paper, I hope effectively, certainly at some length, because I feel Ontario does have the prime role to play in bringing the problem of acid rain to not only the citizens of Ontario but indeed all of Canada and more particularly all of the western hemisphere. It's that large a problem, as we all know.

The question, however, Mr. Speaker, was whether or not I brought the item of acid rain to the attention of the conference because of receiving the telegram. I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the honourable member, the telegram arrived very early Friday morning. I was pleased to be awakened about 6:30 a.m. to receive the telegram asking me to do what I had done at great length the day before.

Mr. Peterson: I would have liked to have been there to tell you in person.

Mr. B. Newman: Continuing on the problem of acid rain, can the minister assure us Ontario Hydro will not be contributing to the present problem of acid rain by insisting they do have scrubbers at the renovated or refurbished J. Clark Keith generating station in the city of Windsor, which will be burning coal?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can't answer that question directly, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to keep my answer short on this occasion because of the profound effect various coal generating stations will have on the acid rain problem. I am sure the member is as aware of the American policy on generating stations and the use of coal as I am. Although we contribute very little from that source here in Ontario relative to the American system, obviously we too must be concerned about our own stations.

I don't have the information on the Windsor station. I suspect it's a very small contributing factor. I have a little more information for instance, on Atikokan. I am sure when that station does become a fact of life and is generating power, considering the close-down of the mine that will accompany that event the total generation of sulphur dioxide to the atmosphere in that area will be much less than it is today.

I want to assure the member that wherever it's at all possible, we will make every effort to reduce the amount of SO<sub>2</sub> generated. However, I think it's always important to put it in context of the global scene. We have a huge problem on our hands and it will require the full support of the American government to control that particular problem.

I come back to the leader of his party's question and the importance to the Adirondacks. If perhaps the people of the Adirondacks area would negotiate very effectively with the people of the midwest, I think it's at that level we will get the most action because it will be people of the US speaking to people of the US. If they do, then I think we will perhaps have some effect on their attitude towards producing sulphur dioxide on a global basis. I really hope the people of upper New York state become very aggressive on this problem and support us, because I don't think there's any doubt that we are more than prepared to take full action on this very important subject.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't you know the people in the Adirondacks blame us for it?

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question also for the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware that on the weekend, the parents of children at the Hastings public school had to demonstrate to keep 2,4-D from being sprayed at the school? Is the minister aware that parents in the Northumberland-Newcastle school area protesting the spraying of 2,4-D have now collected 20 cases of children who have suffered sickness following the spray applications? Does the minister think he's doing an acceptable job when parents have to take to the streets to keep their children from being poisoned?

Mr. Havrot: What a stupid question.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think I will really have to ask the leader of the third party to document that a little more. I find that just a little difficult to believe and accept.

I was aware of the question the member asked of the Premier (Mr. Davis) when I was away and I am more than happy if I may, Mr. Speaker, to respond to that question at this time, as well as perhaps filling out some more details of the question asked today.

First of all, I will be pleased to send to the leader of the third party the information that we have from our pesticides advisory committee. I think if he will look at that information rather carefully he will see that in their very best judgement 2,4-D is not a carcinogen. I think that is an important point that must be made.

We have looked at the spraying on that particular site and, although the winds were rather high that day—and there are guidelines to indicate how spraying should be done—unless there is damage, they can't be prosecuted for not adhering to the guidelines. They can be prosecuted if there is evidence of damage because of inappropriate application of 2,4-D. This did not occur. We have had staff visit the site and there is good evidence that the dandelions in the yard are dying, but no evidence at all that any vegetation outside the yard is dying, so there are no grounds on which to base a court action.

Mr. McClellan: Your solicitude for the dandelions is touching.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have subsequently been at the school when spraying did take place, but now we come more particularly to the question as raised today, and the leader says there are 20 sick children because we failed to accept the responsibility. That is a gross misstatement, if I have ever heard one.

I raised this issue in one of the other papers at the recent conference at Kelowna and, without exception, every single province believes that 2,4-D is a product that should be on our markets. No question about it. There wasn't a single province which disagreed. The rules are that it should be applied properly and then it is a safe chemical for our society.

I think it is grossly unfair when the member will stand in this House and try to inflame people on chemicals where there is absolutely no foundation in fact. He has to take a bigger responsibility in informing people in this province of ours on the dangers and the benefits of chemicals and the statement he made today is a disgrace to him.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister, or the minister's advisory committee on pesticides, aware of the fact that both the BC Medical Association and the cancer assessment group of the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States have both concluded that 2,4-D is, in fact, carcinogenic—that is, that it causes cancer?

Is the minister also aware of the article that appeared in the respected journal Mutation Research on the toxicology of phenoxy acids other than 2,4,5-T which concludes, on the basis of evidence from 133 studies, that 2,4-D may very well cause both cancer and genetic damage?

Is the minister saying he is rejecting that particular evidence? What medical evaluation has the minister carried out on those school children who have, in fact, suffered health problems because of the spraying of schoolyards in Northumberland county? I will send this over to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I know this, that if I have to choose between the unscientific advice from my friend, the leader of the third party, and the scientific advice from the pesticides advisory committee, on which particular committee are some of the better scientists of Ontario, let me say, there is not much doubt in my mind whose advice I am going to take. It is going to be that of pesticides advisory committee.

I will be more than pleased to send to the member the full report on 2,4-D, and I could read for the record one small phrase: "Comment: 2,4-D has not been shown to be a carcinogen." The member should take that and try to put some perspective, some logic into his statement. I will let him read the whole thing.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Would the minister be prepared to issue a statement of some type requesting that such spraying not be done while the children are on the school grounds?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I have been asked this question many times. It would be the easiest thing in the world to say, "Yes, I think that is a great idea."

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you do it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But it has one very negative impact. It is very clear that all jurisdictions in Canada believe that 2,4-D, when properly applied, is a useful chemical for our society. There is no doubt about that; it is unanimous. The important phrase is "when properly applied." We have guidelines to indicate how 2,4-D and other chemicals should be applied—specifically 2,4-D. If I issue a statement today that it should not be used in schoolyards—

Mr. Sweeney: When the kids are there.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —when the kids are there, whenever—I take the responsibility away from the local board and the local people and set myself up as taking on that responsibility when it is clearly theirs.

Ms. Gigantes: The public health matters.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That in itself would not be so bad. But if one does not allow people to take responsible positions and make responsible decisions, one very soon finds they are not making any responsible decisions at all. I think it is absolutely important that those people who are running the school districts take on that responsibility.

An hon. member: Pontius Pilate.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As I said to the member for Beaches-Woodbine not too long ago, it is a great learning experience in our school system.

Mr. Warner: Hide behind the school board.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member for Kitchen-Wilmot is asking me to do something that is clearly within their jurisdiction. It is much more important that people learn to accept the responsibility they are given and act accordingly. That is the issue.

Mr. Wildman: Since the minister is so concerned about local autonomy, can he comment on his responsibility in relation to the use of 2,4-D by the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications? Especially since the members of the pesticides advisory committee testifying before the procedural affairs committee last fall, admitted that the studies in the United States and by the National Research Council did raise serious questions about 2,4-D. What about Tordon 101 that is used by the minister's own government?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I keep repeating one basic fact. I raised the issue in Kelowna to make sure there was no doubt about all other provinces in Canada accepting the material. They do. If it is improperly applied, then this ministry is more than prepared to prosecute those who harm vegetation other than their own. That is our responsibility. That is the position of leadership we will take.

Of course, we will take that responsibility; we are paid to. But that is quite a separate issue. If it is improperly applied, there is no doubt we should look after and prosecute those who have hurt someone else. We are out there to protect the innocent bystander. But we are not out there to interfere with the decision-making process that should occur at the local level.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Those same people are using it by the tens of gallons on their farms. One person said, "We protest it being used in our schoolyards, but please don't use my name because we use so much of it at home." What hypocrisy. I say, stand up and be counted. That is what is important on this issue. If one is going to use it on one's farm, if one is going to use it on one's lawn at home, then so be it and go from there.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McGuigan: Final supplementary: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of the Environment if he is aware of the great value of this chemical to agriculture. Farmers use it in a very different way from when it is being used in schoolyards in that when they spray it on corn to kill the broadleaf weeds it makes the corn brittle, and therefore they do not cultivate it for a day or two.

[2:30]

Does the minister not realize that when farmers use it they don't go into the fields for several days afterwards, but when it is being used in schoolyards, the children may be playing there within a matter of hours? Therefore, does the minister not think it would be prudent to ban the use of this material for schoolyards because it doesn't play such a great economic role when used there? We really won't suffer much if we have dandelions in our schoolyards.

Mr. McClellan: You have to understand their solicitude for dandelions.

Mr. McGuigan: Doesn't the minister see the difference between the agricultural use and the use in schoolyards?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Certainly, I see the difference between farm use of 2,4-D and what we would use on our lawns and gardens at home, or what we would use on the schoolyards. There is a great difference; there is no question about that. Surely to goodness the people of that particular school board or any other school board are as aware of that information as is the member and I.

Mr. Warner: They are not.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: They are using it on their farms and that is the very point I am making. They are very aware. They use far more of it, likely, than 98 per cent of the members of this House do. They are knowledgeable on it, and it is their decision.

Mr. Foulds: But their kids aren't, and the kids go to school.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I happen to choose not to use it on my lawn at home; that's my personal choice.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Fine. I think in this particular instance it's their personal choice whether they use it on their lawns at home or whether they use it on the schoolyards.

Mr. Wildman: Why use it on a Ministry of Transportation and Communications right of way then?

Mr. McClellan: Are you afraid to use it, Harry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Obviously, a concerned board would make sure it is applied late Friday or early Saturday so there would be an opportunity for that material to sink into the vegetation, do its job and have no harmful effects on the students when they return to school on Monday morning. That is so obvious that I think it hardly needs to be said by anyone who has that much knowledge of 2,4-D.

Mr. S. Smith: If the board is stupid, the kids suffer.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am sure that kind of logic is more than likely applied by the school boards. If it is not, I think it is awfully important that we realize it is their children they are subjecting to this material; not somebody else's, but their own children.

An hon. member: What an abdication of responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Surely members can accept the point of how important it is for people to understand the seriousness of the decisions they make on their own lives and for their own children. People can't always turn to government and say, "Excuse us from taking a responsible position."

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT OF HYDRO PROJECTS

Mr. Cassidy: I have another question for the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker. The government has assured us on many occasions that all future Hydro projects will be subjected to the full environmental assessment process under the new act. Can the minister comment on Ontario Hydro's brief to the Porter commission this April that the Environmental Protection Act should be amended to restrict the terms of environmental assessments on future Ontario Hydro projects? Which is government policy?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would like to take that as notice, Mr. Speaker, and consider it. It is a question I would like not to respond to today, but I will take it as notice.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the minister takes it as notice, what assurance can we have from him that the government policy of full environmental assessment on Hydro projects in the future will be maintained when this minister is not aware of the fact Hydro is trying to backtrack from that policy, and when the government itself has ignored the advice of the chairman of the environmental assessment steering committee who said there should, in fact, be a full assessment on the Darlington nuclear project?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think that is necessarily correct, but because of the full implications I would like to consider it, Mr. Speaker, and take it as notice.

Mr. J. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No. The minister has taken it as notice. There will be ample opportunity for supplementaries when we get a response.

TRILLIUM SCHOOL

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that the Trillium School at Milton for the learning disabled, if it opens in September—the minister might remember it was supposed to open in January—will only have sufficient staff to be able to handle 12 students, even though the need is for 100 or more? Can she also confirm that large numbers of students who are being approved by the local screening committees are being rejected by the provincial screening committee?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is incorrect. The Trillium School is designed for 40 students, and it will have 40 students in September. I am not aware that large numbers are being rejected by the provincial screening committee. That is not the information I had.

Mr. Sweeney: Can the minister tell us how many applicants are coming through the local screening committees and how many are being passed by the provincial screening committee?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The last figure I heard was that 193 students were proposed as potential candidates for the Trillium School by local school boards. I cannot give the member today an accurate figure of the number that have been assessed by the committee, but I will find that out.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain to the House today why the school will not be fully operational until September, as she now admits, when she said so categorically last December that the school would open and be fully operational on January 1? Could she explain the delay?

Mr. McClellan: Do you remember how adamant you were then? Do you remember how persistent you were? How outraged?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am interested to hear the adjectives and adverbs used by the members opposite. I have never seen such examples of outrage as their hypocritical facial expressions of outrage on many occasions, related to a number of issues, including education.

However, I did promise the school would be open. I was unable to keep the promise that it would be open on January 1. We have tried diligently to ensure that the school would be operational as rapidly as possible. It is important that the program begin, and that is exactly our objective. It is our intention and our aim, and it will happen, that there will be 40 students within the Trillium program—which will be the maximum for that program—in September of this year.

BURNING OF PCBs

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I did plan to ask this question of the Minister of the Environment but, since he is not here, I will ask it of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Since the current public inquiry into the burning of PCBs at the St. Lawrence Cement plant in Mississauga was explicitly established at the request of local residents to determine if this method of disposing of these highly toxic substances was both safe and effective in highly populated areas particularly, how can the government justify plans for a test burn of PCB materials at the plant prior to the completion of the inquiry, as is reported in the proceedings of the inquiry for April 26?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring it to the attention of the Minister of the Environment.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the monthly unemployment figures from Statistics Canada were released today, and I would inquire as to the current status of Ontario for the month of May. I would direct this question to the Treasurer.

Mr. Martel: That is too obvious. Did he give you that?

Mr. Cooke: Here's a setup.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, totally surprised as I am by the question and totally unprepared as I am—

An hon. member: What a waste of the question period.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the figures had gone the other way, you people would have asked the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would only point out that the members opposite never ask good-news questions. The fact that month after month—

Mr. Speaker: Would you like to answer it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm trying to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: The Treasurer is having as much trouble with the easy ones as he has with the hard ones.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My friend cannot tell the difference; so I am okay.

Mr. Foulds: No, neither can the Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact is that the unemployment rate in Ontario dropped to 6.4 per cent in the month of May. That is down from 7.3 per cent a year ago.

Mr. Foulds: Were they all occupied with the federal election?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We have 172,000 more employed people in Ontario today than we had a year ago.

(Applause.)

Mr. Bradley: The Tories are applauding high unemployment.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are actually 28,000 fewer unemployed people in Ontario now than there were a year ago, and 30,000 fewer than a month ago in Ontario. Quarter after quarter in the last year we've seen a decline in the unemployment figures in Ontario, especially for females and for youths. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that credit for that is due to this government.

Mr. Ramsay: Supplementary: How do the unemployment rates in Ontario stand in comparison to other provinces across the country?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Ontario average was 6.4 per cent and the Canadian average was 7.5 per cent.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: How does the Ontario Treasurer intend to create the 60,000 jobs that Charles Joseph Clark intends to eliminate?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Is the honourable gentleman assuming that governments should spend more than they need to? I've heard a great deal from that party over there about efficiency in government, and now that we have a party in Ottawa that is going to show some efficiency, let them not start becoming hypocritical.

Mr. Laughren: I have a supplementary of the Treasurer. It's a two- or three-part supplementary, if I might.

In view of the fact that unemployment among young people is still running at a very unacceptable level, as high as 13 or 14 per cent in Ontario, and particularly in view of the high unemployment rate in northern Ontario, will the minister assure us that he will not abandon any kind of program to stimulate jobs in northern Ontario and, in particular, will he promise not to do as his predecessor did—revise upward the definition of acceptable unemployment in Ontario?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: His predecessor didn't do that.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, he did. Darcy McKeough did.

Mr. Martel: McKeough sure did.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I lost the last part of the question to some degree. We've taken actions. As the member knows, there is some $70 million in this year's budget specifically aimed at youth employment programs—the Ontario Youth Employment Program and the Ontario Career Action Program and so on. These are having, I believe, phenomenal success and we're going to do all we can to maintain that success.

RAPE CRISIS CENTRES

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Provincial Secretary for Justice. In view of the fact that the Ontario Coalition of Rape Crisis Centres submitted a brief and met with him on April 26 and on May 10, 1979, informing him of its need for long-term funding to assist rape victims, why is it that he and his cabinet colleagues have refused this request for long-term funding?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted the honourable member has raised this question. It provides me with an opportunity to pay tribute to the Ontario Coalition of Rape Crisis Centres and to many who work with it on the consultation that finally resulted in the publication of the booklets, copies of which have been sent to all members. I'm in the process, as the member has mentioned, of having meetings with the Ontario coalition and, indeed, some of the groups from throughout the province. In fact, yesterday I met with a very important group from the Niagara area which is doing a remarkable job of responding to these needs.

The secretariat has made it quite clear that it is anxious to be helpful by way of followup. We are certainly making it quite clear that although their requests are for ongoing support we would prefer to deal with them on the basis of some short-term assistance that would help them to establish themselves within their respective communities and really seek community support as far as ongoing and long-term obligations are concerned. I'm looking forward to some further meetings with the Ontario coalition in an attempt to be helpful and provide them with some short-term—as I mention once again—approach that would indeed help them to get established within the particular communities in which they operate.

I point out to the honourable member, as I point out to other members of the House, this particular crisis and a number of crises are the concerns of very highly motivated people, and indeed I have suggested they may want to consider at the community level some co-ordination with respect to the use of telephone numbers. Indeed, some of the volunteers are available throughout the province in various communities for this particular approach. I'm of the opinion negotiations are still going on with the Ontario coalition.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: In view of the fact the Ontario coalition states in a letter, and I quote, that it has decided "your offer to fund short-term work projects would not only waste the time of the coalition and not meet the needs that are in our communities," why is it the minister spends taxpayers' dollars to print these books in double colours, et cetera, and then does not have enough money to assist the victims themselves? Does he expect the coalition centres just to give out handbooks to the victims when they go to these centres? Why is it he encourages the victims themselves to use the coalition centres and also encourages hospitals and police departments to use their services when he's not prepared to fund it? There is a big contradiction there.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right. Give the money to Gordon Walker for so-called victims of crime, but these are the real victims.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I hope I'm being fair. The honourable member is not trying to suggest the booklet isn't helpful and isn't positive.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a great tribute to the printer, but give some money to the crisis centre.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Don't be such a hypocrite, Stuart. It wasn't long ago when you were shouting about social spending.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The booklet is the result of the efforts of a lot of people including the coalition. Indeed, in many communities throughout the province the work of the centres is being conducted by volunteers and the community itself is supporting a particular effort. Indeed, there are many of these people who, perhaps if they had their choice, would rather have full-time staff and pay the salaries of full-time staff. We think there may be some advantage in emphasizing the role of the volunteer. I would rather carry on my discussions with the coalition in the hope we might reach some reasonable understanding and agreement.

Mr. S. Smith: They are the victims of terrible crime and you give them books.

Hon. Mr. Norton: How do we do that and follow your advice not to increase social spending a cent?

Mr. S. Smith: I never made that statement.

USE OF MATACIL

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources with regard to the spraying of Matacil. Can the minister confirm whether or not at 4 a.m. today they started spraying with Matacil in the Geraldton district? Can he outline for the House the justification for that spraying program in view of the question I asked his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), last week? Can he tell us whether or not any fishermen, campers or outdoorsmen in the area were warned the spraying was about to begin?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I had notice of the question the honourable member asked the Minister of the Environment last week and I have information on that today. I think the honourable member was equating the type of Matacil spraying done by the Ministry of Natural Resources with the methods used in New Brunswick. I just wanted to tell him the methods are quite different.

We use small aircraft which are used for agricultural spraying. We stay very close to the top of the forest and we have had great success—we figure about 80 per cent—in dealing with the spruce budworm. Of course, we're using this in much smaller acreages. I think we estimate something on the order of 40,000 acres in Ontario compared with about four million acres in New Brunswick. Those small planes are far easier to control. They fly more slowly and they do have much better control of spray deposit and drift.

As far as the environmental and public health risks are concerned, both solvents, which in our case are nonylphenol and a carrier which is called diluent 585, were investigated by Environment Canada, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the federal Department of Agriculture in 1978-79. In addition, environmental monitoring of Matacil spray programs for several years has demonstrated that the effects of Matacil on other organisms are minimal. We do not use diesel oil as a diluent.

The statement that Matacil was withdrawn in the United States by the Environmental Protection Agency in 1970 is misleading. Actually, I understand it was withdrawn at the manufacturers' request since it was being marketed for use in the spraying of cotton, I believe, and it was found that people just were not buying it because there were other products that worked better on cotton. However, I understand it is again being developed in the United States. It was used last year under an experimental permit from the EPA and will be used that way again this year.

The spray programs being conducted in Geraldton and Kirkland Lake have been reviewed and approved by the Ministry of the Environment. We are using Matacil over most of the area but not within 600 feet of any permanent water body. There we are using a bacterial insecticide, Thuricide, which is totally safe for other organisms. It is being used along all the major water courses in an area of approximately 10,000 acres. I may say it is not used exclusively because it is not as effective and it is about four times as expensive, but it is considered to be better near the water courses where fish might be affected in some way.

Finally, the environmental impact of the spraying is being monitored by an independent consultant so that we will have someone else looking over our shoulder in this operation.

Mr. Speaker: In keeping with our understanding that lengthy answers like that should be made by way of ministerial statements, we will add three more minutes to the question period.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: If it is so safe, why is it not being sprayed all over the place? Obviously the minister does have some reservations about it. Further, is the minister not aware that it is nonylphenol, which he admits we are using, that is the cause for concern in connection with Reyes syndrome and has caused such controversy in New Brunswick and Quebec? Even though it is being sprayed over a smaller area, has the ministry warned any of the trappers, hunters and fishermen who may be in the area that it is spraying? Will the minister table the federal and provincial evaluations which he says have taken place?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it wouldn't be difficult to obtain the evaluations, and I will get them. The Ministry of the Environment may well have them. My understanding is that we have indicated where the spraying is taking place in the area and when.

SUNDAY TRUCKING

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is the minister aware of the increased Sunday truck traffic carrying what I would consider non-perishable produce on highways 401 and 400? If so, what can be done to curtail this type of operation, which is contrary to the Lord's Day (Ontario) Act and which almost disappeared after the tragic Sunday accident south of Barrie a few years ago?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) has just advised me that some of these vehicles may have a federal government exemption. In any event, in view of the question that has been raised by the member for Simcoe East, I shall be happy to discuss it with the senior officials in the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. G. E. Smith: In view of the fact the minister did indicate that he hoped to add to his complement of OPP officers to enforce the Highway Traffic Act—and one would hope this would alleviate some of the abuse—could the minister indicate the ratio of the increased number of miles driven on provincial highways with the increased number over the past 10 years of OPP complement, or has a study of this nature been made?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't have all of the details, but I can advise the honourable member and members of the Legislature that during the past three years, or I should say more properly, from 1975 to 1978, according to information received from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications the motor vehicle miles travelled on the provincial highways increased by some three billion miles.

From the information I have to date it would appear, at least as far as the OPP miles travelled on the highways are concerned, that there was no increase whatsoever, but actually a decrease of some 10 million miles. This causes me some concern and it is certainly a matter we are reviewing very carefully because, as I have said in the past, and I repeat, the visibility of police officers on our highways is, in the view of our senior police advisers, a deterrent in relation to avoidance or disregard of the rules of the road and does have an impact on the number of accidents.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Attorney General recall the statement made by a colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communication, when he announced the regrettable statistics that brought on this flurry of additional action—a statement that indicated it was not attributable to speed or lack of policing of the speed limit, that in fact the additional money the Attorney General is expecting to spend on more police officers boils down simply to a revenue-producing operation that some of us know to our regret?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no recollection of any such statement having been made by the Minister of Transportation and Communications. He indicated to me a moment ago that he has no recollection of making any such statement.

Mr. S. Smith: He's not denying it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Within the last several days I have met with a number of senior police officers experienced in traffic matters and they are very strongly of the view that the visibility is important. As I indicated, and again I realize the Leader of the Opposition has difficulty taking this matter seriously—

Mr. S. Smith: I have difficulty taking you seriously.

Mr. Breithaupt: You don't even drive a car.

An hon. member: Same old arrogant AG.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—some of the figures we had obtained in relation to the increase in motor vehicle use on the highway and actually a decrease in the miles travelled by police vehicles, in the view of senior police officials, directly relate to the increase in accidents.

Mr. S. Smith: How come Jim Snow doesn't know that?

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I will, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

So this is a matter we are looking at. Obviously it is a case which will have to be established, I am sure, to the satisfaction of my colleagues before there will be any substantial increase in police resources.

There is no question but that with a very significant increase in the mileage travelled on the provincial highways, we are going to continue to have dramatic increases, I fear, if there is not increased police visibility. Whether the members opposite want to recognize it or not, it certainly is the view of police officials about this province that the matter of police visibility is a very important factor with respect to deterring disobedience of the rules of the road.

I would have thought that would have been reasonably clear to the members opposite, but if they really are interested in this issue, and I must admit I have some doubt in my own mind as to whether they are interested, I will be happy to provide them with additional information as it becomes available.

RAPE CASE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On May 28, the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) asked me about a rape case in Hamilton wherein certain members of a motorcycle gang are charged with numerous offences, including that of rape. This matter has been reviewed with the crown attorney in Hamilton and by senior officials of my ministry. I also have had an opportunity of reviewing the allegations and circumstances surrounding the case and an alleged bombing attempt. The Hamilton-Wentworth regional police are well aware of the situation and the crown witnesses who are to testify in this case have been given special police protection.

As I indicated earlier, it is obviously not in the interests of this protection to deal specifically with the steps that have been taken to protect the witnesses in question. I can say, however, that I have reviewed the police efforts and am satisfied that every reasonable effort has been made by the police in this regard.

As I indicated, the status of the case has been reviewed with the crown attorney and members of his staff in Hamilton. I can advise that the crown attorney's office will do its utmost to ensure the preliminary hearing at the end of this month proceeds and is concluded on schedule so that a trial date very early in the fall is possible. I will personally be monitoring this case to ensure there is no delay in this regard.

With respect to the member for Hamilton East's general question about instructions to police forces with respect to motorcycle gangs, I can advise that although it is quite apparent certain members of certain motorcycle gangs do act in concert in pursuing unlawful ends, every effort has been made by law enforcement personnel to control such groups.

During 1978, a total of 440 criminal charges were laid against 370 members of certain motorcycle gangs in Ontario. That number of charges has already been laid this year, indicating even stronger efforts are being made by the law enforcement authorities across this province.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: As the minister may recall, in placing the question I asked him about the spread of the use of bombing as a means of intimidation. It appeared to start on a large scale in New York state some 10 years ago and local police authorities tell me it has moved into Ontario. I asked the minister if he had looked into that aspect as well and if he had looked into the aspect of the transportation of drugs by some of the motorcycle gangs?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, these activities are being very carefully monitored by police forces across the province. In so far as the use of dynamite as an intimidating tactic is concerned, unfortunately this type of vicious criminal behaviour has been resorted to from time to time by the criminal elements in Ontario. But from the information I have obtained there has been no significant increase in the use of dynamite in this respect.

In so far as drugs are concerned, yes, the police officials are well aware that certain motorcycle gangs have for some time been involved in international drug traffic. Again this is something that is being carefully scrutinized and is a matter of continuing concern to the law enforcement agencies in this province.

LOTTERY LICENCES

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question of the Attorney General. I'd like to ask if the Attorney General was aware when his ministry expressed a negative opinion regarding the purpose for which a Burlington community group had held a lottery that this group was currently involved in a hearing before the OMB, and therefore any damaging remarks by his ministry could very likely be used against this group by their opponents later in the hearing? I'd like to ask was the minister aware there was a hearing before the OMB when they decided in favour of a developer's lawyer, who was also their opponent in the case?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm sorry, I'm not aware of this matter at all.

Mr. Cunningham: By way of supplementary: Recognizing that 20 per cent of all the lottery licences granted in the province are given for the purpose of benefiting a community, would the minister not realize that in openly expressing an opinion one way or the other he could be closing the door to further attempts by all community groups in Ontario to raise funds in support of various endeavours that may have to be financed, especially when going before the OMB or the Environmental Assessment Board?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If the member opposite would like to provide me with specific details of this particular service club or local charitable organization I will be happy to look into it, but if it's something that I was aware of earlier, I must admit I don't have any recollection of it at the present time.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Inasmuch as a group of concerned citizens opposing the advent of a McDonald's franchise in a residential area in Burlington was given a municipal licence by the city of Burlington to conduct a lottery to raise funds to conduct this defence and this intervention in front of the OMB, and to the extent that the lawyer for McDonald's told the lotteries branch about it, and to the extent that his ministry then advised that this was not a charitable purpose, would the minister please review that decision and recognize what a terrible precedent that might be for other citizens' groups across Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will review the matter, Mr. Speaker.

LANDFILL SITES

Mr. R. F. Johnston: A question of the Minister of the Environment: Would the minister confirm that his staff is preparing a list of landfill sites in Ontario which are currently accepting industrial waste; will he confirm that that list includes a number of sites which the ministry has not previously told us about; and when does he plan to present this list to us?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are preparing that list. Quite frankly, I had really hoped it would be here by now. Whether or not it will provide information that members haven't previously had, that is very difficult to say right now. We are more than prepared, however, to give the full list of all of the sites that we are aware of.

We are hopeful that if members, or any members of their communities, are aware of other sites that were maybe open 20, 30, 40 years ago and long closed, which we would have no record of and no reason to have a record of, they will tell us that as they compare our list with what they know. That's an open invitation to not only the members but all of the municipalities of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: Could the minister table with the Legislature statistics on where all the industrial waste covered by the waybill system has been disposed of since that system came into operation at the beginning of this year?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Would the member repeat the operative phrase, please?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: The statistics on where the industrial waste covered by the waybill system has gone since the system was introduced at the beginning of this year; would the minister table that with us?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We brought in the waybill system, and I still—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker—haven't heard whether the question is whether we will table the information that those waybills are provided us with. Yes? That will take a great deal of time. There are literally hundreds of thousands of transactions and up to 50 million gallons per year that that system will accommodate and account for, so the member can appreciate that isn't something we can gather quickly.

It is not a fully automated system as yet. We are going to a fully automated system and when we have it fully automated that kind of information will be much more readily available. We don't have it automated yet. We will supply as much information as we possibly can.

REPORTS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON COMPANY LAW

Mr. Breithaupt presented a report from the select committee on company law.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, this is the third report on the general insurance industry in Ontario. During our hearings, 139 persons gave evidence and information to the committee and there were 127 exhibits. The committee makes 145 recommendations in its review of the role and responsibilities of property and casualty insurance companies in Ontario. The report reviews the role and responsibilities of companies and all agents, adjusters, brokers and consultants. The operation of the superintendent of insurance's office is also reviewed and observations were made on the capacity to underwrite risks and on the availability of coverage and cost of personal lines of insurance.

In the interests of the consumer, the committee reported on plain language policy, on changes in the standard policy and in the application forms, and on a consumer information service. A particular area of interest was that of the qualifications and competence of company employees, agents, brokers and adjusters.

Finally, suggestions for loss prevention were made, as well as comments and recommendations on arbitration procedures, liability insurance and surety bonds. Copies of this report have been placed in the mail boxes of the members, and additionally have been sent to the press gallery and other interested persons.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breugh presented a report from the standing procedural affairs committee.

Mr. Breugh: This report is the first of a series of reports in our considerations about the committee system here at Queen's Park. It is presented for the information and consideration of committees, and we will subsequently be reporting in a more formal way.

MOTIONS

CITY OF OTTAWA BILL

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa, be withdrawn from the standing administration of justice committee and be referred to the standing general government committee for consideration following the completion of Bill 163.

Mr. Roy: I would just like to thank the House leader for this motion. I think it is of some importance because one of the items in Bill Pr9 is the bylaw requiring the filling of pits and quarries in the Ottawa area. Since we have already had one accident in that area, we are anxious to get on with this bill to give the city of Ottawa authorization to fill, or to obligate the owner to fill, the quarry. I would appreciate it if we can expedite this bill and have it heard before the end of this spring session.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to sit the afternoon of Wednesday, June 13, in addition to the regular sittings.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing social development committee be authorized to travel to Sudbury, Thunder Bay, Ottawa and Windsor on Wednesday, June 13, for the purpose of holding hearings on the active-treatment hospital bed closings, and that provisions of section 66 of the Legislative Assembly Act be not applicable.

Mr. Speaker: That means you don't get paid.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Germa moved first reading of Bill 125, An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act.

Motion agreed to.

[3:15]

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to prohibit mining activities in bodies of water that serve or are likely to serve as sources of community drinking water. The bill provides for the issuance of permits to authorize any mining activity that is in the public interest. Mining activity undertaken without the authority of a licence is constituted as an offence.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Charlton moved first reading of Bill 126, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend to persons who are employed as domestic servants the minimum standards of employment established by parts IV, V, VI, VII and VIII of the Employment Standards Act, 1974. This will give domestic servants the minimum coverage for hours of work, overtime, minimum wage, public holidays and vacations.

In addition, the bill amends section 40 of the act so that no employer shall terminate the employment of an employee who has been employed for three months or more with less than two weeks' notice.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill Pr8, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton. Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I want to advise honourable members that pursuant to standing order 28 the member for Downsview (Mr. di Santo) has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer given by the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) to his question concerning the auto pact, and this matter will be debated at 10:30 tonight.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 200, 201, 207, 208, 209, 210 and 211 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2833.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MINING TAX AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 52, An Act to amend the Mining Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, when last we were debating this bill it was May 1. Let me just remind the minister and the House of the position of this party as it relates to Bill 52, the Mining Tax Amendment Act. This party is unequivocally opposed to the reduction in the marginal rates of 35 per cent and 40 per cent as they relate to the application of this mining tax. It is a basic principle, adopted right across the country, that the province has a right to participate in the wealth produced by the exploitation of our natural resources. We are motivated by that principle.

There are several other reasons why we are opposed to this amendment to the Mining Tax Act, and I want to get into them, but let me first make another complaint about the whole application of the Mining Tax Act which has been raised in this House time after time; that is, the minister who is responsible for the collection of this tax. This is an out-and-out tax bill which rightly should belong with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck). Here, in fact, we have a conflict of interest in that the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) is the tax collector and he controls the mine assessors, who have a great impact on calculating what figures will be subject to tax.

The government has never been able to explain why this one tax bill, instead of being with the Ministry of Revenue like all the other tax bills, is with the Ministry of Natural Resources. No answer is forthcoming, so I make that complaint again.

We have arrived at the conclusion that we are opposed to this bill without the aid of an economic impact analysis being made or provided to the House. It is stated government policy that every piece of legislation will be accompanied by a statement of the economic impact it will have on the province, on our revenues and on taxation. The bill has come into the House without any information being provided by the minister. Consequently, we are at a loss to understand properly the entire impact of the legislation. Even in applying the tax, I know the government has difficulty in arriving at conclusions and figures. There is a lot of jiggery-pokery, a lot of estimates, to come to a figure for applying the tax rate even as it is.

The government has not got a fair reason, or else it has not presented evidence of its reasons, for the reduction of the mining tax. I would suggest they don't have a strong case to make; consequently they make no case at all. I have to accuse the minister of not taking into consideration the people of Ontario when he arbitrarily says 35 per cent tax rate is gone or 40 per cent tax rate is gone for the big corporations, and doesn't tell us what the impact is on the people of Ontario.

It is a very serious matter when the government is denying revenue to Ontario as a result of the exploitation of wealth, especially at this time when in every ministry—for medical services, education, social services—the government is strapped for money and is curtailing programs. Teachers are being laid off and there is a lot of havoc in the province; yet here is a source of revenue readily available and identifiable and the government is choosing not to collect it, the government is choosing to make the people of Ontario do without.

Another good and solid reason I have for arriving at my position is that I have a barometer that I use very steadily and which has served me very well over the years. If the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce takes a certain position, I know if I take the opposite position I am on the right track. It has never failed me in my 20 years.

Mr. Nixon: And if the Steelworkers take a position, that's your position too.

Mr. Germa: No; my position is that when the chamber of commerce in Sudbury takes a position—

Mr. Nixon: They're the perfect union. When Cliff Pilkey coughs, you get pneumonia.

Mr. Germa: When they take a position and there is no countervailing evidence—as I stated the government didn't present any countervailing evidence—I know pretty well, and it has served me well for over 20 years, that if my position is opposite to theirs I am on good, solid ground. That is the second reason this party and I are opposed to the resolution.

The evidence the chamber of commerce presented me with is contained in the following quotation from their newsletter of recent date, titled Update: "A letter from the Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce was sent recently to the Treasurer of Ontario, the Hon. Frank Miller, in response to the recent budget statement. The chamber applauded the minister's move to reduce the top marginal tax rate from 40 per cent to 30 per cent." So they are on record.

By the way, members should know that one of the biggest mining corporations in the world is resident in the city of Sudbury and it pays most of the bills for the chamber of commerce, because the assessment to belong to the chamber is based on the number of employees, the amount of revenue, consequently the chamber of commerce turns out to be just the mouth, the walkie-talkie for the International Nickel Company; which by the way is going to be one of the greatest benefactors if this bill was to pass in the Legislature.

Mr. Wildman: The chamber of Inco.

Mr. Germa: The chamber of Inco; yes.

So there's a second good reason I know I'm on solid ground opposing this bill.

The third reason is when I make a comparative analysis of what is going on in other jurisdictions. Ontario is not the only province, the only state collecting mining taxes or mining royalties. It's a fundamental principle right across the country and around the world that provinces have this right. This province is neglecting its right to gain revenue for the people of Ontario from the natural resources which are exploited.

Let's take a look at one province in comparison to the province of Ontario and see what the results were in the last fiscal year. In the 1977-78 period, Saskatchewan's production of mineral wealth—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Gas and oil?

Mr. Germa: Excluding gas and oil was $511 million, which was less than 20 per cent of Ontario's $2.7 billion. Here is one province with $511 million, and Ontario with $2.7 billion.

The province of Saskatchewan collected, in taxes and royalties for the people of Saskatchewan, $113,600,000, whereas the province of Ontario collected $39 million. The rate of return to the people of Saskatchewan from their natural resource exploitation was 15 times greater than the rate of return to the people of Ontario. That is justifiable reason for me to stand here and object to the government of Ontario giving further benefits, further gifts to the large mining companies.

This government says that kind of taxation is going to drive the mining industry out of the province of Saskatchewan and it will consequently be to our benefit.

Mr. Makarchuk: They will take the ore on their backs and walk out.

Mr. Germa: That's a reasonable proposal to make if there was any validity to the proposal; but let's make a comparative analysis of what has happened as far as investment is concerned between Saskatchewan and Ontario.

The estimated amount of development in Saskatchewan for the next fiscal year is $80 million, whereas Ontario's estimate of development in mining is only $25 million. Despite a rate of return 15 times greater than that of Ontario, Saskatchewan is getting three times more development dollars than we are in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Swart: They have good government.

Mr. Germa: I have to conclude that a tax rate does not necessarily drive development out of the province, providing the tax rate is levied equitably; and that is one of the weaknesses in the method of taxation in the province of Ontario.

I think it would be good if we were to know how Saskatchewan has been so successful in extracting large revenues from the mining companies at the same time as encouraging them to invest, and reinvest, and develop the province.

A statement by the Saskatchewan Minister of Mineral Resources on May 8, 1978, in Regina, cited the principles involved in applying their tax system, which is considerably different than the system used in Ontario. In Saskatchewan they use a system known as a rate of return, whereas the Ontario system, I think, could be identified as a flat-rated system. In other words, it is not as progressive and does not take into consideration the ability to pay to the same finite degree the system in Saskatchewan will do. I think all anybody demands of taxation is that it be applied equitably and that ability to pay be taken into consideration, be it an individual or be it a corporation. What I'm saying is you have to be fair when you're taxing people.

I will enunciate, from the minister's statement of May 8, 1978, in Regina the five guiding principles which go into the makeup of the structure of the Saskatchewan system.

The minister said the first principle is: "We feel the province should obtain at least a minimum return for the exploitation of its natural resources." There is no one in this House who will deny that is a good starting point; the people in the province wherein the resource is located have a right to demand a fair share of the return.

The second principle is: "The producer should retain sufficient revenues to cover his operating expenses and to provide a fair return on his capital investment relative to the risks involved, but it is our view that the major portion of the remaining net income should accrue to the owners of the resources." The owners of the resources are the people of Ontario. Once a fair rate of return has been provided to the mining company the rest, regardless of how large it is, belongs to the owner, the people of Ontario. That is the second guiding principle. I'm sure no one here will deny that principle. It's unanimous, Mr. Speaker.

The third principle the government of Saskatchewan applied is: "The government recognizes the structure of this system should reflect the particular economic characteristics of each mineral industry." The graduated form of the taxation is such that it takes that proviso into consideration.

The fourth major consideration is: "The royalty and tax system should be consistent with the province's policies for developing that particular resource." The tax system also gives an incentive to the mining companies to follow the route the government, in its wisdom or lack of, chooses to go.

The fifth principle is: "The endeavour to discuss any new tax or royalty structure with industry before reaching a decision." This government is very weak in that department in that they don't forewarn or give notice of their intent to change any tax system, or anything in fact. It's the old arrogance of this government which has been too long in office. The minister did not even see fit to supply this House with an economic impact analysis. If they're treating everybody outside the House the way they're treating us in this House, no wonder those people get into trouble so often.

Those are the guiding principles Saskatchewan uses. I'd like to just put on the record a few of the details of how the Saskatchewan rate of return system works.

The system is not unique to Saskatchewan. There are other corners of the world that also use it. South Africa has a related, though dissimilar, system. New Guinea has a rate-of-return system, Manitoba has a rate-of-return system. We have to recognize there are various differences between all of these systems, but the basic principle underlying the tax system in those four jurisdictions is consistent with the principles which I took from the speech of the Minister of Mineral Resources for Saskatchewan.

The system in that province tells me that royalties are levied on the mine in two forms; a basic royalty which represent three per cent of the gross value of sales each year, and the second portion of the tax system is the graduated royalty on operating profits payable each year and determined by the following method:

If the rate of return on the profit invested is less than 15 per cent there is no tax applicable, so the first 15 per cent of profit on invested capital is free. Between 15 and 25 per cent, 15 per cent is charged on the profit. If the rate of return is between 25 and 45 per cent, there is a 30 per cent tax assessment. If the rate of return is 45 per cent and above, then a 50 per cent tax applies at that rate. I would suggest to the minister that that is where the revenue is derived.

A person who is making 45 per cent or more on his invested capital has no right to keep that kind of profit. The profits are exorbitant and the tax system will trigger in to ensure that the people of the province concerned will share from that largesse.

This form of taxation also has a secondary beneficial effect. It has a good economic effect, but I think it would address itself to what the problem in the province of Ontario is now, and that is flight of capital. Capital generated in the province of Ontario is not being reinvested by the mining companies. They're galloping off with it. The minister knows where the International Nickel Company has taken money from the Sudbury basin and dumped $250 million down into New Caledonia. They've taken another $100 million and dumped it down into Guatemala.

Under a tax system as I recited, a rate-of-return system, there is incentive for the mining companies to reinvest, because the re-investment would have the effect of reducing their tax load. But the more the mining companies can let their plant run down under the present system the higher is the rate of return, and that is their incentive. I suggest that we have to deal, one way or the other, with mining companies generating great pools of wealth in the province of Ontario and removing that wealth to some other jurisdiction to the loss of all of us in the province of Ontario.

Some people say that would be too much of an incentive and that the mining companies would over-capitalize. I don't see any real entrepreneur trying to invest money in a plant that he doesn't need. I would say that their argument is fallacious.

That's my position on this bill. I hope the minister is listening. I hope he does respond and maybe deal with some of the suggestions I've made, and tell me why I'm wrong and why we don't demand our fair share of the wealth produced from the mining industry in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: We don't have many mines in my constituency, but I do have an opinion on the matter before us today. I've been listening to the member for Sudbury with a great deal of attention and I would think it would concern him, as it does me, that we have not had a major mining enterprise open up in this province for many years. It is probably an oversimplification to say so, but frankly I believe this is largely because the former Treasurer, John White, in changing the Mining Tax Act about seven years ago made a substantial bollix of those changes. He somehow got the confidence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) and went forward with a number of programs, many of which we are still trying to repair. I don't want to refer to them in detail, but the purchase of large-scale land holdings for new cities is just the beginning of it.

I well recall his changes in the Mining Tax Act at that time; which really must have paralleled to a great degree the thinking of the honourable member for Sudbury who has just spoken: "Let's soak it out of them; they are our resources, let's get the money." Somehow or other, in the mining industry this doesn't work. The mines are not developed by the membership of the Steelworkers or the mine workers or CUPE or anybody else. They may do the work, but unless there is some entrepreneur and investor to actually invest the money and take the risk it doesn't happen and there are no jobs for those people; there are no revenues for the government of the province for us to suggest how they spend or not spend.

I would suggest if Saskatchewan finds itself in such an advantageous position at this time it is because of that great Premier, Ross Thatcher, one of the greatest Liberals of them all, who in his approach to a situation such as this didn't listen to this kind of soft-headed socialist argument.

Mr. Swart: He got defeated.

Mr. Nixon: All right, he got defeated; and the socialists out there now are reaping the benefits of his foresight. If they continue to tax as they are, I will tell the member opposite, those benefits will soon disappear.

We had a socialist Treasurer here, John White, who is no longer a member. He is teaching economics or something like that, and I am sure he is contributing to the community in his own way, not the least by paying income tax. That is fine. If he were here I know he could defend himself in no uncertain terms. As a matter of fact it is a bit of a pleasure to argue against him when he is not here, but I thought at the time, and certainly I believe now, his changes in the Mining Tax Act were disastrous. They, as much as anything else, simply drew a line to further mining development here.

I have listened to what the honourable member for Sudbury has said. As I look on page 18 of the budget paper, table C-2, it says mining tax revenues are going to go from $41 million this year to an estimated $50 million next year. Maybe they should go to $150 million, but they are going up. I don't see that as a dramatic giveaway, although maybe there will be.

I have always felt, and I am not in a position to speak for the party but I am certainly speaking as a Liberal in this connection, that this is one area where giving incentives to the entrepreneur means almost everything.

The NDP would like the government to take over the resources. They would like the government to take over the responsibility for prospecting and finding the resources; they would like the government to take over the financial responsibility for developing them; and of course it goes with it, to reap all the profits associated. But wherever that has been tried it has been largely an uneconomic fiasco. We are a free enterprise province and I am very glad of that. I would dread the day when the NDP nationalizing or provincializing policies would become the policy of the government, and I will do everything I can to stop it.

I really believe that in this area you have got to encourage the entrepreneurs. If the NDP thinks it is an undue encouragement to raise their taxes, as I have indicated from $41 million to $50 million, I find that unreasonable. We are going to support the tax; and my colleague has already indicated that in the first half of this debate which took place some weeks ago.

There is one other matter in connection with the principle of the bill that I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker. On page 2410 of Hansard dated May 31, 1979, the following information is included in the answer to a question. This has to do with public opinion polls, and it says the Ministry of Natural Resources commissioned a public opinion poll of the Canadian Gallup Poll Limited, costing $19,525, on the following:

"Public Awareness Study of the Mining Industry in Ontario.

"To determine the awareness of, and attitudes towards, the development of Ontario's mineral resources and towards the direction and nature of government programs which affect that development."

I would suggest that this is another instance where the results of a poll would be extremely valuable and useful if made available to all members of the House.

The Premier's reasons for not making the results of these polls available simply do not hold water when we come to specific areas. The view from the socialists has already been expressed as to how these resources should be taxed and managed. I have expressed a personal view which is not too far away from the view expressed previously by our official critic, who is now on his honeymoon in the Emerald Isle.

It would be extremely valuable if we were to know what that $20,000 poll told the minister and the people sitting under the gallery who have assisted him in establishing policy and drawing this legislation. Do the people think we should be taxing these resources more? Do the people think, as investors themselves, that they would like a chance to keep a few more bucks? Do they think, as free enterprisers might, that as entrepreneurs or prospective entrepreneurs they would like to do something to profit by this themselves as well as have an opportunity in new mines to have a good-paying job in the north?

I say to the minister, on the principle of this bill, that this is the sort of information which should have accompanied the introduction of the bill with the compendium of information required under our rules. I say that most sincerely. I would expect the minister, being a senior cabinet minister and a person well known for his independence, to indicate that this information would be made available to us. In that way, it may well be that the information from other opinion polls that have been conducted at public expense would also be laid on the table so that all honourable members—not just the members of the government—would see the view of the taxpaying community in Ontario and we would have the advantage of that in reflecting policy matters that come before us. It is time the government policy was changed so that we could have the advantage of that information.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on the bill, having our party's position ably put forward by the member for Nickel Belt and the member for Sudbury. But the fallacious statements of the previous speaker have caused me to rise to my feet.

I would like to point out to him that under the benighted leadership of the former Premier of Saskatchewan, Ross Thatcher, the people of that province only had five per cent of their provincial budget coming in from taxation on the resource industry—a piddling five per cent. It was more than we get in Ontario, but it was still minimal. When the Blakeney government came to power in Saskatchewan, they set a target which they have achieved, of getting 20 to 25 per cent of the provincial budget for the people of Saskatchewan from their natural resources, from their rights.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has said my statements were fallacious. If he will examine them carefully, he will see that I indicated the policy of the previous Liberal government in Saskatchewan was to stimulate mining investment and development—

Mr. Foulds: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it did, because the revenue—

Mr. Foulds: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Nixon: The honourable member said they were fallacious. I am simply indicating that they were not fallacious; they were correct. The policy was stimulative, and that is what we want to do in this province.

Mr. Foulds: I think that is what the Speaker would call a matter of opinion as opposed to a point of order. I repeat and stand by my original statement. I want to point out that since the present Blakeney NDP government has been in power in Saskatchewan there have been more mining ventures and explorations going on there than in practically any other province at the present time, with a much smaller resource base. There are, in fact, 186 active explorations and mining ventures going on in Saskatchewan. That is in spite of the allegations by the Liberal/Conservative Party of Ontario that the tax structure—

Mr. Makarchuk: The Sacred Party of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: —an NDP government would implement would discourage exploration and development. In fact, we have got a fair return in Saskatchewan on behalf of the people, and we have encouraged exploration and development in a way that hasn't happened in Ontario. So how does one explain that? It can't be explained by the tax structure.

My colleague from Sudbury has pointed out they have devised a very enlightened kind of ratio taxation in the resource sector in Saskatchewan, so that as the profitability increases the rate of taxation increases. When international conditions are such that the profitability genuinely declines, or there is reinvestment, then the rate of taxation declines. But the mining companies know, and they know for a 20-year period if they have decent forecasters, what the rate of taxation is going to be. And it's built into a formula that is fair, as my colleague pointed out, and one they all know they have to live by.

When a piece of legislation like this comes before this House, I have to ask three fundamental questions. One is: who does it benefit? And who does this tax benefit? It doesn't benefit the small entrepreneur; it doesn't benefit the guy who wants to go out and explore; it doesn't benefit the old-fashioned prospector; it doesn't benefit a small new consortium of entrepreneurs; it benefits five major corporations in this province, and that's all. It benefits Inco; it benefits Falconbridge; it benefits Texasgulf; it benefits Denison, and it benefits Rio Algom. It does not, let me repeat, it does not encourage new mining ventures.

We know what Inco does with its investment. It doesn't invest in this province; it has a deliberate policy of not investing in Ontario. It deliberately uses the profits it generates in this province, and has done for 60-odd years, to invest in foreign sources to exploit the labour force over there. It deliberately does not use the revenues it generates in Ontario for Ontario people to develop Canadian industry. That is scandalous, and the changes this minister is bringing in will simply accelerate that. That's one of the reasons why I have to oppose it so strongly.

Second, when a measure like this comes in I have to ask: who has to pay to pick up the slack? The people who have to pay to pick up the slack are the people who pay OHIP premiums and people who pay ordinary sales tax. The government has to get the tax from somewhere, and because we get so little—

Mr. Nixon: The change means $9 million more, not $9 million less.

Mr. Foulds: —from the resource sector, we are over-burdened as a population with taxation in other areas. It is a deliberate policy of this government and of their Liberal coalition friends to aid and abet that.

This government and its Liberal coalition friends keep crying about how we have to have restraint. We have to have restraints in hospital beds, we have to have restraints in school classes, we have to have restraints in social services. We even have to have restraints in this minister's own ministry, so we don't have adequate conservation officers and we don't have an adequate regeneration program because this government refuses to get the revenue it should be rightfully entitled to.

And what do we do? We lessen this ministry's own taxation revenues.

Mr. Makarchuk: They are a bunch of sell-out artists, that's what they are.

Mr. Swart: In bed with their corporate friends.

Mr. Foulds: I say to you that that is scandalous and shameful because, if anything, the Ministry of Natural Resources should be at least a self-sufficient ministry, if not a profitable one.

Mr. Nixon: Revenue is going up by $9 million.

Mr. Foulds: It is, in my view, the second most powerful and important ministry in the government because aside from Treasury it is the only ministry that has taxation powers, and it does not use those taxation powers to the benefit of the people of Ontario.

So, for three basic reasons I have to oppose this tax: It does not do what the minister and the Treasurer say it will do, or that the apologist for the Liberal Party says it will do. It does not encourage new exploration. The people of Ontario, through their OHIP premiums, through the sales tax and other revenues of taxation levied on them, have to pick up the slack. In other words, the ordinary people of this province have to carry the major mining corporations on their backs. Third, those major mining corporations that I enunciated, Inco, Falconbridge, Texasgulf, Denison and Rio Algom, get enough breaks right now, and we in this party cannot support this tax.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if our system of taxation in the resource industry, such as outlined by my friend from Sudbury, was similar to that implemented in Saskatchewan, we would have every bit as much exploration as Saskatchewan has if there was a proper incentive program and a proper participation program by the government in that exploration. We would not frighten away investment. Do you want to know why? Because Ontario is a heck of a lot better place to invest, has a heck of a lot better climate and better work force and is a heck of a lot more stable than Guatemala or Indonesia or the Latin American countries. Yet, most of those major corporations are investing in those other areas where conditions aren't nearly as favourable as they are here in Canada.

So I am not pessimistic, as are the Conservatives and the Liberals, about the future of mining in Ontario. I am optimistic because there are a lot of natural resources in this province that have not yet been tapped, but neither the Conservative government nor their Liberal coalition partners have come up with exciting new ways of encouraging exploration. They can only fall back on this tired remedy of giving to the five major mining companies even more than they have now.

Mr. Bolan: I would like to make one or two comments on the subject of this piece of legislation. I agree heartily with the remarks made by my colleague, particularly when he addresses the minister on the question of the Canada Gallup Poll Limited and the little report they came out with. I would presume that this report was some kind of a foundation upon which policies have been based. I also suspect it is for other reasons.

Aside from that, I have another question for the minister. I presume that when he stands up to make a statement later on, when we have finished discussing and presenting our views on this bill, he will kindly tell us whether or not his ministry—I am not only dealing with mines but with other areas of his ministry—is conducting other polls right now to find out what is going on in various parts of the province as they relate to natural resources. What other areas of natural resources are being considered in terms of taxation? Of course, this legislation relates to mining and that is the principle of the bill, so specifically dealing with mining, I presume that the minister will be able to tell us later on this afternoon whether or not there are other polls being conducted. If there are, why is it that he would not make those available for all of us to see, so we may be able to have the benefit of the collective wisdom of those who have responded to them?

As far as the mining industry in this province is concerned, I think it is right to say there has not been a major discovery in this province since Texasgulf. That was the last major discovery and there is a reason for that: we have scared off every investor in the province. There is no question about that. There are other places they can go with their funds to invest in the mining industry.

One of the reasons why they have not been able to do anything in this province is because they have been overtaxed. I have no qualms of conscience whatever in saying that the mining industries in this province has been overtaxed. That is one of the reasons there are no major investors in this province today in the mining industry.

My friend from Port Arthur mentioned they are running off to Guatemala and they are running off here and they are running off there. Of course they are, for good reason: because the economic climate is better there than it is here and they are being scared off here by the high taxes.

Mr. Makarchuk: Cheap labour: four cents an hour.

Mr. Philip: They also have a fascist government there. Ross Thatcher understood that.

Mr. Bolan: So I say to the minister that we will support the bill, but I do hope when he replies to this House this afternoon he addresses himself to the question posed by my colleague with respect to his secret polls.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I am delighted to deal with the last matter about polls. I hate to disappoint my friends opposite, but the results of that poll have been available in the mining library since we got them. I think that was about the middle of April. They were circulated among the mining association members who wanted them. We had a number of people write in and we sent copies.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier said they could not be made public.

Mr. Eaton: The member's research office is not doing a very good job.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I guess we should have sent a copy to every member. I am not sure how many copies we have left but I will see that both the honourable members have copies, and if there are any others who would like a copy, I would be glad to send them.

Mr. Nixon: That is a great breakthrough. I hope some of the minister's colleagues will follow that example.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We are speaking about the mining tax and the mining poll today and I can only speak for myself.

Mr. Nixon: But you are a senior member; they all look to you for guidance.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was very interested in some of the things the member for Sudbury said, both previously and today—I am sorry he is out of the House at the moment, but no doubt he and the member for Port Arthur will be back shortly—particularly the question about revenue.

I was interested in the member for Nickel Belt's previous comment in comparison to Saskatchewan: "In 1977, with the existing tax structure on the mining industry, out of $2.7 billion worth of production, Ontario received $39 million. That includes the corporation income tax on the mining industry and that is a return of a little less than 1.5 per cent of the value of production. In Saskatchewan, with only half a billion dollars—actually $511 million—worth of production, they received $113 million worth of revenue on metallic and non-metallic minerals. That is a 22.3 per cent return on the value of production. So there is a big difference between what we realize from our resources and what our sister province of Saskatchewan receives."

I just want to point out—and I checked this again—that does include oil and gas revenues and he is really comparing oranges with apples and not making a valid comparison.

Mr. Germa: Why? It is a natural resource.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Let me speak of the great things about public ownership and public management in Saskatchewan. I just happen to have the figures for the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, which I understand cost the taxpayers about $510 million. The income for the year ended June 30, 1978, was $10.4 million, or a 2.03 per cent return on investment. I must say only a government would operate on that kind of basis.

Let me point out one other thing again in connection with this bill, which was indicated earlier and I think indicated by the Treasurer in his remarks on budget night. That is that while the mining tax top brackets will disappear—the two highest brackets—at the same time we will be reducing the processing allowances. The processing allowance for refining will be reduced from 30 to 25 per cent, and the processing allowance for semi-fabricating from 35 to 30 per cent to reduce any benefits in the event of another boom year like 1974-75.

I might say the effect of this will be primarily on the larger corporations with the higher profits, rather than on the smaller ones. The smaller ones, of course, will be receiving that increase of $150,000, as was indicated in the previous statement.

I would like to be brief, but I have made a couple of other notes. In connection with an economic impact statement; it has never been policy for the budget measures announced by the Treasurer on budget night having to do with tax changes to be accompanied by or preceded by an economic impact statement. I think a number of the matters referred to by the member for Sudbury were covered in the budget statement made by the Treasurer on budget night.

As I have said, there are many differences in the way the provinces deal with resources. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk indicated in perhaps an accurate way that certainly the tax policies we have had in place in recent years have not encouraged exploitation and development, because there hasn't been that much of it. There are a number of factors that will encourage or discourage exploitation and development. People will not explore unless there is a likelihood of development, and people will not develop unless they can get an adequate return on their investment. There is no argument about that.

There is a very significant difference between Ontario and Saskatchewan, for instance, in dealing with land tenure. We have mining tax, while they have royalties, but in effect the result is the same. The government is getting a return for the people of the province on the exploitation of public resources.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to know the Liberal Party will be supporting this measure and I would hope we might have second reading and go on to third reading perhaps today.

TREES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say that we will be supporting this amendment. It is my understanding that this relates to section 8 of the bill which, under the bill that was originally submitted, gave the minister power to make regulations. We had already submitted an amendment to withdraw that power from him; as this is related to that, therefore we will support this amendment.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, I had before you an amendment that would have done, in effect, the same thing as the amendment that the minister has put forward. The reasoning for the deletion of that particular clause is that, since municipalities which have passed bylaws restricting the cutting of trees may under section 7(b)(1), which I believe is on page four of the bill, authorize minor exceptions to the application of such bylaws, there really is no need to create an exception to a bylaw in any other case provided for in the regulations and, therefore, there is no need to define regulations on page one of the bill. As such, we will be supporting the deletion.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Auld moves that clause (d) of section 1 of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment on section 2.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Before we get there, I believe the member for Nipissing has a motion to make.

Mr. Bolan: There is a motion to add a new section, section 1(a) to the bill. This is done in conjunction with the proposed amendment to the minister's amendment, and basically what this does is to change the penalty section, which in the original bill submitted was for $25. What we propose to do is to change it to be not less than $500 and not more than $1,000. I understand there is an amendment to section 3 before the House, an amendment put forward by the minister, which would change the penalty section from $25 to $50. My amendment would be applicable to that as well, so that basically it would be an amendment to change the fine of not more than $50 in the minister's new section 3 to a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $1,000.

The reasoning behind this change is that until I saw the minister's amendment to section 3 today, which changes it to $50, the fine of $25 has been unchanged since 1883, and basically it provides to increase the maximum fine for anyone injuring or destroying a tree growing for the purposes of shade or ornament on a boundary line.

I realize that the provision for a minimum fine is, according to my amendment, for not less than $500. It is true that under the new Provincial Offences Act, section 60(2), a court may, where exceptional circumstances exist so that to impose the minimum fine would be unduly oppressive or otherwise not in the interests of justice, impose a fine less than the minimum. The inclusion of a minimum fine should guide the court as to the seriousness in which a breach of the section should be regarded.

There is still power within the court to take into consideration all of the circumstances which surround presumably the commission of the offence, presumably the person committing the offence, and the court does have jurisdiction. The court does have the power to use its discretion to make it less than the minimum fine of $500. That is the amendment which I propose to make to that.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bolan moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section: "1(a). Section 3 of the said act is amended by striking out the words 'not more than $25' in the seventh line and inserting in lieu thereof 'not less than $500 and not more than $1,000.'

Mr. Swart: I rise a little surprised because the minister didn't rise first to move his amendment that applied to exactly the same section. However, in view of the fact that the member for Nipissing now has the motion before us, I am going to speak in support of the motion of the member for Nipissing.

I think the argument put forward by him that the $25 penalty, which was in the original act and had been there, I guess, for close to 70 to 80 years, would certainly be represented today by a minimum fine of $500, or something of that nature. The facts are that a $50 fine, as proposed in the amendment by the minister, is inadequate as a penalty for a person who cuts down a tree which is on a boundary line between him and his neighbour. Today, if one wants to get a tree of good size planted in one's yard it is going to cost at least $250. If one buys a lot with a good-sized tree on it, it is going to cost $1,000 extra for that lot.

It seems to me the penalty here should be adequate to meet the circumstances; therefore, we will be supporting the amendment put forward by the member for Nipissing.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, the reason I had not moved my amendment was that I thought the honourable member had an amendment that would have preceded this section. But to comment on the amendment put forward by the member for Nipissing, first of all, I am informed that there has been only one prosecution under this section of that act of which we are aware. The reason I was going to propose it be raised to $50 is that $25 did not seem like very much. I have some hesitation, though, in endorsing $1,000 and $500, because the kind of offence involved here—tying one's horse to a neighbour's tree, for instance—is not included in section 3 of the act.

In case everybody does not have a copy of the act in front of them, section 3 currently reads: "Every person who ties or fastens any animal to or injures or destroys any tree growing for the purposes of shade or ornament upon a boundary line between lands or who suffers or permits any animal in his charge to injure or destroy or who trims, cuts down or removes any such tree without the consent of the owners thereof is guilty of an offence and on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $25."

It would seem to me, with the kind of penalty suggested by the honourable member, both minimum and maximum, that there would be quite an encouragement for frivolous or acrimonious charges to be laid if somebody's horse or cow stuck its neck over the fence and chewed some branches or leaves off a nearby tree.

Mr. Riddell: You'd have to sell the horse to pay the fine.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It would have to be a pretty good horse, by the time one paid the lawyer as well.

Mr. Martel: Or you should train your horse.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps $50 is not enough, but I would think $100 as a maximum would be a pretty substantial penalty. When we get to the other penalties which have to do with what I think are more serious offences, I am in agreement with an increase. But, I would hope we would not go to that extreme for this particular offence, because I can see the possibility of frivolous suits.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to make three points on what the minister has mentioned.

First of all, dealing with the minimum of $500, one of the reasons there have not been many prosecutions is the cost of the prosecution itself. Many of these townships or towns which would pass bylaws or have jurisdiction over, shall we say, the policing of the act, would have to go out and hire a local lawyer to go ahead with the prosecution. Many of them do not have their own solicitor. Or if they do have a town solicitor or a township solicitor, he is not on a permanent basis but rather a pay-as-you-work service. With the prices lawyers charge today, it is very difficult to see a fee for a prosecution of under $250. That certainly is my own opinion and, I might add, my own experience as a lawyer who has prosecuted these matters.

Again, probably one of the reasons we have not had very many prosecutions is—and, I hate to use the expression—that there was no incentive because of the cost involved. The cost would be greater than the fine that was collected.

The escape hatch on that, as I mentioned earlier, is under the provisions of the new Provincial Offences Act. Presumably, in arriving at a sentence the judge would look at all the circumstances and facts, and he would consider the seriousness and extent of the damage. If it is something which is nominal, it would appear to me he would consider this in invoking section 60(2) of the act.

Presumably this is a very important act, otherwise we wouldn't be spending so much time on it. I am not from an area which is going to be greatly affected by this act; however, I have spoken to some of my colleagues from southern Ontario and they are very much concerned about it. I am sure the minister is aware of the voluminous correspondence received from people who are trying to have some input in the legislation, making suggestions, et cetera, all of which is very important in the decision-making process of legislators. This indicates they are very much concerned with what has happened in the past.

If it were just a question of looking at that range—minimum $500, maximum $1,000—I think I would have to go along with the concerns which have been expressed by the minister. However, when one does have that option and discretion which the court can exercise, having regard to all of the circumstances, I feel this particular amount is justified when one looks at the cost of the prosecutions. As far as the $1,000 end of it is concerned, that obviously is there for the repeater, for the person committing a second, third or fourth offence. Nowhere in the act does it deal with a second offence, so that leaves discretion for the court to deal with those cases that are very serious in nature, probably bordering on wilful damage.

Incidentally, if something is very serious, I presume the wilful damage provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada could be applied and bring upon the person found guilty a greater penalty. I feel the high rung of that ladder is there to deal with the extreme case of the breach, as well as with the repeater.

Mr. Swart: I rise again after hearing the comments of both the minister and the member for Nipissing. I wonder if perhaps there isn't a compromise to be made on this.

We had before us the two amendments, the one from the minister which sets a maximum of $50, which seems to me is wholly inadequate to compensate in the case of two neighbours who have a dispute and one cuts down a shade tree that is perhaps 40 or 50 years old. On the other hand, the minimum fine of $500 bothered us and still does, because if there wasn't even any damage to the tree and the person was convicted, the minimum fine would be $500. The damage might be very slight.

So if you don't rule me out of order because I have already spoken on this, Mr.

Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to the amendment to delete, in the amendment made by the member for Nipissing, the five last words, "but not less than $500." There could be a maximum fine of $1,000 but the minimum would not be set. I am moving this with a view of seeking a compromise here. If I have to support one amendment or the other, I will support the amendment of the member for Nipissing. But I think there is a compromise that would make the penalty more realistic in the circumstances which could exist. It does deal with the question of an animal that would do damage to a tree. I suppose you could tie an animal to a tree and he could eat the bark or some of the limbs off a small tree; if the person was convicted, the minimum fine would be $500, which wouldn't make much sense in that case.

On the other hand, as I pointed out when I spoke before, there are many times when the loss of a tree is worth at least $1,000. So I'm moving—if you will accept it—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't see any reason why I shouldn't accept it. You can speak more than once in committee, and you can make one amendment to the amendment. I think you're quite in order.

Mr. Swart: I would move—I believe I've already put it on record; if you want it in writing—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm not clear what you have proposed.

Mr. Swart: I would move—I'll put it in writing to you—an amendment to the amendment by Mr. Gaunt, that the last five words, namely, "but not less than $500" be deleted from his amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will you read the way you think it should now read?

Mr. Swart: I'll have to write it out.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: While he's writing that out, does the minister know what the member is proposing and is the minister prepared to speak before he sees it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I do, Mr. Chairman. Just one further thing: On the point raised by the member for Nipissing, it is true that in a prosecution of this kind it is the aggrieved who must launch the prosecution; it is not the municipality. On the other hand, that same aggrieved person, if he feels he has been aggrieved for a great expense, has an opportunity to take a civil action, which might well not cost him any more than launching a prosecution for which he would receive no recompense.

I think going from $25 to $1,000 is excessive—on the other hand, I feel a lot better when the minimum has been removed; that act may not be proclaimed for some time, and, if such a case were to go into a court, for a judge to see a minimum fine of that amount for a minor infraction wouldn't sit well with the court.

I don't know how much negotiating we can do. I was going to say I'll have an amendment to the amendment suggesting $500 as a maximum, which strikes me as being a pretty significant penalty for injury to a tree.

Mr. Martel: But there's no necessity for the $1,000. The $1,000 would be at the discretion of the judge.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I realize that. But it strikes me as being a large amount. However, if it appears to be the agreement of the opposition that $1,000 maximum, without a minimum, is the decision, I'll accept it.

Mr. Riddell: A good walnut tree would be worth $1,000.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Conceivably; but if that were the case I'd rather sue for $2,000 and get costs as well.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion? Do I hear anybody saying $750? If not, I'll put this. But before we put the amendment to the amendment, maybe the minister could get the nod from his legal people that this will make sense, where it fits into the other act.

The proposal is that it would now read: "1(a): Section 3 of the said act is amended by striking out the words 'not more than $25' in the seventh line and inserting in lieu thereof 'and not more than $1,000.'"

Hon. Mr. Auld: If we leave out the "and" and insert in lieu thereof "not more than $1,000," I think we have it.

Mr. Haggerty: Watch those "ands" and "ors," particularly when you're dealing with lawyers.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart, I'm adding an "and" to your amendment, with your consent.

Mr. Swart: Would you please read it again?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. I'll read this, not to put the question but just so you'll all be clear.

Mr. Swart moved an amendment to Mr. Gaunt's amendment to section 3 of the act that the words "but not less than $500 and" on line three of the amendment be deleted.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I don't understand the word "and." The amendment which I have before us is moved by Mr. Bolan rather than Mr. Gaunt. It reads: "1(a). Section 3 of the said act is amended by striking out "$25" in the seventh line and inserting in lieu thereof '$1,000 but not less than $500.'"

I want to strike out "but not less than $500." I don't know where the "and" comes in.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The "and" is immediately after the "$500."

Mr. Martel: Let's get our act together.

Hon. Mr. Auld: In Mr. Bolan's amendment it says "not less than" so much and "not more than." If you take out "not less than" you have left "and not more than," which would mean that the act would read, "to a fine of not more than and $1,000."

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, the best way to explain it is to look at the second amendment which the minister is bringing forward. He is substituting section 3 of the act. He is putting in a new section 2 to the bill which substitutes section 3 of the act. Is that right Mr. Minister? In that new section 3 of the act he goes on to say, "every person who ties or fastens any animal to, or injures or destroys any trees," et cetera, "is guilty of an offence and on summary conviction is liable of not more than $50." The idea would be to change that $50 to $1,000.

Mr. Swart: My understanding is that we have an amendment before us from the member for Nipissing. It's not the amendment from the minister. It is that amendment which I am amending. It has nothing to do with that of the minister, and I would think that my wording is correct when I'm amending the amendment by the member for Nipissing. Even if we go back to the act which we're amending it ends up in a fine of not more than $25. I still don't see the necessity for the "and."

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think, Mr. Chairman, what we're trying to achieve is in the last line of the present act, which now reads, "offence and on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $25." We want it to come out, "offence and on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not more than $1,000."

Mr. Swart: That's right.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Therefore I think we're correct. I gather from the legal advisers that the "and" is not necessary, Mr. Swart, but the assistant clerk also informs me that the legislative editors can tidy up any mistakes of that nature we may make.

So, if we're ready for the question, Mr. Swart has moved an amendment to Mr. Bolan's amendment which reads as follows: "Section 3 of the said act is amended by striking out the words, 'not more than $25' in the seventh line and inserting in lieu thereof 'not less than $500 and'"—I'm sorry—"and not more than $1,000" No, I'm sorry, I've got that wrong. I've combined both amendments. Let me go back again and read the amendment which Mr. Swart has moved.

His amendment is to the amendment that Mr. Bolan has made, and he proposes that the words "but not less than $500 and" on line three of the amendment be deleted.

All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Now we will look at Mr. Bolan's motion. I guess we don't need to read your amendment again, Mr. Bolan. Shall the amendment, as amended, be carried?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I now find a bit of a problem, because there is one other difference between my proposed amendment and Mr. Bolan's. I was going to move that the subsection be added as section 2, which would then mean that we would renumber section 3. Consequently, the rest of my amendments are going to create a bit of a numbering problem.

We now have, as I understand it, section 1 in the bill, we have a new section 1(a), and we move to section 2, which now comes up. I would like to move—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I have an amendment here from you, Mr. Auld, for section 3 of the bill. Is that what you're looking at?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. I think Mr. Swart has an amendment for section 2, before we get that far.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think this is where Mr. Swart wishes to make his amendment.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest now that in fact the minister has an amendment to section 2 of the bill which comes ahead of mine. He has it numbered section 3 but that was when he was putting in a new section 2. That new section 2 is not there, and I suggest to the minister that he might want to reword his amendment to read "section 2" where it says "section 3" and where he says, "I move that section 4(2) of the act, as set out in section 2 of the bill . . ." We need to change that twice and to take out the words "as renumbered be struck out and the following substituted therefor."

I offer this assistance, Mr. Chairman, because I'm supportive of his amendment. I have a subsequent amendment to section 2, but it's to a later part of section 2.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't know whether you're being of assistance or not. I think you're being very confusing, Mr. Swart. I'm just speaking for the chair; not for the committee.

Mr. Swart: Should I repeat that? I'm endeavouring to assist.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If you can repeat it in the same way, you'll be wonderful.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Auld's second amendment, which I have from him, is stated as section 3. But the previous amendment which he had would have renumbered the bill. This amendment is drafted as though it were an amendment to the bill as renumbered. But now his amendment really is to section 2 of the bill, because it has not been renumbered. If he changes that to section 2 and takes out the words "as renumbered" it would seem to me it would be properly before the House before my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Right, I see.

Hon. Mr. Auld: moves that section 4(2) of the act, as set out in section 2 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) An officer appointed under a bylaw passed under subsection 1, or any predecessor thereof, and any person acting under his instructions may at all reasonable times enter upon the land of any person for the purpose of,

"(a) enforcing such bylaw,

"(b) determining compliance with an order made under section 7(2) or,

"(c) examining trees that might be affected by a minor exception authorized under section 7(b)(1)."

Mr. Minister: I gather maybe that renumbering was not correct in the eyes of the legislative counsel.

Mr. Bolan: You are one ahead.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: My note is the bill has been renumbered by Mr. Bolan's amendment. The minister's amendments as you have them are in order. These things can really be cleared up by the legislative editors, as long as we are clear in our intent. They can probably pick these things up and put them in order. The legislative counsel's advice is to leave this amendment of Mr. Auld as it is worded. I am not sure where it comes in regard to Mr. Swart's proposed amendment, but I gather this one comes first.

Let's discuss the amendment Mr. Auld has made. Are there any questions in regard to it?

Mr. Swart: It is my understanding that what we are discussing, if we take the bill as it is submitted to us, is section 2(2) which says:

"An officer appointed under a bylaw passed under subsection 1, or any predecessor thereof, and any person acting under his instructions may at all reasonable times enter upon and inspect the land of any person for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of any such bylaw or inspecting land where an application has been made under subsection 1 of section 7(b)."

It is my understanding that the minister is moving this amendment which we have before us to change that subsection. If I am correct in that, and I think I am, then I think this is advisable because it gives greater powers to the officers who are enforcing the Trees Act. It will give them the power of not only enforcing the bylaw, but examining trees. A later section of the act gives the municipality the power to give certain exemptions. They would be able to go in and examine those trees ahead of time, it gives them the power to go on the property. It really gives the enforcement officers wider powers which are made necessary by the changes this bill makes in the original act.

Therefore, I am in support of that amendment as proposed by the minister. With due respect, Mr. Chairman, I believe when the minister read this into the record that in fact he was right in saying that it is section 4(2) of the act as set out in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. Bolan: I suppose it is not the first time in my life I have been confused, but I have to say that I am. I would like to go through the amendments which were put on my desk. These are the minister's amendments. Turn to page two of those amendments.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The sheet that is on your desk is headed "section 3."

Mr. Bolan: Right.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Change that to "section 2." Then go to the second line, which says "as set out in section 3 of the bill." That should say "section 2." Then cross out "as renumbered."

Mr. Bolan: The second page I have deals with section 3 of the act, not with subsection 2 of section 4. I am talking about the act, not the bill. There are two different things here. What I have before me—and as I say this was placed on my desk as we sat down here at two o'clock—says on page one: "Hon. Mr. Auld moves that clause (d) of section 1 of the act as set out in the bill be struck out." That was dealt with.

Next page: Hon. Mr. Auld on section 2. "I move that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following sections: Section 3 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor: Every person who ties or fastens any animal—" et cetera.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That amendment never went forward. The honourable member's amendment came first; then that of the honourable member for Welland-Thorold, when it was settled at $1,000. So that amendment never got before us.

Mr. Bolan: Okay; that is explained, that's fine.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is it the minister's intention to put that amendment forward?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No it isn't.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Auld moves that section 4(2) of the act, as set out in section 3 of the bill as renumbered, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) An officer appointed under a bylaw passed under subsection 1 or any predecessor thereof and any person acting under his instructions may at all reasonable times enter upon the land of any person for the purpose of:

"(a) enforcing such bylaw.

"(b) determining compliance with an order made under subsection 2 of section 6, or

"(c) examining trees that might be affected by a minor exception authorized under subsection (1) of section 7b."

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, you'd have to change your copy too, because in the second line "act as set out in section 3" as it is typed, should now be section 2, because the previous amendment added section 1(a) rather than 2.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm going to leave it, if it's all right with the committee and let the editors tidy it up. I don't think it affects the intent we're working for at all.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Swart: I have an amendment to section 2 which immediately follows the amendment we just made.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 4(3) of the act as set out in section 2 of the bill be struck out.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, the subsection I am proposing be struck out is on page 2 of the act. Subsection (3) states: "A bylaw passed under subsection 1 or any predecessor thereof, may be limited territorially."

I'm moving this be struck out for, I think, very substantial reasons. Up to this time, a municipality had to adopt the bill to apply to the whole municipality. If we are familiar with the application of the act at all, we know it has been counties and regions which have passed these bylaws under the Trees Act. They have had to pass them for the whole of the municipality or for the whole of the region. This amendment would provide that the municipality could pass those bylaws to apply to only part of the county—or in the case of a local municipality and very few municipalities have passed them—to only a part of the municipality.

Having sat on county council in a region for many years, I know what the result of this will be. In those areas where there is a substantial amount of forest and where the tree-cutting bylaw really should apply to prevent the clear cutting of those forests, there will be pressure brought to bear and the municipality will now be able to exempt that rural municipality or two rural municipalities—or even part of a municipality, whatever the case may be. All of us who have been in municipal life know very well that it is the exceptions that are the real difficulties. You can establish principles for bylaws in legislation such as the Trees Act, you can establish the principles of zoning bylaws, but if you leave it to the municipalities to be able to exempt certain parts of the municipality, where pressure is brought to bear and where it is sort of a co-operative organization, a federation if you will of municipalities, many of them are reluctant to tell the other municipality how they should run their affairs within the county council.

Surely, the main purpose of the Trees Act is to preserve a water table in this province. Anybody who is at all familiar with the original implementation of the Trees Act knows it was brought about because of a study, done I believe in the late 1940s. It was a comprehensive study done by this Legislature, which found that throughout this province there were many areas in danger of having the water table level lowered, where there would be greater runoff, particularly on the hilly lands, so that there was need to conserve what forest cover we had in this province. That is a report anybody who is at all interested in conservation should read. It was put in very strong terms, and it was endorsed by all members of this Legislature. It wasn't written by any particular party in this Legislature. There was general recognition that it was necessary to do that.

I suppose if I had been in this Legislature at that time we would have put forward a very strong argument that the Trees Act should automatically apply across the whole province rather than leaving it to counties basically to implement it, making it optional whether they did or not. In any event, the majority of the counties in this province adopted it, realizing the need of it.

Now, in effect, if this section is left in, it will mean any county will be able to exempt any part of that county, even though they have a bylaw at the present time. It makes it retroactive that they will be able to amend that bylaw to exempt certain parts of that county. The Trees Act has now been accepted in the counties, and once you pass this the pressures will start to have certain municipalities or parts of municipalities exempted from the application of the act within those counties, and I say it is very dangerous.

It is almost fundamental to this act to have it apply across the whole municipality, because the only place there will be pressure brought to bear to exempt will be, of course, where there is a lot of forest cover at the present time, where it is needed. Where the forest has all been cut, nobody is going to be worrying about exempting that part of the municipality.

To me, this is a very important decision we have to make; it amounts to a decision as to whether we are going to step backwards, that is what it is. We are going to step backwards by permitting more of the province to be exempted from the Trees Act. That is really what this amendment amounts to, and I suggest what I am predicting will in fact happen if we pass this amendment. Therefore I would urge all members of the House to support my amendment to have it deleted.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I wonder if I might comment briefly on that amendment. I may say this subsection was included at the request of the municipalities, specifically Bruce county as a matter of fact, where officials wish to treat the southern agricultural part of the county differently from the northern forested part of the county.

It has also been requested by regional municipalities which want to be able to deal differently, for obvious reasons, with urban and agricultural areas, wooded areas and so on. We have to remember that it is permissive legislation. If a municipality, county or region feels that act is unworkable, they will do nothing. It seems to me it makes sense to leave this freedom for municipalities, whose officials are responsible groups, certainly in my experience. They will then have the flexibility to deal in the best way possible, in terms of forestry and agriculture and the water table and everything else, with the land they have. Of course soils and all kinds of conditions vary greatly around the province and within counties. I think that is the reason for this part of the bill.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment put forward by the member for Welland-Thorold pretty well coincides with the type of amendment the Association of Municipalities of Ontario asked for. Although I can see some merit in it, I can also see that such an amendment would subject local politicians to an awful lot of local pressure. I can see a lot of people becoming involved in this Trees Amendment Act. As a matter of fact I can see 27 different inspectors running around an area. Speaking personally, I am not sure I can support this amendment but—

Mr. Bolan: The honourable member is speaking for all of us.

Mr. Riddell: I am speaking for all of us then. I am not sure we can support this amendment, because I do think it would subject local politicians to a lot of local pressure; many people would become involved in the act and I think we want to keep it as simple as we can.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the member for Welland-Thorold, if his amendment were to pass what would be the incentive for a person who owns land to undertake reforestation? What incentive would there be? It would seem to me, and I say this as a farmer and as the owner of land where I have just finished reforestation 15 acres, that if I have no prospect of harvesting those trees, if a bylaw were to be enacted that would apply to the urban area and the rural area alike and there was no differentiation made, what incentive would there be for me to make what at this point in my life would be an altruistic move in order simply to try and leave something for my children, and to improve the water table and the water runoff at the same time? In my opinion, if a bylaw is brought in that will prohibit the harvesting of certain kinds of trees in a given area and applied universally across the whole region, it would be literally stupid for a farmer to undertake to reforest a particular area, especially if there were particular varieties involved.

I will become very specific. My land happens to grow black walnuts very well. Over the last three generations my family has planted black walnuts for the purpose of systematic harvesting. Every year when the black walnuts reseed themselves, we replant and we keep regenerating these. If a bylaw prohibited the harvesting of black walnuts, for instance, what incentive would there be for me to continue that practice? Yet I know it is a desirable practice and I know it is in the best interests of good forest management and good agricultural management to undertake that kind of thing.

I would also like to point out to the member for Welland-Thorold that we have certain areas that are quite unique in our region, unique to sections of the region. Is he going to suggest that any bylaw that comes in regarding trees should then be universally applicable?

I just don't see it working. There are certain demands in urban areas for the preservation of trees. There are certain demands on the escarpment, for instance, for the preservation of forest areas and the maintenance of certain kinds of wildlife, but they don't apply universally across the region, they apply to those very specific areas.

I would strongly suggest this territorial exclusion stay in the bill.

Mr. Swart: I think there is some misunderstanding, if I may say so, with regard to the amendment I proposed. The first thing I want to make clear is the amendment I proposed changes nothing that exists today. It is not something new we are introducing today, this leaves things as they were. The practice which has taken place over the years will remain. At the present time, Halton has such a bylaw in effect, it was passed on August 29, 1973.

Surely members must be aware that any bylaw like this does not prevent you from harvesting mature trees. It prevents clear-cutting young trees, but in no way does it prevent the harvesting of mature trees. I would suggest you read the bylaw in your municipality. Of course mature trees can be harvested, but you cannot clear-cut land which has been in forest over the years; except for any trees over and above a certain size and the diameters are given in the preamble to this. Trees that should be harvested can, of course, be harvested.

This amendment makes no change to what we have at the present time. Anything one can do at the present time can continue to be done, as this makes no change. It is the amendment in the act which makes the change. It makes it permissible to exempt any area of the region or country from the provisions of the bylaw which is passed, and which will invariably weaken the bylaw.

I am not sure at this time whether the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) is speaking for or against the amendment. He said it would create a lot of pressure on local politicians if the amendment went through. It is the minister's amendment that will create that. My amendment is to delete that section so those pressures will not occur. It is the amendment the minister has in the bill which will create those problems: "A bylaw passed under subsection 1 or any predecessor thereof may be limited territorially." That is the one that is going to bring the pressure to bear from anybody who wants to clear-cut the forest.

As the member for Huron-Middlesex has said, it is very difficult for a federation such as a county or a region to stand up to those pressures. If we are really interested in preserving the forest cover we now have in this province, I suggest it will be done better by my amendment than by permitting the minister's amendment to go through.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3:

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to what is now section 4. Legislative counsel indicates the original amendment by the member for Nipissing which was given as section 1(a) has become section 2. The numbers have been changed. [5:30]

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Auld moves that section 5(1)(e) of the act, as set out in section 4 of the bill as renumbered, be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "(e) apply to trees growing in a woodlot that is two acres or less in area unless the bylaw provides expressly that it applies to trees in such a woodlot."

Mr. Auld further moves that section 5(1)(l) of the act, as set out in section 4 of the bill as renumbered, be struck out.

Any comments, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Originally the bill proposed that this two-acre exemption would apply. There has been considerable concern expressed that because of rural-residential zonings—in many cases it's a two-acre minimum lot for rural-residential, which is not really a woodlot but might well be considered to be—and create some problems for the owner; and it's a very small area—there should be an exemption.

However, I know that both the official opposition and the NDP were proposing to change this and I'm hopeful with this provision, which will now provide that if the municipality—the county, say—wants to exempt the two-acre woodlot they can, but if they want to include them, they can still do that. It is really putting the onus a little more on the municipality to take a good look at what they're doing and to be able to pass an act with this exclusion, if that is their best judgement.

Mr. Bolan: We will support this amendment and withdraw the amendment we had which added a subclause to section 5, because basically we're arriving at a solution to the same problem.

I have some notes here I would like to read into the record. The resolutions committee of the county of Perth's argument on this is that many woodlots of areas not exceeding two acres help maintain the water level in rural areas and prevent erosion of soil. They act as a windbreak and aid in regulating drainage and provide an environment for wildlife and are irreplaceable for their aesthetic value.

The Catfish Creek Conservation Authority are also concerned that the decrease in tree cover of an area increases soil erosion caused by wind and lowers the water table in the soil. The authority points out further that it has been found that a tree cover percentage of eight per cent or less indicates critical conditions insofar as soil erosion and lower water tables are concerned and it adds that it is known that the percentage of tree cover of all the land in Elgin county is now down to about 11 per cent.

These are two of the reasons—together with many others—why we had proposed our own subsection, which is somewhat along the lines of the minister's. However, we will be withdrawing that amendment in favour of the amendment submitted by the minister.

Mr. Swart: I think the best way to go about this is to move an amendment. Could I point out, first, so we have everything clear, that it's not set out in section 4 of the bill, it is set out in section 3 of the bill. Let's make that change.

We're talking about section 3 of Bill 8. If you look on page two, the second paragraph from the bottom, it is (e) that we're discussing.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 5(1)(e) of the act, as set out in section 3 of the bill, be amended by deleting the words "two acres" wherever they appear and that the words "one-quarter acre" be inserted in lieu thereof; and that all the words following "or less in area" be deleted.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I moved this amendment, in the words of the member for Nipissing, to express the concerns of the counties that they maintain the tree cover they have. These woodlots of less than two acres are a very essential part of maintaining the forest cover.

The minister's amendment we have before us permits a municipality to pass a bylaw which would apply directly against one owner to prevent him from cutting off a woodlot under two acres.

I ask anybody who has been in municipal life, if you have a general policy which says it doesn't apply to woodlots under two acres, how many municipalities are going to pass a bylaw which says "except that" on that parcel of land belonging to that particular person? He may not cut off that, even though he owns only an acre and a half.

Surely, Mr. Minister, the provincial government must take some responsibility for the overall principle of retaining the forest cover we have in southern Ontario. It seems to me the basic principle they accepted 30 or 40 years ago, when they passed the bylaws they had at that time, was just weakened by the amendment passed previously. When there has been the request by many, many municipalities—and all the conservation organizations—that this two acre minimum is a very critical matter, to give anybody the right if they've got less than two acres to clear-cut it all is a very critical matter and they've asked that it be amended.

The amendment proposed here is nothing more than a gesture; I'm sure you'd agree with me if you've been in municipal life. It won't make a single change in the application of this act. Anyone with under two acres will still be able to cut it off unless a specific bylaw applies to trees in such a woodlot. There may be the odd municipality, the odd county, that will do it, but if we really mean we want to preserve those woodlots which are under two acres as being essential to the forest cover in this province—as they are; the conservation authorities have asked for this; several of the counties have asked for this; in fact, there is a general request for this—your amendment will not accomplish it. I am suggesting we change that to one quarter of an acre. Anyone with under one quarter of an acre will be able to cut it off. That's roughly 100 feet by 100 feet. One would be able to cut off any woodlot that small.

I want to point out to you that there is another section of the act later on which gives permission for exemption. Why do we not use that section—say a quarter acre here—if there are situations where they need to cut off, for very substantial reasons, a larger area than can be given under the municipal exemptions section? Why not use that rather than leaving this provision which we know is going to be inoperative? It just will not be passed by those municipalities. It substantially weakens the preservation of our forests, our forest cover and will, in the long run, adversely affect the people of this province.

Of course, this is why the bill was passed when it was and most of it was passed in many other areas throughout North America. There was tremendous clear-cutting going on during the early years in this nation. Those who were conservationists, even those agriculturalists and agronomists who worked for the Ontario government back in those years, recommended that there be bylaws passed to prevent any more clear-cutting of the forests in this province. Your government at that time agreed to it and now you're weakening the act.

We know of the dust storms in the depression years. We know of the droughts and the floods. The more forest cover you take away, the more severe all of those things are going to be in the future. We're going to pay a price in our society if we go on watering down an act such as this which provides some protection for the forest cover. Especially in this one where, later in the act we give some local autonomy to the municipalities, to give minor exemptions, why don't we let it be handled under that and accept the principle here?

I would appeal to the minister to accept this amendment I have proposed and leave the minor variations. We will support that in the latter part of the act where it can be dealt with if there is some justification for clear-cutting under two acres. I suggest that if we're concerned about preservation it's a much more effective way of doing it and would give us the opportunity to make those exemptions which may be necessary.

Mr. Riddell: Listening to the member for Welland-Thorold, I wonder if he can actually visualize a quarter acre woodlot. One quarter of an acre to an urban person may seem like a lot of land but if you talk about a one-quarter acre woodlot to a farmer—

Mr. Bolan: To an urbane person.

Mr. Riddell: —he would think you were right out of your head.

The member for Welland-Thorold talks about all his municipal experience, and I trust he has played an active part in the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, but you know what they want. I don't agree with it, but their recommendation was that it be changed from two acres to five acres because they said that two acres in this day and age is too small a parcel of land. In other words, when you purchase land to build a house in many cases you're talking about two acres down to the quarter acre woodlot as suggested by the member for Welland-Thorold, to my way of thinking would be ridiculous and certainly contrary to what AMO believes in that they think it should be stepped up to five acres. I think we can reach a compromise and stick to two acres.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments on the amendment to the amendment? If not, is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Bolan: I'd just like to make one comment. This relates to the other clause mentioned, Mr. Chairman. You further read an amendment to section 5(1)(1) of the act. Are we dealing with that particular amendment?

Mr. Chairman: We are still dealing with the amendment to the amendment.

Shall the amendment to the amendment carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Chairman: Shall Mr. Auld's amendment carry?

All those in favour say "aye."

All those opposed say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further on section 3?

Mr. Bolan moves that section 5(1)(k) and 5(1)(l) of the act as set out in section 3 of the bill be struck out.

Mr. Bolan: If I may speak briefly; clause (k) states there is an exemption which applies to trees cut in accordance with good forestry practice. The question is, how do you determine good forestry practice? Who defines it? It is not defined by regulation. Again, you are relying on the individual to determine what amounts to good forestry practice. It is felt the best thing to do is to take this section right out.

This subsection may have been introduced because of a concern by the ministry that by-laws passed pursuant to section 4 have not been as effective as they could be. Instead of setting out standards and specifications for cutting, which would ensure proper forest management practices, the bylaws have generally prohibited cutting of trees below a minimum trunk size expressed as a diameter in inches at breast height. Proper forest management requires taking into account individual differences between forests and between trees within a forest and marking of trees on an individual basis.

No single measurement can appropriately be applied to all forests. If this subsection was intended to promote proper forestry practice I feel it is misconceived and that would not be the end result. The end result would create more problems than you already have, because everyone would be applying for the exemption by saying according to the standards of this particular type of tree cutting this is accepted as good tree cutting.

Does it depend on the type of chain saw you use? Does it depend on the type and length of wood you cut into? I don't know. Really, you are leaving it up to the individual to determine good forestry practice. For these reasons, we are moving this clause be deleted.

Mr. Swart: We will support the amendment to delete clauses (k) and (l) for the reasons given by the member for Nipissing. Of course, in the case of clause (l), it is being deleted by the ministry in any event, because it is going to take away the right of the minister to make regulations to apply in cases which may not be covered by the act.

I would think the intent of clause (k) is to provide that trees which have become diseased and trees which have reached maturity should be cut. With that we don't disagree, but as has been stated, the term "good forestry practices" is so broad it can be applied to the way you cut the trees down.

Because up to this time the act seems to have not given any problem in this regard, the municipal bylaws have never been challenged. Of course, they give authorization for the cutting of diseased trees, as the minister will know if he's seen many of these bylaws, or "trees that have reached maturity," et cetera, et cetera. Unless he can point out a legal problem they have had in the act as it now stands then I think this is unnecessary and can lead to some abuse of the intent of the act and so for that reason we're supporting the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Auld: While I agree there is no definition of good forestry practice in the act, the purpose of this is that good forestry practice will be achieved. In other words in any stand—say a young stand—thinning is going to take place just as it does in our own provincially operated forests or county forests. There is a certain amount of pruning and removing of diseased stock and that sort of thing as the honourable member has mentioned.

Really, just not to permit a woodlot owner to improve his woodlot by doing the sort of thinning that is good forestry practice just seems very silly. Any indiscriminate cutting could be prosecuted; it is not producing a loophole under the law. I'm not sure that every tree committee would have a forester as a member of it or as an adviser, but certainly in any case where it appeared that somebody was abusing this section, a prosecution could be launched, and it would be up to the person who had cut the trees to prove that he had in fact been operating good forestry practice.

This clause is here to encourage good forestry practice and to discourage people with a lack of forestry knowledge from attempting to impose impossible conditions on those who wish to improve their woodlots. For that reason this is in the amending bill.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Swart: I have another amendment to section 3. Perhaps I should have put it ahead of that amendment because it did come ahead, although the amendment I had from the Liberal Party had (e) in it which came ahead of (f), however they dropped (e).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 5(1)(f) of the act as set out in section 3 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "(f) apply to trees which subject to prior approval of the enforcement officers are necessary to destroy in order to erect any building, structure or thing in respect of which a building permit is issued."

Mr. Swart: I think the intent of this amendment is perfectly clear. It is to have the enforcement officer look at the area where a building or structure or thing is going to be built and to determine what trees it will be necessary to be cut there ahead of time and how to come to an agreement with the owner. As long as this is in there you can have someone who buys the property and says he wants to construct something there, and go ahead and cut down a lot of trees unnecessarily. Then, of course, it is too late to replant them.

It seems to me we should give some responsibility to the enforcement officers, as the minister did in an earlier amendment. It seemed that to give them the right to go in ahead of time would be advisable here and that is the purpose of our amendment. I am wondering, Mr. Minister, if this isn't in conformity with your previous amendment, if you might be willing to accept the amendment to this section which we propose?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In answer to that question, I am afraid I wouldn't be prepared to accept this for a number of reasons. First of all, what we are doing here, very clearly, is giving an official power to deal with private property and make a decision from which there is apparently no appeal. It seems to me this is a matter of judgement in many cases—when somebody is building a house, for instance—as to how the house is sited, whether they want a leaning tree hanging over the roof, a whole host of things. But the thing I find particularly offensive in this is that we are giving an official the authority to make a decision which affects a person on his own private property and from which there is no appeal.

Mr. Swart: I don't think we can let that go unanswered. The whole purpose of the Trees Act affects what people can do with their private property. It tells people whether or not they can cut down their trees. That is the whole intent of it; it applies to private property.

If somebody is going to build some structure—not necessarily a house; most people who build a house in an area where there are trees want to preserve the trees—there are all kinds of other things that can be built in these areas, frequently the trees could be saved. Many could care less about them. Once they are down you can't replace them.

It seems to me only reasonable the enforcement officers—and this is what they are—should look at it ahead of time, rather than afterwards. Perhaps afterwards they have to lay charges. There is a judgement to be made, as you have pointed out, put surely that judgement has to be made with respect to the Trees Act.

Shouldn't the enforcement officers of this act be there to help make that judgement? The person can still go ahead and cut down those trees, but then he can be charged under the act. It seems to me it is much better to determine this ahead of time. As far as interfering with the rights of the person to determine what trees they cut on private land is concerned, that is what the act is all about.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable member mentioned the point that if there is a violation of the law there should be prosecution. But that should be decided in court rather than by an official.

Mr. Bolan: We will not support this amendment. I agree with the government's position on it. If there is something which contravenes the act charges can be laid—there are other ways of dealing with it. Deleting the clause does not accomplish the desired results which the member seeks and, as such, we will not support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Shall Mr. Swart's amendment carry?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 5(1)(j) of the act as set out in section 3 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "(j) apply to trees which subject to prior approval of the enforcement officer it is necessary to destroy in order to lawfully establish and operate or enlarge any pit or quarry on land that has not been designated under section 2 of the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971."

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that we set this bill down now, or whatever the proper language is, because at eight o'clock, by agreement, we will commence with Bill 93 while we are in committee of the whole House.

Mr. Nixon: It would be too bad to carry the Trees Act.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I take it there is more work to be done on the Trees Act. It being six o'clock and as no time is provided for it tonight, if this bill could be set down now, wherever it may be, we will call Bill 93 and get at that at eight o'clock.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

VACCINATION

200. Mr. Mackenzie: Will the Minister of Health inform the House as to: (a) The number of children born with major health problems or physical defects considered to be the result of a lack of vaccination for German measles over each of the last five years. (b) The number of citizens in Ontario who have not been adequately protected by vaccination for measles and rubella. (c) Whether there is any evidence of a more severe reaction to rubella or measles in any particular community or any immigrant group and whether there are more people not protected in any particular ethnic community. (d) Does the ministry have any evidence which would indicate an increased rate of birth defects following an increased incidence of rubella? (e) What steps are being taken to increase the vaccination rate against rubella and measles? [Tabled May 25, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to the above question reads as follows:

(a) This information is not available. Congenital rubella syndrome has been made notifiable to the medical officer of health and the Ministry of Health only since September 1978. Studies in other jurisdictions indicate that 80 per cent of children born to mothers who had German measles in the first six months of pregnancy have one or more of the following: deafness, eye defects, heart disease, retardation, cerebral palsy.

(b) In the school-enterers 22 per cent have not been protected against measles; 24 per cent have not been protected against rubella.

In surveys carried out by the public health laboratory, examination of blood specimens of expectant mothers demonstrates a lack of antibodies to rubella in 15 per cent of the specimens. This indicates that these women have neither been immunized nor had the disease.

It is estimated that one per cent of the adult population is susceptible to measles.

(c) There is no evidence of differing reactions to these diseases in any particular community or immigrant group.

(d) No studies are available from Ontario.

Studies done in New York state following an epidemic of rubella in 1964 indicate that 25,000 babies were born with congenital rubella defects. In a smaller study following the same outbreak, 80 per cent of the mothers who had rubella during the first six months of pregnancy produced defective babies.

Studies in the Piedmont and D'Aosta regions of Italy following an outbreak in 1973, in Lombardy in Italy following an outbreak in 1977, and in Israel following an outbreak in 1972, showed an increased incidence of defective babies.

(e) An immunization awareness program, costing $170,000 is currently under way. For the school year beginning September 1980 our government is proposing legislation to cover all children entering the publicly supported school system. At the time of school entry, parents or guardians will be obliged to present on behalf of all children a signed consent form authorizing immunization against measles and rubella and other diseases, or a signed waiver form that exempts children from immunization on medical, religious or personal grounds.

The ministry makes rubella vaccine available at family planning clinics and in hospitals for use in post-partum women whose pre-natal blood indicated that they are susceptible.

NURSING HOME INSPECTIONS

201. Mr. Mackenzie: 1. Will the Minister of Health inform the House of the number of inspectors—regular, fire, environmental and dietary—responsible for nursing homes in Ontario at the present time? 2. The number of inspectors employed as of January 1, 1979; June 1, 1978; January 1, 1978; January 1, 1977; January 1, 1976; and January 1, 1975. 3. The placement of the inspectors by regional offices during these periods and the areas covered by each regional office. 4. Have there been any instances when an inspector has called ahead of time before conducting an inspection of a nursing home? [Tabled May 25, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to the above question reads as follows:

1. At the present time there are 15 nursing inspectors, including three regional supervisors; five fire safety inspectors, including one co-ordinator; five environmental health inspectors, including one co-ordinator; and one co-ordinator of nutritional care who are responsible for the nursing homes in Ontario.

2. The number of environmental health inspectors and fire safety inspectors has remained constant over the period January 1, 1979, to the present time at five inspectors, including one co-ordinator in each category.

The co-ordinator, nutritional care, was employed as of August 1, 1977, operating out of the head office of the nursing home inspection service.

As of January 1, 1979, there were 15 nursing inspectors (including three regional supervisors) in the three regional offices.

As of June 1, 1978, the nursing inspection complement consisted of 16 inspectors, including three regional supervisors.

As of January 1, 1978, the nursing inspection complement consisted of 17 inspectors, including three regional supervisors.

As of January 1, 1977, the nursing inspection complement consisted of 17 inspectors, including three regional supervisors.

As of January 1, 1976, the nursing inspection complement consisted of 19 inspectors, including three regional supervisors.

3. (a) The number of environmental health and fire safety inspection staff has remained constant from January 1, 1975, to the present time as follows:

Environmental Health

Ottawa Regional Office, one inspector.
London Regional Office, one inspector. Toronto Regional Office, two inspectors; one coordinator in head office.

Fire Safety

Ottawa Regional Office, one inspector.
London Regional Office, one inspector. Toronto Regional Office, two inspectors; one coordinator in head office.

Dietary personnel has remained constant at one co-ordinator, nutritional care, since August 1, 1977.

Nursing

As of January 1, 1979

Ottawa, one supervisor plus three inspectors. London, one supervisor plus three inspectors. Toronto, one supervisor plus six inspectors.

As of June 1, 1978

Ottawa, one supervisor plus three inspectors. London, one supervisor plus three inspectors. Toronto, one supervisor plus seven inspectors.

As of January 1, 1978

Ottawa, one supervisor plus four inspectors. London, one supervisor plus three inspectors. Toronto, one supervisor plus seven inspectors.

As of January 1, 1977

Ottawa, one supervisor plus four inspectors.
London, one supervisor plus three inspectors.
Toronto, one supervisor plus seven inspectors.

As of January 1, 1976

Ottawa, one supervisor plus four inspectors.
London, one supervisor plus five inspectors.
Toronto, one supervisor plus seven inspectors.

As of January 1, 1975

Ottawa, one supervisor plus four inspectors.
London, one supervisor plus five inspectors.
Toronto, one supervisor plus seven inspectors.

(b) The Toronto regional office is responsible for the area including the counties of Haldimand-Norfolk, Brant, Dufferin, Hamilton-Wentworth, Niagara, Peel, Halton, York, Metro Toronto, Simcoe, Muskoka, Durham, Haliburton, Victoria, Peterborough and Northumberland.

The Ottawa regional office is responsible for the area including Rainy River, Kenora, Thunder Bay, Cochrane, Algoma, Sudbury, Manitoulin, Temiskaming, Nipissing, Parry Sound and retained the counties of Hastings, Renfrew, Lennox and Addington, Frontenac, Lanark, Leeds, Grenville, Dundas, Stormont, Glengarry, Prescott, Russell and Ottawa-Carleton.

The London regional office is responsible for the area including the counties of Essex, Kent, Lambton, Middlesex, Elgin, Oxford, Perth, Huron, Bruce, Grey, Waterloo and Wellington.

4. Inspectors do not schedule their inspection with the administration of the individual nursing home. Appointments are made in isolated cases where the presence of the administrator is essential. These cases include pre-licensing inspections of new facilities which are not yet occupied and which must be inspected prior to licensure, in-service counselling visits, drug recycling and follow-ups where clarification of requirements is necessary. Licence renewal, routine, presale, complaint investigations and team inspections are never scheduled.

Note: The number of licensed nursing homes in the province has reduced due to amalgamations of smaller homes, sale of smaller homes to larger homes, et cetera.

The number of licensed beds has increased through the awarding of new beds.

OHC TENANTS' INCOMES

208. Mr. Dukszta: Would the Minister of Housing indicate whether there are any plans or whether there has been any discussion of such within the Ontario Housing Corporation to change the $75 rent assessment for OHC tenants whose children are working? Are there any plans to assess such tenants for 25 per cent of their children's earnings? Is any other percentage or scheme being considered? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: From time to time instances occur where grown-up children are still living in their parents' home but are earning substantial incomes. At present only $75 per month of these incomes is included in the gross family income for purposes of calculating the rent-gearred-to-income. Currently the whole question of defining gross family income is under review.

PUBLICLY ASSISTED HOUSING

209. Mr. Dukszta: What plans does the Minister of Housing have under consideration to alter or terminate the role of the Ministry of Housing in the development and operation of publicly assisted housing in Ontario? What studies does the minister have available to him or in preparation by his ministry to identify the continuing need for publicly assisted housing in Ontario? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The Minister of Housing is not considering any plan to terminate the role of the ministry in the development of publicly assisted housing in Ontario. However, and as I am sure the honourable member is aware, the role of the ministry has changed substantially with the signing of the new federal/provincial housing agreements, especially in the support for municipal non-profit housing corporations. The emphasis now will be for the province to encourage greater municipal autonomy through participation in the provision of an integrated housing supply, including assisted housing on a geared-to-income basis.

We are currently meeting with the housing sub-committee of the Municipal Liaison Committee with regard to the new municipal role and the steps to be taken in its implementation, including applicant eligibility criteria and need assessment.

I fully recognize the requirements for an on-going review of assisted housing needs. My ministry will continue to provide study grants or, for municipalities under 10,000 population, staff assistance, in carrying out municipal housing statements. These are broad statements that review many aspects of community development with an emphasis on assisted housing needs. Staff are also available to aid with studies for specific programs.

Further, municipalities are encouraged to submit an annual housing review, by which their specific needs are made known to the ministry.

Information obtained from all these sources, together with other public and private sector information published from time to time, enable the ministry to identify and quantify the need for public assisted housing in Ontario. I am quite prepared to provide copies of any of the municipal housing statements we have received to date, as well as a copy of the annual housing review.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT SECTION

210. Mr. Dukszta: What plans are there for the community development section of the Ministry of Housing? How many staff have been employed in the following sections of the ministry in each of the last three years, and what plans are there for further employment and programs within the community housing division, community land development division, and its community land development branch specifically? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I refer to the question tabled May 31, 1979, concerning the community development wing of the Ministry of Housing.

Please note that there has been a major reorganization of the ministry and effective April 1, 1979, the former community land development division, comprising the community land development branch, the project marketing and surveys branch and the North Pickering land acquisition branch ceased to exist as we knew them. All the program responsibilities of this division were assumed by the newly formed land development wing, which also is responsible for the planning, financing, developing, and marketing of lands owned by the ministry, including those owned by Ontario Housing Corporation, and Ontario Land Corporation. Ontario Land Corporation lands contained the North Pickering and Townsend new community sites.

Plans for the reorganized community development wing call for the provision of assisted rental accommodation for low and moderate-income families and senior citizens, including the handicapped, as well as opportunities for home ownership in remote rural communities through the community housing division with technical services division providing engineering, architectural and appraisal support.

Employment of staff over the past three years is as follows:

	Civil Servants	Other Staff	Total
1977-78 Community Housing Division .....	38	15	53
Community Land Development Division (including Comm. Land Dev. Branch) .....	46	34	80
1978-79 Community Housing Division .....	48	—	48
Community Land Development Division (including Comm. Land Dev. Branch) .....	77	3	80
1979-89 Community Housing Division .....	55	—	55
Community Land Development Division (including Comm. Land Dev. Branch) .....
		Nil. (Program responsibilities transferred to Land Dev. Wing)

The key activities of community housing division include responding to municipal requests for non-profit and assisted low- and moderate-priced rental housing through several programs, and the provision of provincial funding to assist with home ownership in remote rural communities. In general, the client groups are Ontario families and senior citizens of low and moderate incomes. The activity promotes increased municipal awareness, responsibility and flexibility in choice of program delivery.

In 1979-80 the province assumed greater direct responsibility for the administration of provincial and municipal assisted housing programs as a result of federal/provincial agreements.

Staffing for community housing division resulting from the ministry reorganization and the increased responsibilities is substantially complete and no significant increase in employment within is expected.

ONTARIO HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

211. Mr. Dukszta: How many requests were made by municipalities last year to the Ministry of Housing's Ontario Home Renewal Program? How many were funded and what was the total value paid by municipality? How many requests were not funded and what was the total value? What studies has the ministry made of the need and demand for such OHRP grants and will the minister table any studies which he has? What studies have been made of the adequacy of $20,000,000 being allotted for this program, and will the minister table any such studies? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: During the 1978-79 fiscal year, grants in the amount of $19,116,772 were forwarded to 411 municipalities, and $883,228 was paid to home owners in the unorganized territories. The total request for funding during the year was $36,066,331, with requests therefore exceeding available funding by $16,066,331. There were 20 municipalities which did not receive any funding as their applications were received after the OHRP money supply had been totally expended. These requests were for approximately $800,000.

With respect to your request for the tabling of studies relating to OHRP, this is being examined and a further response will be forthcoming.

HEALTH SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

207. Mr. Conway: Will the Minister of Health advise the House as to the ministry budget allocation for each health service organization in the province of Ontario for each of the last three fiscal years? [Tabled May 29, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows:

The following information shows annual payment made to each health service organization during each of the past three government fiscal years.

Health services organizations are not paid on any fiscal year basis. Each has an individual agreement with either an open termination date, or for a fixed period of time, generally one year. Commencement dates of agreements are different for each HSO.

During the course of HSO agreements, payments may vary for numerous reasons, including increases (or decreases) in rosters and outside service use in accountable specialties; application of OHIP Schedule of Benefits increases; application of increments for physician's experience; departures or additions in staffing; addition or subtraction of medical specialties. As indicated, certain HSOs were not paid in selected months during the past three fiscal years since they had not yet begun their initial agreements, or had decided to terminate as HSOs (principally due to retirement or a return to fee-for-service funding).

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS' LANDS ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 93, An Act to provide for the holding of Land by Religious Organizations.

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Warner has moved that section 3 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: "7. A trustee shall be a Canadian citizen."

Mr. Warner: That is where we left off last time, Mr. Chairman. There were some comments by my colleague from Kitchener who had shown interest in the amendment but also was interested that it be further amended to add to that subsection the words: "or persons who hold landed immigrant status."

I have had an opportunity to mull over the suggestion and certainly concur, so I would amend my amendment to include "or of landed immigrant status," if that is the correct phraseology.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would it be easier if I sent this amendment back to you so you can revise the original amendment, rather than making an amendment to your own amendment?

Mr. Warner: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Breithaupt: I think I should to some extent correct my view of the discussion the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere had on the last occasion of this bill coming before the House in committee.

You may recall I had suggested the term "Canadian citizen" did not appear to me to be of any particular merit in this kind of circumstance, since land held by organizations referred to under the act might likely be held by a limited company, or a Canadian citizen who would be holding as a trustee would not necessarily be a beneficial owner for whom that trust would be exercised.

The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere then suggested in discussion with me the phrase "or a landed immigrant." I suggested to him that I would be interested in hearing the comments of the parliamentary assistant as to whether he saw merit in having both of those parties defined, or whether he was of the view that the amendment as such was still not acceptable, even with that amplification.

I suppose that once the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere places his amended amendment we would then be able to hear from the parliamentary assistant the views he has now that he's had the opportunity of further considering that possibility.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, after having considered the amendment on a previous occasion I come to the same conclusion I have stated before; that is, we are dealing with the trustees under section 3 and I can see no reason why we should stipulate in this legislation what citizenship those trustees should hold.

The lands that would be held under this particular act are controlled by both sections 6 and 15. I believe the section would add nothing to the act. It could create some confusion by creating a qualification for the trustee. If there was some concern about the ownership of the land held this way, it could be very easily steered around by having a straw man, a Canadian lawyer as a trustee, if someone wanted to get—

Mr. Haggerty: They wouldn't do a thing like that, would they?

Mr. Sterling: —around that particular section.

The beneficial owner is the religious organization which can control the sale or lease under section 6. Under section 15: "The trustees of a religious organization selling or leasing lands shall on the first Monday in June in each year have ready and open for inspection a detailed statement showing the rents that accrued during the preceding year and all sums in their hands for the use and benefit of the organization that were in any manner derived from land under their control or subject to their management . . ."

There's adequate control within the act. I think you have to remember that this act is created to allow religious organizations a simple way to hold land, and I don't think there's any need for a qualification on the citizenship of the trustees. In my view, it can only create confusion.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I'll be brief. The member for Kitchener and I had some discussions earlier. He shows, and has always shown, some deep concern about the people who direct the activities of things which function in this province and within the country.

He's always had a deep commitment to this country. I've listened carefully on many occasions when he's spoken and I appreciate very much the kind of opinions he's expressed. What I don't understand, quite frankly, is the attitude of the government.

This amendment may not have any substantial effect. I appreciate that. You're right that if a foreign-controlled organization is determined to hold land under the guise of a religious organization in the province of Ontario, even if my amendment carries it will be able to do so by way of using Canadian lawyers. That's what you were saying, and I understand that. It's accurate. If it were for the appearance alone, you should at least be having a public voice which says, "We want to have Canadians involved in the ownership of the land which will be used for religious purposes." Maybe some group can circumvent that, but at least start out from the premise that we want lands which are used for religious purposes to be directed by people who are Canadians or of landed immigrant status. If groups can find a way to circumvent that, fine, you have to deal with that problem. Maybe you can't. But at least start from that basis.

I think that's the first principle. That's why I'm rather surprised at the attitude of the government. If you view the amendment as not being significant, surely you can pass it. It's not going to hurt your legislation. If it causes a significant problem to your legislation, tell me how. Otherwise, I will assume that my amendment can carry. It it's going to upset the functioning of the acquisition of lands for religious purposes, explain to me how that will occur, otherwise I'll think that what I've done has made, at the very least, a significant gesture—maybe substantive, I don't know, time will tell. But at least it is a gesture that we are sending out a signal to say we want Canadians to be involved in the ownership of land; not people who are neither Canadians nor of landed immigrant status. I'm very puzzled by the government approach to this.

Mr. Sterling: First of all, I'm looking at it in terms of the very practical context of conveyancing that would occur both at the time of conveyancing and subsequent to conveyancing.

When you're dealing with these particular matters there are certain procedures to be gone through. It's not very often that this type of property changes hands. I would suggest that in most cases, the legal profession or whoever prepared the deed would not be aware of this kind of a qualification in an act. If you are conveyancing and are aware of this particular qualification in this act for this particular type of property, then included in the affidavit should be that the person is either a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant—if your amendment carries.

The problem is, though, there is no other requirement for that within our conveyancing law for other types of property, so to me it's an impracticality to say that the law will be probably widely known for this very particular circumstance. That makes no excuse for the lawyers who don't do their work, or whatever it is, down the line. It's a practical problem that I can foresee happening.

Also, as I mentioned before, what has citizenship to do with the owning of church property through this act? It just doesn't make any sense to me when it's the trustee we're talking about. The trustee doesn't own the property. The trustee is a figurehead.

Mr. Warner: I understand a little more clearly now, Mr. Chairman. It certainly is in keeping with this government's attitude that anyone can come in and purchase any amounts of land they so desire. All you have to do is look at the cottage country in Ontario. The extent of foreign ownership of our cottage country and our farm land is significant now, and this government isn't prepared to do anything about it.

Mr. Sterling: We have the land transfer tax.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I think it's time to place the amendment for voting.

[8:15]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does any other member wish to discuss this amendment?

Mr. Warner moves that section 3 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: "(7) A trustee shall be a Canadian citizen or a person of landed immigrant status."

All those in favour of Mr. Warner's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Warner: I have a question regarding section 10. I'll be quite open about it; I have some questions and if they're not answered I'm prepared to put an amendment. It appears to me section 10 is the loophole through which a phoney organization could acquire land for the purpose of establishing a commercial venture—

Mr. Bradley: You're not referring to the NDP?

Mr. Warner: —a plaza or some other type of venture from which they would derive commercial gain, using the guise of having established the land for religious purposes.

That is my interpretation of that section. I would like a definitive answer from the government because, as I said, if I'm not satisfied I will be placing an amendment to delete section 10.

Mr. Sterling: Basically my answer to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is that if an organization came in under the guise of this act—first, the only thing provided under this act is a method of holding that land. It doesn't affect its taxability. It doesn't confer on it any taxation rights or alleviation. All it means is you can have one or two or three or a dozen trustees named as the owners on a deed. That's what this act says.

Second, section 1(1)(b) defines what a religious organization might be. If, for instance, an organization did come in and wanted to use this act just for the sake of holding the land, they can be challenged; there's one section in the act whereby a person can apply to a court in order to have it determined whether they fall within the definition of the act. Yes, it is under section 23(2): “. . . the public trustee may apply to have determined whether any organization or other body that purports to hold and possess or that intends to acquire, hold and possess land under this act is entitled to do so.”

The time period we have set under this lease is in agreement with the Ontario Law Reform Commission—the 40-year period. Whether it be 20 years or 40 years, we're not really concerned one way or the other. We're just following the recommendations of the law reform commission on that end of it. If that doesn't answer I would be pleased to provide further clarification if you could better define your question.

Mr. Warner: There are two things. First, I don't believe that section 23(2) answers the problem. It may determine that the organization is entitled to hold the land. I am talking about the organization as having been established. Obviously, we are not talking about well-known religious organizations, such as the Anglican church, near and dear to the heart of the government leader—

Mr. Nixon: We have our own bill.

Mr. Warner: —or the Roman Catholic church or the United Church, and so on. We are talking about other organizations, one of which is the Church of Scientology, about which I raised a question earlier during second reading which was never answered. I asked whether or not it would be covered. The government chose not to respond to that. I believe they are covered under this bill. Further, I believe they could, if they wished, embark on establishing a plaza or a store or a company on lands they acquired for religious purposes and derive an income from that free of taxes for the land because it is established as land for religious purposes. That is the part I am trying to zero in on.

I may be wrong. That is why I said earlier, that I have a question about it because there is some doubt in my mind. If you can satisfy my doubt, I will not place an amendment. But at this point you haven't said anything which satisfied my doubt that under section 10 a religious organization is able to establish itself tax free on land acquired for religious purposes, set up a business or a company or a plaza or some commercial enterprise, derive profit from it and not have to pay taxes. I see section 10 as the loophole through which they can do that.

Perhaps you can satisfy my mind that that is not correct.

Mr. Bradley: What a cynical mind!

Mr. Cureatz: Cynical.

Mr. Warner: No, only inquisitive.

Mr. Sterling: As I mentioned before, this bill is basically a bill constructed to provide a method of holding the land. If an organization doesn't fall within the confines of this bill, it must hold it as any other organization might hold it. If it wants to do it in a perpetual sense, it would have to incorporate a company and have that company hold the land. As the shareholders and the directors change, then the company could hold the land now and could hold it 100 years from now.

This bill allows that process to go on through the use of trustees. This bill has nothing to do with taxation at all in the municipal sense, the income tax sense or any other sense. It only identifies religious organizations in terms of how they can hold the land and convey that land in the future.

The intent of this section is to give the religious organization which has chosen to hold the land in this way the rights most other land holders have; that is, to lease land they are not using for a period of time. As I mentioned, it has nothing to do with taxation, so they can't avoid the tax laws by proving they are a religious organization under this bill. They would have to go to other taxation legislation, the Assessment Act—

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Assessment Act and all kinds of other acts.

Mr. Sterling: —which has nothing to do with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

(Applause).

Mr. Breithaupt: One doesn't often hear such applause from so many at one time.

Mr. Bradley: A tremendous acclamation.

Mr. Breithaupt: In discussing with the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere his concerns on this matter of the possibility of holding land as a means of avoiding taxation, I had suggested to him that I thought, for municipal purposes, the Assessment Act would be able to ensure any commercial operation would be so assessed. In addition, I was of the opinion the income tax regulations would also acquire for the crown, either provincially or federally, the requisite amount of tax from any commercial operation, even though an ultimate benefit might flow to the group, the congregation or the religious organization that held title to the property.

In that instance, I suppose, an area of land which might not be required out of a parcel could be developed into a shopping plaza or an office building or whatever else it might be. However, it would be my view that the normal taxation rules of assessment and also income or corporate tax would apply and, therefore, the holding of title to the property would not avoid any commercial involvement and the taxes which would properly flow from that operation.

Of course, if the land was held and the title was of such involvement that the organization was trying to avoid taxes, then the courts could be turned to to see if that residence or auditorium was being used for religious purposes compared with the office building or the plaza. That would be my interpretation. If the parliamentary assistant can confirm that that is his view as well, maybe that answers the concerns of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Sterling: That is exactly my understanding of this piece of legislation. It's the use of the land that governs the taxation of it and not how it is owned or who owns it. Income tax depends upon the nature of the enterprise and not upon the fact that the land may have been acquired originally for religious purposes and then leased out under this particular act.

Mr. Lawlor: Has the parliamentary assistant personally checked this out in terms of the Municipal Act, the Assessment Act, et cetera? There is a designation here as a religious organization and the religious organization has built-in exemptions.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Only for the sanctuary. Even the clergyman's house is taxable.

Mr. Lawlor: I know the clergyman's house is brought within the tax dimension generally.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Anything that is not considered to be the sanctuary is taxable.

Mr. Lawlor: There's no diminution of tax with respect to any other portion of the property at all?

Mr. Warner: You're worth at least a nuisance tax.

Mr. Lawlor: It's a curious matter. Such a case arose three years ago before the justice committee on private bills. True, it tended to be in the opposite direction, namely, that the organization in question was renting from a commercial operation and wished a tax exemption to which it wasn't entitled in that particular context. We recommended to the Metropolitan council that they alleviate them from the tax.

Okay, I'll accept that.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps one happy result of this evening is that the provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is in his place. Perhaps the Treasurer might confirm that the holding of title in this manner would in no way alleviate anyone from the taxes to which they would be properly required to pay. I am sure that the provincial Treasurer would not see this legislation as in any way loosening his grasp upon revenue or indeed rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's.

Mr. Conway: He looks like Caesar's wife.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The member for Renfrew North looks like one of Caesar's grandchildren.

Mr. Sterling: There is no designation of any kind under this act. All there is is a right to use trustees to hold land. This isn't any different from the existing law now. Taxes are determined without regard to this particular act.

Mr. Warner: In section 10(5), I am wondering if the parliamentary assistant could explain the reason for the three-year term.

Mr. Sterling: I think this is just a recommendation of the law reform commission in coming to some reasonable term under a general authorization, rather than having to call a general meeting to further the commitment for another three-year term.

Again, we are not held to this particular figure. I am informed that it wasn't the Ontario Law Reform Commission. It was just arbitrarily picked as a relatively short period of time in order not to have to go back again and again for authority when the trustees have a lessee who they want to roll over continually every three years.

Mr. Warner: On the question of the law reform commission, and certainly granting that the government is always arbitrary, it still doesn't explain why it is three and not two or four or some other period of time.

You showed some faith in allowing a 40-year lease, but you had to have a three-year term. I still don't understand the purpose of having the three years. Why is that significant?

Mr. Sterling: I don't think the three years is significant. We are at the disposal of the House. If you want to make an amendment to make it four years or two years, we are quite willing to accept it. We are just picking a figure of a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Breithaupt: I would think that in a variety of lease opportunities, whether it is for some parking spaces that aren't needed or whatever, an annual or even a two-year lease would be a normal sort of thing. I would have only presumed that other than half the cabinet wanting two and half wanting four, and this being a satisfactory division or compromise, this would presumably be a practical, almost minimal kind of term which would not require specific authorization. I have no quarrel with the three years.

Section 10 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the parliamentary assistant have an amendment to section 11?

Mr. Sterling: Yes, I have an amendment to add a section.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that the bill be amended by renumbering sections 11 to 30 as sections 12 to 31, respectively, and by adding thereto the following section:

"11. The trustees of a religious organization may, upon such terms and conditions as the organization may by resolution approve, grant easements or enter into covenants in respect of land held by them."

Mr. Warner: I would like an explanation about the granting of easements. My understanding of the Municipal Act is that the easements generally come under municipal control, which means there would then be a conflict between the religious organization and the municipality.

Mr. Sterling: In an easement, there is a person who gives the easement and then there is a person who takes the easement—or a body which takes the easement and a body which gives the easement. This is designed specifically to give the trustees the same power they would have if they were incorporated or held the land as an individual where one could grant an easement for a sewer to go across the lands, whether it has to do with heritage easements with the Ministry of Culture and Recreation or agreements that any other body can enter into. As we have been specific as to the powers the trustees have with the land, it was felt this was an additional power those trustees should have to deal with the property.

Motion agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

Section 12, as renumbered, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will refer, if I may, to the numbering as we have it in the bill and proceed on that basis, although this does change it.

Sections 12 to 14, as printed, agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Breithaupt: I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, whether this approach was to develop a new provincial holiday. It would appear all of us in this chamber and indeed across the province are going to be busy scurrying around and checking into the respective books of the organizations to which we happen to belong. So on the first Monday in June very little will be done other than to page through resolutions in the variety of sanctuaries that dot this province. I hope this is not just a means of establishing a new provincial holiday, but I will take the parliamentary assistant's word for it.

An hon. member: Trustees' Day.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, Trustees' Day; that's great.

Mr. Sterling: This is not to be a new religious holiday.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I rise again in this section as I have in others, anticipating I will once again not get an answer from the government, whether or not the Church of Scientology is included in this act. I have asked that on every opportunity and the government chooses not to answer my question. I do not understand why. Who can explain stubbornness?

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I did not want to mention any specific religious organization, or any organization—as to whether or not they are included in this act. But I mentioned to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere before if they qualified under section 1(b) of the act, the Church of Scientology could apply to a court under section 23 if they want to go through that process to qualify to hold land in this way. They are quite entitled to do so. I do not know whether they are within this act or not; I do not know that much about their organization. That organization now holds its land through a corporation, as I understand it, so it would not be interested in this act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I believe this refers back to the original discussions we had with respect to section 1. While I am not debating the merits of the section, is it not correct that in the explanation given at that point any religious organization had to fulfill three conditions? Then, for descriptive purposes only, you refer to a number of groups which are automatically included. That, therefore, does not exclude anyone.

Indeed, I suppose, if some groups said they were, for example, of the Buddhist faith, that would likely mean that questions with respect to subsections 1, 2, or 3 might not be pursued. They would have simply been accepted because of those observations that they were of that faith. It is where other groups might choose to become involved, as suggested by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere in that example, that they might have to satisfy those three points. If such is the case, then every group, including his example or any of the others, are included. Is that not correct?

Mr. Sterling: That is exactly correct.

Mr. Warner: The perceptive member for Kitchener has put the issue again. I just wish when we started, when we were in second reading, that the parliamentary assistant had said that straight away. All I can say is that when we pass this bill, as I expect we are going to do this evening, the government had better be aware that certain groups outside of the commonly known organized groups of religious organizations are likely to apply for land holdings. That includes the Church of Scientology and there are many others. I hope the parliamentary assistant is aware of that and is prepared to deal with it.

It tests our religious tolerance to a certain extent, there is no question about that. On the other hand, we also know that we have a Mr. Hill, who is conducting an examination. All of those people he is examining, I submit, are included, in this bill. They can apply for the holding of lands for religious purposes. I hope the government is prepared to deal with it, because I think you have opened a can of worms, quite frankly.

Mr. Sterling: I would just say again that this is only a method of holding land. I draw the member's attention to section 15, which we are now dealing with and which actually provides for more scrutiny than they would have to go through if they were incorporated. If someone wanted to be covert about their motives for holding land they certainly wouldn't choose this particular act.

Section 15, as printed, agreed to.

Sections 16 to 30, inclusive, as printed, agreed to.

Bill 93 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill, with amendment.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANCY AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 108, An Act to amend the Public Accountancy Act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, this bill is introduced to include a new section which changes the procedure for amending the licensing of public accountants. The public accountants are charging $25 for the licence now. They need $50 in order to properly discipline their own profession, and it's necessary to go through this change in order to achieve that end.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kitchener. (Applause).

Mr. Breithaupt: I'm not really overwhelmed but I'm somewhat surprised.

I realize this is not a bill with particular substance to it but I just had one question before we agree that these opportunities for changing fees should be allowed by regulation. Does the parliamentary assistant have any suggestion as to the schedule of fees that is going to be charged? This $25 maximum figure could quite clearly be out of date. Is there some prospect or some information he can give us as to the expectations in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary assistant must realize we're in second reading and a member only speaks once to the bill.

Mr. Roy: You don't want to get caught like Reuben Baetz. He got up too early.

Mr. Warner: We will support the bill on second reading. I find it rather curious, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is drafted in such a way as to give the appearance the fee will be set by a self-governing body of the public accountants' council, when in fact the government is setting the licence fee.

The section we're being asked to approve says, "subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council." That means that regardless of whatever amount is set by the public accountants' council, the government can veto that. It's really a government bill. It's probably inspired by the Treasurer, who wishes to extract extra amounts of money from those people he probably views as earning substantial incomes and can well afford to pay more than the $25 established in 1950. Be that as it may, it's a government bill, and surely the government could have been more forthright and simply have said, "We want to tax these people who are public accountants." Because that's what the bill does.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's their money for them.

Mr. Warner: But we'll support it.

Mr. Roy: Apart from getting up, Mr. Speaker, and with your indulgence, recognizing the fact that this evening all of us are honoured to know the member for York Mills is celebrating her 31st wedding anniversary this evening—

Mr. Nixon: The other principals in the wedding party are in the gallery.

Mr. Roy: I hope so because, as I expressed to the member, I would like to meet her husband.

Mr. Nixon: I hope you had better things to do on the other 30 than this.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Duty calls.

Mr. Nixon: What devotion.

Mr. Roy: I just want to ask the parliamentary assistant how it is the accountants have been able to get away with the same fee since 1950. I was reading recently that of all the professions, the accountants—and I don't have anything against accountants; they're fine people, fine professionals, very competent and all that—

Interjection.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I know. My colleague tells me it's for their own licences. It's unusual that a profession, which of all the professionals has had the highest increase in remuneration over the last 10 years, is fortunate enough to have kept their licensing fee at the same level since 1950. I suppose maybe that's one reason—if they were able to do that with their own association and were able to do it with their other expenses, possibly that's why their income has increased so much. I would say to my colleague from York Mills, if she compares the medical profession's increase over the last 10 years to that of the accountants, they really look like pikers. It is unusual that this has taken place—

Mr. Nixon: It doesn't compare with the lawyers' increase, after all.

Mr. Roy: My colleague mentions the lawyers.

Mr. Speaker: That's not a principle of this bill, though.

Mr. Roy: I hope not, because he is usually off the principle when he talks about lawyers.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that lawyers are not much further ahead than the doctors; so certainly we are in support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this bill? If not, the honourable the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer why they have been able to hold their licence fees so low, but I think the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere should know that these fees go to the professional association and have nothing to do with the Treasurer's bank accounts. They are strictly used by that association and have nothing to do with us.

We are establishing a maximum under their professional act. We have established a maximum in the past of $25; they only reached that in the recent past and have found that it is too low at this time to carry out their functions within their organization. This section is in tune with most of the other professional associations, whereby the Lieutenant Governor does approve the increases for the associations.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 109, An Act to amend the Evidence Act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, the act, I feel, is self-explanatory. It provides for copies of the statutes of Ontario to be translated into the French language as outlined in the throne speech of this year.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kitchener. (Applause.)

Mr. Warner: There are fewer this time.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in favour of Bill 109.

A week or so ago an interesting item came across my desk from some association or other that was involved—in their own view, at least—with the preservation of the English language in Ontario. They, in their comments, suggested that the ramparts should be manned because the government of Ontario was doing things through the back door that it dared not do through the front door. That, at least, was their point of view, which is one that I trust is not shared by too many people within this province.

It is certainly long overdue that the proper translation of statutes should not, in any way, be compromised in its use in the courts where those persons of French language within Ontario would have the opportunity of otherwise using them. The necessity to prove a translation is a difficult one, requiring certain attestations, and I think this is an opportunity to clarify that matter once and for all.

I would appreciate hearing generally from the parliamentary assistant as to what statutes now have been translated and will be admitted in evidence. For example, the Evidence Act itself, no doubt, is in translation, and probably a statute such as the Highway Traffic Act. Are there a substantial number of others? Perhaps he could tell us, just as a matter of general interest, even though it may not be particular to this point in this act, what the prospects are for translation of the variety of statutes. I would presume, perhaps, that not absolutely every statute within the province requires to be translated. Some, such as the Highway Traffic Act or the Evidence Act, would have a more immediate use than many others would, such as the Stallions Act or the Bees Act or a variety of others we see if not every day, at last every second day.

Mr. Warner: Picking up on the comments of the member for Kitchener, I agree. I read that material from the society for the preservation of English—was that it? Some such name. It bordered on hate literature, quite frankly. I was appalled, absolutely appalled. I have criticisms of this government and its lack of a stand on French as an official language and I remember all too well that unfortunate moment in our history when the member for Ottawa East had a bill which we all supported and then the Premier (Mr. Davis) ran outside and scuttled the whole thing. I remember that.

Nonetheless, I firmly believe that the members of this assembly for the most part have a very deep commitment to two official languages. The government has made some effort. The government has brought in programs and attempted to establish programs in the French language. I don't think they're forthright enough about it. I don't think they've done enough, but they have done something.

I'm hoping that the parliamentary assistant can tell me—and by raising it now perhaps we will not have to go through the committee stage—I'm interested to know how many statutes of Ontario have been translated into the French language, how many more are to be done and how long it will take to get that done. It's important and it has to be done, the sooner the better. It's a long, involved and arduous process to make sure that all of our courts eventually function in the two languages in the areas where people whose first language is French can be served. It's not happening fast enough for my taste, but maybe it satisfies the government:

I have one other question to raise which is that this bill provides that while the translation into French can be entered as evidence, if there's a conflict the Statutes Act shall prevail. I'd like to know why. I'd like to know why, at the point of conflict between the two, the Statutes Act should prevail over the translation into French. I'll be quite open about it, Mr. Speaker. If the parliamentary assistant can assure me on those two items then I'm prepared to pass the bill on second reading and to avoid the committee stage as well.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak?

Mr. Roy: I'm always pleased to speak in support of this legislation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Moi?

Mr. Roy: Qu'est-ce que tu à dire toi là?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oui.

Mr. Roy: I'm sorry, he was interrupting me and I thought I should deal harshly with him in the other official language.

As I was saying, I'm always pleased to support this type of legislation. On different occasions I've congratulated the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) for showing initiative in this field. I've been critical of the government, of course, on a number of occasions in their delay at not having recognized the situation existing in our courts—the situation, for instance, in the province of Quebec and what they have been able to do for over a century now as compared to what was happening here in Ontario. But steps are being taken. I suppose possibly it is with age and experience in this House, but perhaps I am getting less radical, more mellow and so on.

[9:00]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Oh, never.

Mr. Roy: I hear my friend. I'll never be as conservative as him. He can be sure of that. I don't think I will ever reach that point.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You may mature completely.

Mr. Roy: This Attorney General has in the past shown some initiative. I considered the amendments to the Judicature Act to be for the francophone minority and in the overall scheme of things when we are talking about constitutional reform, national unity and so on, possibly the most significant legislation for Franco-Ontarians since the Education Act back in 1967-68.

It follows that if we are going to allow the use of French in the courts, if cases are going to be pleaded in that language the next step has to be to be able to plead the statutes as well. Of course, it follows that we need translation of statutes. If we get into that, we have to give certain status to the translated version of the statutes. All of this legislation logically follows a process which has been initiated now for some years.

I do want to make certain comments about the approach taken by the government. I do it more out of cynicism than I do out of partisan aggressiveness.

The Minister of Education is smiling and I am not sure if she is smiling because of the occasion or because of what I am saying. Nevertheless, I want to say to my colleagues on different occasions the Premier of this province has taken a pretty harsh and radical approach to demands made by the Franco-Ontarian community. In that sense, I can recall more than a year ago when they were asking for official status for the French language and he came along and in a very tough, harsh, brutal fashion said, "No way, nor will we be taking a single step to give any official recognition to the French language in this province." It was only a few months later we were talking in this House about the Judicature Act. We talk about certain other amendments, and gradually we see a whole process in the field of services being implemented and so on.

When the government is presenting this type of legislation, he is by his actions contradicting his words back in February, but it is part of the process. It is good politics. It is excellent politics for Ontario and I can't deny that. A lot of people in Ontario have the perception the Premier is there defending the status quo and so on. He will get votes for it. We saw it last year dealing with Bill 89. When the bill was presented the Premier came down very harshly, brutally and vetoed it and said, "Nor will we be giving any recognition to official status for the French language," again distorting what the bill was saying. By presenting legislation such as this, a certain status is given.

The point I am trying to make basically is this: It may be an ingenious way of progressing gradually by giving services in this province, and politically speaking, it may be a very good way of doing it without annoying a certain element in this province against this sort of approach, but the government does it in a very subtle fashion. The public perception out there is basically that we are defending the status quo but subtly, underneath it, the government is printing certain things in French. Last year, the Treasurer had the budget speech printed in French and he did it again this year. The government is proposing legislation such as this. This subtle approach or scheme may be, as I say, good politics for Ontario, but I repeat, unfortunately the Premier and the Attorney General have said things on different occasions.

In the province of Quebec they have no perception of what we are doing here. Is it any small wonder that is happening? It seems to me that there should be this perception by people in Quebec, that it's important they know we in Ontario are moving gradually and progressively into that area and proposing legislation such as this.

Now I want to say this to the parliamentary assistant: I think this legislation follows logically, I don't disagree with any parts in it; if we are going to be using translated statutes they should be given certain status, but should there be conflict between the translation and the official version in English, the official version in English prevails. But I want to say this to him, and he can convey this or possibly he can answer it this evening: Having passed the Judicature Act, and having understood at the time that we passed it we would move progressively in allowing the use of French in our courts, we started doing it over the past two or three years now in the Ottawa area—at the provincial level, at the criminal division; and we've gone into the family court and so on. What are we waiting for, for instance in areas like that of my good colleague, who I'm sure is interested in this, the member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger)? What are we doing there? For instance, why don't we have French in the courts at the county level or the provincial level all the way up? What are we waiting to do?

Look at what they did in New Brunswick on May 1, allowing the use of French in the courts. I mean that was the purpose of passing the Judicature Act; that was the purpose of the federal government making amendments to the Criminal Code. What is going to be the use of a bill such as this if there are no courts in the French language?

What is the delay? We understood the situation last year, my colleague the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and I, when we discussed it with the Attorney General; we said to him, "Yes, we understand that you move progressively in certain areas, at certain levels of the courts." I say to the parliamentary assistant, what's been the delay? I'd like to see amendments such as this have some use; to feel we're not just going through an academic exercise in passing legislation such as this. I want to know, from him, what is in store. He has our full support, and there's no question that he has the support of my colleagues to the left, but let's show that we're doing something, let's not just pass legislation.

I really do think that in some areas of the province, and I mentioned the area of my colleague, the member for Prescott and Russell, as one area where there is great interest in this. I say to him: When 85 per cent of the people in his area are French-speaking—the judge is French-speaking, the crown attorney; everybody is French-speaking, what are we waiting for?

Mr. Belanger: And everything in L'Original is in French; and you know that.

Mr. Roy: Well, Albert, you haven't gone—

Mr. Warner: Then formalize it; put it in the statutes.

Mr. Roy: If I've done nothing else I've got him going; way to go, I'm with him all the way. But if he thinks that everything in the courts in L'Original is in French he has been to the wrong court. He's been sticking around family court only, only provincial courts. Has he been to the county courts recently out there and seen what's going on?

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the member for Ottawa East that he should confine his remarks to what is in the bill, not what has been left out of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I got carried away, I apologize for that, but my aggressive colleague from Prescott and Russell got on my nerves; he became provocative.

I say to the parliamentary assistant, we are in full support of what he is doing. Convey our best to the Attorney General, we appreciate the leadership he has given here, but let's see some action. We're giving him the jurisdiction under the Judicature Act, and this amendment to the Evidence Act, but let's make some use of it. After all, it's not an academic exercise, it's for real people, who have real problems out there and let's give them a chance to use it.

Mr. Conway: Wait until they hear about this in Chesterville.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Renfrew North interject from his own seat?

Mr. Lawlor: Exactly, if he is going to blow a pibroch let him blow it in the right quarters.

Mr. Warner: Better still from outside the chamber.

Mr. Lawlor: Very shortly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know in the reply, in order probably to avoid the necessity of taking it into committee, which I don't think is necessary, how and who is doing this translation; and whether Arthur Stone is studying French so that he may check it out very assiduously.

Second, I would like to know, if the parliamentary assistant is clued in, how they handle the matter in Quebec on the contrary, particularly in the light of the rather curious clause written into the section. That clause: "But in the event of a conflict between the version published under the Statutes Act, and the French language translation, the version published under the Statutes Act shall prevail." I will bet dollars that is not the way it is set up in Quebec; that there is total equality as between the two and they are au fond with respect to the uses of the languages such that either version has complete equality of status.

I would like to hear the parliamentary assistant's explanation of this particular clause. Is it because of the predominancy of English here? Do we set the norm on the English aspect and, if some putative conflict arises, we give paramountcy to the English version? I just find it curious and would like to hear an explanation.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I will try to address my remarks to the points raised by the various members in the debate.

There is an intention that there will be somewhat more than 150 acts translated within the next period of time; it will take approximately about four to five years to do it properly. At the present time the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act, the Ministry of Northern Affairs Act, the Retail Business Holidays Act, the Development Corporations Act and the Human Tissue Gift Act have been all translated and published at this point in time. Three more will be published by the end of the month. They are the General Welfare Act and the regulations under that act, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and the Family Law Reform Act, which is already translated, but there will be a revision of the original translation.

The second point that was raised was with reference to the part of the bill which says the French translation must defer to the version under the Statutes Act. The fact of the matter is that the legislation under the Statutes Act is and has been passed in the Legislature in English and, therefore, it has to be the prime language when a conflict occurs.

The member for Lakeshore brought up the situation in the province of Quebec. I am informed that, under the government's recent language bill, French is the only official version and the English translation is totally unofficial although it could be challenged at this time.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid having the bill go to committee, may I ask one question of the parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Speaker: Well, it is not customary, and I don't want it to be a precedent.

Mr. Breithaupt: I referred to the Evidence Act itself and to the Highway Traffic Act, two items which presumably would be very high in priority, because those would be statutes used very much so by persons of the French language. Can the parliamentary assistant advise me if or when those two statutes will be available?

Mr. Roy: What is the delay in going forward on the Judicature Act? You didn't answer my question?

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, while I am receiving some advice in relation to the member's question, I would like to indicate to the member for Ottawa East that the Attorney General has indicated he will be implementing Bill C-42 under the Criminal Code to provide for bilingual indictable offence trials anywhere in Ontario, subject to a change in venue where necessary. He has committed himself to that being proclaimed before the end of this year. I know that doesn't answer all the member's questions. I have to defer his questions to the Attorney General on the other areas he raised.

In relation to the question asked by the member for Kitchener, the Highway Traffic Act is very high in terms of priority and is expected to be done within the next year. The Evidence Act is lower as it tends to be lawyers' law, and as there are very many pressures for various acts. What we are trying to do is the make priorities those that are of the most public concern.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Administration of Justice Act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, basically this bill amends the Administration of Justice Act to transfer the jurisdiction for fees for services within the court system from the rules committee to the government or orders in council. Basically these are administrative procedures and do not relate to things in which the rules committee are that interested. They are for such costs as issuing a writ of summons, subpoena, issuing a copy of a judgement or order, setting down an action for trial, filing a notice of appeal, for service of documents by the sheriff, the mileage charges related to the service of documents and other administrative services the Attorney General is providing that do not relate specifically to the matter before the court.

The rules committee will still maintain jurisdiction over setting fees allowed to a solicitor pursuant to an order of a judge, either on a party and party basis or otherwise; the counsel fee including preparation for trial; the brief of trial; written argument, et cetera. The party and party costs are all subject to a taxing master after they are heard.

Basically, the problem is these administrative costs are rising and we are unable to provide the service at the old costs. We would like to keep them more in tune with the actual costs of the services so we can offer better service in the county court office and in the Supreme Court office. Often, we hear complaints from lawyers that they are quite willing to pay more for the service if they could, for instance, get additional personnel in those offices to serve them at the counter and that kind of thing. This will allow us more leeway to bring the fees charged more in line with the costs to the government.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the time of the various rule-making bodies for each of the courts has to be used to best advantage. We have an opportunity here to have one co-ordination of the variety of charges that are made so that we will have both consistency and the proper proportion as to the costs and the time spent, as well as the other matters that are looked into. I believe in this circumstance the manner of dealing with it by regulation is a satisfactory one because we are dealing with a series of payments almost in a mechanical way for a variety of services which are being provided.

As I mentioned, the groups that are charged with the responsibility of making changes to the various rules have certainly much better things to do with their time than to worry about minor changes in fee structures. If this can be done in a more consistent and efficient way, then we will certainly support the bill.

Mr. Warner: We will support the principle of the bill, but I am a bit puzzled. I had read back to the act of 1968 and those of 1970 and 1971 and had tried to follow the progression of events, where the section was put in, repealed and then put in again.

I understand that, until this bill we are operating under the 1971 amendments. I don't see anything in that act which precludes doing what the government purports to want to do in Bill 110 which is before us tonight. For example, I don't know why what it wishes to accomplish in having the Lieutenant Governor in Council fix the fees, rather than have this done by the rules committee, can't be done under the existing legislation. If it can't, that is fine. Obviously, the government has determined that it can't be and that is why it has the legislation in front of us. But unless I have missed something—and maybe I have as I'm a novice at this business—it seems to me the 1971 act to amend the Administration of Justice Act, 1968, provides the power required to set the fees. There isn't anything in that act which precludes it.

From the way I read it, it allows the rules committee to set the fees, but it would also allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to do it by regulation.

Mr. Lawlor: I think my colleague makes a good point on that. The wording is slightly different. It is directed to services in the earlier statute, rather than as it reads here, court proceedings in any court. It is a question of terminology and of how one construes it. I would be most interested in hearing the parliamentary assistant's answer to that.

I have a couple of other points and rather than go into committee I will raise a couple of questions. This bill mentions that this particular power is being taken away from the rules committee to be reposed in the solitary bosom of the ministry. It does have one beneficial effect. The scale of fees with respect to these diverse matters—the issuance of writs, taking judgement and so on—differs vis-à-vis the various courts, although there is uniformity, I think, within the sheriff's office itself with respect to matters of service. At least now the bill sets it up in a rational way and there will be certain uniformity between the county court and the Supreme Court with respect to those internal court matters.

The parliamentary assistant said he wanted to keep it in tune with the escalating needs. Sometimes as far as law is concerned, I think it must be in tune with the infinite. Court costs, including the kind of fees he is talking about in issuance of documents, are escalating at such an enormous pace that it is probably better in most instances for human beings to bear the affliction from which they suffer than to launch into court proceedings. The cost at the end of the day will outdistance any benefit they may gain.

That is becoming increasingly a sore in the system and by sheer monetary weight it overcomes and trespasses upon the whole realm of the administration of justice in this province and, apparently, all over the place.

Have members seen court costs and legal bills, et cetera, recently with respect to even a week's trial? If anyone thinks it's worth suing for $5,000 and be tied up in proceedings for a week or two, he'll find that he's out of pocket, even if he wins.

I'm hoping Williston, when he comes in, will bring in some nostrums with respect to this. What I'm saying is this: watch those costs.

The Attorney General's is one of the few ministries in this government that is self-financing—or darn close to being so. One shouldn't try to make a profit on the deal. It's not the role of justice and the minister should try to keep those fees down.

Mr. Sterling: I can assure the member for Lakeshore the intention is not for the Attorney General to make a profit on any of the fees that would be charged. We would like to make it more in tune with a user-pays principle in terms of some of the services we provide.

As to the question by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere in relation to the present act, there is some question as to whether the present act provides the jurisdiction to charge all these administration fees we think should be under the order in council. This act is drafted in order to clarify exactly what we are allowed to charge. If he checks the previous section of the act, he will find it is more restrictive.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, this bill really strikes off in two or three different directions to correct three or four areas which needed housekeeping amendments.

First of all, section 1 deals with defining an associate chief justice so that he is enabled to sit on the rules committee as an associate chief justice and qualifies for that office.

One of the sections, section 4, deals with interest after judgement. I believe in 1977 we formally amended section 38 of the Judicature Act in order to deal with interest prior to judgement. This is to take care of the case for interest on judgements after they are made.

Section 6 deals with the reorganizing of the rules committee and goes through various changes within that particular rules committee.

Section 5 deals with the divisional court in dealing with the appeals heard to the divisional court where they can in fairly minor matters instead of being heard by a panel be heard by one judge of the divisional court.

I expect to take this particular piece of legislation to committee as I have one amendment to section 5.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, in looking at Bill 111 it somewhat reminds me of what one hears about in high schools and universities these days—that is grade inflation.

In this instance we're going to be dealing with rank inflation, because whereas before this act is passed we have senior judges and judges, now we're going to have judges and junior judges. I'm sorry, it's the reverse.

Before this bill is passed we would have judges and junior judges. And, of course, when the bill is passed we will have senior judges and judges.

I don't know that it would have made too much difference which way the province would have gone in legislation such as this. However, it would appear that we don't want to call anyone a junior judge in future.

This same circumstance we see in a bill like this where we're adding additional terms to the word "judge." I realize that this other bill, Bill 112 I think, refers to the junior judge circumstance, but in this area we're dealing with other minor things, really. We are going to add the registrar of the Supreme Court to the rules committee. We're going to deal with—the final point—the registrar as secretary of the rules committee—a variety of items which will, I think, be useful and none of them particularly earth-shattering but certainly all of which we will support.

Mr. Warner: The parliamentary assistant will be relieved to know that we're supporting this bill.

It seems to me, as I read through it, there is something in the bill which begs some definition and that is the term "prime rate"—how it's to be determined; whether it will be set by regulation; whether there will be a mechanism for review. Will there be an automatic way of altering the prime rate? How will you determine it?

My understanding is that at one time it was about five per cent and recently it's been established by the courts that the rate which is applied is about 10 per cent. Obviously it's an arbitrary amount, but I'd like to know about it. I agree with the idea of establishing the prime rate. That's fine, but I'd like to know whose measurement you're going to use; how you're going to determine it and why you wouldn't put it in as a definition in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Call the Bank of Canada. Did you ever hear of them?

Mr. Warner: That's not what it says in the bill—to the Minister of Transportation and Communications who is interjecting from someone else's seat.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Right. Mine's occupied.

Mr. Warner: If it was meant that the prime rate of the Bank of Canada be put in then it should say so. That's what should be put in, the prime rate of the Bank of Canada, or a definition: "Prime rate means the Bank of Canada prime rate."

Hon. Mr. Snow: The Bank of Canada is in good hands. Two or three weeks ago, not so good.

Mr. Roy: How would you know?

Mr. Warner: The Minister of Transportation and Communications may want to defend sloppy draftsmanship, but I don't.

Mr. Roy: The minister's wrong on that one. The dollar went down since the Tories took over federally.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes, but do you know why?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: I'd like to know then, if that's the case, is it to be altered yearly?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has the floor.

Mr. Warner: There's a considerable amount of static in this chamber, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: It's the provincial Legislature.

Mr. Warner: It's a curious thing about section 5—I was hoping that the parliamentary assistant would speak to it—as to why it would be determined to have one judge only instead of three. It would appear to me that there are matters which are dealt with in the divisional court in which it is prudent to have three judges instead of one. I'd be interested to know the parliamentary assistant's view as to why that was changed.

Just one last point of curiosity is that section 6 reduces the number of judges on the rules committee by one. It may not be significant but, again, any time the government chooses to make a change I want to know why. Why do they make that change?

Those are the particular questions I have. Again, in an effort to be expedient and co-operative, if those questions can be answered then we need not go through the committee stage.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise in support of this legislation. There are certain matters in the bill, of course, that are housekeeping and are interesting. My colleague mentioned the following bill where we'll deal with judges and junior judges, but I notice that part of this bill mentions the rank and precedence of judges. That's always important to determine this rank and precedence to keep our members of the judiciary pleased.

To me, the most important aspect of the housekeeping amendment is section 4, dealing with interest. You will recall, as the parliamentary assistant mentioned, that back in 1977 amendments were brought forward to section 38 of the Judicature Act allowing interest on judgements or on the liquidated amount of damages prior to judgement. I want to tell the House that I thought that was a very significant amendment.

In many claims, but mostly in motor vehicle claims when we were dealing with insurance companies, very often on large claims it was to the advantage of the insurance company to wait and not settle an action until they arrived at the courtroom door because at that point they were better off. It was cheaper for them to hold off. The high rate of legal fees and so on didn't really come into being until you started the actual trial. That's when costs really started getting heavy. In fact, the delays were caused because there was no interest. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, the amendments to section 38 have encouraged settlements because from the day of the accident when notice of claim is given and that there will be a claim and possibly a claim for interest under the Judicature Act, there's an incentive, a built-in incentive for people who owe money to pay this amount prior to dilly-dallying in the courts because they know they'll have to pay interest on it. I thought that was a very significant amendment.

As I recall, at the time we were discussing the legislation I wondered why it was that we stopped at the judgement. Why did we not allow interest on the judgement after it was given until the time that it was paid? As I recall, we were told that after the judgement the jurisdiction over interest was within the purview of the federal government. I don't have the Hansard here but I recall that aspect being mentioned when we were discussing the matter of interest. Possibly the parliamentary assistant can enlighten me. I remember being told that up until the time of judgement, interest was within the realm of provincial jurisdiction, but after judgement it came within the competence of the federal government.

Being annoyed about this, some time ago I wrote to the federal Minister of Justice saying, "Look, it seems to me that there is a certain anomaly here, that interest can be paid until the judgement is given or awarded but after it's awarded there is no interest." The result of this is that it encouraged—I saw it in different cases—undue delays on the part of people owing judgements to pay these judgements. In fact, there may be some encouragement even to fool around, to put in a notice of appeal for a period of time and possibly delay paying the judgement for six months to a year. The interest at that point I think was at a fixed rate of only five or six per cent, which was absolutely ridiculous.

I would like some enlightenment as to why the province feels it can establish interest at prime rate after judgement. I think it is an important step. I see no reason why interest should not be paid at prime rate before and after judgement.

All of these are factors that encourage people to settle actions; to complete actions to finality.

I also notice that in subsection 2 the judge will have a certain amount of discretion either to disallow the interest or to fix the rate of interest higher or lower than the prime rate. I just wonder how one goes about doing that if the judgement has already been awarded. Which judge are we referring to? Would it be the appeal judge who would be fixing interest at a higher or lower amount?

My question to the parliamentary assistant is this: Once you obtain a judge's decision and you are awarded judgement, who decides after that point? Which judge are we referring to who will have the discretion to disallow interest under this section? Do we go back to the trial judge at that point to determine whether the interest should be higher or lower or whether the date should be different?

I suppose, out of necessity, this section does not apply to a verdict rendered or judgement given before this section comes into force. I just wish there were some other way of doing that. I feel it should apply as of the date the section is proclaimed. The sooner we include the largest number of awards and judgements under a section such as this, the better it is going to be.

Section 5 deals with appeals to the divisional court. I guess these appeals are coming from small claims courts. My colleague has asked why that section is needed. As I understand it, appeals from—I always get confused when talking about appeals as to how you end up in divisional court or in Court of Appeal; which go where.

Mr. Breithaupt: You always win your cases, so you'd never know.

Mr. Roy: That's right. I seldom have the problem of going to that level. But I must say I am confused.

Talking about divisional court, I really wonder whether it was needed; whether we couldn't have just had a High Court on all matters, whether dealing with statutory procedures or otherwise. I don't want to offend anybody, certainly not the members of that court, because the judges of divisional court are judges of the High Court who sit on that, but I must admit I get confused as to how you end up in divisional court or High Court and so on.

Our system of courts is still somewhat confusing. I think the Attorney General could show some leadership in making the process a bit more simple so that the lay people might understand it. If the lawyers are confused, we can have some sympathy with the people on the street.

The other matters in the bill, as my colleague has said, are basically of a housekeeping nature, and I do not have much to say on them, although I say again that I am pleased to see section 4 dealing with interest; it is something that I think is long overdue.

I would like to hear the parliamentary assistant's comments. Am I confused? Somebody kept telling me it was federal jurisdiction after judgement.

Mr. Lawlor: Just a couple of points, Mr. Speaker: This is a pretty disparate bill—disparate too. One has to take it almost section by section. Just to comment on the second one—the supernumerary judges situation—and this business of seniority from the time of appointment, et cetera. Supernumerary judges would no doubt have, overwhelmingly, the seniority. Therefore their ranking in appointment would remain substantially as it is today. This is not of great consequence to the Attorney General or me but among the judges it is a matter of great importance as to who gets the perks. "I have this office with the bathroom attached."

Mr. Roy: They're not really any different from MPPs.

Mr. Speaker: Meanwhile, back at the bill.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, back to the ranch. He is to be commended on section 4 on interest. It's a very wise move to broaden that out and give discretionary powers to whatever judge it is—the trial judge basically—in this determination. It gives him a double weapon in court, doesn't it? He has control over the costs with respect to the lawyers' fees and as to his handling of the matter and can milk them in costs if he wished to do that. On the other hand he can direct his attention to the interest situation as it affects the client with respect to lowering and varying it throughout. I think the greatest ambit that can possibly be given to judges in the courts is a dimension of the justice that may be administered at that end.

The single judge sitting in the divisional court: The subsection has to do with final orders proceeding from a master, on appeal. I can't take much exception to that. I'm just wondering whether in the (b) part of that there might be something like "on consent of the party."

In a matter where the judge is satisfied from the nature of the issue—and the minister doesn't seek to give any delineation of what those issues might be—and the necessity for expedition can and ought to be heard by a single judge. I say: "Sure, provided that the parties are in agreement." But normally there are three judges and that court is set up in a very special way for very specific purposes. In a sort of division from the court of appeal process as it was known in ancestral times, this is a new court, relatively speaking—it's only been in existence in the last few years. I'm saying that type of arbitrary power ought not to be reposed at this time in its history in that court. I ask the parliamentary assistant in any event to think about it and to give me some indication of his response in this matter. I much prefer and I'm sure he does, the three judges sitting there, where there are many others appointed to that court.

It has become an extremely busy court, handling all those rights matters within the Statutory Powers Procedure Act and that whole package of prerogative writs and all this kind of thing. So I think we have to be very careful about reposing the power in a single judge.

As I understand it in the instance an appeal may be taken from that court on a multiple range of matters to the Court of Appeal itself; it is not a final court. Do the provisions with respect to that apply to the single judge, or does the member consider that covered within the terms of divisional courts legislation?

Well, yes, the final thing is what we have just covered with respect to the fees under the previous legislation.

Mr. Sterling: As I mentioned in my opening remarks this bill, because of its nature, sort of shoots off in three or four different directions; the matters aren't really related one to the other.

In relation to section 4, in terms of the interest, as I understand it there was some concern about the provincial and federal jurisdiction in this area. The Attorney General is of the opinion that this particular area is an area where there is concurrent jurisdiction basically, both by the federal and the provincial governments, on this particular matter, and they take their power from that—that is their constitutional opinion on their power to create this.

Mr. Roy: You realize its record is no hell on constitutional matters.

Mr. Sterling: The other concern of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere related to how the interest was calculated. I would refer him to section 38 of the Judicature Amendment Act which was passed in the fall of 1977. It ties the prime rate to the rate established by the Bank of Canada, and I believe the Bank of Canada review establishes that each month. Section 38 is a rather lengthy section, but it deals with the various circumstances to delineate exactly what that section might be.

Mr. Lawlor: What is it right now?

Mr. Sterling: I am afraid I couldn't answer that particular question.

The other question in relation to that is that the section refers to a judge and in that instance it refers to the judge who is trying the case. If he makes no order as to the interest, then the interest would run in accordance with section 38 and how it would be calculated out, but it gives him the opportunity either to increase or decrease the interest rate.

Say for instance there was an interest rate on a contractual basis which was much higher than the prime rate, then why should the person after judgement be treated better than before judgement? Or vice versa; the prime interest rate could be much higher than the contracted rate and the judge may say, "Well, the plaintiff is right in seeking a breach, but the breach of the contract may have been sought to collect a debt earlier than its maturity date."

Under section 5 in relation to the divisional court, basically this section and the other section too were introduced at the request of the court. The first section of the bill, section 5(1a)(a), dealing with appeals under section 17(1)(f) of the act, deals with interlocutory matters from the local judge or the master which are generally of a minor nature. I intend to amend the second clause of that, section 5(1a)(b).

I passed to the critics an amendment, so it will read, I would hope, if amended in committee, "in a matter that a justice of the High Court or a judge designated by him is satisfied." Basically, the justice of the High Court would have to be satisfied there was an urgency. This section really is put in there for a case of urgency outside of town where one cannot convene a panel of three judges in a short period of time. I believe there are appeals to divisional court for certiorari or mandamus and often urgency is of prime importance. That is sort of the impact behind that particular section.

As to section 6 regarding the rules committee, I understand the total result of these amendments will basically remove the registrar of the Supreme Court from a secretary and nonvoting member, to a member. The total result of this amendment, I am informed, increases the number on the rules committee by one.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

COUNTY JUDGES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 112, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, basically this bill removes the reference to a junior judge. It makes two kinds of judges: county court judges and a senior county court judge. Before, there was a senior county court judge and junior county court judges. This is done to remove the connotations related to the word "junior" as to the competence of those judges. Really, their jurisdiction in a courtroom is exactly the same, whether they be senior or junior judges, and this is to remove that connotation.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I had made certain remarks on an earlier bill with respect to this item which I will now briefly repeat.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought you were talking about this one.

Mr. Breithaupt: To some extent, of course, it is much like Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Speaker: You mean you are now in order.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, you may remember the race in Alice in Wonderland. As I recall, while quite clearly some had won and some had lost the race, the results were phrased, "All have won and all must get prizes." In this circumstance, we now have judges and junior judges, but we are soon to have senior judges and judges. Presumably, all have won and all must get prizes.

The importance of this inflation of rank is perhaps worthwhile in that it does set out somewhat more clearly the responsibilities within a county that there in fact be a senior judge. This becomes more involved as a number of counties, such as my own, Waterloo, have three or four judges. Indeed, in the more populous counties within the province this is the thing which is happening now, rather than having it only as an exception within Metropolitan Toronto or in fact within the county of York as it then was. Other counties are now developing three and four judges because of their populations.

Presumably, it is better to set out the responsibilities of a senior judge so all the other members of the bench are considered in some form responsible to that person for at least some administrative reasons within the particular county. I note there is an amendment which does develop this further, so the bill will have to go to committee. Other than that, the interesting comment I would have is with respect to the changes in section 18 regarding surrogate courts.

It was my understanding that the appointment of surrogate court judges was not necessarily restrained or restricted to simply one surrogate court judge per county. As a result, I am wondering whether this is any particular change in the practice which had gone on before. I presume that practice was that as many judges of the surrogate courts would be appointed as would be necessary. I am wondering whether this is any particular change to the amendments since 1970, when this section was last amended or at least section 4 of that amendment was changed at that time.

Perhaps if the parliamentary assistant could advise us as to whether there are changes in the surrogate court appointments that might be of interest to the House.

Mr. Warner: If the parliamentary assistant had answered my questions on the last bill, we wouldn't have gone into committee. I'll try on this one. I support the principle of the bill. I have some questions regarding section 18. I certainly agree with the concept that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can remove judges for inability, incapacity or misbehaviour. That might apply to some members of the assembly, but the Lieutenant Governor can't remove any of the members that way. Only the public can do that.

It appears to me that that definition sets the surrogate court judges apart from other judges as to how they will be treated. It also raises a question as to who will establish how this is done. There are very subjective kinds of impressions as regards ability, capacity and misbehaviour. Who establishes these? Are there formal provisions? Who will make the determination and how will it be brought to the attention of the Lieutenant Governor in Council?

Is there a hearing involved? Is there a form of appeal for the person who has been accused of being unable, incapacitated or misbehaving? I would like to be satisfied on those questions. I will put forward again my appeal, which didn't meet with approval in the last bill. If my questions can be answered, we can avoid the committee stage; otherwise, we have to go to committee.

Mr. Bolan: I would like to make a couple of comments on this bill. First of all, I heartily approve of the bill. I think it is long overdue. I could never understand during the last 19 years that I have been practising law what the difference was between a junior judge and a senior judge.

Mr. Roy: Nineteen years?

Mr. Bolan: Yes, 19 years this month in fact.

I have to confess that in many instances the junior judge literally carried the senior judge in and out of the courtroom. I can understand why the senior judge requested a junior judge; he simply could not carry out his duties. It really was a sad commentary on a judicial system, when one saw people getting on in age who would have some younger judge come in who, for all intents and purposes, was doing all the work. He was doing all the appeal work, all of the criminal work and all of the jury work. The so-called senior judge ended up taking motions or hearing uncontested divorces when the proper amendments were made to the Divorce Act to allow matrimonial causes courts.

It certainly is something which is long overdue. I can only say on behalf of all of those junior judges who have been striving so hard over the past years to get rid of this title, which was bestowed upon them by the Ontario Legislature for all of these years, that it is certainly very welcome.

Just as an aside, I might say that the minister still has a long way to go before he gets to the real root of the problem with the county and district court judges, and that is regionalization of your judges. I've spoken about this before in this House, I have spoken to judges about it. As soon as you break up the province into regions, each region then would have a senior judge whose function and whose duty it would be to dispatch county or district court judges throughout that region.

Does the minister know that now, if there are three judges assigned, let's say to Sudbury, there is no way that one of those judges from that district can be compelled, can be ordered under the County Court Judges' Criminal Courts Act, to come down to the district of Nipissing to help the judge who may have an extra heavy load there? That's one of the problems we have, and I would hope the parliamentary assistant would again bring that to the attention of the Attorney General, I certainly have brought that to his attention.

Once we have our county court judges regionalized, we are just one step away from having a complete, unified court system in the province of Ontario, whereby all of the judges, other than provincial judges, all of the so-called section 96 judges who are appointed by the federal government, would all be Supreme Court judges. They would all be in the same classification, such as they have, for example, in the province of Quebec, which I think is the proper way to deal with the judiciary in this province.

Do you know of the horrendous case of the two judges, Mr. Speaker? They were together for quite a long time. One man was 25 years older than the other—this is the opposite case—and continued to be called "junior" throughout the whole thing, particularly by his younger colleague. The man felt so badly over such a long period of time that he could hardly judge. I'm sure he's the one behind this legislation; he must have protested finally and vigorously enough for it to be able to get through.

Why isn't there a judicial council operative in this particular area, as my colleagues say, rather than this rather skimpy, threadbare piece of business with respect to the removal of such judges, that is surrogate court judges?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I think one feels compelled to speak on this bill. As my colleague the member for Nipissing mentioned, if the Attorney General was really serious about making amendments or changes to the Judicature Act or County Courts Act, it seems to me that he could start getting at the root of the thing, at the nub of the thing as my colleague has suggested.

I think many of us in this Legislature, surely my colleague the member for Lakeshore and others, have mentioned this question of regionalization, the distinction between Supreme Court judges and county court judges. It's still a confusing process. We're moving, with the unified family courts, hopefully, in that direction.

But I can't help, when I open this bill and read some 19 or 20 sections which basically deal with one thing, eliminating the word "junior"—

Mr. Bolan: They must have an inferiority complex by now.

Mr. Roy: It makes you wonder, Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the member for Lakeshore was saying, about someone having an inferiority complex if we refer to junior judges in so many sections of the act. When one talks about juniors and seniors, I keep thinking of hockey leagues and something like that. How many occasions have I seen where an older member of the bench would be appointed subsequent to a younger member and here one is considered the senior and the other one is the junior; junior judge such and such, you would see this in the press.

It's certainly an expression to get rid of, and hopefully after this is done, as my colleagues have mentioned here, a lot of judges in Ontario will no longer have this inferiority complex. Let me tell you from experience, Mr. Speaker, many senior judges did not let their colleagues forget that they were junior judges.

It surprises me that section 6 is necessary. Section 6 says: "A senior judge of a county or district court may regulate and supervise the other judges of the court in the exercise of their authority."

I may be confused on this. However, in Ottawa-Carleton it's true we've had some pretty domineering senior judges, but I always thought they had the jurisdiction. They certainly acted like people who had the jurisdiction to regulate and supervise the other judges of the court in the exercise of their authority. I always thought they already had that authority and I'm surprised to see that it's necessary by this amendment.

It says something about the process of judges and courts—and we're spending the whole evening here talking about that process. Can one imagine using 20 sections basically to take the words "junior judges" out of one of our statutes? How those words ever cropped up in there in the first place is beyond my understanding, especially at a time when the appointment to the county court was considered a status symbol. That one would accept the appointment of becoming a county court judge and then turn around and say, "I'm just a junior judge of the county court," sounds contradictory in terms that one would accept that high office and all the status involved and the recognition from society and then be called a junior judge.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, it's my intention to take this into committee as I have a minor amendment to section 6.

Basically, in answer to the inquiry of the member for Kitchener about the appointment of surrogate court judges, there will be no change in that area. In relation to disciplinary action, members will note that this particular bill does not deal with a county court judge in regard to disciplining him. Every surrogate court judge is a county court judge and that falls within the federal jurisdiction. Their appointment and their discipline falls within that purview so that the appeal procedure in relation to disciplinary action falls within the federal jurisdiction and, therefore, it is not dealt with here. That is basically the reason for there not being any appeal procedure set out here.

As I mentioned, I will take it into committee of the whole House. If there are specific questions about specific sections that someone would like to raise again, I would be pleased to answer them.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

PROVINCIAL COURT (CIVIL DIVISION) PROJECT ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 113, An Act for the establishment and conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto for the development of improved methods of processing certain Civil Actions.

Mr. Lawlor: Read that again.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have an opening comment?

Mr. Sterling: Yes. Maybe I should first comment by apologizing to the clerk for the lengthy title of this particular act.

Mr. Lawlor: You well may do so.

Mr. Sterling: This act is basically a trial project—

Mr. Lawlor: It will cost the taxpayers of the province something.

Mr. Sterling: —in Metropolitan Toronto to increase the jurisdiction of the small claims court from $1,000 to $3,000. The idea behind this piece of legislation is to provide wide latitude to a rules committee to formulate rules to deal with actions which fall within this monetary jurisdiction. It is hoped that as a result of this project we will be able to make the litigation process more accessible to the public at a lower cost. In other words, what we're trying to do is establish a procedure which falls somewhere between small claims procedure and the county court procedure for actions of this type.

Mr. Breithaupt: This bill is really the first this evening in a series of bills that has a clearly defined principle to it. We have moved to develop both criminal and family divisions of the provincial courts. Now we have the opportunity to develop, in effect, a civil division by the changes which are being suggested this evening in this bill.

It's true this is to be an experiment in that the act repeals itself on January 1, 1983. What we have generally in the small claims courts around the province is a jurisdiction of $1,000. In this instance we're increasing the jurisdiction to $3,000, but we're also moving to develop a new type of procedure, as the parliamentary assistant mentioned. His comments with respect of developing this as a type of intermediate step between the traditional small claims or division courts, as they used to be called, and the county court system is an interesting one.

I believe we must clearly know the intentions of the Attorney General as he launches out into this particular experiment. My colleague, the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), has particular concern that we perhaps would be better off setting out the mechanics of the court and having those mechanics in place before we substantially increase the jurisdiction. After all, when we are dealing with $3,000 as a jurisdictional level one must be certain that justice is going to be available but not unnecessarily speeded through without the full opportunity of persons to have their cases heard and to have the necessary protection which the courts can give.

I understand, of course, that the proposal here will, we hope, reduce the cost and the delay that causes between that $1,000 and $3,000 figure have in their present existence in the county court system. Certainly the cost and the delay are important factors. Here we have the opportunity of having, hopefully, speedy and adequate justice in the resolution of these particular disputes but at a substantially increased financial level. For many of the persons who will be coming before this court this additional dollar amount is going to be of great personal consequence to them.

We have had the opportunities to see, through trials involving a variety of motor vehicle accidents, that perhaps on some occasions the solicitors acting for insurance companies have all of the tools available to them to possibly delay or postpone actions, tools which the claimant may not have. As we reduce the procedures and have an easier system of dealing with claims, I hope that we will be able to ensure that the average citizen will still be able to have a simplified approach to the court system, which the county court system, with its more particular rules and procedures, does not otherwise allow.

We are, of course, as the project sets out in the second section, using a limited class of civil action. I realize that it's the wish of the Attorney General and the parliamentary assistant, who has had much responsibility in developing and assisting with this project, to get on with the opportunity of sorting out the procedures and the manner in which this experiment is going to take place.

I have raised the point of my colleague from St. George with respect to the dollar amount. The dollar amount is going to be important for many people in Metropolitan Toronto.

It is going to be a difficult matter to deal thoroughly with the balance of keeping these courts easily available to the average citizen without having them bogged down in the rules and procedures of pleadings and other details that are ordinarily the prerogative of lawyers who are appearing in the county and supreme courts within the province. It is going to require the wisdom of Solomon perhaps to set up judicial procedures and to ensure that the people who are involved in these actions, both plaintiffs and defendants, will not be snowed under by procedural niceties or by the difficulties which often come before the other courts.

Some of the pre-trial settlement procedures that now exist in the county and supreme courts are likely going to be built into this kind of system. I am certainly looking forward to seeing just how successful this group, the advisory committee, is going to be in trying to sort out the best of the present division court attitudes with the more practical values of documentation and rules that the county court system now has.

I would appreciate a response from the parliamentary assistant with respect to the persons who are going to be involved under section 8 in the advisory committee. He cites seven persons to be included, namely, the Deputy Attorney General, the senior judge of the provincial court or his nominee, and five others. One of these is going to be a county court judge, and at least two others are going to be members of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Could the parliamentary assistant advise me now the types of qualifications he is expecting for the other two—what will we call them?—citizen appointments? I suppose it would be possible that one or the other of those two could be lawyers as well, but there may be value in other kinds of appointments. I would be interested in hearing the type of person he has in mind to bring what I would presume would be a kind of consumer input into the balance we are seeking in the rules this advisory committee will develop.

On this side of the House we certainly welcome this opportunity for a new departure in the administration of justice within Metropolitan Toronto. I wish the committee well as they attempt to strike that balance to which I referred earlier, and I hope the experiment will be a successful one.

I understand that only full-time judges will be involved in this project; the opportunity for lawyers of 10 years' experience who are ordinarily available in the small claims courts to the county judge who may wish to use them, or who needs to use them from time to time, is something which I think should properly be avoided in this instance.

To have consistency in the development and thoroughness in the project which is being set out, it is best to be using the full-time staff of judges we have—persons who are appointed to familiarize themselves particularly with the small claims procedures and activities—and, therefore, perhaps better able to deal more quickly with the details of cases because of their full-time commitment and involvement in these matters.

As I say, I hope this project is a successful one. If the parliamentary assistant can enlighten me on the details of those other two persons on the advisory committee I would certainly appreciate having that information.

Mr. Warner: I certainly would recommend to my colleagues, and have, any measure by which we can enter at any time into an experiment which might benefit the people in Ontario in having access to the courts with less formality and with a greater opportunity of having their case heard in a way that isn't going to cost them an arm and a leg. Part of the problem, as I understand it, is that through the small claims court process often the cost for legal fees may be more than what a person is going to get back in the settlement. So the person involved thinks twice about going into the court.

I welcome the experiment. I think it's important, but I am very concerned about a number of matters, some of which have been touched on by the member for Kitchener. What procedures will be involved and how will we know how this experiment is proceeding? An advisory committee will be set up, but will that committee be reporting—I know it's reporting to the Attorney General—to the Legislature?

I think it's important that the advisory committee report to the Legislature, and not at the end of 1982. The act is repealed on January 1, 1983. We need to have a report, after say six months, then after a year and then after 18 months and so on, as to how this is proceeding. I have a concern about the advisory committee. I'd like to know, as the member for Kitchener has asked, who the other members are going to be. I'd like to know what members of the public will be on it. I'd like to know what kind of criteria are involved and how the members of the public will be selected. I think it is important to have more than just lawyers on that advisory committee.

Unfortunately, section 8 is rather loosely worded in terms of the reporting mechanism. As I read it, they actually could get by with reporting on December 1, 1982 and that would be sufficient. It's extremely important, if we're going to enter into an experiment by which we hope to better serve the needs of the people in Metropolitan Toronto first and then the rest of the province, to let members know on a regular basis how it is proceeding, what are the problems, what are the good points from it and are the people being served. Obviously, if there are changes that have to occur then we should bring in the necessary legislation to do that. I urge the ministry to do that.

Like the member for Kitchener, I also welcome any changes which will make access to the courts easier for people who don't have great means behind them and which will also mean they will see that justice is being done so that they can be part of it. Then when they have a problem they can bring it into court where it's going to be resolved and it's not going to be expensive. I welcome that, but I want to be assured this assembly will be able to examine this experiment right from the beginning to the end. I think part of doing that is reporting back to the assembly; but part of it also is ensuring that members of the public who are not lawyers are included on that advisory committee and that they do make regular reports back to the assembly.

Again, as on the other bills, if those questions can be answered we may not have to go through the committee stage. I welcome the experiment and hope that it is successful, successful to the point where it will be expanded into the rest of the province beyond Metro Toronto.

On motion by Mr. Lawlor the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of standing order 28, I will now hear the member from Downsview for up to five minutes. I deem the motion to adjourn to have been made.

AUTO PACT

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I raised a question on the auto pact the other day and the answer given to me by the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) was unsatisfactory, because he showed either lack of knowledge or outright ignorance of the facts; in fact he said that the situation today is better than it was before and that we are dealing with cycles.

The fact of the matter is that the Minister of Industry and Tourism doesn't understand that the auto pact has been working consistently against the best interests of Canada. As a matter of fact, in the life of the auto pact there has been an increasing deficit every year. In 1977 we had a $1 billion deficit. Even during 1978, when there was a reduction of the total deficit, we had a deficit from the auto pact in the amount of $3 billion; and in 1979, in the first four months, we had a total deficit of $766 million and in the parts segment we have a staggering deficit of $1.6 billion.

I think the minister should understand that the long-term viability of the Canadian industry will depend to an important degree on a significant capacity to perform research and development in Canada and there is now a lack of R and D in Canada. In fact, according to a federal government paper, R and D expenditures by the big three in the US amounted to approximately $3 billion in 1977. An additional $245 million was spent in the US by the 21 leading parts suppliers. In comparison, the total automotive R and D expenditures in Canada at the same time amounted to about $8 million. Canada's population relative to that of the United States, is in the order of one to 10; Canada's auto R and D relative to that of the United States is in the order of one to 406.

What we know, but what the minister doesn't know, is that there is a design revolution going on, a wild rush to produce lighter, more efficient automobiles, which will use less of what is certain to be scarce, high-cost fuel. What we know, and the minister doesn't know, is that where most of the research and development is done more of the jobs will be created. That has been the problem with the auto pact; we have been pursuing, since its inception, the prestige of the assembly line. In fact the Minister of Industry and Tourism mentioned the other day that while he was in Japan he asked the Japanese, he begged them, to set up some assembly lines in Ontario. What he didn't ask the Japanese about was the fact that they will be getting rid of all the assembly lines in Japan by the end of the 1980s, and they are doing more research and development in Japan because that is where the jobs are, that is where the profits are.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism should also know that we have a huge deficit in what the federal government calls "non-merchandise items" which accounted for $448 million in 1978. I want to tell the minister that if he thinks we are better off he should tell the House why he has not come up with any response to the task force as he promised on March 15. Why has he not come up with any concrete proposals on investments in the auto industry? Why has he not come up with any idea as to how the government intends to improve the structure of the automotive industry in Ontario and what kinds of measures of assistance for the automotive industry and especially for the automotive parts industry the government is devising?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. di Santo: These are the real problems that the government has to come to grips with, which the minister is unable to do at this point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, essentially the problem of auto trade between Canada and the United States is that in order to assemble vehicles in Canada a substantial proportion of the parts and components must be imported from the United States. Consequently, when new car sales are strong in Canada but are slack in the United States, Canada must import parts to serve our own market while the export of vehicles and parts to the United States obviously decreases. The effect is that our high importation of parts is not sufficiently offset by our export of parts and vehicles.

During the first five months of this year, registrations for North American cars in the United States dropped by some three and a half per cent. Industry sources tell us that the main market-retarding condition in the United States has been fuel shortage. In Canada we have not experienced a downturn of sales over the first five months. In fact, the industry dealer vehicle sales for the five-month period increased by six and a half per cent over last year, according to Ward's Automotive Reports.

The problem essentially is that the structure of the industry in Canada is such that it is not able, either through Canadian suppliers or through motor vehicle manufacturers' in-house facilities, to provide the capability of the US industry. A change in industry structure and breadth of capability is a solution to better trade balance for Canada. Implementing the change is the major policy thrust of this government to complement industry capability.

We, together with the federal government, and the recent Reisman commission review have recognized the need to make the industry in this country less dependent on the US parts industry. It is for this reason we have provided an incentive to Ford in Windsor and have supported the Hayes-Dana investment in Barrie and have provided assistance to TRW and Tridon.

Mr. di Santo: That's nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Reference has been made to the Treasurer of Ontario stating on June 5 that the auto pact has improved our position rather than making it worse. I would like to point out to the honourable member that in 1964, the year prior to the auto pact, Canada's auto trade deficit with the United States represented over 72 per cent of total trade with the US, whereas the deficit of $766 million accrued in the first four months of this year represents less than nine per cent of total trade for the period, which was $8.9 billion.

On this basis, I think it can clearly be stated that the auto pact has been good for Canada and Ontario, but cannot be said to be the perfect solution. It does not alter the fact that the capability of the parts industry must be changed to improve Canada's balance of trade with the United States. This government is dedicated to bringing about the industry changes to make this possible.

I would point out to the member that this has been recognized by the auto parts association, which is I think quite supportive of all the actions taken by this government and quite satisfied with the role and activities of this government.

Mr. di Santo: It's not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member might interject and say they are not. I invite him to contact them and ask them point blank whether they are satisfied and comfortable with the activities of this government.

Mr. di Santo: I spoke to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suggest he will find them quite supportive of the activities of this government.

Mr. Speaker: This dispenses with this item.

The House adjourned at 10:40 p.m.

---

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

NEWSPAPER COLUMN

Mr. Rollins: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege: I would like to make comment on an article in the Sun newspaper of Wednesday, June 13, written by one Gary Dunford under the heading "Everybody Out on the Lawn," making reference to all members and to the staff of this Legislature and to the manner in which it has been published.

With your permission, could I read it into the record for further comment?

"Everybody Out on the Lawn!

"They say Jack Stokes—the Speaker at the Legislature—would do anything to wear his robes of office. When Stokes is wrapped in the intimidating cloak of not-too-many-colours, he is not as mortal men. He is for the ages, eternal.

"Perhaps it was in just such a moment that the idea came to him that he should be recorded, for history, surrounded by a cast of thousands.

"That's why he's invited everyone who works at Queen's Park—including the hapless hacks and flacks—to gather on the lawn tomorrow to have their picture taken for a provincial brochure.

"They hope to have every pig who feeds at the public trough present, perhaps as many as one thousand oinkers.

"There is no truth to the rumour the brochure is for the Ontario Pork Council."

Mr. Speaker, during my term as an elected member of this Legislature, I cannot recall anything so disgraceful and so uncomplimentary to the elected body of this House and to you, your honour, as Speaker of the House and to the people who are dedicated to serving the people of the province of Ontario. I would hope the proper procedure for this situation would be handled in a manner such that it will not occur again.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SPECIAL EXAMINER'S OFFICE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am placing before this assembly the report of Mr. Mendel Green, QC, which resulted from his review of existing legislation and practices relevant to the office of the special examiner within the judicial district of York. Special examiners conduct certain court-related procedures such as examinations for discovery, cross-examinations on affidavits and examinations of judgment debtors and prepare transcripts of these proceedings.

As a result of a number of concerns expressed about the operation of the offices of special examiners within the judicial district of York, I appointed Mr. Green last October to conduct a full review and assessment of existing legislation and practices relevant to the operation of this part of the litigation process.

Mr. Green concludes that the legal profession is, for the present time, adequately served by the current four special examiners in the judicial district of York. He further concludes on the basis of facts and figures supplied to him by the special examiners and the reporters, that the reporters are being adequately compensated for their efforts. He recommends that the terms of relations between special examiners and freelance reporters be left to the respective parties to negotiate without any government attempt to legislate salaries.

Based on observations with respect to the operation of the offices and on interviews with members of the legal community active in this area, Mr. Green makes a number of specific recommendations for change in the existing system. Some of the proposed changes would require legislation in the form of amendments to the Judicature Act, some could be achieved through amendments to the rules of practice made by the rules committee under the Judicature Act and some could be achieved administratively.

In the latter category, for instance, is the recommendation that financial information from the special examiners' offices be filed annually with the inspector of legal offices and that auditing procedures be undertaken with respect to the billing procedures and other requirements of the tariff in relation to the operation of individual offices. Action has already been taken with respect to this recommendation. Further action of a non-legislative nature will be undertaken over the next few months. Appropriate legislative responses will be prepared for the fall sitting of the assembly.

REPORT ON SALE OF GOODS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In a few moments I will be tabling the Ontario Law Reform Commission's report on the sale of goods. This three-volume report represents the most ambitious attempt in the Commonwealth to revise the law of sale of goods since the last century. Ontario's Sale Of Goods Act is based on a British statute dating from 1893. Commercial practices have changed dramatically since the 19th century, yet the law has not changed to keep abreast of these developments.

Lawyers practising in the area of commercial law have long recognized the need for reform. This part of the law has frequently been seen as outmoded, inadequate and irrelevant, out of touch with both commercial reality and current legal thinking. Ten years ago the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association endorsed a report recommending that article two of the American uniform commercial code dealing with sales law should be enacted in this province. The bar association recommended this for two reasons: first, in order to revise the current law in the many areas where it is seen to be inadequate. Second, in order to make our sales law uniform with that of the United States, in view of the fact the USA is Canada's closest trading partner.

This recommendation led my predecessor, the Honourable Arthur Wishart, to ask the commission to study the sale of goods. During its research project, the commission has conducted extensive comparative legal research with the assistance of a team of Canadian legal experts as well as empirical studies, conducted with the co-operation of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, into contemporary selling and purchasing practices, particularly at the manufacturers' level.

The report on the sale of goods represents a comprehensive and meticulous consideration of the issues. The commission makes over 250 recommendations which constitute a root and branch reform of sales law, including amendments or repeals of other related statutes. The commission's general purpose was to revise, reform and modernize the law governing the sale of goods, promote fair dealing, and assist the continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage and agreement of the parties.

The report analyses every aspect of the sale of goods. It recommends that the revised statute apply by analogy to near sale transactions such as contracts for lease of goods or contracts for labour and materials.

The proposals made by the commission would change the present law in many respects. However, they would not radically alter current relationships between buyer and seller. Many of the commission's proposals are based on empirical evidence that there is a wide gulf between the existing law and what many businessmen believe the law to be. Many of the changes simply bring the law in line with current business practices.

Before I highlight some of the major features of the report, I should make it clear that the Sale of Goods Act is general legislation. It makes no special provision for consumers. In Ontario, we already have consumer-oriented legislation, such as the Business Practices Act and the Consumer Protection Act. The report I am tabling today assumes that these statutes will remain and does not contain special rules governing consumer sales.

In order to facilitate discussion, the commission has drafted a bill. This bill is strongly influenced by article two of the American uniform commercial code, but is not a copy of it. The draft bill, like the current Sale of Goods Act, allows most matters to be freely bargained by the parties. In general, once a contract is made, the provisions of the statute apply only in the absence of a specific term in the contract.

One major innovation in the draft bill is a provision empowering a court to review any contract before it in order to determine if the contract is unconscionable. If the court finds that it is unconscionable, the court may refuse to enforce part or all of the contract, rescind the contract or change the contract so as to avoid any unconscionable result. The draft bill also imposes a duty on the parties to act in good faith in the performance of the contract. These two provisions cannot be excluded by agreement. The court then will have explicit powers to police unfair bargains and to impose minimum standards on the parties.

The draft bill expands the remedies available to the parties if there is a breach of contract. An important innovation is the statutory recognition of a long-standing business practice which gives the parties an opportunity to cure, or demand the curing of, most defects within a reasonable time if it would not unreasonably prejudice the other party.

Liability to an ultimate buyer is imposed upon manufacturers or distributors of goods who make representations or promises in any form relating to goods that are the subject of a contract of sale, if the representations tend to make buyers rely on them in deciding to make purchases. In many cases, an ultimate buyer would be able to take action against a manufacturer or distributor, even though there is no contractual relationship between the parties. The commission also includes in the draft bill for the purposes of discussion, a provision which would allow an ultimate buyer to take action against a manufacturer, distributor or any other prior seller for breach of warranties which were extended to the immediate buyer.

Finally, the bill proposes to remove many of the technical problems which have led to arbitrary results and have made the law difficult to understand and apply. For example, the bill abolishes the significant differences between conditions and warranties, between void and voidable titles and between firm offers with and without consideration. The commission will continue its work in the commercial law area with separate projects on products liability and the general law of contract.

The government intends to give careful consideration to the report. I will be discussing the report with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea). We would welcome any comments or suggestions which would assist us in evaluating the many recommendations made by the Ontario Law Reform Commission in this very significant study on the sale of goods.

The adoption of the draft bill would result in a legal regime more generally compatible in its operation with that of the United States than our current law. It would thus tend to facilitate US-Ontario trade, but interprovincial sales are also vitally important to Ontario's economy. Since uniformity of law is vitally important for those whose commercial activities extend across Canada, the Ontario Law Reform Commission's report will be referred to the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. We anticipate that the conference will be studying the commission's draft bill with a view to drafting uniform legislation for enactment across Canada.

I regard law reform in this area as being both necessary and vitally important. I welcome the report of the law reform commission and look forward to receiving the comments of the legal profession, the business community and the public upon it.

EMISSIONS OF TRITIUM

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on a Canadian Press article as reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail. The article in question refers to an Ontario Hydro safety report about a valve failure at its Rolphoton nuclear power generating plant and a report that there was tritium in the turbine room. Because of the unanswered questions raised by the article, I asked Ontario Hydro to comment on the story so I could place it in proper context.

First, on the steam generator leaks in January 1978: January 26, 1978, higher-than-normal levels of tritium were discovered in the turbine room of the station and a station alert was called. The purpose of the alert was to account for personnel and to declare the turbine room off limits to non-essential personnel until the source of tritium had been discovered and the appropriate corrective action taken. Following the alert, the station reactor was shut down and the level of tritium returned to normal within 40 minutes.

The cause of the higher levels of tritium was a leak in the tube in the steam-generating system, which was repaired during the period of the shutdown. The amount of tritium released in the station's effluents as a result of the tube leakage was less than one per cent of the limits set by the Atomic Energy Control Board.

With regard to the valve failure in September 1978, during a regular semi-annual test of the station's emergency light-water injection system, one of the station's two emergency core-cooling systems, Ontario Hydro discovered that a pin forming part of the operating mechanism of an isolating valve was broken and that the valve was partially closed, even though there was no indication that this was the case. The valve is normally in an open position while the station reactor is at high power and in a closed position when the station reactor is in a cooled, shutdown stage. If the valve is in a closed position when the station reactor is still at high power, the emergency light-water injection would not be available in the event of loss of the normal fuel-cooling system. It is not possible to determine when the pin broke or how long, if at all, the valve was in a partially closed position while the reactor was operating at high power.

Ontario Hydro tested this system in early 1978 and found no problems. However, for whatever period the pin was broken, the station's other emergency core-cooling system was available to provide emergency cooling, if it had been needed. Repairs have been made and new procedures have been instituted to inhibit similar problems in the future and to ensure their prompt detection, if they do occur.

On the steam generator and fuel channel closure plug leaks in March 1979: In September 1978 slightly higher-than-normal levels of tritium were discovered in the station's feed-water system. Upon subsequent investigation, Ontario Hydro discovered that this was caused by a small leak in the station's steam generator. As the leak did not constitute a hazard or cause the level of tritium in the stations effluents to exceed one per cent of the limits set by the control board, Ontario Hydro, with the concurrence of the control board, decided to continue operating the station until its next regularly scheduled maintenance shutdown.

In March 1979, heavy water began leaking from a fuel channel closure plug. All attempts to stop the leak while the station was operating were unsuccessful. Although the leak did not constitute a hazard and Ontario Hydro was able to recover and reuse the heavy water, Hydro decided to advance the date of its next regularly scheduled maintenance shutdown by about three weeks. During this shutdown, Ontario Hydro repaired the leak and carried out its planned maintenance activities, which included inspection and repair of the leak in the steam generator which had been discovered in September 1978.

As members will recall, on June 11 I made a statement in this House concerning emissions of tritium from Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations. Attached to that statement was a table outlining the emissions of tritium in the airborne and water effluents of Rolphton since 1973. Members will note that at no time during the period 1973 to date did the level of the emissions reach one per cent of the limits set by the control board.

I will be speaking later this evening on other matters involving the Rolphton plant, but I think I should place in the proper context the article which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail.

ORAL QUESTIONS

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. S. Smith: I would direct the question to the Minister of the Environment following up on the discussion regarding 2,4-D spraying. Is the minister aware that in Halton the spraying of school yards with 2,4-D is continuing because Halton's education director feels this is not a matter for local autonomy? I would read to the minister a quote from the Burlington edition of the Hamilton Spectator. It says that "he would not order a stop of the program unless the Environment Ministry advises against it. 'It is a matter of science and I am no scientist. It is their decision; it is not for me to rule it in or out.'"

Therefore, in view of the fact that local school boards clearly do not feel they have the expertise to make these decisions, will the minister now change his rather indefensible position and agree to give advice from the ministry as to whether 2,4-D spraying should or should not be continued? At the very least, would he accept the suggestion of my colleague from Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) that no spraying occur when children are present in the school?

Mr. Swart: It's nice to see you following our leader.

Mr. Peterson: None of you guys follow him.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I guess I pre-empted the Leader of the Opposition on this occasion. I have already had a letter drafted, which I believe is in the mails, to all of the school boards of Ontario, not telling them they cannot use it, but enclosing and outlining to them the guidelines for the proper application of 2,4-D.

Since the honourable member also did a little research since the last day, perhaps I might read into the record a little research we did. I will be glad to supply the date. It says: "The Liberal Party is firmly committed to the principle of local autonomy. Municipalities should play a meaningful role in governing themselves."

Mr. Breithaupt: What's that got to do with the question?

Mr. Peterson: What has spraying kids got to do with that answer?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that has a great deal to do with what we are talking about.

Mr. Peterson: You are deteriorating.

Mr. Speaker: Can we please have some order? I cannot hear the answer.

Mr. Breithaupt: The minister is being provocative.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, I am being provocative. I have to agree with whomever said that. I cannot argue with that. Now that I know the Liberal Party is so committed to local autonomy, I hope it will follow up on that and put its money where its mouth is, or the reverse—whichever.

As I said yesterday, there is no doubt about this—

Mr. Ruston: The minister is in a bad way and he is trying to squirm out of it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is the honourable member's opinion; I do not share it.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether they are interested in the reply or not. I am having a great deal of trouble.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Kerrio: I think the minister should sit down and start over again.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the honourable member will shut up, I will be glad to say something. Is the member for Niagara Falls ready to be quiet and listen?

Mr. Kerrio: For the first time in my life.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Thank you. That is a pleasure. May I then finish the response?

As I said the day before yesterday in the House, having arranged this matter at the council meeting in Kelowna, we do know that every single province agrees with the use of 2,4-D. I think that is known and agreed upon by the scientific minds of Canada.

I think we also know the material must be applied properly. The Ministry of the Environment has established some very strong guidelines for the proper application of 2,4-D. Once that is done and well known and well published, which it is, then to ask for a banning of a material on a very small area where children would be exposed is not a very logical position to take.

Mr. Sweeney: Only while the kids are there.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Of course, that is part of the guidelines. The member for Kitchener-Wilmot really should know that.

Mr. Sweeney: That's all we are asking for.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is part of the guidelines. The commitment I made to this House and which I want to restate is that if there is a violation of the guidelines and an injury either to persons or to foliage results from the poor application of the material, it is our responsibility, which we will gladly take, to enforce the guidelines and to take the necessary court action to prosecute.

Mr. Wildman: Didn't you ever hear of preventive care?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Our responsibility on this issue is very clear to me. We have established the safety on a national basis; we have established the guidelines for its proper application; we have accepted the responsibility for any violations to those guidelines.

Mr. S. Smith: That is a long answer.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think I have that privilege. Since it is reasonably well known that the major area of concern would be contact with small children, if we banned it only on the schoolyards and did not ban it in city parks and for home use, I think we would really have banned only a very small portion of it and not the effective portion of it.

I have tried to indicate as strongly as I could that the guidelines should be followed. It is important that they are. If they aren't, obviously people are going to suffer either from allergies or from direct contact. That is just not the way it should be applied.

I hope the people will take the opportunity to read our guidelines and I am glad the issue was raised for that very reason. It gives us a chance to give publicity to the guidelines we have established for the safety of citizens, including farmers who apply such vast quantities of it, because all of our people should know how to apply and use any chemical, particularly in the instance of 2,4-D.

Mr. S. Smith: That was a very long answer, good heavens. By way of supplementary: I take it the minister has finally climbed part way down from his so-called municipal autonomy horse—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, it's yours not mine.

Mr. S. Smith:—and has accepted that even if 2,4-D is not a proved carcinogen, even if he is right that it isn't—and I tend to agree it is not a proved carcinogen—the minister surely understands it might be a health hazard and spraying dandelions in the presence of children is not reasonable.

Given the fact the Halton school board director, who seems to be a fairly well-known individual, says he wants guidance from the ministry—not just guidelines, he wants a rule from the ministry—why doesn't the minister simply make a rule very clearly that 2,4-D should not be used when children are in the school?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That rule is made.

Mr. S. Smith: Surely nothing could be simpler than that? Why is the minister reading out statements about municipal autonomy and other nonsense of that kind?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Let me try to put it in the simplest of language for the leader of the Liberal Party. The rule he asked for has been made; it is called a guideline. Let me put it very simply: if those who are responsible for spraying and applying break the rule, they will be prosecuted.

Mr. Wildman: And people will get sick.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, through you to the leader of the Liberal Party—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —I am trying to respond in kind. The letter has gone to the boards.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Be proud of the fact you changed your mind, Harry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Let me say, Mr. Speaker, through you to the member, if I had to change my mind to agree with the leader of the Liberal Party, I know I would be wrong.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister now says if the guidelines for spraying 2,4-D in schoolyards are broken the ministry will prosecute, can the minister explain why there has apparently been no action at all against the Northumberland and Newcastle school boards, despite the fact there was clear evidence they were violating the guidelines early in June by spraying schoolyards in that part of the province? If the ministry did not issue a stop order and did not launch a prosecution against the spraying of schoolyards in that particular case, what confidence can we have in this House that the ministry is going to launch such prosecutions if there are future violations?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When this question was raised the other day the member suggested he had the evidence for us, and I am still waiting to receive it. Apparently, there has been no substantiation of his research department that 20 children were seriously ill as a result of spraying. If there is substantiation, he certainly hasn't done us the courtesy of sending it over.

We are aware of some contact allergies, but not of the charges the member raised the other day. I guess I have to ask: Is the member going to furnish us with that information, or was it just a misleading piece of information he put on the record of the House?

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask if the minister is aware that when the original question was asked, I asked a supplementary concerning an association between 2,4-D and Reyes syndrome? If 2,4-D is not carcinogenic and is not harmful in any effect, has the minister checked on the emulsifier that is used? Apparently, a team of doctors in Halifax back in 1976 indicated there could be an association between Reyes syndrome and the emulsifier used to spray the chemical.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I did have that the other day when the question was asked, Mr. Speaker, and I neglected at that time to answer the second portion of the question asked of the Premier (Mr. Davis).

The information I have here is as follows: There is no relationship between the herbicide 2,4-D and Reyes syndrome. A careful review of the scientific literature provides no basis or indication that 2,4-D is linked to Reyes syndrome.

Neither the member nor myself are scientists, able to judge that. I have to depend on the best advice that I can get from my advisory committee. Therefore, I reply in that way.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister: Would he explain if the guidelines, or his letter explains to the board that contact with the pesticide shortly after an application could be hazardous to children? Is this explained either in his letter or the guidelines, or both?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I should give the member who asked that question credit for this suggestion. He approached me in the House on Tuesday last and asked if it wouldn't be wise to send out a fact sheet. It was his suggestion that brought that forward and resulted in the action we took.

I'll be glad to send the member—because I know of his genuine interest—the fact sheet and a copy of the letter we have sent to the board. I think he'll find it will be quite self-explanatory and explained in detail. Again, I want to thank the member for making that suggestion last Tuesday.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: The minister just imputed motives and also suggested that information I had given this Legislature was misleading. I ask him to withdraw those statements.

Early in June I suggested the spraying guidelines were being violated because spraying was taking place in winds of more than seven miles an hour—in fact, in 25-mile-an-hour winds—and while children were present in the schoolyard. If the minister thinks that information is misleading, it seems to me he should bring clear evidence into the House or else launch a prosecution in that case, since he's promised to take vigorous action.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, that wasn't the reference. The reference was to the 20 children who were ill. We readily admit the winds on that day were above the guideline figures, but the point is this—

Mr. Cassidy: Are you prosecuting?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You can't violate on spraying if you spray at a time when the winds are about 15 miles per hour, Mr. Speaker. You have to collect the evidence to prove harm resulted because of spraying in conditions such as those indicated.

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you enforce the law?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is no law that says you can't spray when the winds are 15 miles an hour—

Mr. Wildman: You're saying people have to get sick before you can prosecute.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —but if you do spray and you have broken the guidelines there is prima facie evidence to suggest that you applied the spray improperly.

Mr. Cassidy: The guidelines are a dead letter then.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: And it's on the production of evidence that harm resulted and that the wind factor was above the guidelines—

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, for heaven's sake. It might take 20 years to develop a cancer.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —that we take the person to court, and we'll do so. In this instance—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has surely gone far astray of what the other member alleged to have been a point of privilege.

Mr. S. Smith: He's also given two separate stories.

FLUORIDE POISONING

Mr. S. Smith: Another question to the Minister of the Environment on the subject of fluoride poisoning on Cornwall Island. Is the minister able to table in this House the results of testing done at the two stations on the mainland, as well as the four stations on Cornwall Island, regarding the amount of fluoride which is being transmitted there because of the emissions from Reynolds Aluminum Company of Canada Limited?

Can he confirm that these have been in excess of the Ontario standards for some time, including some of the stations on the mainland? Has he any test results with regard to the children living in Cornwall and area on the mainland, to see whether they have been exposed to excessively high fluoride concentrations and whether there are effects on their teeth? Such has now been reported in the Indian band, which I understand is a federal matter.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think most of this falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government. As a matter of fact I know that Environment Canada is now investigating, and since the first ill effects were seen on the reserve, of course that too will be dealt with by the federal government.

With reference to the information that might be pertinent to the town of Cornwall, either through the results obtained from Environment Canada or from our own monitoring stations, we will in due course provide that information.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is not aware, as I am, of the fact that his own stations have been indicating high levels above provincial guidelines for some time now. What I want to know is, in view of these high levels why has the minister not informed himself of these matters and why have he or his colleague the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) not undertaken tests of the children in the Cornwall area to find out whether they might be suffering some of the same early symptoms of excessive fluoride as Indian children on the island are apparently already suffering? Accepting that the Indian children at the moment are a federal responsibility, surely the minister recognizes his responsibility for children on the mainland?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It wasn't a matter of whether or not I was informed, Mr. Speaker, as the member suggested, it was a matter of whether I had that information in the form that I could relate to the leader today. I don't. We've asked for that information, and as I said it will be forthcoming in the near future; but I don't have that information here today.

Mr. Samis: Would the minister report to the House what representation he's made to the federal authorities prior to and since the publication of the alarming reports by Dr. Krook and Dr. Burns this week, and Drs. Cornow and Conibear last year. This problem is certainly not an obviously new problem in the Cornwall area?

Secondly, could he also explain, or attempt to explain, the vast difference in tolerable emission levels between New York state and Ontario? I believe the ratio was 13 to one according to the Toronto Star yesterday. Could he explain how two jurisdictions, side by side, can have such a tremendous difference in their tolerance levels?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Certainly the staffs of our ministry and Environment Canada have been in touch on this, both prior to the latest press reports on it and now. I can only say, as I did to the Leader of the Liberal Party, that we will be prepared to include all of that in the report I've asked for and which will be forthcoming. I don't have it today, but I'll include the reply to the question the member has asked at the time I provide an overall response.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary: Since it's obvious the ministry has not requested any testing of the children, will the ministry request that the Ministry of Health do the testing when the information to which the minister alluded has been collected?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think the first part of that question is correct. I've asked for a report, but I'm not prepared, prior to having all of that on my desk, to assume that any of the statements today were correct or incorrect. I frankly do not know at this moment in time, personally, all that we have done. I know there has been a lot of contact between staff. I want to know how much action that has resulted in and what our responsibilities are. That will be forthcoming shortly.

Having said that, there is nothing more I can say, Mr. Speaker, but to undertake to report back in the detail for which the members are asking. I shall be happy to do that.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister doesn't know, obviously.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Mr. Cassidy: I have another question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism about the government's purchasing policy.

Is the minister aware there is a wholly-Canadian company called Microfilm Recording Company Limited, which makes 6,000 microfiche readers per year here in Toronto which are cheaper and equivalent in quality to the multinational competitor's but has been able to sell to only three ministries in the government of Ontario, and that only after complaining to the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself? Can the minister say why the government continues to buy from multinationals like Kodak in procuring its microfiche readers rather than supporting a Canadian company with an equivalent and cheaper product?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course as I would have hoped we somewhat agreed last week when the member raised a similar issue, it would probably be productive of better discussion on the floor of this House if the member might provide me with the particular cases he wants to question us about and I'll contact the ministry involved and provide him with all the details he'd like. If he provides me with the details of the three contracts we're talking about, or those he says have been refused, I'll be pleased to provide that information to him. There are no secrets with us.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that this particular company, Microfilm Recording, has been able to get itself on the tenders lists of only two ministries in the government and therefore have automatic consideration for purchases of these readers from only those two particular ministries? Isn't that a crucial step in allowing a Canadian company with a high technology product to gain access to business from the government of Ontario? What steps will the government take to make sure that Canadian companies like this one can in fact get their products on the list so that they will be automatically considered when the government's doing its buying?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should tell the member that for me to stand here and pretend that every product made in this province automatically qualifies and fits the equipment being used by every ministry would be foolish of me. Obviously, different ministries have over the years developed needs for different products and different processes. I would hope that over a period of time, as equipment comes up to be repurchased and remodelled, we might be able to develop some standard usages which will allow all companies to participate in our programs.

I would point out to the leader of the third party that I have recently had occasion to correspond with my colleague, the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague)—partly at the request of that company I might add—and as a result I believe the member will now find that Management Board is specifying on its tender calls that Canadian companies supplying microfiche are the companies which will get first and primary opportunity to bid. I'll be pleased to get that updated information and provide it to the member tomorrow morning.

I really have to repeat the specific point that if the member wants to discuss any specific purchasing policy or contract, in order for this conversation to be meaningful he might provide me with those details and tomorrow, if possible, I'll provide the details I'm referring to.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: In regard to government purchasing, why does the minister not guarantee a percentage of government purchasing to the small-business sector? Is it because, unlike his federal counterpart, he does not have a definition for the small-business sector? Why does he not guarantee small-business operators a percentage of government purchasing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the member will find that the percentage of small-business purchases by this government far exceeds the percentage that any other government has.

Mr. S. Smith: Table it. You don't know what your percentage is.

Mr. Eakins: You don't even have a definition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Victoria-Haliburton suggests we don't even have a definition, and I'm happy to make him a deal: If he provides me with whatever definition he wants to use for small businesses, I'll bet him he will find that, under whatever definitions he wants to draw, this government still far outstrips any other government in its direct purchasing from small business.

Mr. S. Smith: Table it in this session.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Accept the challenge, draw up the definitions and we'll see who's right.

Mr. Eakins: I will be tabling my definition this afternoon. You table yours.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: While we welcome the evidence of some movement from the Minister of Industry and Tourism, we're concerned over the fact that it only seems to come when we raise questions here in the Legislature and not as an automatic result of the carrying through of the policy to buy Canadian by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy: I'd like to ask the minister specifically whether he's aware that in the case of this product the government of Ontario specifications name multinational companies' products, Bell and Howell or equivalent or Kodak or equivalent? Will the minister undertake that all such specifications, which effectively prejudice the final purchase in favour of a foreign-manufactured product, be removed from the specifications that are issued by the government of Ontario so that Canadian companies will not be discriminated against?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have nothing to add to the answers I've previously given.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A lot of people work for Kodak in my riding.

Mr. Cassidy: Kodak imports all of those products.

HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Energy. In the light of the growing risk of oil shortages right here in this province, can the minister say when the government intends to implement that 1977 election promise that the government made for $100 million worth of low interest loans for home insulation in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think that question has been answered by at least one of my predecessors, as well as by me.

An hon. member: Let's hear today's version.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I recall, the last time I indicated that since the government of Canada had introduced its Canadian Home Insulation Program we felt there was not a need to go ahead with the suggestion as far as the government was concerned. I think I also indicated that one or two of the companies distributing gas in Ontario had a pilot project of loans which had not been very successful.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that if Ontario were to provide a lead in terms of making sure this program extended to every household for re-insulation of homes across the province it could save us about 266 million gallons of heating oil a year, it could create about 6,000 jobs in Ontario and it would help the average home owner to save more than $200 on his or her fuel bill every year? Isn't it better to have that kind of program than for the government to sit back and do nothing about conserving energy through insulation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We are not doing nothing about encouraging the conservation of energy. As a matter of fact, we were the first to take steps by removing the provincial sales tax on insulating materials and allied products. From what the honourable member has just said, it must be self-evident to anybody that under some conditions it is a great economic advantage to them to add insulation or to re-insulate—to fit insulation retroactively—but that does not apply in all cases. I think the approach we are taking certainly seems to be having benefits and effects, at least from what I have read about the sales of insulation.

Mr. J. Reed: If the ministry is as concerned about the conservation of energy as the minister appears to imply, is there any substance to the recent report of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, which suggests the conservation effort by Ontario Hydro, the "turn-off" campaign, will be downplayed from now on?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not that I'm aware of, although it may well be there were some comments about the program which were not entirely complimentary, not about the purpose but about the approach or some of the approaches.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You object to some of the performances, Julian?

Mr. Kerrio: It's affecting the projections.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I wouldn't be surprised to see a slight change in the approach to the campaign, but as far as I know Hydro is still planning to continue promoting conservation of electrical energy.

Mr. Cassidy: Since a speech by the minister's parliamentary assistant back in May indicated there has been economic analysis carried out by the government on the possibility of a home insulation program, will the minister undertake to table the economic analysis which has been carried out by the ministry, and will he say in this House whether or not that analysis justifies what he has been saying in this House or whether in fact that analysis doesn't justify going forward with a program that would create jobs and help home owners save hundreds of dollars in fuel bills every year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will be delighted to get the analysis and table it.

TOURISM

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to a question raised by my friend the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) about Gray Coach tours to Niagara Falls which offer accommodation only on the United States side of the falls.

In 1978, Gray Coach underwrote a southern Ontario tour which included accommodation in Niagara Falls, Ontario. The arrangements were not, in the opinion of the company, entirely satisfactory, with previously agreed-upon accommodation unavailable for one tour. This year the Ramada Inn has proposed an accommodation package which guarantees good facilities in Niagara Falls, New York, at a reasonable cost.

In a letter to the president and chief executive officer of Gray Coach, I have informed him that in our opinion the use of accommodation on the United States side of Niagara Falls is extremely hard to justify. I have also asked him to restructure their package as soon as possible to incorporate accommodation on the Ontario side. Gray Coach has indicated it is most interested in discussing with any hoteliers in Niagara Falls, Ontario, either as a group or individually, proposals regarding tours in which they might wish to participate.

The tourist division of my ministry will assist Gray Coach in working with the Niagara Falls Resort and Tourist Association to ensure those proposals are forthcoming and that Canadian accommodation is offered for future tours in this area.

Mr. Eakins: I thought for a minute it was the minister's definition of small business.

MINISTRY HIRING

Mr. Eakins: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Following my question on May 4, regarding the necessity of going outside his ministry to have his friends fill the top positions in the reorganization rather than promoting some of the excellent people who worked long and hard for his predecessor, could the minister now tell us how much it has cost the ministry in terms of demotions in directors' and managers' positions, first in salary and, secondly, in outside settlements for those who have left the ministry entirely?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In response to that question, I have been trying to tabulate those figures and I hope to have them for tomorrow morning.

Mr. Peterson: Would you look into Marvin Shore's case?

Hon. Mr. Davis: He used to speak highly of you.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Since it was deemed so important to obtain from outside the civil service a director for the small business section, namely, a Mr. John Laschinger, is it not more important that he be here doing that job rather than in Newfoundland running the PC election campaign? Further, is it not against the spirit of the Public Service Act that he be engaged in political activity in this manner, especially since the announcement of his appointment was made by the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission and appeared in the June issue of Topical?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member would read the entire portion of that announcement, he will find that his appointment takes effect on the third or fourth week in this month. What he is doing before the job begins is his business, not mine.

Mr. Ruston: Tory friends.

LAURENTIAN HOSPITAL

Mr. Germa: My question is to the Minister of Labour. It arises out of an incident in the Laurentian Hospital in Sudbury when a hospital worker was injured and placed on Workmen's Compensation Board benefits. When the administrator of the hospital, Mr. Jean-Paul Lebel, didn't agree with the Workmen's Compensation Board, he did admit to taking hospital funds to hire a private eye to trail this injured worker.

Does a worker not suffer enough harassment through a Workmen's Compensation Board investigator? What can the minister do to protect injured workers from this further harassment by a hospital administrator?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What's a private eye?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I wish I had the information on hand to respond immediately. That is an allegation which is disturbing. I trust the member will understand if I ask to have time to look into it and report back to him.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: Could the minister advise all hospital administrators that there is a correct and proper procedure for appealing Workmen's Compensation Board decisions? Setting aside the waste of medical dollars, does the minister think this is the proper attitude he should be taking?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If that is indeed a practice of hospital administrators, it is something I will have to look into and deal with. I will be glad to investigate it and report to the member.

DREDGING CASE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. If he really must leave, I can direct it to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

Now that the defendants in the dredging trial, the longest trial, I guess, in the history of jurisprudence in Canada, have been convicted and sentenced, will the Premier make public and lay on the table the report of Mr. Campbell Grant, which was commissioned by the Premier's office two or three years ago, having to do with certain allegations which have never been made public, which evidently formed part of the evidence in that trial?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is well aware that I made a statement relative to this matter some time ago, indicating I was not only prepared but anxious to table this report from Mr. Justice Campbell Grant.

Mr. S. Smith: The former justice. He was no longer in court when he did the report. Let's be clear on that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The former Mr. Justice Campbell Grant. I have discussed this matter with the Attorney General, and his advice, and that from his senior law officers, is that pending the appeals, where the appeal is a matter of both fact and law, it would not be proper so to do.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: The matter was raised with the Attorney General a few days ago and he said: "Upon the completion of the sentencing procedure then the matter would not be considered sub judice." I can remember very clearly the Premier, in a previous exchange a long time ago, indicating how anxious he was that the matter be set straight. I recall certain other things he said at the time. I would simply ask him to reconsider the matter. It appears the matter of sub judice during this lengthy trial should, in the interests of the Premier and of us all, be set aside so that the matter can at least be made public in connection with those persons named.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The honourable member is quite right. I am and have been quite anxious to table the former justice Campbell Grant's report. I have discussed this and perhaps the Attorney General might have some further comment. However, the advice he has received and I in turn have received from him is that in the interests of the administration of justice in this province and the people involved in this situation it is not the appropriate thing to do.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, would you permit me to ask a supplementary question to the Attorney General? Does he recall saying on May 7 this year, "The dredging trial is not concluded. The accused who have been convicted, the companies, will be before the court for sentence on June 4. I have no further comment."

CONTINUOUS COLOUR COAT LIMITED

Mr. Philip: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment concerning the emissions from Continuous Colour Coat Limited in Rexdale. Now that the minister has decided not to grant the extension of the voluntary abatement program requested by the company, and has served notice of intent to issue a control order requiring installation of effective pollution abatement equipment by September 30, which is to be completely operational by December 31, will the minister assure the House his ministry will take steps to prosecute the company if it does not meet these new deadlines?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In one very simple word, yes. I've said on many occasions since I've been in this portfolio, and I'm glad to repeat it very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that it's important to set realistic and practical control orders, and, second, to enforce them, period.

Mr. Philip: By way of supplementary, since the minister has yet to make public a list of the precise contents or compositions of the 11 different solvents and the 15 coatings used at the plant, can the minister at this time table the specific details of what is being emitted? In particular, can he inform us whether or not there is any lead or lead compounds being used? The minister will no doubt agree this information would be very useful to the residents in the area should they ever decide to take legal action against the company because of health problems. It also would be useful for employees of the company should they have to appear before the Workmen's Compensation Board following an illness related to the chemicals that were used.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: With reference to the latter part of the question, I think there's no problem with giving that information as it relates to lead. However, with the combinations and permutations possible with that large number of compounds the honourable member spoke of, one of the problems we are having is to determine the emission because of the tremendous number of permutations. It's proving to be a very difficult technical problem for us to solve. Certainly we think the control order will go a long way towards that portion of it, but to put all of the emissions on the record for the honourable member is proving to be very difficult. However, for lead, yes, we're more than prepared to do that for him, it's a much easier technological problem.

CANCER INSURANCE

Mr. Breithaupt: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations with respect to cancer insurance. Are any insurance companies offering in Ontario policies with particular reference to cancer endorsements?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I believe there are two that are offering it here, but bear in mind it is not the same as in the United States. It is only for supplementary coverage. You can't cover anything that is insured under OHIP. There have been no complaints. The same types of merchandising are not used, but none the less we are still taking a look at it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Will the minister direct the superintendent of insurance to monitor any proposed changes in the sales of such policies so that the public fears and concerns about cancer and the X-ray and other nuclear radiation matters that have come to our attention recently are not improperly exploited by any hard-sell tactics of certain insurance companies?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I think you can take it as assured that we are watching the two of them like a hawk every day of the week, and we have been for some time.

MOOSE HUNTING

Mr. Foulds: I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. Is the minister aware of statements by a senior conservation officer in northwestern Ontario that 70 per cent of the moose killed between Lake Nipigon and the Manitoba border are killed illegally through the use of aircraft?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If that's a statement attributed to one of the conservation officers a year ago, I recall that, yes.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: What action has the ministry taken to ensure that is reduced substantially? Has the minister added conservation officers to cover that region, and has he prosecuted and confiscated equipment when he has had instances of illegal use of aircraft brought to his attention?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think last year I answered a similar question as to what we were doing about it and also expanded somewhat on what the conservation officer indicated he meant; which didn't, as I recall, come out quite the way he meant in the press, at least from what he indicated to us. As I am sure the honourable member is aware, there are such things as shooting game from aircraft, seeing them as you fly over, or going around looking for them and then telling people where they are.

As to what we are doing, we are attempting to enforce the Game and Fish Act. We have had one prosecution in provincial court in Kenora which has resulted in a maximum fine of $1,000 to one person charged and a fine of $500 to another. There are two aircraft presently under seizure. I understand, however, that the 30 days for an appeal has not yet elapsed, so I really can't say what the next step will be.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that the basic problem is that he does not have enough conservation officers; and secondly, in the cases that he has just cited before the court, could he make it clear that the appeal goes to him, the minister, does it not? Oh, he means the court appeal rather than the appeal about the confiscation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to ask the minister what is his attitude towards his discretionary authority about the confiscation of the equipment used in the incidents?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, that will be quite clear once the court procedures have been completed. If there is an appeal, then we will know after the appeal; if there isn't, we will know when the 30-day period has expired.

USE OF MATACIL

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to a previous question by the same member. I believe on Tuesday the member was asking me about spruce budworm spraying in the Geraldton district, and what steps we have taken to notify the public and to ensure that people were not in the spray area. The district office prepared and put out a news release on the spray project to the local papers in Kirkland Lake, Timmins and Iroquois Falls on May 15. Mining recorders were fully briefed on the project in case prospectors were in the area, although as members will realize prospectors don't always tell people where they are prospecting.

District personnel are currently carrying out daily air surveillance of the area before any spraying takes place during the day to see there aren't people in the spray areas. There was a public information session held in Long Lac on May 25 which lasted some six hours, and ministry staff were there to answer questions and provide information.

There is no road access in the actual area being sprayed. There is one tourist outfitter close to it. He has been well informed, because some of the ministry staff involved in the spraying are staying at his facility. I think it is fair to say everybody in the area who has had any interest would be informed, and the area which is being sprayed is a long way from any communities.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us how many days of spraying he expects the ministry to be doing, both in the Geraldton district and the Kirkland Lake district?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can't say because it will really depend on the weather. We don't spray in high winds, and obviously if there are poor flying conditions as far as visibility and so on is concerned then we don't fly, or at least the contracted aircraft don't fly. I would think if conditions are ideal two, or at the most three days, would be sufficient.

We were somewhat delayed in the Kirkland Lake area. There were two aircraft involved in the spraying and one of them had a crash yesterday. I don't know how much damage was done to the aircraft, but I understand the pilot is in hospital with a strained back. I believe another aircraft has been dispatched by the contractor to fill in, so there shouldn't be any excessive length of time involved.

USE OF GOVERNMENT COMPUTERS

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Premier: Are the government computers used by the riding associations of government members or cabinet for constituency mailing lists or party supporter lists?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I haven't the foggiest idea, but I will be delighted to find out.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I, personally, have been trying to find out from the Premier's staff and they weren't able to answer, so I would appreciate the answer. If they are being used, what is the fee for service?

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Recently, the operator of a furniture stripping business in my riding was ordered by the city authorities to dispose of four 45-gallon drums of stripping fluid, which is highly dangerous and volatile, because the storage facilities had been damaged by fire. He was unable to find a single firm in the entire Metro area which could handle this problem for him.

I would like to ask when is the minister going to ensure adequate disposal facilities for hazardous liquid waste in the Metro area are established so wastes of this kind are not dumped illegally or do not have to be trucked long distances with dangers of spills, and high costs as well?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I certainly hope they aren't being dumped illegally now. Again, if the member thinks they are I wish she would give us that information. We will establish those sites as soon as possible; I think the member probably is well aware of the efforts being made to establish sites. The member should also be aware of the responsibility of industry to do so. It is now possible to have many of the hazards treated here in Ontario. It is also possible to send them to other jurisdictions, but most of our wastes can be treated here in Ontario.

We will never have enough sites so all of our liquids can be handled without travelling some distance. That is not something the member should look forward to, it doesn't make sense to do so.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Can the minister tell us exactly how many sites there are in Ontario that could handle this kind of waste?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would like to be sure of what that waste is. I know the honourable member gave it to me, and I will supply that information. There are several sites available, but not all can handle all the various liquids. So I would have to check with my staff and get back to the honourable member.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, if he is still available. The question relates to the construction of new regional government headquarters in various municipalities that have regional governments. In light of the fact the provincial government has espoused the cause of financial restraint and has encouraged municipalities to practice financial restraint, would the minister feel it wise for any of those regional municipalities that do not now have a regional headquarters to embark upon a multi-million-dollar building program in order that they might have a new regional headquarters, with one would presume expanded staff and facilities at an additional cost to the taxpayer?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I could put the answer to the question this way: We do not pay grants on regional headquarters for regional governments. Since the philosophy of our party and the honourable member's party in regard to local autonomy for municipalities is very similar, the decisions as to whether or not a new regional office should be built really rests with the people who are elected in the particular region. Therefore, if my friend is talking about the regional municipality of Niagara, I think the councillors of the regional municipality are the ones who should decide. They are elected to make those decisions and they should make those decisions.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In light of the fact that reviews of regional government have taken place in the Niagara region, one in 1971 and a more formal one in 1975, and as I believe the ministry is still reviewing regional government in terms of the Archer report and the McKeough response to the Archer report with a view to improving legislation whenever necessary, would the minister not agree that it would be advisable for regions not to expand their facilities at a time when he is reconsidering regional government and the delineation of powers within the region of Niagara?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the region of Niagara is concerned, I met with the regional council in a very pleasant informal meeting in their present regional headquarters, which I found a very nice building although it was a converted industrial facility. As I recall, my remarks at that time were that after discussion that morning any recommendations of the Archer report had been pretty well handled. I really do not see any new or dramatic recommendations for restructuring occurring in the Niagara region unless the council and the local municipalities themselves come forward with something. I think we have pretty well finished with the Archer report as far as Niagara is concerned.

Mr. Swart: While the minister states that he does not want to interfere with local autonomy in Niagara with regard to financial matters, would he not admit that land use generally comes under the jurisdiction of the province? Would he, in this case, recommend to the regional municipality of Niagara that they should not locate their headquarters within the municipalities that are in the prime fruit and grape land?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of any more appropriate item that should be settled at the regional level and not here than where to locate the headquarters of a regional municipality. I think that is one area where we must respect local autonomy. They will pick the area that is best for all the region.

LOTTERY PRIZES

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Is the minister giving any consideration, together with the other provinces, to the suggestion that with regard to the provincial lottery the prizes be spread over a much wider range than a straight five $1 million prizes each month so that many more people could win prizes at a slightly smaller rate, which would be of greater help to the economy.

Mr. Haggerty: Too many millionaires are leaving Canada.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That question would probably take at least an hour or two to answer. I would like to say the whole question of prizes, especially for the lotteries of the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation, is currently under study. In fact, the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation met in Banff earlier this week and will be meeting again later in the year when the whole question of prize structure will be considered.

Along with that, the question of the future of Loto Canada will be discussed. Until that time, I really cannot make any comment or response that would be very helpful to the member opposite.

Mr. Ruston: A brief supplementary: Does the minister intend to make any presentation which would spread it over a much wider range?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will be making our input to that meeting, along with the other nine provinces.

AMBASSADOR BRIDGE

Mr. Bounsall: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. The Ambassador Bridge between Windsor and Detroit is the only international bridge of the 14 in Ontario never covered by a provision for eventual reversion to Ontario or to Canada when the construction indebtedness became retired, which certainly is the case with this bridge. Is the minister aware that in 1973 the government of Canada, under the then minister Mitchell Sharp, laid down criteria for the terms and conditions for any sale of this bridge to another privately-owned outfit, to the effect that the Canadian portion be conveyed at no cost within 25 years of the date of that sale to a new vendor? Therefore, would the minister pursue and pressure the Canadian government and explore this avenue with them, in order that Canada or Ontario, under those conditions, receive ownership at no cost, even if it runs to 25 years from now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. I'm trying to build up credits with Mr. Speaker by being brief.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Conway: I have a question of the Attorney General. Apropos of the Attorney General's crackdown on violence and the carnage on our highways, I ask what is essentially a local question but one that does concern me a great deal. Is the Attorney General aware that in the small hamlet of Madawaska, which has a population of roughly 300 to 400 people and is in the south portion of the district of Nipissing, at least six people have been killed on the highway, which forms the main street in that community, in the recent past?

Is the minister aware of this, since it is a prime example of the carnage he clearly wants to do something about? Will he advise himself as to why the speed limit continues to be much higher than local residents want it to be? Will he advise himself and me, at least as the local member, why it is that in that community there is still a passing lane right through the heart of the area, in which very recently yet another child has died very tragically?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the tragic incident to which the member refers. I certainly will look into it and advise him accordingly in an attempt to respond to his concerns.

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary to the Attorney General: In his crackdown on speeding, is he not aware the death rate on the two-lane highways is about 2.6 per 100 million kilometres, and on 401 and the 400 series generally it is 0.6 per 100 million kilometres? Wouldn't it be better to put the police on the two-lane highways to try to control them a little more?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's because you use the four-lane. Don't you? We know how you get home nights.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously, the judgement in these matters as to where the police patrol is not a judgement I attempt to impose. My concern is with respect to highway traffic safety generally, whether it involves excessive speeding or other traffic infractions. I am very concerned about what I read in the paper about the former leader of the Liberal Party being called upon to pay this large fine—

Mr. Nixon: You are trying to balance your budget.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry—and I understand to a greater extent his comments of the other day. Whether these patrols or greater police visibility should be on the four-lane highways or the two-lane highways, I am not in a position to make that judgement. I just reiterate what I said before, police authorities do agree—and I met with a number of them recently and will be meeting with a number of them again within the next week—that increased police visibility does reduce the accident rate.

MINISTRY HIRING

Mr. Eakins: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker: Following my question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism in regard to the appointment of Mr. John Laschinger, the minister inferred that perhaps I had not read the full article in regard to his appointment. I want to point out that I have a copy of the Topical Job Mart of June 1, and nowhere in the article does it refer to the time of his appointment. In fact, in the announcement it gives his background prior to joining the Ontario public service, and the impression has been clearly given that Mr. Laschinger is now a member of the public service.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To respond, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I'm sorry. I thought it was part of that notice. None the less, I want to assure the House that he does start on the third or fourth week of this month.

REPORTS

BULK POWER FACILITIES IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would like to table two reports which I think honourable members will find of interest, namely the report by the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning on the need for additional bulk power facilities in southwestern Ontario and a report on Canada-United States electricity exchanges.

The report by the royal commission, headed by Dr. Arthur Porter, on the need for additional bulk power facilities in southwestern Ontario was released yesterday in London, Ontario.

As honourable members will recall, the Porter commission was requested to consider and report on: one, the anticipated growth in demand for electric power in southwestern Ontario up to the end of 1987, and from 1987 to the year 2000; and two, the capability of existing and committed bulk power generation and transmission facilities to supply this additional electricity to the area, taking into account government policy with respect to the use of interconnections with neighbouring US utilities and on the resulting date on which additional bulk power facilities, if any, will be needed, but excluding consideration of their specific nature and of their locational and environmental aspects. These latter aspects would be considered by the Environmental Assessment Board.

The Ministry of Energy will be meeting with the royal commission to discuss the recommendations over the coming weeks in order that appropriate consideration can be given to them. I do not intend to comment on any specific recommendations at this time, other than to note that the royal commission reports make reference to the need to strengthen system interconnections from both an operational and export point of view.

CANADA-UNITED STATES ELECTRICITY EXCHANGES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the Canada-United States electricity exchanges report, released last week by the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am pleased to say that on most, if not all, of the recommendations made in this latter report that apply to Ontario's jurisdiction, the government has already put in place policies that meet the needs cited. Some of these policies are set out in the appendices to the Porter commission's report.

As my immediate predecessor said last year, Ontario Hydro is negotiating with other Canadian and US jurisdictions to develop further export markets. The Canada-United States electricity exchanges report identifies and makes recommendations that can, I trust, if acted upon, only serve to improve the potential for the sale of electricity in neighbouring jurisdictions.

MOTION

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to sit concurrently with the House this afternoon for the purpose of voting upon outstanding clauses in Bill 163 in preparation for reporting it back to the House.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

AGGREGATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved first reading of Bill 127, An Act to revise the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESS ACT

Mr. Eakins moved first reading of Bill 128, An Act respecting Small Business in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the preservation and expansion of small-business enterprise in Ontario. The bill provides for government efforts relating to tendering policy, sub-contracting, research and development and small-business consortia as a means of providing support for small-business enterprise.

PREDATOR CONTROL ACT

Mr. Riddell moved first reading of Bill 129, An Act respecting Predator Control in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have introduced this bill with a great deal of support from the farm organizations throughout Ontario. If I introduce it often enough, maybe the minister will act on it.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the establishment of local predator control committees throughout Ontario to develop methods and procedures to protect livestock and poultry from destruction by predators.

A committee is to be established for each predator control area designated by the minister and the committee, within one year of its establishment, must prepare a predator control plan for approval by the minister. The bill requires every predator control committee to regularly review the predator control plan and to report to the minister on an annual basis concerning whether the plan has been effective in reducing the level of predator activity.

FARM MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 130, An Act respecting the sale of Farm Machinery and Equipment in Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, this bill is patterned after legislation in Manitoba and the request made by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture.

The purpose of the bill is to regulate the sale of farm machinery and equipment in Ontario. The bill establishes the Farm Machinery and Equipment Board to carry out several tasks respecting the sale of farm machinery and equipment. The board is given the authority to investigate complaints and mediate disputes arising from the sale of farm machinery and equipment and may establish inventory guidelines for vendors and dealers of farm machinery and equipment. The board may also make recommendations to the minister concerning the safety requirements and parts standardization for farm machinery and equipment.

Among the principal features of the bill are the following: Dealers are required to provide certain emergency repair parts on 72 hours' notice. Where a dealer fails to make repair parts available within the time required by the bill, the dealer is liable to pay the purchaser an amount equal to one half the normal rental rate for farm machinery and equipment. The bill also sets out warranties applicable to the sale of farm machinery and equipment.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 205, 206, 212, 213, 218, 219, 220 and 221 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2911.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity, pursuant to standing order 13, to indicate to the House the business for the remainder of this week and next week.

This afternoon the House will take into consideration ballot items standing in the names of the members for Waterloo North and Lakeshore and, this evening, the 26th order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the interim report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs.

Tomorrow morning we will do legislation, and we will call this legislation in order: Bills 46, 100, 103, 114, 116, 117, 101 and 95.

On Monday afternoon, June 18, we will carry on with the legislation I have just mentioned from where we leave off at one o'clock on Friday. The House will sit Monday evening next week and, starting at eight, we will commence consideration of Bills 80, 81 and 82, to do second reading and committee as required; then Bill 113—second reading and committee if required—and Bills 111, 112 and 108 in committee of the whole.

On Tuesday afternoon we will do legislation: Bill 89, second reading; Bills 90, 99 and 89 in committee; and Bills 119 and 123, second reading and committee if required. The House will not sit next Tuesday evening.

On Wednesday the resources development, administration of justice and general government committees will meet in the morning.

On Thursday, June 21, the House will sit in the morning to clear up legislation. In the afternoon we will do ballot items standing in the names of the members for Sault Ste. Marie and Essex North. In the evening we will do the 28th order of today's order paper, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the recommendations contained in the sixth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman. I should indicate at this time that at least we will get started on that debate.

On Friday morning, June 22, we will continue with legislation standing in the name of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs from where we leave off on the preceding Monday afternoon.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I am not seeking direction necessarily; I am just wondering about the procedure with regard to ballot item 22. I am not objecting to the ballot item itself, but I did not see it on the order paper prior to Monday of this week. I thought the procedure was that such items had to be on the order paper 14 days prior to the day of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: You are right. The standing order does provide that two weeks' notice be given. It is my understanding that it was on the order paper a considerable time in advance of that but not under the name of the member whose name appears associated with it now. I suppose it may be dangerous to establish any precedent that would vary from the standing orders; however with the unanimous consent of the House, perhaps that can be accomplished without it appearing to be a precedent. I do not hear any objection to it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if I could speak to the point of order, I think the honourable member does raise a question with respect to the procedures for consideration of private members' public business. There may well be some question with respect to that item scheduled for this afternoon, both with respect to the matter of substitution and particularly with respect to the amount of time which the rule requires in so far as its being published on the notice paper as standing as an item to be debated. In order to preserve the spirit and the letter of the rule, perhaps the House should be asked for its unanimous consent that this is a change in the standing order. We would offer the consent of this side of the House that the matter proceed, notwithstanding it is out of order according to the standing orders.

Mr. Foulds: I am sure all members would agree the spirit of the standing orders has been met in that the matter, as the Speaker rightly pointed out, had been printed on the Order Paper in another member's name in a different form. So the House was not unaware it was possible for the topic to be debated within the very near future.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent to deal with ballot item 22 as the second item this afternoon?

Motion agreed to.

RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES LEGISLATION

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the government House leader at what point, presuming there is success within the committee on Bill 163, that would be dealt with by the House?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I was hoping I could be more specific with respect to that, but I think a lot depends on what is going to happen in the general government committee within the next hour or so. A lot will depend on how it is reported back and the attitude of the House with respect to whether or not further committee examination is required here.

If the member would just leave that matter open, we could perhaps indicate once we have had a message from the committee. If all members will keep their fingers crossed, hopefully they can resolve that in another place this afternoon.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 17, An Act to revise the Line Fences Act.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO ACT

Mr. Epp moved second reading of Bill 106, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Epp: I believe this is a very important bill I am proposing here, particularly as it concerns the metropolitan area of Toronto. It does two things: First, it permits Metropolitan Toronto to have a chairman elected by the people of a municipality. The chairman would have to have a seat on local council and retain that seat in order to be elected chairman by his colleagues at the Metro level. Second, it permits the local council representatives and school board representatives to be elected for a three-year term, rather than a two-year term.

I am doing this for a number of reasons, but particularly because as a Liberal I believe in making government more responsive and more responsible to the electorate. So often we say the provincial representatives are responsive and responsible to the people. We mouth great rhetoric about these views, but this is an opportunity to do something. Representatives of this Legislature have an opportunity not only to speak to it, but actually endorse that principle as it is included in this bill. I believe these two changes will present measures that are important to the people of Toronto and important to the representatives of the various councils and school boards in view of the fact that after hearing hundreds of briefs, Mr. Robarts, who headed the commission, was able to make that recommendation.

Mr. Wildman: How does this coincide with how you voted before?

Mr. Epp: It's completely consistent with how I voted before. There are a number of things that should be kept in mind. First of all, I would draw attention to the three-year term.

Speaking about the three-year term, when we look at the other nine provinces and what they are doing and what they have recommended, we find that Alberta has the three-year term, Manitoba has the three-year term, New Brunswick has the three-year term; Nova Scotia has the three-year term, Quebec has the three-year term, and Saskatchewan has the three-year term for cities but a four-year term for towns and villages.

There are only two areas outside of Ontario that retain the two-year term: Prince Edward Island, which has a population of about 100,000 or a little better than 100,000 people, and British Columbia. In Newfoundland, municipalities there have four-year terms. So most of them have at least a three-year term and one has a four-year term.

In Metropolitan Toronto one will recall that in 1965 Mr. Goldenberg, in his report to the provincial government, recommended that Metropolitan Toronto have a three-year term and this was enshrined in legislation and was in effect for the two elections of 1966 and 1969. It was only after that that the present government recommended that they go back to the two-year term.

Mr. Robarts in his report points out that in the three elections since 1972 the voter turnout declined. In other words, if we look at the logical sequence of events and make a logical assumption here, when they went from the three-year term to the two-year term, the local interest in elections declined because they were voting for somebody for a two-year term and in fact they could get back at them again in two years if they wanted to. People weren't as interested in electing representatives who were standing for office for only two years rather than three years.

If we look at the advantages of this recommendation we find that many of the representatives at the Metro and local level have recommended a three-year term. Irrespective of what some of the people on my left may say about this, I feel that the three-year term is endorsed by many of the Metropolitan politicians because they think it would lead to better planning and you know, Mr. Speaker, as everyone else knows, that although much has been done to improve planning there's still much to be done. They feel in their wisdom, and I agree with them wholeheartedly, that we should have the three-year term and that it would lead to better planning.

The second thing is that it means we have fewer elections and therefore less public expenditure of money. At a time when we in this province are running at a deficit of about $1.5 billion, it's important that we spend less money rather than more money.

The council and board members would be able to spend more time at the duties for which they have been elected rather than be electioneering. It would encourage greater participation in that longer terms may cost less for electioneering. There's a lot of money spent by politicians at election time, and this would decrease the amount of expenditures there. It gives them more time to judge properly the issues that are before them and to deal with those issues and see them come to the proper fruition, rather than having to wait for a new council to come in and try to decide by going over the same items again and again.

Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention and to the members of this House that the MLC supports the three-year terms. The MLC is the Municipal Liaison Committee, made up of representatives of all the municipal organizations in the province. They endorse the three-year term. A motion to that effect was passed by the representatives at the AMO convention last summer and, I think, the previous summer too.

The former Treasurer and Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. McKeough, in responding to the MLC said that municipalities should have greater accountability and, therefore, he rejected the three-year term. There may be some members of the government party who feel that the two-year term should stay for Metropolitan Toronto. On the other hand, I feel we should make a change. I want to quote from Background, which is a publication put out by the provincial government.

In quoting what the MLC proposed at a meeting it says: "Mr. McKeough's statement that 'There are issues of accountability unique to local government' is somewhat mystifying. What issues? Municipal government is the most accountable of all levels of government since all council and most committee meetings are held in public as a requirement of provincial law. Minutes and agendas are always available to the public—again a statutory requirement. Taxpayers at the municipal level have ample opportunity to closely scrutinize the actions of their locally elected representatives, unlike provincial and federal legislative activity."

They go on to say: "In most Canadian provinces, the terms of office for municipal officials are three years and in some cases four years. We are not aware of any problems arising from this situation. In summary, the Municipal Liaison Committee has supported the three-year term of office because we firmly believe that it would contribute to improving the quality of municipal government in Ontario and the betterment of our urban communities. It could be optional for smaller municipalities to retain shorter terms if they so choose." This is what the MLC says. It is very representative of all the municipalities in Ontario and certainly a forward-thinking and forward-looking group of men and women in this province.

It's also important to note that the committee of review in the city of Winnipeg, which was headed by Judge Peter Taraska and appointed by the Governor General, the former Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Schreyer, recommended that a three-year term be in order for the city of Winnipeg. It's interesting to note that many of the regional government commissions appointed by this government recommended the three-year term.

Specifically, we can refer to Dr. Mayo who did the Ottawa-Carleton study. We can refer to Henry Stewart who was the chairman of a group of three who did the Hamilton-Wentworth study and we can refer to the former Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. William Palmer, who, only a few months ago concluded the Waterloo study. All of them recommended a three-year term.

Most important, I think we have to read what Mr. Robarts says about this particular item. If we look at the Robarts report, on page 67 it says; "In the view of the commission, arguments for a three-year term in Metropolitan Toronto are convincing. Metro and its constituent municipalities are large and complex organizations and decision-making is a lengthy and complicated process. Given the hiatus in policy-making that exists in the months preceding the following of a municipal election, the period in which initiatives can be planned and implemented is at present only about 18 months. This is too short a time for a council to debate, set and implement the sort of policies that are required by one of the largest spending jurisdictions in Canada. Similarly, many school trustees have told the commission that their responsibilities are extremely complex, that these cannot be fully understood in a two-year term and that it is impossible to bring initiatives to fruition within this period."

That was a comment by Mr. Robarts in the Robarts report, and I might say for those members who don't know who Mr. Robarts was that the Premier of this province held him in very high respect, and I would expect that the members of the governing party would follow his example and his wisdom in this whole matter and support my bill today. To quote from the present Premier and what he said about Mr. Robarts and the Robarts report: "The report of this royal commission, copies of which are being given to the members, is of great significance, not only because of the important issues it addresses, but because of the stature of its author."

I do hope that the members on the government side keep that in mind when deciding on this important issue later this afternoon.

He went on to say: "It is, I think, particularly fitting that John Robarts should be the author of the report on the government of one of North America's great cities. He began his career in this House in 1951, almost at the same time as the process which led to the establishment of Metropolitan Toronto was begun. As Premier, 12 years later, he recognized that changes had occurred in Metro and that if Metro were to remain a world leader in urban government it must adapt to those changes. He, therefore, commissioned Carl Goldenberg to review Metro, and it was Mr. Robarts who, after intensive public debate, introduced the legislation that resulted in the Metro government we have today."

Mr. Stong: How soon they forget!

Mr. Rotenberg: I was there; I know all about it.

Mr. Epp: The Premier went on to say: "I am confident that the report will provide us with a basis for continued progress. Metro has been a leader in this form of government and has provided a lesson to other municipalities over the years. I am sure that Mr. Robarts' report will continue this trend and that the leaders of local government in this province will look to his report as a reference as they seek answers to the government problems in their own areas."

I will now address my comments with respect to the election of the Metro chairman. As members know, the chairman can be anyone in the province. I am not even sure that he would have to be a resident of Metropolitan Toronto—and I don't think the member for Wilson Heights could answer that for me; he may be able to—but could be anyone in the province. I hope he would have to be a citizen of the province, but you could pick anyone and make him chairman of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Wildman: He could even be from Waterloo.

Mr. Epp: He could be. It would probably be a good choice.

Mr. Rotenberg: I thought it was.

Mr. Epp: And if he was from Waterloo North it would even coincide with the boundaries for my particular riding.

Mr. Riddell: It is pretty hard to find Tories in Waterloo, and that is one of the criteria, he has to be a Tory.

Mr. Epp: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in defining the position of chairman for Metropolitan Toronto in the Robarts commission report, it stated that: "In law, the chairman's job is defined even more loosely than that of an area municipality mayor." That means any mayor in any municipality in Ontario, despite the fact that the position of Metropolitan chairman is much more important and involves the expenditure of many more dollars of public money.

The report goes on to say that: "The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act states that he is head of council, chairman of the executive committee and chief executive officer of the Metropolitan corporation.

"In reality, although occupying the most important single position in local government in the Metropolitan area, the chairman does not have genuine executive authority. His degree of success is dependent upon his ability to work with and influence not only his fellow Metropolitan council members and special purpose body officials, but also the government of Ontario. The chairman is an ex-officio member of various Metropolitan level special-purpose bodies and also serves on intergovernment bodies."

That is what Mr. Robarts said in his report about the chairman's position in Metropolitan Toronto. I think our purpose in making him an elected official at the local level and to hold the position on the Metro council and then become chairman of that council gives him a certain amount of authority and legitimacy he does not have as an appointed official. Granted, on most occasions he has been a member of Metropolitan council prior to his election as chairman but certainly not on all occasions. If my recommendation was followed through, he would retain the position on council.

I think if we were to apply to Metropolitan Toronto what Mr. Palmer has said in the regional municipality of Waterloo study, it would certainly be apropos. Mr. Palmer said:

"The principal reason it would be desirable to have an elected person as chairman is to demonstrate to the public that the man at the helm of the regional council has the confidence of his electorate. He is then a politician and not a bureaucrat. By definition then, the public has more reason to believe the man would be more responsive to the needs of the people if he were an elected official. He would therefore have to stay in touch with the electors on a continuous basis if he wanted to remain as chairman."

I think that is very important and I hope the members will take this to heart. Right now he could be there for two years or four years or six years and never go back and account to the people, but under this suggested scheme he would have to go back and get the people's support.

There are three objections to having the chairman elected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Mr. Wildman: The member hasn't expired.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: The member hasn't expired, just the time. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 106, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, under which the Metro chairman would be an elected member, and the councils and boards of Metropolitan Toronto would be elected on a three-year term.

In the true spirit of private members' hour, I am rising to support the bill, knowing full well I have to convince certain members of my own caucus as well as others of the values of this bill. Members will hear some articulate argument on the other side hereafter.

It is certainly ironic to me that it should be the member for Waterloo North presenting this private member's bill and not the sole Metro Liberal in the Liberal caucus, but I now understand it is only because he aspires to the position of Metro chairman. He is hoping the next act he brings forward will be for the annexation of Waterloo North or something to that effect—I am only kidding.

Mr. Epp: The member should not be facetious.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I will not be facetious.

Mr. Epp: Do you know what you are talking about?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I support moving to a three-year term for municipal boards for four reasons.

Mr. Epp: Then the member must know what he is talking about.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: One is the importance of the municipal role, especially in Metropolitan Toronto and larger urban areas. The second is the need to increase accountability. Third, I think it is an important step in developing the party system on a local level, something I am very much in favour of and with which we are having a great deal of success. The fourth is that in the long run, of course, it will save money in terms of having fewer elections.

Mr. Rotenberg: So have six-year terms and save more money.

[4:00]

Mr. R. F. Johnston: It is not in the motion and I am not going to stand to amend, at this point.

I have a couple of hesitations about the bill and the way it's worded. I would have preferred that there was some precise statement about the Metro chairman's position. Leaving it out and just having the coverall clause is not sufficient. And I wonder about the advisability of presenting an act which affects only Metro Toronto at this point when it has been pointed out that a number of other municipalities have an interest in this.

On the importance of the municipal role, I would say that over the last number of years especially since Mr. Rotenberg left municipal politics, we've moved away from ward-heeling and into planning and complex budgeting and that sort of thing. It's often said that an alderman spends his first eight months learning how to handle things; the next eight months doing it; and the third eight months running for the next election and therefore is only effective as legislator for a period of eight months. I think that is not—

Mr. Rotenberg: These new aldermen are slow learners. In my day they could learn in two or three months.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: That's not what I heard. That's another matter. Because so many people have to learn the ropes, there's a greater tendency for the place to be run by bureaucrats than at other levels of government. When one runs into a thing like the complex budgeting of the city of Toronto and in an election year the budget discussions take place in December and do not end until May, there's a tendency for a great many things to slip through that perhaps otherwise would not, in the area of planning, in transportation, in densities. It's important that the power and decision-making be made by the elected officials and not by the bureaucrats. A longer term, effectively dealing with this, would help.

If the Planning Act is amended to give even more power to municipalities as has been suggested in the white paper, it's even more important that the term be stretched out so municipal officials will have more time to consider things.

The school board in Toronto is a perfect example of a board that needs to have consistent membership at this time. It's banging its head against the provincial budget walls and the Minister of Education and I worry that if it's replaced within a two-year period they will have to start the fight all over again with a three-year time frame in which to organize the citizens of Toronto as they have been, and the teachers, they might actually be able to effect some change in the stubborn ministry.

In the long-term, a longer term of office would attract stronger candidates. In my borough of Scarborough, too many aldermen work only part-time. They don't throw their energy into it as fully as they might. I believe it's important to have full-time elected officials in every borough in Toronto.

The fundamental weakness in municipal politics is a lack of accountability. There are arguments that say extending the term will increase this problem and the members will hear those later. I would like to argue that it might increase accountability.

The major reason I suggest that is because in a two-year period individuals very seldom are elected on a major program or platform; instead they are elected on the basis of personality and maybe one small issue. Over the course of two years, it's impossible to determine whether or not they have actively pursued that particular goal and it's impossible to get a handle on their voting record to determine exactly what their leanings are.

A three-year period would allow a person to establish a program and take the middle two years to work actively towards effecting change in that area, increasing accountability.

It might also help citizens take municipal politics a little more seriously. If it did, we could improve on these 20 and 40 per cent turnouts for municipal elections and that would be a boon.

For all the reasons I have mentioned, I believe the three-year term is important. If we move towards program and platform, we move towards party involvement. If we move towards party involvement in municipal politics, we will have even better accountability in terms of the number of people who are effectively working towards one goal and that will enable municipal voters to make a clear choice. I think it will increase the control of elected people on the decision-making.

I am personally committed to this action and our party in Toronto has endorsed or elected approximately 30 municipal candidates. As municipal critic or spokesman I will be working actively to increase that number in the next municipal election and by that action force the other two parties into the fight on an open basis, which will be worthwhile for all.

The cost factor is obvious, as was mentioned by the mover of this bill. I think there is an argument to be made that at this point we are electioning the citizenry to death, and I think there is an argument that moving to a three-year term would be a useful thing and that two-year elections create unnecessary expenditures.

As I say, my problems with this bill revolve around the Metro chairman's position. I think it's absolutely vital it be spelled out very specifically that we want the Metro chairman to be elected and why. I would really like to see that in the bill instead of just being left underneath as part of the council and presuming that will be the case because of the retraction of a particular section.

At the moment, our Metro chairman is accountable to the 36 people who elect him. If we move this period to three years and we don't have this portion of it happen it would be a disaster for us, and I think it should be reinforced that the chairman is to be elected.

I'm concerned about smaller communities around the province which are not interested in this. Although the Municipal Liaison Committee has supported it, there are a number of municipalities which are opposed to extending it. A number of individuals who have had long experience in municipal politics would argue that it should go back to the one-year term it used to be. We may hear some arguments on that point.

There are other municipalities, like Ottawa, Hamilton and London, which I think should be brought in at the same time as Metropolitan Toronto. There is no reason why they should not be moved to a three-year term at that point. I think it is unfortunate that this comes through only as an act to amend the particular Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

So for the reasons of accountability I've laid down, and for the reasons of saving money, perhaps encouraging greater emphasis on programs and perhaps reducing the role of the bureaucrat in municipal politics, I would support this bill.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 106 this afternoon. I do so in the sense of looking at the legislation before us and assessing it critically, not only from an academic point of view but also from a practical point of view as one who has had the privilege and opportunity to participate as one of the elected members within the civic form of government that has been created and is now known as the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

The legislation before us is timely and does deserve serious consideration by all members of the Legislature. As we know, the existence of Metropolitan Toronto and its evolution from its inception in 1953 to the present time has been a most interesting one and of great historical importance in many respects. We're well aware that many other municipalities, not only within our own country but in other jurisdictions as well, have been so impressed with the Metropolitan Toronto government structure that they have modelled their own municipal governments after the Metropolitan Toronto government.

I look back to the days prior to Metro and the efforts of Lorne Cummings, who was the author and architect of the Metropolitan Toronto government, the substance of which and the basic components of which have held true to this day as far as being workable and practical ways of operating the democratic process within a highly urbanized area.

It's interesting to note—and I believe the sponsor of the bill alluded to this fact—with reference to the three-year term, which I must say I endorse heartily, there has been a great deal of consistency with regard to the support shown for this term as enunciated, not only by Mr. Robarts in his most recent royal commission report, but also by Carl Goldenberg in 1965 when he made his monumental report that shaped an important restructuring and refinement of the Metropolitan Toronto government as we have it today. Even going back to the days of the architect himself, Mr. Lorne Cummings, at the very time of proposing the form of Metropolitan Toronto government, he felt it should be built around a three-year term.

The three major critics and persons who were charged with responsibilities by this government to study the system and bring it into being and to hone it and refine it to the reasonable perfection we have today, all of those authors without exception were supportive of the three-year term.

Looking at it from a practical point of view as one who was a member of the Metropolitan Toronto council on occasions while a member of one of the local municipalities, I must say that I can see from a practical point of view the merits of that argument. It's for this reason that I don't hesitate to support that aspect of Bill 106.

When we're dealing with such a large metropolitan area and with such a large metropolitan government representing so many people and administering such a large budget, which I think is probably the fourth largest budget in Canada next to the federal, the Ontario and Quebec budgets, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, from my own personal involvement that not only are the problems of metropolitan government complex, but the resolving of the financial requirements and making the necessary allocations and attending to the annual budgeting to ensure that programs are implemented are also complex.

I've found from experience that it takes a minimum of three years from the time an idea is conceived, the monies are allocated and the project gets under way until one usually sees the germ of an idea come to full fruition in the form of a completed facility. This is the pattern that appears to have been followed in the component municipalities within Metropolitan Toronto as well.

In order to have a consistency and continuity of service and responsibility, there is a great deal of merit to supporting the three-year system. Not having been a member of this Legislature and the party at the time, it's perhaps easy to be critical of the fact that the government went back to the two-year term. I feel from my perspective of a former Metro member that it was a retrograde step to do so. I would encourage and support a return to the three-year term.

However, having indicated support for that aspect of the bill, on the other hand I must be most critical of the other recommendations and proposals contained in the bill. I must say without hesitation that I'm equally opposed in an unqualified manner to the other provision which suggests that the Metropolitan chairman should be elected to his position and that he must be a member of the Metropolitan Toronto council.

We must bear in mind that the very first Metropolitan chairman, Fred Gardiner, was not an elected member of any council and he was indeed the grand master of the Metropolitan Toronto council.

If we look further down the line, we will recall that our good friend Billy Allen retired from municipal politics when he assumed the chairman's role, and continued to serve well as a chairman, even though he did not hold elective office within Metropolitan Toronto.

Circumstances could arise where a person who was not an elected member could well be the appropriate person for the members of the Metropolitan Toronto council to appoint. Needless to say, in all likelihood it will continue for some time in the foreseeable future that those circumstances are unlikely to arise. Nevertheless, the provision is made for that opportunity in that eventuality. Considering the calibre of the existing members within the Metropolitan Toronto councils who make up the total membership of the Metro council, it is apparent they will not have to go far afield to seek an appropriate chairman to lead them but will be able to select from amongst themselves.

The sponsor of the bill has suggested that, by following the procedures he has set out in his bill, the Metro chairman must continue to be elected within the municipality; so that to say the people of Metro would have an opportunity to elect him to his office is not totally an accurate statement. The people electing him, of course, would be only the people within a given ward in which he sought election or within a given municipality within Metropolitan Toronto wherein he may choose to run as a member of a board of control. It is not likely he would seek those senior offices within the local government, because they in themselves are full-time positions.

If the member for Waterloo North had had the experience of me and my colleague from Downsview, who will be speaking this afternoon, he would fully understand the impracticalities of continuing to serve as an elected member for one of the local councils and, at the same time, trying to discharge the full-time duties of the Metro chairman.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Williams: One closing statement, Mr. Speaker: There is no way that the Metropolitan chairman could act impartially and service the people of Metropolitan Toronto at large and continue to serve as an elected member of one of the constituent municipalities at the same time. For this reason I would be opposed to the bill. This particular section I find offensive and, as such, the bill itself should fall.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise and give wholehearted support to the twofold principle contained in the bill introduced by my colleague for Waterloo North.

I agree with the points brought forward by the member for Waterloo North, and I would like to elaborate briefly on some of them.

The first concept of the bill which is important from my point of view is the fact that it designates a three-year term for an elected official. There is a lot to be said for having a specific number of months or years to serve, in that it would free one up from the constant plague of an impending election. It might be a good lesson for us to learn here in this assembly, that rather than be threatened with an election, we should be free to go about the work of the province and governing the province.

Likewise, the fact that there is a set term—and it is an extended term, to three years—frees up an elected official to make decisions that would be for the good of the public rather than for his own personal political good and for the mere purpose of gaining votes. He could be perceived to be acting in the interest of the public in a way that represents continuity. It gives a greater opportunity, in my respectful submission, for the public to assess the record of the elected official.

My colleague from Waterloo quoted Mr. John Robarts who, in supporting the concept of the three-year term, said the three-year term would give “the opportunity to suggest, debate, set, and implement principles and policies.” I believe that concept could be taken one step farther. Not only would the three-year term give the opportunity to suggest, debate, set and implement policies, but it would also give the electorate a chance to assess the relative success or failure of the policies that are implemented. That is a very important aspect to those who have to make up their minds on election day as to the record of the person running—whether the policies implemented in the course of his or her term were successful.

I would like to spend a little more time, however, on the aspect introduced in this bill that the chairman be one from an elected position, one who has served on the local scene. There are the advantages already suggested—the confidence of the public in a person who holds an elected office, and the aspect of accountability.

But there are also disadvantages in not having an elected official: The position smacks of political patronage. There is no accountability and the person who holds the office can be regarded as a political puppet.

It can be argued that by requiring the chairman to be an elected representative the best man might not be able to win. That argument may succeed, but it would only appeal to certain people. As was demonstrated recently, the week after the good people of Ottawa defeated Robert de Cotret, he was made a senator and a cabinet minister. Again, it smacks of political patronage.

This is a big government position, holding great responsibility. A person who holds that position is dealing with other political personages. As a result, it would only be reasonable that a person who holds that position be a politician and not a bureaucrat and be a person who is accountable and answerable to the electorate.

It is argued as well that requiring the chairman to be an elected representative could lead to a conflict of interest—that he could not be loyal to his duties as a local councillor. He might have a local bias with respect to one region. I remind the House that the Premier is also the member for Brampton. The parliamentary system functions this way and surely the municipalities could do the same. We in this House are held accountable to the electorate if our vision is too narrow.

I suppose it can also be argued that one cannot be a mayor of a city or a borough and at the same time be Metro chairman. In my respectful submission that's easily remediable as well. A person who intends to run for mayor could not hold himself out to run for the power or position of Metro chairman.

I think there's one more subtle and perhaps very significant aspect of this bill. That is, it calls for the election of the chairman and that election is from within those who are elected to the position of Metro council. It is not, as has been proposed in other legislation that has come before this House, on a Metro-wide basis that the election would arise.

In respect to that, I can quote from Mr. Robarts again in his Framework for the Future, on page 54, when he too put forward this position. He said: “The chairman of the Metro council should be more accountable to the electorate than he is currently. The commission thinks however, that direct election of the chairman on a Metro-wide basis is neither feasible nor desirable. It is not feasible because of the cost that would be involved in campaigning for such a position. It is not desirable because it violates the principle that the council itself should select its own leadership.

“The principle underlies the commission's recommendations regarding both local and Metro executive bodies. The only exception to the principle is the proposed continued direct election of local mayors because of established tradition and the need to maintain the powerful political base that is indispensable in representing local views in the Metro council. These reasons do not apply to the position of chief executive of the Metro Federation.

“Accordingly, it is recommended that the metropolitan chairman continue to be selected by the council from among its own members. He should, however, also retain his local seat and be required to win election to council again each term, if he is to continue in office, although he would not be expected to take an active part in local council meetings.

"This arrangement," Mr. Robarts continues, "parallels the situation at the federal and provincial levels of government in which the leader of the government must win election in a constituency prior to taking executive office." Amply sensible and wholly acceptable and I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this concept and both principles contained in this bill will be accepted by this House and I look forward, once they are accepted, to their extension to those regional municipalities that are beyond the borders of Metropolitan Toronto in such places as York, Durham and other regional areas.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill and, unlike any previous speaker so far today, to speak against the three-year term for the council of Metropolitan Toronto. I suggest that this bill, unlike a lot of other bills in the Legislature, is not really a party bill. I know it's a private member's bill but it won't divide, at least I hope it won't, on party lines because party policy per se on economics, et cetera, does not really enter into the decision-making on this kind of matter.

I have heard many arguments put forward up to this point on the reasons as to why there should be a three-year term and particularly the argument that it should be because the Association of Municipalities of Ontario wants it, because the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee wants it, because the Metro council wants it, because Robarts recommended it. I suggest to you, however, Mr. Speaker, that in the consideration of a basic principle of whether there should be a two- or three-year term, municipal people—and I have a great respect for them—have a vested interest in other than just what may be for the good of the people within their municipality. I don't think it's unfair to anyone to say that if one is elected to a public office, whether it's municipal or in the Legislature, and after one goes through that expense and that trauma, if it turns out to be that, one likes to feel secure for a period of time. That's a natural reaction by politicians but really, I think we can't give high priority to that. Rather we should be considering what is best for the public in a municipality.

I can recall, because I was in municipal life for quite a number of years a great debate which lasted over many years whether there should be a one-year or a two-year term and in many instances that was given to the public within a municipality to decide in a referendum, and it was always turned down, including in the city of Toronto. The public generally turned it down when that was put on a municipal ballot. They wanted the people elected to be accountable to them on a more frequent basis.

That right, of course, was taken away. Councils were given the right to set up over a period of time—to decide whether they wanted a one- or two-year term and now, at least in regional municipalities, in the local municipality it's done under the Municipal Act. I would point out of course that even those who have been studying local government across the province haven't been unanimous in this. Robarts made the recommendation for a three-year term in Metro Toronto.

Of course, another ex-politician, a well-known Conservative and a person who has long experience on the Toronto and Metro councils, William Archer, made the exact reverse recommendation when he did a study in the Niagara region. I won't take time to read it all, because I want to deal with the other half of this bill, but the fact is that there is a very real difference of opinion. Perhaps I should just read the first part. He says:

"The commissioner"—speaking of himself—"has had personal experience with both a two- and a three-year term and had previously argued for the three-year term." I want to point out he did that when he was on the city council in Toronto. Then he states: "However, experience and knowledge has now convinced him that the two-year term is more suitable." When he was outside, looking at it objectively and not as a vested interest, he felt the two-year term was more suitable.

I think it is true, although the member for Waterloo North stated otherwise, that there is more accountability to the public under a two-year term than there is under a three-year term. I think I am right in saying the member for Waterloo North said it would increase accountability. I say it is not so. There may be some argument that it increases efficiency, but it does not increase accountability. The public would have 50 per cent less opportunity than they do now to change their councils. That is true. If we go from two to three years, they won't have the same opportunity to change their councils or council members, if they don't like them. I suggest it can get municipalities and municipal councils into more of the manipulations that we have at the provincial level and the federal level.

I know of no municipal council at this time which in the year of an election deliberately reduces taxation and increases services, which is common practice provincially and federally.

Mr. Epp: They can't budget deficits.

Mr. Swart: They can't budget deficits, but there is another much more important reason. The accountability of elected people is directly proportional—perhaps on a logarithmic scale—to the proximity of the next election. There's not much question about that. Provincial governments, as has been the pattern of this government across from us, give lots of goodies and cut taxes when it comes to election time; whether it is 1975 or some other year, that is when they improve all the benefits. If we get into three-year terms, I suggest the same thing can happen with municipal councils when we get closer to that period of time. If they are purer than us now—and I suggest that they are—then let's keep them that way, and we will do it at least partially by having the two-year term.

The longer term does not necessarily give greater continuity, either, with regard to operations in a municipality. I sat on local councils when there was the one-year term, and nomination was one week before election day. The lame-duck period then lasted for about two weeks. When we get into a two-year term, it will last for a much longer period of time. When we get into a three-year term, it will last for a still longer period of time, and the campaigning will start six months before the municipal election is to take place.

It is also true that those people who are on the lower incomes, the working people, and those people who may not be known because they are in business in the municipality, or happen to be lawyers in the municipality, become known from running for council once, twice or three times. They are more apt to get elected the second or third time. If we stretch out the length of time, not only will they be more apt to be forgotten between the second and third years, but they also won't have the number of opportunities to run for municipal council. I say, therefore, that it will increase the opportunities of the establishment to remain in power.

On all counts, I believe that a three-year term will give less accountability to the public than a two-year term, and that is why I am opposed to the three-year term. In this, I think I am right in saying, I am on the side of the public and not of the politicians. Being a municipal person for 21 years, it distresses me that I cannot support perhaps the majority of the politicians. But in this instance, I think they have a vested interest, as we have a vested interest if we were talking about our terms in the Legislature.

I just have about two minutes left.

Mr. Acting Speaker: About one-and-a-half.

Mr. Swart: The second half of this bill before us—and I say this advisedly with no acrimony—is the phoniest, most hypocritical section of any bill brought before this Legislature since I have been here.

Mr. Stong: The honourable member stands alone.

Mr. Swart: That party on my right spoke for months and years about the need for electing a chairman. They get up today and talk about the need for electing a chairman. But when the opportunity came, when we moved an amendment in this House a year ago and the Liberals could have had an elected chairman, they voted against it.

Mr. Stong: Not on this basis.

Mr. Swart: On exactly the same basis.

Mr. Epp: It was different and you know it.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, there is no time to read it now, so I would ask the people in this House to look at Hansard of May 30 and June 1. The amendment put forward by this person was exactly the same as they have in this bill.

Mr. Epp: Don't take it out of context.

Mr. Swart: Their only excuse for voting against that amendment at the time was that it was a housekeeping bill. When they had the opportunity to make the change, they backed off. They know this bill is not going any place so they can posture on it.

Mr. Stong: I have never heard the likes of it. Read the act.

Mr. Swart: But when they had the opportunity to change things, they did not take it. I support the second part of this bill, but the party that introduced it does not.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Wilson Heights, for five minutes only.

Mr. Stong: That's too long.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I think it will come to no surprise to members of this House that I will not support this bill in the form in which it appears today. There are two parts to the bill and I want to deal mostly with the second part.

On the first part, as far as three-year terms are concerned, I still feel there should be uniformity of term within the province. I am not prepared to change the term for Metropolitan Toronto unilaterally without talking about other parts of the province.

The proponent of the bill said, "Since we came back to two-year terms, there has been less voter turn out in Metropolitan Toronto." That was a coincidence and had nothing to do with the term. In the 1972 election, voting for a two-year term, there was a high turnout because there was a heavy contest for the mayoralty of Toronto. Some people I know were involved in that. In 1974 and 1976 there were virtual acclamations. The mayor of Toronto is the big race in Metro and that is why there was a low turnout. It had nothing to do with the two-year term.

The other thing I would point out as far as two-year terms are concerned is that the most powerful democratically elected body in the world, the United States Congress, also has a two-year term.

I want to deal basically with the election of chairmen in the few minutes I have. In theory, the member for Waterloo North is correct: the Metro chairman should be elected. But—and a big but—in practice, especially as put forward, it simply will not work in a two-tier government and it simply will not work in the present system of indirect election to Metropolitan council. I would point out that a majority of the members of the Metropolitan council agree.

There are four of us in this House who have served on Metro council: you, Mr. Speaker; the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), whose opinion I am not too sure of; the member for Oriole; and myself. The member for Oriole and myself agree that the present method of chairmanship election is the proper one. You and I, Mr. Speaker, were involved in one of those elections for Metro chairman and neither of us won. I guess that is the way it is.

It is the principle of the British parliamentary system that the electors choose their representatives and the representatives choose their leader. That is, in effect, the way we choose the Prime Minister or the Premier of a province. He is not chosen by the public at large, he is chosen by the people who are elected.

Mr. Swart: But he is elected by the people and must stay elected.

Mr. Rotenberg: There are many people in this world who have far more powerful jobs in democratic countries. Just to point out a couple of them: there is a guy around named Cyrus Vance who runs the foreign affairs of the world; a guy named Michael Blumenthal is probably more responsible for the economics of the world than anybody else; a guy named Arthur Schlesinger is responsible for energy in the United States and the world. The other nine cabinet ministers in the United States do not even hold any elected office. So there are precedents for people in powerful positions not being elected.

Mr. Swart: The leader has to be elected there.

Mr. Stong: We are the enlightened half of North America.

Mr. Rotenberg: I must be getting to them, Mr. Speaker, because they're heckling

The other point is that, earlier in the day, the Liberal Party was giving a great harangue about local autonomy. The elected members on Metro council have a say. The elected members on Metro council are not in favour of the bill as put forward today. They want to leave the election of Metro chairman the way it is, and they have said so by resolution.

I would point out to the member for Waterloo North that even the bill as he has drafted it really does not do what he wants to do. He's changing the section which says a member does not have to resign from the local council and permits the chairman to continue on a local council. This is the way it was before 1966. But what his bill doesn't do is compel a member to remain on his local council. If his bill were adopted, what could happen is simply what happens now. If a member were elected to a council and elected as Metro chairman, he would resign his seat in the local council, and there would be a by-election to fill that seat. But the difference would be, under his proposition, that at the next municipal election—let's say Paul Godfrev would again run for alderman in North York, be elected as an alderman in North York, be elected to Metro council, run to become chairman and then resign his seat. The bill doesn't preclude that. Quite frankly, this would be a very silly way to go about the business.

The other major point is that the Metropolitan Toronto council is not the same as this assembly, and the chairman is not the same as the Premier of the province representing Brampton riding. It is a two-tier system, and the member has to serve on two councils. Being Metro chairman is as full-time a job as being Premier of the province. Yes, he sits on the local council of which he is chairman, as the Premier sits in this House. But either because of the time or the capacity, either physical or mental, a chairman cannot also sit on and do a job on local council.

Under the terms proposed by the member for Waterloo North if a person were elected as an alderman or a controller of a local council and then became Metro chairman and had to stay on his council, in effect he would be a lame-duck member. He really could not give the time that he should to that local council and to his constituents.

Then there's the point of accountability. The purpose of electing the chairman is that he's accountable as Metro chairman. But he's not. When he goes out to get elected, he doesn't tell the people in ward seven of North York or ward four of Scarborough that he's running for Metro chairman. No. He's running for alderman—and that's how he gets elected.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debating this ballot item has expired.

Mr. Rotenberg: To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that for these and many other reasons we will not support the bill.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Acting Speaker: I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

First Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

Bill 17, An Act to revise the Line Fences Act;

Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act;

Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara;

Bill 32, An Act to amend the Audit Act, 1977;

Bill 33, An Act to amend the Agricultural Development Repeal Act, 1973;

Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act;

Bill 43, An Act to repeal the Fires Extinguishment Act;

Bill 44, An Act to repeal the Vacant Land Cultivation Act;

Bill 45, An Act to repeal the Fire Guardians Act;

Bill 52, An Act to amend the Mining Tax Act, 1972;

Bill 71, An Act to amend the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974;

Bill 87, An Act to amend the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act;

Bill 88, An Act to amend the Ontario Highway Transport Board Act;

Bill 92, An Act to amend the Railways Act;
Bill 93, An Act to provide for the holding of Land by Religious Organizations;

Bill 110, An Act to amend the Administration of Justice Act;

Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act;

Bill Pr1, An Act respecting the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake;

Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Delila Construction Limited; and Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Borough of East York.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS (concluded)

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. Lawlor moved resolution 23:

That, nearing a time of crisis and decision for Canada, a committee of this House be named immediately to review the present proposals and positions of this government in relation to national unity and related constitutional issues, so that the position of this House may be made clear, particularly as the positions of the governments, federal and provincial, of the Task Force on Canadian Unity and other concerned interested bodies have now been published; and that the committee be required to recommend to this House the policy and proposals for Ontario which will best ensure the continuing unity of Canada; the said committee to report not later than November 1, 1979.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Lawlor has moved ballot item 23, a resolution standing in his name. Will the member proceed for 20 minutes? I assume he will wish to reserve any time left over.

Mr. Lawlor: If there is any time left over, I shall possibly refute all the objections.

On Friday last, and on Monday again, briefly, succinctly and to the point I, with others in this House, spoke on similar issues and there would be little point in rehearsing that particular procedure again.

I thought I spoke particularly well on Friday morning, and that being the case, I would ask the minister to give a good deal of thought to what was said at that time. Looking at Hansard I said, "That wasn't too bad.

That was pretty well put and should carry some conviction and some weight in the mind of the minister."

My problem is that I cannot clearly remember ever having a full-blown constitutional debate in this House. There was supposed to be one but I remember I was ill one Friday morning and whether it came about or not I have never been able to say. In any case, my deep feeling in this regard is that we have had no role, no say, no input as a constituted legislative body contributing, being detrimental to, weighing, assessing, analysing or doing anything with respect to this most critical issue at this time in our history, on this side of the House, or in the House as a whole. This stands as a towering indictment of us all, of everything this House stands for. I'll come back to that in a few moments.

Before doing so, I would like to refer to the throne speech debate of this year. On page 25 the government said: "It is our firm conviction that a renewed constitution is a high priority of this nation in order to provide a framework in which all citizens and regions can enjoy growth and prosperity within the context of a harmonious and flourishing country."

It goes on: "The general principles concerning Ontario's approach in this respect are, we believe, supported by the people of Ontario." I shan't give them all; just one or two. They are: "The preservation of the unity of Canada"—in which we, if I may comment, all share obviously, and some of us are far more stirred, far more desperate almost about it than others seem to be.

Second: "The preservation of a strong central government with adequate powers to pursue the national interest and provincial governments that reflect the regional diversities that are the Canadian heritage." And it goes on to other points.

What are these "adequate powers to pursue the national interest"? What are the delineations of the portions of provincial governments to reflect diversities within the terms of our national heritage? What is the framed vision for this country? Why can't we put some definition into the whole thing? Why are we either suppressed, or subverted, or held back in giving articulation to these problems on all sides of the House? Surely in matters of high policy of this kind, where there is a great deal of non-partisan interest, we can come to terms.

But the government circumvents; it spoils. There is some weird mechanism operating in the government where it cages for itself the determination, as though it were handling foreign affairs in Nicaragua this afternoon and didn't wish interference from the yahoos or the malcontents or those members of the legislative body who might raise points which might be a bit disturbing and might not be on all fours with the declared intent of the government. That's no democracy. That's not the way contemporary government—and certainly not a government in a minority position—should work. I don't take advantage of that. I simply point it out. It does give a heightened role, which we wish to share in, which—to be quite frank—we demand to share in. It's our country too and we wish to participate in this.

It's not enough to simply repudiate sovereignty association and let it go at that. We do that, but does the debate end there? Have we not got the intelligence, the accumulated wisdom? Is not this House held to be perhaps the most sagacious of parliaments in this country at a provincial level? Have we nothing to say to the nation in this regard?

I for one am not prepared to repose this wholly within the sacred confines of either the cabinet or the bosom of the Premier of this province acting alone. He may take that towering significance upon himself and wish that to be the case, but it simply cannot be. It cannot be within the terms of the kind of government we have. I really think he recognizes that, although I have some misgivings about the result of this particular debate in this House this afternoon.

I would like to refer for a moment to a brief article in the The Metropolitan Toronto Business Journal of the spring of 1979. It's referring to the Pepin-Robarts task force which, as has been pointed out earlier in this House along with the Macdonald and numerous reports, would form a very good delineated basis for discussion. It sets the thing up. We have the material before us and there's no reason this thing cannot be done rather expeditiously.

I'll speak a little bit more about how I envisage that committee later on, but it could be performed expeditiously with the stuff available. We'll have to work it up and go over it and in the sense of setting the problems themselves, it would be perhaps a prolonged piece of business. I've waited for three years now to see somebody come to terms and to set it out in a quasi-blueprint for us. It's been done and therefore it's a question of mulling it over and working it up within a committee context. It can't be done in this House at all.

The Business Journal says: "The task force found the country and its constitutional system in a protracted state of crisis, the primary but by no means the only challenge coming from Quebec." That's true too. It's not just Quebec. The rumblings in western Canada, particularly in Alberta, are something to be taken into cognizance in this situation and in the drafting of this constitution.

The task force found a pressing need among citizens for fresh accommodation which will permit the people who inhabit this country to live together in peace, harmony and liberty. The task force concluded: "Canada is passing through a period of travail which is more than a crisis of development. It is a crisis of existence. A central threat to our future existence is the diversity of ignorance where each fragment of opinion is inclined to think that it is the whole."

Thus, the task force reported: "Again and again people from one group or one part of the country or one economic class would engage in an analysis which they believed to be generally true but which seemed to us who had just got off the plane from the other end of the country to be but a small fragment of the country's reality."

Further down it says: "Canadians have a long way to travel and a little time in which to make the journey, but the place to start is by each Canadian reading A Future Together because, as Robarts-Pepin warned, 'Further erosion of the common will on which our society is ultimately grounded would almost certainly spell the end of the Canadian experience.'"

Flowing from that, and as a comment on this debate this afternoon, is the article by Jonathan Manthorpe of recent date which seeks to penetrate the convoluted recesses of the mind of the Premier with respect to why this hanging back, this strange reticence with respect to having a group in this House formed from all parties—and, I trust, an astute group. The issue itself will require a very great ability just to tackle it and to grapple with it. It is a complex and intricate issue.

Let me just say, in pausing here, if that is not done—if, as Manthorpe says, one of the motivations is fear on the part of the Premier or the government as to what may eventuate from such a committee—then I would say that shows damned little confidence in the members of this House, the quality of the members who might constitute that committee, their intelligence, their sense of what is fitting and what might or might not be done in the context of that committee.

I will pause here further to say that committee, as I envisage it, would not be a wide-ranging interrogation. It would perhaps be a little like the Ombudsman committee where we screen our witnesses and not everyone can appear before it. It is done deliberately. In this particular context, I wouldn't say there would be any need for advertising. If people wish to come, the committee itself would make a determination as to what it is there to hear. People who are informed on constitutional issues and people in the field of sociology and political science, et cetera, can make a contribution.

We are not interested in listening to kooks, to prejudiced individuals spouting or to any number of other things. I think that is perfectly within the ambit of the cognizance of the committee to take that position precisely, particularly on issues of this kind.

Other committees in other parts of the world set up their criteria. It has to be done explicitly and it has to be done on rational terms. But once set forth, there is no reason that the kind of exposure indicated in this article and the fears that would be engendered from it need arise at all. Does not this government repose sufficient faith in the members of such a committee and such a group of members to conduct themselves intelligently, knowing what the effects in the Quebec press or otherwise might be from invidious human beings seeking to destroy the country rather than to cement it?

The second thing is timing. The report of this committee may come in at the same time as the referendum. I find that hard to fathom. If the referendum comes in this fall, the committee report will be in or very likely prepared. I think they are parallel things. We address ourselves to the referendum as a separate matter. If members of the committee then are clued in, informed individuals who can make a special contribution because of the hearings and the dispelling of ignorance which had taken place and the insights gained with respect to the future disposition of this country, then all so much the better to enter into the debate on the referendum in this. It is a contribution to the referendum and it is meant to be a contribution to the government.

The government wouldn't pretend to be all-knowing or all-wise with respect to this particular problem, probably the most difficult, single, legalistic type of problem one could possibly think of. I think it would welcome assistance from any quarter, and particularly from within the House itself. The committee recommendations aren't binding, as everyone well knows. Nevertheless, they would be very serviceable; they would afford a Pabulum upon which one could pour a little homogenized milk of his own. One would be better equipped at the end of the day.

After one has taken a stand at some constitutional conference, one doesn't want this House to be racked by dispute and internal misgivings and internecine quarrels over an issue of this kind. We want unity; we want to all be working together. In any event, one is in no way bound by the results of the committee work.

To state that on a matter of such high policy, largely of a non-partisan nature, where what is at stake is the very existence of a country, that we not partake or have an input is a denial of the very raison d'être of this Legislature at this time. To base it on fear, to repress or even subvert such a work means that no confidence in the good sense and intelligence of the elected representatives of this province is being adverted to. It calls into question, so far as I am concerned, our fundamental purpose for being here.

I say cry, the beloved country. And as in Alan Paton's book of that name, I say to the Premier, permit this committee to come into being. It will serve a good purpose.

Members' misgivings I understand and give credence to. They are not foolish. At the same time, we all live in risk. The risk here can be diminished by setting out the terms of the committee. They can be diminished by seeing that people of integrity and quality get on the committee. But overbalancing that by far is the good work that such a committee can do in feeding the House, informing the members of what precisely are the issues involved here.

Many members of the House are not lawyers; they have never been to the law schools; they've never spent days or even half a term on two sections of a particular statute. Yet this is the most salient issue that we face. I was pleased the other day in the course of the debate the great weight wasn't placed on the economic side of the thing. The issues here transcend economics. There would be less friction in this country and I have little doubt there would not be so much unemployment, particularly among the unemployed youth of Quebec. They wouldn't be so disgruntled.

There would, nevertheless, be the present cultural difficulty. There would, nevertheless, be the will to separate. We English-speakers have been responsible for that throughout history, largely beginning with Lord Durham, but even before that. Consider Durham's policies: they were totally repressive of the French fact. They were going to eliminate them, not just assimilate them. The language was to go. That tenor of animosity, that in-built acrimony in our whole situation, has contributed overwhelmingly among the "white niggers of North America" to the present state of affairs.

That is not economic; that is something spiritual, something cultural. We have to come to terms with that. It's that wider dimension this committee can take on. A few people in government entrenched within the narrow circle of their own concepts are too self-enclosed to deal with that broadly. We need a feeding in, a sense of balance among those who are working and will work, I trust, later this summer, or as I said the other day, after Labour Day. Sure, there are a lot of committees. I hope the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs won't denigrate.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't believe it.

An hon. member: Give him at least two more minutes.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Actually, I was waiting with anticipation to hear what he was going to say, I guess we will have to wait for some future time.

I am rising to speak on the motion of my friend from Lakeshore and I would like to make a few comments. Most of them, I think, have been said in the last week in this House during the debate on the estimates of my ministry. I was thinking, as I listened to the remarks my friend made about having a committee, that I fully expected the estimates of this ministry and indeed the estimates concerning the Intergovernmental Affairs office and all those things connected with the constitution, to be debated in committee this year. For some reason somewhere, that idea was changed. I certainly didn't agree to it or want it, but I guess somewhere within the mysteries of how the business of this House is organized, our estimates ended up—

Mr. Nixon: Difficult for your whip to cope with.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member's friends are pointing to him so it must have been the House leaders who agreed on this. I thought we had an understanding that if estimates were debated in the House one year, they would be in a committee next year. I fully expected and hoped we would be in committee this year with the kind of debate that would have entailed.

Let me quickly sum up my position as a private member, since this is a private member's debate. It's my position—and I guess it also becomes the position of the government on this matter because I am going to state a few things that go beyond my own private feelings. I want it fully understood,

Mr. Speaker, that I believe, and we as a government believe, that all members of this House should share in this great debate, the great debate about restructuring our constitution, about renewing our federalism, about national unity, about our approach to the Quebec referendum. This is a very important subject. It's probably the most important subject there is today. It's of immense importance, too great importance to send to a committee first. That is the first thing that I would like to say.

We believe that this matter should be debated right here in this House. We have been relegating all matters to committees for too long; we are getting away, as I said the other day, from the whole idea of debate in this House. Debate in this House of the nature and the kind I see involves extensive preparation beforehand and extensive self-discipline and study, such as my friend from Lakeshore and others in this House engage in before they speak in this House. A subject of this great importance calls for the involvement of most of the members of this House in the debate and therefore the background work on their particular parts. We really believe that debate should be held in this House and that was what the section in the speech from the throne was meant to indicate. It was meant to state the government's general policies in this regard.

Mr. Lawlor: Useless and hopeless.

Hon. Mr. Wells: To say that a debate in this House is useless and hopeless is a very sad comment and I don't buy it. I don't buy that.

Mr. Lawlor: Debating it in the House in a formal way achieves nothing. It needs nice parsing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: A debate in this House on this very important subject, by well-prepared members, engaged upon as a debate and not a series of readings of prepared speeches, can be a very helpful thing.

This is what should happen and this is the government position; we stated it in the speech from the throne. We intend to put a resolution on the Order Paper. That resolution would have been on the Order Paper and the debate probably would have been held had it not been for the intervention of the federal election. With the agreement of all parties, we withheld the debate until this time. This House is now going to adjourn in a very few days and the debate will not be held now.

There also is a feeling that the use of the debate would be better served if it were closer to the Quebec referendum. We will know, probably by the end of this month, when that referendum will be. At that time we can schedule the debate in this House next fall; that is the commitment of this government, to put the resolution on the Order Paper and to have a debate in this House next fall.

That debate can go for one day, two days, three days, four days, five days, one week, two weeks, or as long as it is necessary for this House to deal with this important matter. We feel that is important. It should not be a half-day or Friday morning debate, but a full-scale debate that will allow all members to express their opinions and then allow us to come to some conclusions, through a resolution—perhaps amended—that will say to the people of Canada and the people of Quebec, what this House believes. Then—and I give this commitment to my friend—if it is necessary to have a committee of this House set up to carry forward the thoughts that have been set in place from that debate, I think it is well and good that a committee be established at that time, but I do not believe that it should be established until after then.

My friend has brought out, and many members have mentioned, all the documents that are available. The Pepin-Robarts report is a good report. That task force listened to thousands and thousands of people across Ontario and Canada; its report should be studied by members. Our advisory committee's two reports are excellent and should be studied by the members. The British Columbia government has a good series of reports on its positions on constitutional reform. The Canadian Bar Association has reports. There are reports of the first ministers' conferences. There is a whole list of materials available, as I indicated the other day. I circulated that list to the members and told them, if they wished it, we would supply them with that material. Incidentally, as I indicated, only one member so far has asked for the material.

Mr. Lawlor: I asked for it, didn't I?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, my friend asked for it the other day—quite correctly so. I might say that the one member who did reply asked for all the material; he said, "Send me everything." So obviously he is going to make a very valuable contribution to the debate when it ensues.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Who was that member?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Who was he? It was the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope).

Mr. Nixon: He's not very busy.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The point I wish to make is that this material is available, and I think it is the kind of material that the members of this House can spend time studying and reading over the summer.

I also want to make the commitment that members of the staff of my ministry, and I know the chairman of our Advisory Committee on Confederation and others, would be happy to meet with members or caucus groups from this House at any time mutually convenient to talk about these particular matters so that everyone can be prepared for what we see as an important full-scale debate in this House. After that debate, as I say, if a committee is necessary, I give my commitment that we will seriously consider a committee at that time. But at this time we believe there should be a debate in this House.

I would further like to suggest again that perhaps you, Mr. Speaker, through the good offices of your staff and officers, would consider an exchange visit of the members of this Legislature with the members of the National Assembly of Quebec, perhaps including the press galleries. This would be an excellent way for us to meet. It doesn't have to be a social gathering completely, although there would be some social parts of it. But I think it would probably be one of the most useful things, next to this debate, that this House could do at this time, to arrange in the fall an exchange visit where we could meet both in the sense of an exchange of ideas and in a social sense. It would involve members from all parties in the Quebec National Assembly and members from all parties in this Legislature, and would be organized not by the government, not by one political party or another, but by you, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will consider that.

Those would be my feelings on this resolution; therefore, I guess, I am saying I don't think this resolution should be approved by this House at this time.

Mr. Grande: You just make use of committees when it serves your purpose.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support personally the resolution of my good friend from Lakeshore and its co-sponsor whom I suppose is the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick). I do so with a great deal of interest and personal enthusiasm, though I do find some of the wording of the resolution interesting and I probably would not share in it entirely.

Mr. Nixon: Ponderous.

Mr. Conway: Not ponderous. Perhaps I will speak about that in a moment.

I was interested to hear from the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, for whom I have a great deal of personal respect in these matters. As I have said here before, he, over and above so many of his colleagues in the ministry, has led—and truly led—the debate as it needs to be led by political figures in this province. His record in Education is one about which I think he and many in this House have a great deal of which to be proud.

I was amazed, though, to hear what he had to say here today about why he would vote against the resolution. To some degree, I know what he says when he talks about this Legislature's growing desire to refer everything, including the time of day, I am sure, to some committee for its consideration. Although I must say that when 1,000 of us or thereabouts can congregate on the front lawn for hours on end, it perhaps is a comment on what our real role in the world is. I do not agree with him at all that this is a matter of such great importance that it should not be referred to a committee.

I think the committee has a real role to play in educating a select group of interested members who, I dare say, should not be paid the usual summer indemnity. I would be all in favour of making sure that every member of this committee does so out of interest and not out of any concern for the emoluments, whatever they may be at that particular time.

Mr. Nixon: That's an interesting proposal.

Mr. Conway: I am all in favour of a committee that would sit this summer, exclusive of the normal select committee emoluments, so great is the importance of this to me personally.

An hon. member: You would probably be the only one.

Mr. G. Taylor: Put it to all committees and then you have a deal.

Mr. Conway: I would be prepared also to accept that.

The minister says that all of us who are interested have the opportunity to survey the literature accordingly. I must say we are, unfortunately, not all as free and as available as we would like to be.

As one member who does have an interest, academically or otherwise, in this particular sort of matter, I deeply regret that the Rolph-ton matter, for example, has preoccupied so much of my time as the local member that I have not been able to go to the minister, request all of the information and spend great amounts of time reading it. I greatly regret that my responsibilities as Health critic have precluded me from taking the time I might otherwise like to have to muse about the issues in this connection.

Mr. Nixon: When do you ever fit in your social affairs?

Mr. Conway: I have to say that my support for this resolution is based on the fact that we should have an opportunity to survey the literature in some good forum in some reasonable time to educate those who have an interest in this matter. As someone with an interest, I believe it would serve me as a contributing member of that debate, when it occurs, to have had the opportunity to hear various witnesses, to have reflected upon much of the evidence to which the minister has directed our attention and then to make a qualitatively better contribution, hopefully, to the debate. I believe, as he does entirely, that that debate should occur finally in this House so that all of us can go on record as stating our opinions and points of view.

All I am saying is that I believe, as one private member, that that expression of opinion would be qualitatively better because it would be qualitatively more educated. This committee should be struck to do what the member for Lakeshore has suggested it do because we debate the government's resolution at a time as close to the actual referendum as is possible.

The minister draws our attention to the fact that it is not the case for us in this House to debate major issues as we perhaps once did many years ago. Older members of my caucus inform me that that is a tradition which has faded around here and not too many important debates occur. Quite frankly, that is my impression. I am amazed at how little of substance this chamber directs its attention to. Really and truly, I think I can count on the fingers of one hand the major debates I have listened to on issues of a more than province-wide basis in this chamber, and I think that is to be greatly regretted.

I personally will never forgive the Premier for what he did a year ago on a certain private member's bill and not because I, as an oppositionist, couldn't understand why he might like to take that position. I can perhaps understand that strategically as well as many honourable members opposite, but what I did not like was his contempt of this chamber. What I resented was his unwillingness as the first minister to come into this chamber and to stand up. Granted, it was a private members' hour, and there are certain technical reasons why he might not wish to engage ordinarily, but that was, as the honourable minister and most of us knew, no ordinary debate.

I was very unhappy and deeply disappointed the Premier did not come in, as many of his predecessors certainly did, and stand in his place and say to the members gathered, to the press assembled and to the population generally, why it was he would not support the initiative undertaken by certain members within. I did absolutely object to his style in that connection, because I do believe it leads to the downgrading of this chamber and the debate that ordinarily should take place within its four walls.

To reiterate, not that I would ever have happily accepted the Premier's position, but it would have been much easier for me to have sat in this seat and heard my Premier stand across the way and say why it was he could not accept the direction of honourable members. I think that would have been a much more honourable, a much more sensible and indeed a much more heroic position than the one he adopted, which I felt to be, as I said earlier, almost in contempt of this chamber.

Very briefly, I want to say I think the debate is important. We've studied everything from land drainage to the after-hours use of school rooms. We will gather this summer to look at the issues of the Education Act or the nuclear safety question, or the matters involving environmental assessment or whatever. Those are all important parts of our provincial mandate, but I think history may reflect upon us in this particular province, wherein I believe the real crisis of the resolution exists. As a private member, I do not happen to believe the separatist crisis exists across the Ottawa River. From my point of view, the real crisis exists here in the suburban heartland of southern Ontario. That's the kind of issue to which I would like to direct our attention in the committee.

I would be happy to support the minister's contention that the Speaker engage an exchange between members here and members in the National Assembly. I don't agree with the minister that we should diminish the social aspects of that particular encounter. I dare say history points out this beloved Confederation of ours was brought into being much more by the cocktail diplomacy of John A. Macdonald and his convivial Canadian compatriots when they finally found their way to Charlottetown that steamy September afternoon, than by the very austere, almost academic, antiseptic discussions that would otherwise take place.

I think the greater the conviviality, the greater the hope for a new tomorrow in this connection.

Finally, I want to say I think the resolution is timely and I think it is eminently supportable, because it will hopefully lead a select group of interested, involved members of this assembly to a much more educated view of the options that have been put forward by many of the groups to which the resolution makes mention. For that reason, I am happy to rise as a private member in support of the member for Lakeshore's resolution.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution placed by my colleague, the member for Lakeshore, and I welcome the comments made by my colleague, the member for Renfrew North in the consideration of this resolution.

I rise, really, with some degree of sadness, I suppose, or some degree of resignation, in a sense of defeat, about the resolution. I perhaps had thought there would have been a genuine sense of involvement of this assembly in the process of constitutional change in Canada, but that's not going to be. I see no likelihood of a change in the government by way of an election in the near future, so I, for one, do not anticipate and will not live in expectation that we will have any opportunity in this assembly for a consideration of the multitude of questions which have to be considered before we can have the kind of constitutional change which will be appropriate.

I know that Dana Fradon, one of the cartoonists for the New Yorker magazine, will allow me perhaps to plagiarize and paraphrase a cartoon of his which appears in the current issue of the New Yorker. It's a picture of the Ontario cabinet room. At the head of the table is the jovial Premier (Mr. Davis), bilious Bill. Down in the far corner there is, obviously, the provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), and to the left of the Premier is the eager Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). I see the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). I don't see the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, (Mr. Wells), he must have been away at the one cabinet meeting that the question of Confederation was discussed.

In the caption at the bottom of the cartoon the Premier says: "Then we're all agreed, as it has always done with its difficulties in the past, Canada will somehow find a way to solve its constitutional problems."

I would have liked to have had a small part to play in the "somehow." I really would have enjoyed the opportunity to have had a minor role to play in the way in which the constitutional change in the country was to take place.

Although I am a loyal Britisher, I don't happen to have a great deal of English blood in me as such so far as our family tree would indicate, so I don't subscribe to the view that we muddle on these issues. I'm quite satisfied that the Premier is one of the latter day advocates of that particular way of dealing with important issues. We never deal with them openly, we never deal with them up front, we never deal with them as matters which can be articulated with feeling about matters of significance to us; it's not his style.

In the cartoon there is also a picture on the wall. I had difficulty discerning whether it was George Howard Ferguson, whether perhaps it was George Drew, whether perhaps it was Leslie Frost. It certainly wasn't John Robarts, because John Robarts would have had his picture turned to the wall at what the present Premier is doing. If there was one thing, one area demonstrated in his co-chairmanship of the Pepin-Robarts report, and as indicated at the time when he was Premier of this province, it was his sense that you had to involve people in the vitality of the country as ultimately to be reflected within its constitutional framework.

[5:30]

But, Mr. Speaker, in the regression which is taking place in the Conservative Party as it tries to go back to the Ontario of 1940 with the small budget, the small problems, it seems to me that it is prepared to hold on to power in some kind of an intense grasp that makes them more and more frightened to deal at all openly and fairly in this assembly with the issues of the day. We see it every day in the absence of the Premier from any participation in the debates of the assembly. Once question period is over, no more do we see the Premier. What a contrast, even in the time I've been here—

Mr. Eaton: Nor your party's leader. Where is he?

Mr. Samis: Where is the cabinet?

Mr. Renwick: —to the way in which the former Premier, the only other one under whom I have been a colleague in the House, used to be in the House. The place was important then.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This Premier spends more time in the House than any other Premier.

Mr. Renwick: I know I'm not allowed to attribute unavowed motives to anybody. I'm going to tread that narrow line of speculating about the motives which are involved in this.

One of the obvious things is that the government has achieved its purpose. It has so downgraded the issue of Confederation and national unity in the minds of the public of Ontario that it has no priority. That is default of leadership because the question is the most profound question to face this country. It is the other side of the economic problem. Many of the economic problems are worldwide and intransigent problems. Many of them are structured and many of them are part of the inadequate structure of Confederation in this country.

Let me speculate on another motive. He wants us all to agree with him about the somehow. We don't know what the somehow is, as to how we're going to solve the problem. We all must agree because we all must leave it to this egocentric Premier to have the luxury during the next election campaign, if it serves his purpose, to wrap himself in the flag as the only participant who can lead this province into his version of the future. That's another one. We've seen that one performed in a modest way before in the last election.

Let me try another one on. In a funny way, if he's intransigent in his position, he may solve a problem for a short time, but the problem will come up at a later time. He may not be here and we may not be here, but the nature of Confederation is such that it requires a continuing communication; just, I suppose, as all personal relations require continuing communication and continuous talk. There's no way in which this Premier ever talks any more or communicates about himself and his relationship to the leadership of the province.

Let me say again that he delights in the charade of public participation in an open conference at Confederation discussions in the centres of Canada, whether it's the Premiers' conference or whether it is the Prime Minister's conference of first leaders, pretending to be open. What has happened is that all of the decisions are made in that strange intellectual world of the academics and the bureaucrats, that's where the decision is now taking place. There isn't a public forum in the province of Ontario where the matters are discussed.

The solutions to constitutional problems aren't decided in open debate. I remember very well when the Premier very casually offered the then Prime Minister Trudeau correctional services in return for something else.

I rather shuddered at that time, because the present Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) was then the Minister of Correctional Services here and we all know the reputation of the federal government in the penitentiaries area. Under the present Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) I think maybe the inmates would be somewhat better off under the federal penitentiary system. But let me say, as a member of this assembly, in my private capacity as a member representing one of the ridings in the province, that I consider the exclusion of this assembly from participation in that ongoing process of constitutional change related to the question of national unity is one which I regret I will not be able to have an opportunity to share.

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking against the resolution. I apologize for not having had the opportunity to be here earlier to hear the comments and, I am certain, the important comments made by the previous speaker.

Mr. Nixon: You mean your minister?

Mr. McCaffrey: Did my minister speak on this as well?

Mr. McCaffrey: I have two or three matters I would like to share with the members about this resolution to try to make it as clear as I can why I am opposed to a resolution that would set up another committee.

I am trying to see this not in isolation from other matters which have been of real concern to me in the two years I have been here. One obviously is the number of committees we have been confronted with in those two years—and that has been the case in each of the recesses since 1977. Related to that is a concern about the relevance of this chamber and the lack of meaningful debate that takes place in this chamber. Those comments have also been made by members who have had a long stay in this Legislature.

I have heard people from both sides of this room talk about their deep concern that we are getting to the point where really meaty matters are debated, sometimes well and in depth, in committees; that, increasingly, substantive matters are not discussed in this chamber.

Mr. Lawlor: That is getting to be a red herring. That's just nonsense. Committees do good work. Certain things are better done in committee.

Mr. McCaffrey: The committees do outstanding work. One of the reasons I was late—and I share this with the member for Lakeshore—is that we just reported Bill 163, which we will report back to the House next week. That is an illustration, I say in a non partisan way, of a situation where a great many people in this chamber made a tremendous contribution. I think that will be measured with the passage of time when we take a look at Bill 163 in here.

Quite frankly, big matters of principle like the continuation of rent control and tenant protection, all of those rather substantive and meaty matters of debate have taken place in committee room 1 for a period now of some five months, and all members of this Legislature have not had a chance to speak in this room on some of those very relevant concerns.

I think I could say, on behalf of the 15 MPPs on that committee, that a lot of substantive material was covered and a lot of substantive principles were spoken to. It is a sadness of mine that people in this chamber, members preoccupied on other committees, did not have an opportunity, on some of the evenings we sit around here, to speak to the questions. I have said this before. As a private member I made a presentation to the procedural affairs committee on this. In my judgement, it is sad that I have never had an opportunity to hear the member for Lakeshore talk about the matter of affordable housing. I have never heard his views on the matter of tenant protection in Ontario.

Mr. Lawlor: It wasn't because I was in the House; I was in another committee.

Mr. McCaffrey: Quite frankly, I could live without having heard the member for Lakeshore share some of those experiences but, very selfishly, I would like to hear the member for Lakeshore's personal position on the matter of Confederation, on the state of the constitution, because he has been here for a long time and he has a great reputation. Anyone who can write poems is someone I take seriously, and I would like to have the opportunity to hear his views.

If I were so lucky as to be named a member of that committee, it would be something I would relish. Quite frankly, it would be like doing postgraduate work on the public purse. For personal reasons, there is nothing I would rather do.

Mr. Conway: I'd make sure you weren't chairman; I'll tell you that.

Mr. McCaffrey: I have discussed this with the member for Lakeshore's colleague the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. In this particular issue, more than in most other issues we have been preoccupied with around here in various committee rooms, this is the room in which such a debate should take place. I personally think the time should be set aside, whether it's in a matter of weeks or months it matters not at all to me and I don't think it would matter to the House leaders, but this chamber, which is really the one visible room with which the 8.5 million citizens in this province can identify, is the forum to discuss this matter. The public gallery, in my judgement, could be well utilized every night if we opted to sit every night on this.

I am opposed to a committee because by naming a committee, select or otherwise, the minute it is named then it effectively cuts off other duly-elected members of this room. It keeps them from making the kind of contribution they are not only entitled to make but that they have a responsibility to make on this issue. This effectively cuts them off; just as the member for Lakeshore was effectively cut off from making the kind of contribution he is capable of making in the rent review committee. Because of the rigidity of the committee system and the lack of bodies to man them, he really didn't have the opportunity I am sure he would have wished—and I, selfishly, as a private member would have wished him to have—to speak in that committee.

It's critical that we discuss this matter, dealing as it does with the very substance of the future of Canada, the substance of this government's position vis-à-vis Confederation. It's critical in my view that we discuss it in this room in as public a way as we can. If there ever was a topic that demanded intelligent use of this chamber it's this topic, in my view.

Some weeks ago, I asked for an opportunity to speak as a private member to the procedural affairs committee. At that time I did share some of these concerns; I didn't know about this resolution but they were concerns in a more general sense.

It's a frustration for me, from time to time, when I never know whether we're going to sit on a Tuesday or a Thursday or if it's going to be the Monday. I can live with those kinds of concerns. As a private member I sometimes have difficulty knowing what issues we are going to discuss next week, but that's something I can cope with, but what on earth does my confusion mean when one gets to the 8.5 million other citizens who haven't got a clue what we will be addressing ourselves to even a week or two in advance. The point I made in the procedural affairs committee and, I think it's just criminal, is that we can all find out what's on channel seven a week in advance and we don't even know what's going to be discussed in this room as far in advance as we might like to, which is something citizens should be entitled to know.

This room could be used in a more creative way. Public submission, I really believe—the member for Scarborough-Ellésmere and I have talked about this—could be made right in this chamber. There are ways one could cope with this.

We talk about the relevance of this place, the relevance of the committees, the relevance of the time we set aside for debate. Heavens, most of the time we're just concerned about our own scheduling and whether we can man the committees or whether we're going to have sufficient people here for evening debates and possible votes. All of this is quite irrelevant in the context of the citizens of Ontario knowing what we are discussing, when we are going to discuss it, and taking advantage of the opportunity to be here in person if they can, or to make representation to their own member when they can about a matter that's going to be debated in here. My major point is that we have to work harder at making this chamber relevant.

I feel very strongly about opposing this resolution, primarily for that reason. It's not just that it sets up another committee, that isn't the major reason. It's the nature of the topic to which this committee would be addressing itself. Nothing is more public than this room, nothing should be used in an open visible way more than this room.

It's incumbent upon all of us, I think, to vote against the resolution and against the establishment of this committee; but we should urge our respective House leaders to find the time, be it in the fall or in the spring—the government is in the best position to make those timing decisions I believe—to use this room effectively. I think the debate must be here, timing will be left to the government. The Premier is in the best position, I think, to judge those other sensitive matters he has to concern himself with, but not that it be done in a committee.

Mr. Nixon: I am interested to note there are so many members in the House at the present time, because, Mr. Speaker, you will recall when this debate began, when the mover addressed the House to begin with and the minister gave his objections, there were only about five people here. The minister was all alone; there may have been two or three NDPs, two or three Grits, and yourself or perhaps your assistant. The idea that we are now gathering a few people to my mind is appalling in that they are just coming in to stand up to block the possibility of having this committee.

The member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey) said every member here should get up and vote against it. It's certainly his right to urge his colleagues and those of us on this side so to do, but surely if we had an opportunity to vote for it so those members who have taken part in the debate and feel strongly about this would at least be able to affect the outcome, then that's democracy and that's healthy.

The member for Armourdale was saying if we just have a debate in the House in the fall we can have people come in here and make submissions to us. Maybe that's so.

The rules don't permit it but the member for Lakeshore was talking about Eugene Forsey and Max Cohen and John Robarts and others. They are not going to sit in some funny little chair and speak to us in this House.

We should have a committee. We can go to the Amethyst Room, Mr. Speaker, the room you named. It's fully equipped with all of the electronic devices so the views of not only the members but of our learned and able witnesses would go on file.

The thing I fear, when I look at the speech from the throne, on page 12 of Votes and Proceedings number one, is that it says: "The government places a caution unequivocally before the citizens of this province and of Canada as a whole: namely, that Ontario will not negotiate sovereignty association with the government of Quebec." I think everybody here would be prepared to support that. But that debate, when we come to it in the fall—since it looks, from the presence of the government House leader, with that glassy eye he sometimes affects, that they are going to stand up and stonewall this blooming thing—that debate is going to be restrictive. It is going to be, capital "P", political, in the sense the Premier and his colleagues will get up with a ringing denunciation of sovereignty association and the separatist movement without talking about, as we all should, the positive aspects about what we, as a province, together with our sister provinces and the government of Canada, should be doing about national unity.

Really, the only other thing mentioned here of any interest is that the Conservatives, as well as all of us, are in favour of the preservation of the monarch as the head of state. I can hear ringing speeches about that, if the debate takes place here rather than in a committee where we are able to assure the monarch of our continuing love and support but at the same time look at the distribution of powers, and even recommend that the government of Canada take over some responsibility for natural resources dealing with energy.

Why should the government of Canada have total control of Ontario's uranium when the other energy resources at other provincial levels are under provincial control, and to the benefit of provincial treasuries? I am speaking as an individual in this, but I have put this forward many times. I am afraid if the debate progresses, as it appears the Conservative Party through its numbers is going to insist in a few moments it will, I am afraid that the debate will in fact simply become a rehash, a rethrasing of the old political straw we have heard from that side so often.

No wonder constitutional debates are boring. No wonder no one comes into this House or into the galleries or anywhere else to observe and take part in a constitutional debate, since the leaders in the debate from the government side simply insist on going through that old refrain about the preservation of a strong central government, preservation of a union which insures free movement and the preservation of the monarchy. My God, let's get down to discussing what we can do as a province, and in my view the leading province, to assist our fellow citizens in Quebec and in Alberta and elsewhere to a strengthening of Canadian unity with the reapportionment of powers, the patriation of our constitution and a move forward. Let's get away from the rhetoric, let's get down to an examination which is going to be meaningful and significant.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not have a committee review of the type envisaged by the member for Lakeshore, then what we will do in this House will be a farce. It may be a two-day farce in the fall, but in fact it will simply be a beating of the breast in order to make some political point with Quebec as they approach their vote.

We could do something far better than that, and I would certainly admonish my friends on the Conservative side to at least have a free vote here. This is supposed to be private members' hour. I resent the honourable members getting up and sort of stating government policy in that respect. Let's listen to the arguments and let's vote as private members, and let's vote to have a committee on national unity.

NATIONAL UNITY

The following members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on resolution 23:

Auld, Ashe, Baetz, Bernier, Cureatz, Drea, Eaton, Elgie, Gregory, Grossman, Henderson, Hodgson, Johnson, J., Kerr, Lane, Leluk, MacBeth, Maeck, McCaffrey, McCague, McNeil, Newman, W., Parrott, Pope, Ramsay, Rollins, Rotenberg, Sterling, Villeneuve, Walker, Watson, Welch, Wells, Williams, Wiseman—35.

ELECTION CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENSES

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of section 70a(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act, I have laid on the table a report from the commission on election contributions and expenses.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 2887)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

ELECTROSHOCK TREATMENT

205. Mr. Breagh: Further to my question on the Order Paper number 45, would the Minister of Health state the actual number of patients who received a total of 825 electroshock treatments in 1978? Would the minister state the number of women and men who received these treatments, and what was the average number of treatments received by sex in total? [Tabled May 29, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As an amendment to Order Paper question number 45, the total number of people receiving electroshock treatments in 1978 was 613 and not the previously cited number of 825.

There were 306 males and 307 females; average number of treatments/person, 8.03; average number of female treatments, 8.58; average number of male treatments, 8.02.

MENTAL HEALTH LEGISLATION

206. Mr. Conway: Will the Minister of Health advise the House as to which sections of Bill 19, An Act to amend the Mental Health Act, are not proclaimed? In each instance, will he give: one, a detailed explanation as to why each unproclaimed section has not been proclaimed, and two, the approximate date he expects each unproclaimed section to be proclaimed. [Tabled May 29, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Sections 28(1), 28(2), 29 and 30 have not been proclaimed. For 206(1) and (2) refer to ministry response for Order Paper questions 46 and 47.

WESTON ROAD PROJECT STUDY

212. Mr. Duksza: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications table the detailed traffic study of the impact of widening Weston Road and its implications for traffic south of St. Clair Avenue, a study promised in the technical report describing various alternative alignments in 1977? (P. B-9, Northwest Metro Arterial Street—Eglinton Avenue to St. Clair Avenue: Stage II—Route alternatives—Technical Summary—Ministry of Transportation and Communications—March 1977). If such a study has not yet been completed, will the minister indicate why his ministry is considering building a new road connecting Weston Road and St. Clair Avenue by extending Maybank Avenue and the Lambton Spriar Bridge without such a traffic impact study? Will the minister indicate if it is the policy of the ministry to extend major highways such as the 400 into residential neighbourhoods without doing a traffic study to assess traffic impact and costs on effected areas? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: It is the ministry's practice to apply available information and expertise to the route selection process. Depending upon the circumstances, this may or may not require a formal traffic study in the sense suggested by the member's last question. However, as indicated in the answer which follows, much relevant traffic information was available and brought to bear on the route selection.

The statement from the technical summary of route alternatives published in March 1977 referred to in the question was made at the time when routes considered for the north-west Metro arterial were those which extended to St. Clair Avenue or just north of St. Clair Avenue on a new right of way and split into two new roadways—one leading to Weston Road and the other to Old Weston Road. The ministry, recognizing that these routes with higher traffic carrying capacity could have an impact on traffic patterns south of St. Clair Avenue, indicated that further traffic study south of St. Clair Avenue was desirable before a decision was made.

Following negotiations with officials of municipalities and other agencies, it became obvious that either a route to St. Clair Avenue, or the "split route" options, were not feasible because of the implications of having to share railway and hydro rights of way.

Under these conditions and after selecting a route terminating at Weston Road about one mile north of St. Clair Avenue, the ministry considered that the study on potential traffic pattern changes south of St. Clair Avenue would provide no meaningful additional information. The rationale is that traffic flows across St. Clair Avenue, as generated by roadways north of that arterial in the Jane Street/Keele Street corridor, cannot exceed those controlled by the existing traffic signals at Weston Road and Old Weston Road which will remain in operation after the proposed centre left-turn lane is constructed at Weston Road. The proposed eight foot widening of Weston Road, from the existing 46 feet to 54 feet, to provide a left-turn lane, will basically improve the level of service of traffic operations and safety along this arterial street.

Since the area north of St. Clair Avenue, in the Jane Street/Keele Street corridor, is in a mature state of development, we believe traffic demands to St. Clair Avenue and points south will be approximately the same regardless of the proposed Weston Road improvement.

With respect to the extension of Maybank Avenue to link with Weston Road, this improvement was requested by Metropolitan Toronto, the city of Toronto, the borough of York and area residents. The purpose of the extension is to alleviate potential traffic congestion at the Weston Road/St. Clair Avenue intersection.

The Maybank Avenue link will provide an alternative bypass route to the intersection for traffic oriented to and from St. Clair Avenue West and will improve transportation services to the meat processing and packing industries located in that vicinity. For these reasons, the Ministry agreed to construct the Maybank Avenue extension.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

213. Mr. Lawlor: Would the Minister of Health table all reports which he has received from Dr. Lynes' outpatient transfer committee regarding the closing of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital? [Tabled May 31, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As requested, I would like to table the report received from Dr. Lynes' outpatient transfer committee.

Community: Peel*	Name	Auspice	Health Unit	Description
	North Peel Residential Support Program	Peel Regional Health Unit		To provide short term, transitional residential accommodation for discharged psychiatric patients in order to facilitate reintegration into the community and to prevent rehospitalization.
	Crisis Intervention Team	Mississauga Hospital		To provide immediate around the clock crisis intervention to individuals in severe distress.
	Community Mental Health Centre	Mississauga Hospital		To provide day and evening programs to persons with socio-emotional problems in a community setting. The program includes short term intensive therapy, brief transitional therapy and long-term maintenance care.
	Alternate Housing (Phase I)	Mental Health Peel		To promote an optimal level of adjustment and maintenance of the client in the community by providing support in basic life skills, socialization and the use of community resources in the context of a transitional residence.

WHITBY PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

218. Mr. Breaugh: Would the Minister of Health inform the House what plans have been made for community involvement in the planning process for the rebuilding of Whitby Psychiatric Hospital? What groups and individuals have been invited to participate in the planning process, and what role have they had to date? What efforts are being made to identify other concerned community groups and professionals and other individuals? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A meeting will be held in the near future as part of the planning process for the rebuilding of Whitby Psychiatric Hospital. Both Mental Health Durham and the district health council are invited to participate, and terms of reference will be developed at the first meeting which will examine means by which concerns of community groups, professionals and other individuals can be addressed.

OECA PREMISES RENTS

219. Mr. Mackenzie: Would the ministry please indicate the rental paid by the Ontario Educational Communications Authority at 2180 Yonge Street and the total space rented? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: During 1978-79, the Ontario Educational Communications Authority rented a total of 100,215 square feet of space at 2180 Yonge Street, Toronto, at a cost of $715,467.50, an average of $7.14 per square foot. It has been estimated by an established Toronto real estate firm that rental of comparable space today would cost between $10 and $12 per square foot.

OECA EQUIPMENT PURCHASES

220. Mr. Mackenzie: Will the ministry investigate the reason why OECA purchased two miniature cameras "electronic field production units" at approximately $80,000 apiece, fully equipped, which for three to four months were largely unused, while they continued to rent such equipment at $600 per day? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The two cameras were delivered to the OECA for engineering acceptance tests on March 26, 1979. It is standard industrial practice to conduct extensive technical tests on all electronic equipment prior to acceptance of such equipment. The tests, using sophisticated test equipment and test procedures, are designed to prove that the equipment meets both the supplier's published performance specifications and OECA tender specifications. Both cameras were accepted; one was released for service on April 6, and the second on April 18.

Since being placed into service the cameras have satisfied OECA's production requirement for three cameras of this type to meet the needs of two separate productions, and one camera had to be rented.

OECA UNION MEMBERSHIP

221. Mr. Mackenzie: Will the ministry adequately explain why at OECA there are only 184 staff eligible for union membership while there are 207 persons in management? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: At May 31, 1979, there were 191 persons on staff in positions designated as being within the bargaining unit and 189 persons in positions designated as non-union by the Ontario Labour Relations Board. It should be noted that the definition of the staff bargaining unit is the result of an agreement between OECA and the bargaining agent (National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians). This agreement has the approval of the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO HYDRO AFFAIRS

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the interim report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, dated May 24, 1979 re: NPD reactor at Rolphton.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am awed by the proportions of the audience I have, both in front of me and behind me at this point, but only momentarily so.

I want to briefly give what I would describe as a bit of an overview with regard to this report from the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs dealing with the Rolphton station. For the most part, but not totally, I shall refrain from dealing with the specifics of the NPD station, but it seems to me there are a number of other related aspects in connection with the committee's work in this report that it would be useful to bring to the attention of honourable members as they are considering the vote they will have towards the end of this evening, hopefully a majority vote to respond to the majority request of the committee.

Mr. Hennessy: The chairman is not biased.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the member for Fort William interrupting even before I get started? He is not in the north, he is down in the civilized south. He should just relax.

Mr. Nixon: Quit fooling around.

Mr. Hennessy: Say that when you come up north.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on May 24 the minister spoke with regard to what is described in Hansard as "nuclear plant safety." Let me give three brief comments by the minister in that ministerial statement. He said: "Yesterday the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs passed a motion that the government direct Ontario Hydro not to reopen the Rolphton NPD nuclear generating station until such time as the committee had finished its review of nuclear safety matters."

A little later: "Rolphton is currently shut down for routine maintenance. The maintenance is not related to the emergency core cooling system."

Finally, he concluded: "If the control board"—the Atomic Energy Control Board—"determines that the concerns being expressed"—namely the concerns of the citizens of North Renfrew—"have any validity, we have been assured that it will take the necessary steps to see that any deficiencies are corrected. This will not require any action by the government as Ontario Hydro will automatically comply with any order issued by the control board." In other words, what the minister did was in effect opt out of the situation and say that normally Ontario Hydro responds to the orders and directions of the Atomic Energy Control Board. Therefore, in this instance they were going to treat it as a normal case; if the control board gave them permission to open again the government wouldn't intervene.

I have two comments I would like to make with regard to the minister's statement. The first one is by way of a protest. If my tone is relatively quiet, it hides a growing indignation with regard to this minister's practice in relation to this committee. What the minister did was to come into the House and give a ministerial statement which repudiated the substance of the report that was going to come from the committee before that report had been formally presented to the House. Presentation of reports comes after ministerial statements, and I, on behalf of the committee, wasn't able to make that report until an hour or so after the minister had repudiated it in advance.

If this had been the only time this had happened I would ignore it. I'd say it was a momentary aberration on the part of a minister who is normally rather co-operative and congenial in his approach to fellow human beings and other agencies within the Legislature. But it is at least the second time. Last fall, the select committee brought in a recommendation that half of Bruce heavy water plant D should be stopped and stored, and the other half should be finished and that the government then consider what it would do, commission it or mothball it at that point.

Everyone knew, because the select committee has always operated in a totally open fashion, what our decision was in the latter part of September or early October. The House didn't open until October 24. There was no opportunity for myself on behalf of the committee to report that to this House. Yet in the intervening period the minister, with a speech that I would like to believe was written by somebody other than himself because it didn't sound in character, delivered to the Hanover board of trade—

Mr. Nixon: His deputy is a great speech-writer.

Mr. MacDonald: —or chamber of commerce, repudiated what the committee was going to report when it got a chance to report. In fact he not only repudiated it, he rather contemptuously repudiated it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, no.

Mr. MacDonald: He said these people who gloom and doom—

Mr. Nixon: These Jeremiahs, he called them.

Mr. Ashe: That's one right behind you.

Mr. MacDonald: That's the word I was looking for. These Jeremiahs in the province who don't think—

Mr. Hennessy: Speak for yourself.

Mr. MacDonald: —we can play a role in producing more heavy water so that it will be running out of both ears and not just one ear—that was the prospect—and therefore we would be in a position to make our contribution towards selling Candu reactors all across the world.

Mr. Nixon: If they could only get the boilers right.

Mr. MacDonald: We all know what happened. The minister gradually had to retreat from that rather ill-conceived and ill-judged position. Some 10 weeks after he made his statement, Hydro pulled the rug out from under him completely and did precisely what the committee requested. So the minister, if I may lapse into the vernacular, made a bit of a fool of himself by repudiating the committee's recommendation in advance.

Mr. Haggerty: He's got his wires crossed over there.

Mr. MacDonald: I just want to say to the minister it isn't cricket to make a practice, as he has done consistently so far since taking over this ministry, of repudiating the reports of select committees before there is a chance to present them formally to the House.

That's just by way of a therapeutic exercise. I feel better now that I have chastised the minister.

Mr. Hennessy: Well, sit down.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me get down to a more substantive comment. When the minister made this statement on May 24—I don't know what happens on occasion, indeed I am not only intrigued, I am totally baffled by what happened between this ministry and Ontario Hydro—the report the minister gave was grossly incomplete and inaccurate. To argue that it was accurate would really be manipulating the facts.

What the minister said was that, "Rolphton is currently shut down for routine maintenance. The maintenance is not related to the emergency core cooling system." Interestingly enough, the minister this afternoon, I thought a little self-consciously, sort of got the record up to date before this debate by a ministerial statement in which he told us all that had happened at Rolphton; but I am puzzled as to why the minister was not told in the first instance what really had happened in Rolphton so that he did not unwittingly mislead this House and the public.

If I may borrow from my good friend from the north, the member for Fort William —

Mr. Hennessy: We're not friends.

Mr. MacDonald: Last January, our sessions were started with a characteristically delightful outburst from the member for Fort William to the effect that Hydro had misled and manipulated—hung out of dry, so to speak—one Minister of Energy after another, by misinformation or incomplete information. He was really uttering a cry of protest on behalf of Ministers of Energy who had been—

Mr. Hennessy: I don't know what those words mean. You're just putting words in my mouth now. I can't even pronounce those words.

Mr. MacDonald: I am just giving an erudite translation of what my friend said.

Mr. Hennessy: That's not the way I said it. You're embarrassing me.

Mr. Nixon: Don't let him misquote you.

Mr. MacDonald: In short, without going any further, I hope the minister has found out why he was given such incomplete information. One of the things we are attempting to do in this committee, not only with regard to Rolphton but generally, is to restore, to the extent that it is possible, Hydro as part of the nuclear establishment out in the public, where the nuclear establishment is having a tough battle to retain its credibility these days—indeed, so much so that the Premier delivered what the CBC news described as a tough lecture to them just a couple of nights ago.

I hope never again will that kind of thing happen where the minister is fed information that is incomplete, if not inaccurate—or incomplete to the point that it becomes inaccurate—when he is reporting to this House.

Let me move from that and more to the substance of the issue. I hope the House realizes that the NPD station at Rolphton is a demonstration station. It was the first station that was commissioned and put into operation in Ontario, in 1962. It produces 10 megawatts of power.

Mr. Haggerty: I thought it was 20.

Mr. Ashe: As usual, the NDP have half their facts.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it 20?

Mr. Hennessy: Twenty megawatts. Sure.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it 20?

Mr. Hennessy: Sure.

Mr. MacDonald: The member corrects me. It is 20 megawatts of power.

Mr. Ashe: It is 22.5 megawatts, to be exact.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Don't nitpick for a moment. It is 20 megawatts of power, as compared, for example, to a Bruce or a Pickering, which is producing 3,000 megawatts or more with four reactors in each instance. In other words, the amount of power being produced at Rolphton is so inconsequential as to have no impact at all on the generation of power by Ontario Hydro.

Mr. J. Reed: Especially in the summer.

Mr. MacDonald: At any time. We all know, for example, that in Ontario at the moment we have an excess generating capacity of something like 20 per cent. Beyond our peak load and the necessary reserve of 25 per cent, we have an excess generating capacity of something between 3,000 and 4,000 megawatts. The 20 megawatts that Rolphton produces is inconsequential. We could shut the station down for ever and, as far as the grid is concerned and the power flowing through the grid and meeting the needs of the people of Ontario, it would have no consequence at all.

Secondly, generally speaking, Hydro's generating stations have a very credible record in terms of the generation of power. In fact, at one time we were given a table, and among the first five stations in the world one will find two or three of the stations are in Ontario. They have mastered the technology, they have been able to cope with the technical problems and they are producing power at a larger percentage of capacity than virtually any other station in the world. That cannot be said of the NPD station at Rolphton.

Indeed, without getting any further into it now—I will leave it to other members of the committee to deal with this, as I am sure some will—the documents we now have with regard to the Rolphton station for the future activities of the committee indicate that there were 18 shutdowns at Rolphton in 1978. Three of them were for maintenance and 15 of them were forced outages.

Translated into the vernacular, that means they were not intentionally shut down but because of some sort of emergency. That is a record which is a pretty appalling record by comparison with the rest of Hydro. We now discover too that not only were they shut down for maintenance in this instance, but they were shut down because there was a radioactive leak in the emergency cooling system. Other authoritative voices say that there were other rather serious problems.

In short, we don't need the power, and secondly, Rolphton is not the kind of station that we should be proud of in terms of its record. I would suggest that we have nothing to lose in that loss of power and we have everything to gain in terms of a clear-cut willingness on the part of this government to maintain in a shutdown condition, which it is now, a station whose record is so questionable at a time when we're attempting to build a greater measure of confidence on the part of the general public with regard to our concerns for nuclear safety.

Let me make a final point. As I indicated earlier, the government has sort of opted out of the situation, taken refuge behind the Atomic Energy Control Board and said, "The decision normally is with AECB and we shall leave it with AECB in this instance. If they authorize Rolphton to start up again, it will. If they don't, it won't. We're out of the picture."

This raises another interesting problem which the select committee hasn't had a chance to get into as yet; that is, exactly what is the working relationship between Hydro as the operators of generating plants and AECB? As everybody knows, the committee had an opportunity a few weeks ago to take a look at seven of the significant-event reports that were presented to the world by courtesy of Mr. Schultz.

As we examined those significant-event reports it was unclear as to exactly where AECB was in the picture. We know that at every plant there is an AECB representative, and presumably he knows everything that happens as quickly as it happens. We know that if it is an abnormal event or a significant event—a variety of words and categories that are used at Hydro—they have to report to AECB, and sometimes they report beyond what they really need to report. But AECB's reaction is not indicated in the significant-event reports. We haven't had the time to examine all the documents which are just now flowing to the committee. One of the things I think the committee wants to take a look at is that working relationship. What is the give and take between Hydro and AECSB when there is an event, significant or abnormal or whatever they may want to call it?

I suggest there is an analogy here that I will draw to the attention of the House for a moment's reflection. Within the last two or three weeks in the North American continent, we have gone through a pretty traumatic event in terms of an airplane crash in Chicago, the DC-10, and the role of the regulatory agency in connection with that, the Federal Aeronautical Agency in Washington. That is an agency which, it is alleged, has tended to be a little bit too soft and not scrutinizing enough in terms of regulation. Certainly in this instance the record speaks for itself, because within a matter of hours, a day or so after the DC-10s had been grounded, they were put back into flight.

Then, upon more careful examination, they discovered there were cracks in certain areas of the framework where the engines were mounted. They were all grounded again and we know that they have been grounded throughout most of the world ever since then. It raises a little bit of a shiver for those of us who use planes rather regularly and assumed that the examination and the imposition of regulations by the authority were very stringent, when we now discover there have been cracks that have been there for quite some time, cracks that weren't normally detected and cracks that weren't detected in the first review of the situation after the crash. It took the second or the third review before they got it.

I don't want to pursue that analogy any further than to say this: I think that incident has raised in the minds of many people who are critical of the nuclear industry a question as to whether or not the AECSB has appropriate standards; whether or not it is enforcing those standards; whether the supervision is adequate in all instances.

Rolphton's power is not needed for the system. It's record is pretty shoddy and problems with regard to safety of workers in the plants and possible lack of safety for the public are constantly being raised. There's a very strong case for the government to respond to the majority report of the committee, which has suggested to the government that we order this station maintained in a shutdown condition until the committee has had an opportunity, for the first time in this country, to go into a thorough public inquiry into all matters of nuclear safety and make some recommendations as to how the situation can be improved so that we can at least still something of the growing apprehension in the general public.

I conclude by saying I think the case is fairly solid for honourable members of this House to respond by a majority vote in the House, as there was in the committee, for the maintenance of that station in a shutdown state.

I recognize that after we have given an instruction to the government by a majority of this House it can, if it wishes, defiantly ignore it; and Hydro can ignore it. I hope that won't happen.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm pleased to participate in this debate this evening. I must say I was interested to hear the member for York South discussing airplane catastrophes and that sort of thing in relation to what we're discussing tonight.

Mr. MacDonald: The role of regulatory authorities.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really don't think they quite relate.

Mr. MacDonald: The role of regulatory authorities is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, and what do we do about Labour Day weekend on the highways, I suppose.

However, before I deal with some of the issues arising out of the motion itself, I believe it would be useful for members if I provided some background information about the Rolphton nuclear generating station generally, and about questions which have arisen over the past few weeks with respect to its operation specifically.

Rolphton is a 22.5 megawatt nuclear generating station which was designed and constructed for the purpose of demonstrating the feasibility of the Candu concept. It's owned jointly by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which owns the nuclear components, and Ontario Hydro, which owns the non-nuclear components and the land on which the station is situated. Rolphton was declared in service in 1962 and has been operating since that time. The success of the station and its successor, Douglas Point generating station, leads directly to the commitment by Ontario Hydro to the use of nuclear power for the commercial production of electricity and to the construction of Pickering station A and subsequent nuclear generating stations.

The member for York South said a few moments ago, "Let's shut down Rolphton and look at what this small plant is doing."

Rolphton is presently being used by Ontario Hydro for a number of purposes in addition to its electrical generating capacity. These are to train and develop operational and maintenance personnel for nuclear power plants, to test new types of fuel and equipment, and to test the feasibility of new techniques, such as those relating to decamiation—decomintation—

Mr. S. Smith: Will someone wake the minister up. What's that again?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There's a second "in" in my text, that's the problem. I can't pronounce it.

Mr. Nixon: Once too often.

Hon. Mr. Auld: "Decomintation" is what I'm trying to say.

Mr. Nixon: What does that mean?

Mr. S. Smith: Decontamination, maybe? Why don't you try that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: When you stick a second "i" in, what does that mean, Decomintation-inuation.

Mr. MacDonald: You have trouble with your syntax; I have trouble with megawatts.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As is the case with all nuclear generating stations in Canada, Rolphton operates under a licence issued by the Atomic Energy Control Board under the Atomic Energy Control Act. The first full-power operating licence for Rolphton was issued in July 1962, as the honourable member said. That licence has been renewed from time to time. The latest renewal was issued by the control board on April 28, 1978 and expires on June 30, 1983. The licence is conditional upon the continued satisfactory operation of the station and is subject to annual review.

In 1976, following analyses by Atomic Energy Canada Limited of loss of coolant accidents for the Bruce A station reactor design, Ontario Hydro was asked by the control board to reassess the effectiveness of the emergency core cooling system in all of its operating nuclear generating stations, including Rolphton.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, as one of the joint owners of the Rolphton plant, carried out the reassessment of the effectiveness of the station's emergency core cooling system requested by the control board. That reassessment showed that while the Rolphton emergency core cooling system would not be effective in preventing fuel sheath failures for some break sizes and locations, the probability and size of any releases of radioactive material from containment in the event of such failures were within the limits approved by the control board. In essence, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited satisfied the control board that Rolphton complied with the terms of its operating licence.

Notwithstanding this fact, Atomic Energy of Canada and Ontario Hydro suggested and agreed to implement several equipment and systems modifications which would further increase the effectiveness of the station's emergency core cooling capability. These modifications have all been made and all but two of them have been approved for use by the control board. Ontario Hydro expects to receive approval to use the remaining two modifications in the near future.

As members are aware, on April 27, 1979 a group of concerned citizens in Renfrew county applied to the control board for a public hearing into the safety of Rolphton. In its application, the concerned citizens' group stated its belief:

One, that Rolphton is operating in breach of its licence and in breach of the control board safety standards; and two, that the licence for operating Rolphton should be revoked because its emergency core cooling system is inadequate and would be unable to prevent overheating in the reactor if the main cooling system failed.

The application of the concerned citizens' group was considered by the control board and its staff. The control board concluded after careful consideration that the application did not contain any factual information which had not previously been considered by the control board in the course of its licensing and ongoing review of Rolphton. The control board further concluded that there was no reason to restrict the operation of the station or to hold a public hearing into the safety of the station's reactor.

As members are aware, Rolphton has been shut down since March 26 to repair a heavy water leak and to carry out planned maintenance activities. Ontario Hydro has advised me that it started up the reactor again on June 11. The station has been operating since that time at one thousandth of full power while Ontario Hydro carries out further checks on the station's operating system. The control board approved the start-up after a thorough review of the results of the maintenance and inspection work and the tests carried out by Ontario Hydro while the station was shut down. Representatives of the control board will be reviewing the results of the further checks which Ontario Hydro is making on the station's operating systems and, assuming that the results are satisfactory, will be monitoring Ontario Hydro's activities in bringing the station to full power.

Having provided members with some background information on Rolphton and its operating licence, I would now like to deal with three matters concerning the station which have recently been the subject of comments and questions in this House and in the press. These matters are (1) steam generator leaks in January 1978, (2) valve failure in September 1978 and (3) steam generator and fuel channel closure plug leaks in March 1979.

The first two matters are described in some detail in Ontario Hydro's 1978 report to the Atomic Energy Control Board on the operation of Rolphton. The final matter was, I think, dealt with in a statement I made to this House on June 4, 1979.

On January 26, 1978, higher than normal levels of tritium were discovered in the turbine room of the station, and a station alert was called. The purpose of the alert was to account for personnel and to declare the turbine room off-limits to non-essential personnel until the source of the tritium had been discovered and appropriate corrective action was taken.

Following that order, the station reactor was shut down and the level of tritium returned to normal within 40 minutes. The cause of the higher than normal levels of tritium was a leak in a tube in the steam generator which was repaired during the period of the shutdown.

The level of tritium released in the station's effluent as a result of the tube leak was less than one per cent of the limit set by the control board.

In September 1978, during a regular semi-annual test of the station's emergency light-water injection system—one of the station's two emergency core cooling systems—Ontario Hydro discovered that a pin forming part of the operating mechanism of an isolating valve was broken and the valve was partially closed, even though there was no indication that this was the case. That valve is normally in an open position when the station reactor is at high power and in a closed position when the station reactor is in a cooled, shutdown stage. If the valve is in a closed position when the station reactor is still at high power, the emergency light-water injection system would not be available in the event of the loss of the normal fuel cooling system.

It is not possible to determine when the pin broke or for how long, if at all. The valve was in a partially closed position while the reactor was operating at high power.

Ontario Hydro tested this system in early 1978 and found no problem. However, for whatever period the pin was broken, the station's other emergency core cooling system was available to provide an emergency cooling system if it had been needed.

Repairs have been made and new procedures have been instituted to inhibit similar problems in the future and to ensure their prompt detection if they do occur.

In September 1978, slightly higher than normal levels of tritium were discovered in the station's feedwater system. Upon subsequent investigation, Ontario Hydro discovered that this was caused by a small leak in the station's steam generator. As the leak did not constitute a hazard or cause the level of tritium in the station's effluent to exceed one per cent of the limit set by the control board, Ontario Hydro, with the concurrence of that control board, decided to continue operating the station until its next regularly scheduled maintenance shutdown.

In March 1979, heavy water began leaking from a fuel channel closure plug. All attempts to stop the leak while the station was operating were unsuccessful. Although the leak did not constitute a hazard and Ontario Hydro was able to recover and reuse the heavy water, Hydro decided to advance the date of its next regularly scheduled maintenance shutdown by about three weeks. During this shutdown, Hydro repaired the leak and carried out planned maintenance activities, which included inspection and repair of the leak in the steam generator which had been discovered in 1978.

As members will recall, on June 11, 1979, I made a statement to this House concerning emissions of tritium at Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations. Attached to that statement was a paper outlining the emissions of tritium in the airborne and water effluents of Rolphton since 1973. Members will note that at no time during the period 1973 to date did the level of the emissions reach one per cent of the limits set by the control order.

Before proceeding further, I believe it is important that I put the matters which I have described into context for the honourable members and the public generally.

No one, least of all this government, is saying that Ontario Hydro equipment is perfect and will not occasionally fail, or that Ontario Hydro's personnel are perfect and they will not occasionally make mistakes. In fact any equipment can fail and just about everyone makes mistakes.

It's important to understand, however, that these imperfections are planned for and taken into account in the design and operation of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations. The result is that in over 61 reactor years of operation, no member of the public has been injured as a result of the operation of any one of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating stations. Also nuclear generating station employees are safer at work than they are in their own homes.

I believe that as members, and the public generally review Ontario Hydro's records and familiarize themselves with all of the information which is and will become available concerning past and future imperfections, they cannot help but be impressed with the efforts Ontario Hydro has made in designing and operating its nuclear generating stations. The sole purpose of these efforts is to ensure the operations work well and as safely as humanly possible, and well within the safety limits prescribed by the responsible regulatory authorities. In Ontario, safety has always been the foremost consideration in the design and operation of nuclear generating stations and it will continue to be so.

I would now like to turn my attention to the motion before this Legislature, namely that the Legislature adopt the interim report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs.

As I understand it, the select committee's interim report is based solely on the concerns expressed in the application of the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group to the control board. The select committee did not conduct any independent investigation to determine whether these concerns were or were not justified.

Mr. S. Smith: Your members wouldn't permit it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Even if it had, the select committee does not have the capability or legal responsibility to review or set standards with respect to nuclear safety or the operation of nuclear generating stations.

Mr. Warner: Great attitude.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Nor does it have the capability to judge the merits of an application such as that put forward by the concerned citizens' group. As honourable members know, the control board is the agency in Canada which has the technical capability, and perhaps more important the legal responsibility, for setting safety standards and for licensing the operation of nuclear generating stations. It is also the agency that has the technical capability for judging the merits of such an application.

As I mentioned earlier, the control board has reviewed the application of the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group and has concluded that it does not contain any factual information which has not already been considered in the course of its licensing and review activities. In the board's opinion, there is no reason to restrict the operation of Rolphton. For this reason, I see no compelling reason for this Legislature to approve the motion before us and thereby presume to supplant the role which the Parliament of Canada has given to the Atomic Energy Control Board. However, as the honourable members know, this government has made a commitment to a review of nuclear energy, as witness the terms of reference of the select committee. That review is broad-ranging and perhaps only limited by the legal and technical responsibilities of the Atomic Energy Control Board, to which I have already alluded. In the government's view, a review by the select committee, a process by which the concerns and interests of the public are taken into account and fully protected, is most appropriate.

Mr. Auld moved that the words "its adoption" in the motion before the Legislature be struck out and the following words be substituted therefor: "that the interim report be referred back to the select committee on Ontario Hydro Affairs and that the select committee be reconvened as soon as possible to begin its examination of Ontario's nuclear commitment, including nuclear safety matters, and the concerns expressed with respect to Rolphton NPD be considered in that examination."

Mr. J. Reed: I began with what I thought was a clear head and I have become more and more confused. Before I begin the body of some of the things I want to say, some things have been brought up in the remarks of the preceding two speakers that I think are worth enlarging on a little bit.

First of all, my friend the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), who is the chairman of the Hydro select committee, brought up the fact that the minister suggested in the House a little while ago that AECB was the body which would rule on the restart of Rolphton. I really don't know the answer to this, and I don't think my friend for York South does either, but it is rather important and worthy of clarification. If Hydro shuts down the nuclear plant, for supposed routine maintenance or whatever, who does authorize the restart? Does AECB have to authorize every restart by Ontario Hydro? I question whether they do; and in so doing, I question the indication the minister gave to the House that AECB would be the arbiter of this restart. I know the member for York South is as confused a I am about where that ultimate responsibility lies. If, in fact, AECB were ruling on the restart, it might help to cast a different light on the thing. But I believe that since Hydro shut it down Hydro will start it up. That point should be made absolutely clear so the responsibility for these concerns is not loaded onto AECB.

There is another kind of anomaly I would like to bring up. The minister mentioned the two emergency core cooling systems. I hope if he has a few remarks to make at the end of this debate he will explain to us just what those two emergency core cooling systems are.

I may be wrong, but isn't there one emergency core cooling system and one sprinkler system? I would ask the minister if that is not correct; there are not two emergency core cooling systems. So in fact when there was this problem with a valve that was partly shut off, it was partly shut off on the emergency core cooling system, the only one; the other one was a sprinkler system. Is that not right?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are two emergency.

Mr. J. Reed: There are two? If there are, I stand corrected and I apologize to the minister. These anomalies alone establish the confusion.

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are three systems; two of them are emergency, the other is the regular system.

Mr. J. Reed: Two emergency and one regular. That being the case, I certainly stand corrected.

One of the statements the minister read to this House was that one of the reasons for discounting the citizens' concerns about Rolphton was that they did not do a study. Am I right? Did I listen to the minister's statement clearly? One of the reasons was the citizens did not study this thing?

I want to suggest to the minister in all frankness that this is, in fact, why we are here, this is why the select committee exists. Unless I misunderstood the minister's speech, he said the citizens did not do a study and therefore the statements they made did not have any strong import.

There is another little anomaly I should bring up. I think the minister stated that Rolphton was owned by Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I said it was partly owned by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and partly by Hydro.

Mr. J. Reed: Oh, he did not say Rolphton was owned by Hydro.

Mr. S. Smith: He said, the nuclear part was AECL and the rest by Hydro.

Mr. J. Reed: All right. The Premier (Mr. Davis) has said that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited happens to own the plant at Rolphton. I apologize, there was some confusion on my part.

This matter of Rolphton was first brought before the public early in May by my leader. I must say tonight, in speaking to this motion before the House, that I feel as if I am arguing for half a loaf, because on May 23 the select committee met and during the course of that meeting it was our desire that the committee meet to discuss the Rolphton matter immediately at that time. Our reasoning was that the plant was not operating—it was shut down, as the minister had said at that time for routine maintenance—and we felt it would be to the advantage of all if we dealt with the matter. We were disappointed in the views expressed by representatives of the other two parties who felt, for their own reasons, that it was not appropriate that the Rolphton matter should be debated during that period.

A short time later more information was brought before the public concerning Rolphton; once again, on behalf of my own caucus, I approached the select committee. We met as a steering committee at that time to consider my request that we even discuss the Rolphton matter as immediately as we possibly could. The vote at that time was to proceed as had been previously planned, and that was that the select committee would meet on July 4.

Once again, the plant had been delayed in its restart. It would have been most appropriate to debate the matter and to have questions answered in the select committee at that time. I put it to the members of the House that we certainly could have had an answer on Rolphton by now had we been able to proceed.

Ms. Gigantes: On the basis of what?

Mr. J. Reed: There were some fundamental questions—

Ms. Gigantes: We're just getting the documents now.

Mr. J. Reed:—that were asked by the citizens and those fundamental questions could have been answered. We could at least have had an interim report on the matter of Rolphton, pending perhaps a more detailed investigation later on in the summer. I must say we were disappointed.

Ms. Gigantes: We could have had a white-wash by now; that's what you are saying.

Mr. J. Reed: I have just two other items I feel might be of interest in this debate. One is that I am going to suggest publicly here that when we do consider Rolphton in July—and I know the select committee has already agreed to look at it early in the game—we consider making an interim recommendation before we proceed with the other matters that pertain to nuclear safety. I think it would be appropriate to do it with dispatch so that if Rolphton gets the clean bill of health that the minister obviously feels it will, then it can proceed to operate and won't have to sit idle until some time later when the select committee decides it is going to make its report.

Ms. Gigantes: Why don't you just give them a clean bill of health right now?

Mr. S. Smith: What is bothering the member for Carleton East?

Ms. Gigantes: You're bothering me.

Mr. S. Smith: We'll be looking into the matter.

Mr. J. Reed: On the other hand, if through the examination the plant does not get a clean bill of health, then we could make a recommendation in that direction, that it remain closed.

In fairness to all parties, that would probably be reasonably appropriate. We did want to proceed with it quickly; we would still like to get some kind of conclusion as quickly as we possibly can.

Mr. Mancini: Smarten up, NDP, and we can proceed.

Mr. J. Reed: I would like to suggest one final thing to the government. I have noticed in recent weeks that the Premier and the new chairman of Ontario Hydro have adopted, or have begun to adopt at least, in their inimitable fashion, the position that my leader has taken for a number of months now, that is that the only way nuclear energy can be properly scrutinized and examined in Ontario is through full public disclosure.

Mr. Mancini: After they got into trouble.

Mr. J. Reed: This is a point of view that has been expressed by the chairman of the royal commission on hydro-electric power planning. It has been expressed by a lot of very responsible people. I want to say that I am very pleased to see that the Premier in his speech to the Canadian Nuclear Association stated that people have the right to know. I think that is a very significant change.

Mr. Haggerty: That's a great conversion.

Mr. S. Smith: What a conversion!

Mr. Peterson: You should start with the minister knowing first.

Mr. J. Reed: I would also, if the report in the Toronto Star is correct, put on the record that the incoming chairman of Ontario Hydro said: "I like things explained in simple, uncomplicated ways, and there are few limits to what should be withheld." I agree with that.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) doesn't.

Mr. Ashe: It's all a matter of perception.

Mr. J. Reed: I would appeal to the government and to the Minister of Energy, in the spirit of what the Premier has said here, in the spirit of the position he obviously agrees with now and in the spirit of the position that the incoming chairman of Ontario Hydro agrees with now, that he find it in his heart to accept this motion.

Mr. Peterson: Even the Premier can change with the polls.

Mr. J. Reed: We feel there is enough public concern—some of it was voiced yesterday in the Globe and Mail—that if the Premier wants to put his action where his words are he would take it upon himself to say, "Yes, I agree. We're going to hold Rolphton closed until we have a chance to debate it in select committee and allow the select committee to make an immediate interim report. After that it can proceed on its work."

Ms. Gigantes: We now have before us an amendment to the committee's report. If I understand that amendment correctly, what the minister is suggesting to us is that we forget all about the original motion, which was a request to the government to tell Hydro not to restart the Rolphton plant until there had been a safety examination at the select committee level. The minister is telling us, "Forget that now. Send the whole matter back to the select committee and let's have the work begin right away."

I find that position at this stage to be rather distressing. I can put no other word on it. It's distressing to me. Either this government is toying with the seriousness of this issue and the seriousness of the recommendation that was made by the select committee, or else it is truly seeking a confrontation on the principle involved in that recommendation.

I find it difficult to figure out which it is—or whether it's partly both. There's a kind of schizoid attitude from the government. There's a will to power—the will to start up that reactor come hell or high water and not give a few days after the scheduled startup time for the committee to be able to assemble the documents it needs and commence a thorough review of the safety situation. There seems to be that will to power in principle, as if the public credibility of the nuclear program were at stake here on this 22.5 megawatt reactor—as if the whole credibility of the government were at stake somehow if this reactor were delayed in its startup time for a matter of weeks, until we can do a proper job in the select committee.

All we asked for was a delay in the start-up—and I would like to underline to the minister that was a serious request. We now sit here in the situation where that plant has started up and by the time the government allowed this debate, the plant is moving up to full power.

Mr. Mancini: That's your fault.

Ms. Gigantes: This is total hypocrisy. Total hypocrisy.

We had a motion from a majority of that committee a full two weeks ago and more, calling upon the government to delay the startup. The government refused debate for two full weeks and now it permits debate—of what? Even the amendment is now totally useless. Amendment to what? To a motion that asks the government to tell Hydro not to start up the plant? The plant has started.

The way the minister describes the kinds of questions that have been raised about this plant, the way he answers the concerns that have been raised, the way he answers the documented evidence we now have—

Mr. Ashe: What? What?

Mr. Turner: Tell us about it.

Ms. Gigantes: —of the difficulties this plant has experienced in operation ever since 1973—

Mr. Mancini: You should go back to being a mayor, George. You're all through.

Mr. Haggerty: What documentation?

[9:00]

Ms. Gigantes: —the way he does that is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. It's absolute nonsense.

He sits there and he tells us that it is the Atomic Energy Control Board's job to review safety and that only the AECB has the legal mandate and the technical power to be able to review the safety of that plant. At the same time, he tells us to go back and review the safety of the plant in the select committee. Is he laughing?

Mr. Stong: Yes, look at him.

Ms. Gigantes: I think he is partly laughing and partly very determined that there will not be any suggestion that there are safety matters in Ontario related to nuclear power that would cause this government to blink an eyelash—not even for a 22.5-megawatt plant which has consistently lost money.

We now have before us the annual reports of the NPD reactor at Rolphoton from 1973. Those reports contain a listing of serious incidents in the five years from 1973 to 1978. These incidents are occurring in a plant that has a faulty, inadequate, emergency core cooling system. That is documented. We have the documents before the select committee; they were leaked documents from the AECB. But this minister is telling us to go cool our heels, to go chase our tails.

Mr. Ashe: Hear, hear.

Ms. Gigantes: The government is going to be lucky if nothing happens at nuclear plants in Ontario. But if anything does happen that causes a serious problem, the government is going to look pretty sick. It is better to be forewarned and forearmed than to say afterwards, "Oh, well, we didn't think it was serious." It is serious.

This minister has not even taken the trouble to read the documentation, I swear. He could not have read the documentation that exists about the nature of the difficulties with the emergency core cooling system design at that plant. Those documents are publicly available and have been tabled with the committee, and he has not bothered looking at them. He has presided over a procedure in this Legislature where we are now debating an irrelevant motion.

The minister is simply wrong when he suggests that the select committee has no authority to question the Atomic Energy Control Board. The select committee has a mandate to examine nuclear safety in Ontario. If that means we have to question whether the AECB has done a good job, then we will. He is not being very helpful, though, and neither is his government.

While we are on the subject of helpfulness, I would like to straighten out the record once and for all for my colleagues in the official opposition who insist on saying in this House—they have said it many times, and we have had an incident where the House leader of my party left this House—

Mr. Mancini: That's right. You were wrong then, and you're going to be wrong again now.

Ms. Gigantes: —because he had placed on the record a description of their behaviour which was judged to be unparliamentary, although it may have been accurate.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a different issue.

Ms. Gigantes: We have just heard the member for Halton-Burlington explain, once again, that the select committee had considered a motion to begin discussions of the NPD station.

Mr. S. Smith: He didn't say a motion; he said a suggestion.

Mr. J. Reed: I didn't say a motion.

Ms. Gigantes: He said we took a vote that we would only discuss Rolphton, starting on July 4. There was no such vote taken.

Mr. Haggerty: No. He said immediately.

Ms. Gigantes: We had one motion before that committee. It was a motion I put forward after there had been a fair amount of discussion in the committee.

Mr. S. Smith: It was in the steering committee. Why don't you listen?

Mr. J. Reed: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Halton-Burlington on a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, if the member can find in Hansard tomorrow where I suggested in any way that we took a vote—

Ms. Gigantes: You did. You said a vote.

Mr. J. Reed: I beg the member's pardon. What I said was that I appealed to the committee to hear the case immediately. I did not suggest a vote. There was no vote taken on that matter because we were so obviously steamrollered out of that position—

Mr. Bolan: By the member and her colleagues.

Mr. J. Reed: —that there wasn't any point in making the motion. I want to make that clear.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Halton-Burlington has made his point.

Ms. Gigantes: The record will show tomorrow when my friend from Halton-Burlington reads it—

Mr. Mancini: Just apologize.

Ms. Gigantes: —that he said the committee voted to begin consideration of Rolphton only on July 4, and that is simply not accurate.

Mr. J. Reed: Point of order.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Once more, the member for Halton-Burlington.

Mr. J. Reed: Would the member please clarify the situation for the House, that the vote was taken in the steering committee and there was no vote taken in the select committee on the immediate hearing of Rolphton?

Mr. S. Smith: Get it clear.

Ms. Gigantes: I will leave my remarks on this question for the member for Halton-Burlington to look at tomorrow in conjunction with the remarks he has himself made, which repeat the insinuations and innuendoes—

Mr. Mancini: You look at it. He knows what he's talking about.

Mr. S. Smith: He knows what he said, you look at it.

Ms. Gigantes: —that have been bandied around this House concerning this matter for the last couple of weeks.

I think it important to recognize that the position the NDP took in the select committee was one where we wished to have documentation concerning the nuclear power demonstration station before us before we began hearings on Rolphton. That documentation is only now becoming available. Yesterday, or the day before, we received the 1978 annual report on Rolphton. Today we received annual reports from the years 1973 forward and we are beginning to get what Hydro so generously calls a sampling of the significant-event reports concerning Rolphton and the operation of Rolphton. We must have that documentation before we look into the safety question at Rolphton, because otherwise we are subject to a whitewash by Hydro and by the AECL. In this case— if we ever get to the bottom of it—perhaps we'll discover there's been a whitewash by the AECB. I rather suspect that to be the truth.

I don't like this reactor, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you why I don't like it. It's expensive in terms of power production. It's old. It's got a whole bunch of problems that have become evident over the years, and particularly in the last couple of years, which have led it to have a much lower capacity than the designers expected, than AECB expected, than AECL expected and than Ontario Hydro expected. It shows all the evidence of being a plant which is like an old car; there comes a point where you shouldn't invest any more in trying to patch it up, and there also comes a point when you should put it through a new safety check. I suggest to you very strongly this is the case with Rolphton.

The facility is being used for training operators. I don't think it's a good idea to be training new drivers on old cars or new operators on old plants, especially when they seem to have the chronic kinds of problems this plant has.

The other reason Hydro wishes to continue operating the plant come hell or high water—the other reason for that will to power, by the government and by Hydro, is that this reactor is being used to test out new fuel designs.

Since 1973 fuel bundles containing plutonium have been fired at that plant. Mr. Speaker, those fuel bundles are what Hydro calls highly energized. In layman's terms that means they're loaded with radioactive contamination. Any serious incident where there was an escape of radioactive contamination from containment at Rolphton has the potential to release all the contamination associated with these highly energized uranium fuel bundles.

We know from the documents that have been tabled with the select committee so far that there is concern about the level of power at which these fuel bundles are operated. We also know that this reactor has a basic flaw, in the sense that the emergency cooling system is inadequate. It's been patched up, we don't know how successfully, and it's not completely patched up yet. We don't know if the recommendations of the Atomic Energy Control Board for the patch-up of the emergency core cooling system were adequate to ensure safety. We sure know they hope they are adequate, and we sure know that the AECB wants to see that plant operate, as does Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario Hydro; but that is about all we know for sure.

We have an old plant, with a flaw in the emergency core cooling system, with a regular pattern of breakdowns, some of them causing fairly serious incidents—type one faults, the most serious kind of faults—being operated with new operators who are in training, and using plutonium fuel bundles, among other fuels.

I consider there is every reason in the world why this government should have taken our recommendation seriously. That it has not is a matter of grave concern to the public of Ontario.

I would like the minister to know that back in the city of Ottawa, the Ottawa Citizen—

Mr. Bradley: A fine paper.

Ms. Gigantes: —has conducted one of the best investigative reporting feats I have ever seen in Canadian journalism in terms of getting information about the operations and history of the Rolphton nuclear plant.

Mr. Bradley: That ought to get you some good coverage.

Ms. Gigantes: The Ottawa Citizen has provided the citizens of Ottawa with information which can leave no doubt that we need a safety review of that plant before its operation is allowed to continue. There is absolutely no doubt, once you read the articles that have been done in the Ottawa Citizen, that this is the case. The Citizen has stood up for the information it has produced. It has called upon this government to get the truth out of Hydro. It has editorially said that the plant should remain shut until there is a safety review. That's the kind of journalism we see all too rarely in Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: Did you hear that in the press gallery?

Ms. Gigantes: I know that when I go back to Ottawa people expect a government to respond to the questions that have been raised. There is now an application before the federal court of Canada from the concerned citizens of Renfrew county, requesting that there be a public hearing at the AECB concerning Rolphton and saying that the AECB is being delinquent in its duty in the control, monitoring and regulation of the operation of the Rolphton plant.

I think it's about time this government realized it would be the better part of wisdom concerning safety at nuclear plants to proceed with caution, to give serious responses to serious questions and to show the public of Ontario there is a commitment by government in Ontario that the safety of Ontario citizens will be protected. I believe the government's attitude shown tonight, shown over the last two weeks, gives a mocking face to government concern.

The minister is laughing at us and the minister is wrong. The minister is going to learn over the next few months that the public of Ontario cares very deeply about the issue of safety at our nuclear stations. He is going to learn that the people of Ontario will demand to have government take these matters seriously and provide every conceivable piece of information and every conceivable opportunity for public discussion and review. He will learn the people of Ontario will not be satisfied with a government which says let the AECB do it, that the people of Ontario will not be satisfied with a government that washes its hands of the question of safety at nuclear plants in Ontario.

We brought a serious motion to this Legislature. The government has treated it with contempt, both procedurally and in its amendment tonight. I am disgusted, and I think the other members of my party and the Liberal Party feel the same kind of disgust.

I have nothing more to add. This whole debate has been irrelevant. Thank you.

Mr. Ashe: I have listened with great interest and great intent to the speaker and I am now really concerned as to what we are debating tonight. I don't know whether we are actually debating the motion and the recommendation before us from the select committee or the whole safety issue relating to nuclear power in Ontario; but I am going to try to keep my remarks more relevant to the motion before us.

I suppose I am the only person, to any relative degree, in this Legislature who lives close to a nuclear power station.

Mr. J. Reed: We knew there was something.

Mr. S. Smith: Lethal radiation affects the brain.

Mr. Ashe: I live less than one mile from a station, I have for a great number of years, and both myself and my neighbours have great confidence regarding the safety record of the stations operated by Ontario Hydro.

I would like to set the record straight on a great number of issues before us lately. First of all, as a neighbour of the Pickering nuclear plant, being very specific, I firmly believe these plants, both in their design and the way they are operated, are fundamentally safe.

Mr. Nixon: This is right on the report, is it, George?

Mr. Ashe: That is exactly what I am talking about. Otherwise, why would I raise my family literally in the shadow of the nuclear generating station unless I had some confidence in the technology of that operation?

Some of the members opposite don't know what it is like to live in the shadow of that great industry and don't really know what they are talking about. They can get up and grandstand and politic, but they really don't know what it is all about.

Mr. Bradley: The Tories never do that.

Mr. Ashe: Never. Mr. Speaker, I will get back to my prepared text and try not to incite a riot on the other side.

As a member of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, I am of course very concerned about the resolution that was passed by the opposition members on that committee which calls for the shutdown of the Rolphston nuclear plant. The government members, in my view quite rightly, voted against that resolution for many reasons. I will just try to name a few. First, because the select committee did not conduct, and in fact did not have time to conduct, any independent investigation into the concerns expressed about the plant.

Mr. S. Smith: You voted against doing it.

Mr. Ashe: Rather, they preferred to rely on their political instincts although I would more properly identify it as a politically expedient posture at the time.

Mr. Renwick: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Ashe: Second, because the AECB, the agency which is qualified and hopefully responsible for making decisions such as this—

Mr. J. Reed: It isn't though; we established that a few minutes ago.

Mr. Ashe: —found after a full and complete review of all the facts that the station was safe to operate.

Third, because this type of decision is completely beyond the capability and responsibilities of the select committee at this time.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Of a certain member.

Mr. Ashe: I hardly need recall for members the powers of the Atomic Energy Control Board. In short, it is the federal agency responsible for nuclear safety under the Atomic Energy Control Act. Suffice to say that on matters of operating safety the control board is the supreme authority.

Mr. Haggerty: Joe Clark will take a look at it.

Mr. Ashe: It has the power to inspect, license and supervise the safe operation of all nuclear plants in Canada, not just Ontario, a role it has performed rather satisfactorily for the almost 20 years that nuclear power has been a fixture of electrical power generation in Ontario.

As the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) has already indicated in his earlier remarks, the AECB is the agency which has the technical capability and the legal responsibility for licensing the operation of nuclear reactors and for establishing nuclear safety standards in Canada. The board, after a full examination of all the facts, is satisfied with the safety of Rolphston station and that satisfaction is evidenced by the fact that it has continued to allow the station to operate at 100 per cent.

This is not to say I oppose the select committee's thorough examination of safety issues. In fact, I completely support the intent of what they are trying to do. I sincerely believe the hearings scheduled for that committee this summer will be most beneficial, enabling members and the general public to see the many protections built into our nuclear facilities, and in the historical perspective of the Three Mile Island incident to judge if they are still satisfactory.

I do think, however, that it is important that these questions be examined in perspective and in proper context. I don't think we could even pretend in the less than three hours we have before us this evening even to scratch the surface of nuclear safety let alone as it relates to Rolphton.

Mr. J. Reed: That's why we wanted to hear it weeks ago.

Mr. Ashe: Nor do I think the public gets a proper perspective of nuclear power in Ontario through the little isolated incidents or unusual occurrences on which the media have focused recently, both the printed media and the electronic media. Certainly the Premier (Mr. Davis) caught this important point in his speech this week to the Canadian Nuclear Association.

Mr. Haggerty: For the first time.

Mr. Ashe: There were references made to that speech earlier this evening.

Mr. S. Smith: Saul on the road to Damascus.

Mr. Ashe: I quote from his speech: "You now face the challenge and opportunity," he told the nuclear industry, "of putting all the facts on the record at a time when nearly everybody is watching and listening."

Mr. J. Reed: Something my leader said months ago.

Mr. Ashe: Is that right? It's amazing.

Mr. J. Reed: Your leader is the last one.

Mr. Ashe: It's amazing. It just goes to show that when it's appropriate we all listen, no matter the source.

These opportunities will arise at the select committee this summer where Ontario Hydro will have the opportunity to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the committee's members that safety is its first and foremost concern. I believe, as does the Premier and this government, that the public will also be reassured by a full, frank and open discussion of the nuclear safety issue.

I do not think it is reassuring, nor in the best interests of public safety or education on nuclear matters, to be exposed to these issues in isolation or in an incomplete way, as for example the recent headline-grabbing remarks on tritium leaks at Pickering, which until one examined them closely were presented as alarming distortions of the facts. Under close scrutiny, however, it became clear that the radiation leak was so small that one would have to drink the town's water supply for something like 450 years—and not even the most optimistic member would suggest that he will be around for that time—to receive a dose of radiation similar to the small amount that would be received by a normal chest X-ray.

Mr. S. Smith: Given the state of X-ray equipment in Ontario, I wouldn't make that statement too glibly.

Mr. Ashe: Let's put these things into their proper perspective. Whether they be said by a doctor or otherwise, let's put them into perspective.

I would like to turn now to the question of public concern in the communities involved. I can tell the House that in Pickering, where I have been both a member of council—serving as the deputy reeve and then as the mayor of that municipality—and a member of this Legislature, the public has a great deal of faith in Ontario Hydro and in the way the nuclear plant has been operated there.

In the case of Deep River—a particular situation with which I am not as closely familiar, of course—near which the Rolphton nuclear demonstration plant is located, I would like to read into the record the following letter, which was sent on May 16, 1979, to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: It has already been read into the record by the minister; you weren't here that day.

Mr. Ashe: I quote:

"Dear Dr. Smith:

"At a special meeting held on Friday, May 11, the following resolution was endorsed unanimously by the heads of the local municipalities: 'That the area municipalities of Deep River, Chalk River and Petawawa, and the townships of Head, Clara and Maria, and Rolph, Buchanan, Wylie and McKay emphatically reiterate their past support for the nuclear power industry and, in particular express their complete confidence in the nuclear installation operations and personnel at AECL's Chalk River laboratories, and at Ontario Hydro NPD-NTC, Rolphton.' Which, of course, is the nuclear power demonstration and nuclear training centre.

"This action was precipitated by recent media reports which imply a fear for our safety with respect to the continued operation of the nuclear power station at Rolphton. Quite frankly, it is of more concern to us that distortions of fact and alarmist reports by the media are creating a misleading impression of the nuclear industry.

"As the leader of the Liberal Party, you must surely recognize the outstanding technological achievement and opportunity for electrical energy independence that nuclear power represents, not only for Ontario, but for all of Canada. In order to protect fully the public interest we, the Deep River council, firmly believe it is incumbent on all political parties, not only to seek answers to the perceived problems, but also to stress with equal fervour the associated benefits. Therefore, while sharing your desire for the best public safety precautions within the nuclear industry, we feel your statements, as recently reported, were lacking in overall perspective.

"In the post-Harrisburg climate of heightened public awareness, it is essential to present a balanced and objective viewpoint. To do otherwise, however inadvertently, can only do a great disservice to the general public."

That is the end of the letter, which is signed by W. A. Seddon, the mayor of Deep River.

Mr. Bradley: Old news; it has been read twice.

Mr. Ashe: Old news, when it is relevant, I think deserves to be once again read into the record. It is just too bad that people did not take guidance and heedance.

Mr. S. Smith: You should read it again, actually. It's so much better than the rest of your speech.

Mr. Ashe: It is amazing how the members opposite can constantly refer to listening to and wanting to have a little input from the local elected representatives—only, mind you, when that happens to suit their purpose.

I think that letter expresses in nonpartisan terms the very concern—

Mr. S. Smith: Don't choke on that.

Mr. Ashe: To put that more precisely, non-political-partisan terms—

Mr. J. Reed: That is even worse.

Mr. Ashe: —the very concern that I have been expressing.

Mr. Stong: Only one thing could be worse.

Mr. Ashe: I think no one can express it better than persons who live and work daily with nuclear power the way those persons in the communities mentioned have been a part of it.

It surely behooves us, as hopefully responsible politicians, although sometimes I question that, to deal with these public concerns in a responsible manner so the public does not become unduly alarmed by some irresponsible, sensational, headline-grabbing statements which do a great disservice to what has grown into a vital, and I might add thriving industry in this province and in this country.

In fact it is more than that. It is an industry that has enabled us in Ontario, with very few native energy sources, to have lower electricity rates than most jurisdictions in the industrialized world. Many people are unaware that nuclear power in Ontario last year provided more than 28 per cent of the province's electric power needs. In comparison, water-powered electricity accounted for something like 37 per cent; coal provided another 28 per cent, most of which was imported from the jurisdiction to the south, the United States; the balance was created by burning oil or gas shipped from the western provinces.

The important thing to note, however, is that electricity produced from uranium is one tenth—and I repeat, one tenth—the cost of that produced from coal, oil or natural gas.

Mr. Haggerty: You haven't included the cost of waste disposal.

Mr. Ashe: When one considers this relative economic cost, it is hard to imagine what we might be paying today in Ontario for our electricity if it were not for nuclear power.

Mr. Bradley: What is the capital cost and what is the disposal cost?

Mr. S. Smith: What is the cost of disposing of the waste, George?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ashe: I would add that the Ontario government realizes electricity produced from uranium represents the only solid bridge from a society mainly dependent on oil and gas to one that can meet its needs from renewable energy forms.

Mr. S. Smith: That's what I've been saying for three years. You're quoting me now.

Mr. J. Reed: Why don't you talk about the real cost?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ashe: I am glad we are recognizing the Leader of the Opposition does say something relevant from time to time.

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you.

Mr. Ashe: We know we must narrow the gap from a society dependent on nonrenewable energy forms to one dependent on renewable energy.

Mr. J. Reed: You have been three years in adopting that view.

Mr. Ashe: We now have more than 100 projects involving energy conservation and renewable energy co-ordinated by the Ontario government and we have just concluded, as the honourable member knows, a major agreement with the government of Canada in this area to further develop and demonstrate energy conservation and renewable technology.

Mr. J. Reed: That is the third time that has been announced to the House.

Mr. Ashe: Next week I will be participating—

Mr. Haggerty: Next week the honourable member will reinvent the wheel.

Mr. Ashe: I will be participating in re-inventing the wheel, if the member likes, but making progress, because sometimes the wheel can be made rounder and hence more efficient.

Mr. Bradley: And there will be five press releases that it has been reinvented.

Mr. Ashe: I will be participating with the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) and others in the official opening of Canada's first solar-heated apartment building in Aylmer, Ontario—

Mr. Bradley: Tokenism.

Mr. Ashe: —just one of the projects this government has been involved in to help bring closer the day when solar, wind or biomass energy will play a greater role in meeting our energy needs.

Today, not everyone can afford the minimum cost of some $3,000 involved in installing a prototype experimental-stage solar system in his home or office. We know we must work towards commercial development of these systems so that in the final analysis, the private sector will move ahead with the development of systems that will be more affordable, more reliable and far less experimental.

Mr. J. Reed: This is right on the motion, Mr. Speaker, right on the motion.

Mr. Ashe: In the interim, nuclear power will continue, and in fact must continue, to be an indispensable bridge, a bridge which must serve for perhaps the next half-century or so. I appreciate there are some members opposite, particularly some of those to my right, your left, Mr. Speaker, who would have us back into the candle age, if they had their way.

Mr. Samis: Don't be so silly.

Mr. Ashe: It is my belief that the nuclear bridge is a safe one, and the extent of its safety will be revealed to the public through the open, honest and complete public discussions of the select committee this summer. I believe it is only through such complete examinations that the safety issue can be properly probed and can be properly understood.

The amendment to the motion before us gives me one little bit of concern. As a member of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, the words as they appear, "as soon as possible," to me I suppose are a little bit up in the air, are probably not quite tied down enough to specifics. So on those grounds, and to be a little more specific to the members of the House when they are voting later on this evening, I would like to propose an amendment to the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Ashe moves an amendment to the amendment that the words in the fourth line "as soon as possible" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "as scheduled and agreed to by the Hydro steering committee."

Ms. Gigantes: What does that mean?

Mr. J. Reed: Nothing.

Mr. Ashe: The reason for the amendment I think is obvious. To be very specific, all parties are represented on that committee through the steering committee and have already agreed, with the guidance of the staff, as to a reasonable and responsible way to deal with this issue this summer. I think it is recognized with this amendment that the actual specifics of that schedule have already been adhered to. I think it is reasonable and responsible, and hopefully it will make the motion and the amendment to the motion that is before this House acceptable to all sides.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the minister's amendment is unacceptable for an obvious reason. He did not include the commitment that the power plant would remain shut down during the course of the hearings that his amendment envisages. As a matter of fact, we are told on good authority that Rolphton has been operating at one thousandth of its capacity up until this evening, that they are moving the levers, adjusting the rods and turning the dials which begin the power movement upward, and that perhaps by midnight tonight it will be advancing in its move towards full power.

It is ironic and, in fact, somewhat disconcerting that this upgrading of the power level is taking place even as we debate a motion which was supported by the representatives of a majority of the members in the House calling for it to remain shut down. I bring that to the attention of the honourable member who just spoke. It doesn't call for the shutdown of the plant, Mr. Speaker, it calls for it to remain shut down until the select committee has had an opportunity to review the situation.

Actually, I feel very much concerned indeed that the minister has taken a course of action that has so dislocated this debate. The chairman of the committee has indicated that the minister announced even before the report came before the House that he was ignoring the report and going to order the resumption of the production of power at Rolphton. It's almost as if—

Mr. Stong: Tantamount to contempt.

Mr. Nixon: Well, one wonders who he does consult. I have a feeling he goes out fishing with the Premier (Mr. Davis) and they decide, by God, nobody is going to push them around. That could happen; that sort of thing has happened in the past. If it was his deputy who advised that, then I am even more convinced that the minister needs better advice in matters of this importance, both for the provision of power and for the safety of the people of the province, and just as important, for the proper exercise of the democratic method of government.

It is true that if there is a criticism of the members of the committee in the brief hearings leading to the motion and to the report, it is that it is not possible for the members of the committee to be expert in the matters at Rolphton so they could say: "We have examined the scientific background, the engineering matters and the history of the production of power at Rolphton; therefore, there is no doubt but that it should be shut down because it is an apparent and continuing hazard."

There was, however, enough information given to the members of the committee that they felt, in their good judgement, the advice they had to give to the government was that Hydro be ordered to leave it shut down until such time as a proper review had taken place.

The argument that this should be left to the Atomic Energy Control Board is irrelevant. Certainly they have the final responsibility. The parliamentary assistant to the minister has indicated that is where the responsibility must continue to lie, and yet he thinks that the work of the committee is worthwhile. It is almost as if we are some sort of a show group that sits there, winnowing through the material which we think is important, but the government of the day simply ignores it.

I am very much concerned, as I hope the minister is, that the vote tonight will simply accept the report—and I have every reason to expect that it will—calling on the government to order Hydro to continue the shut-down. Surely it is incumbent on the members of the committee to begin the review of Rolphton without delay. We have heard the arguments about the delay that has taken place already. We do not know how long this review would be but, as my colleague the member for Halton-Burlington has indicated, the committee should be ready to give an interim report. If the House is in session, we can give it to the minister, or through some proper channel, indicating whether in our view the power plant can be restarted three weeks from now, four weeks from now, or perhaps never, depending on what we find out.

This is an old plant. It has been operating for 17 years. Like everything else, whether or not it is the tin Lizzie the member for Carleton East who is doing the usual honour in these debates—was referring to, still it is bound to have continuing problems.

The 22.5 megawatts are not necessary for the Hydro grid, although my colleague who will be speaking in a few minutes is well aware that the power from Rolphton is utilized in eastern Ontario for keeping the street lights on in half of Pembroke, which we would all agree is an extremely important use indeed.

The points have been made very clearly. Whether or not it is dangerous if it starts up, we can leave it shut down for a few weeks until the select committee has an opportunity to examine it.

The government thinks the select committee is competent and is responsible for important things that the government wants to refer to it, for what I would consider political reasons. They have us go over their contracts for uranium and so on, and then ignore the recommendations at that time. But here is an instance where, if the minister were at all receptive to the realities of the democratic situation in this House and in this province, he would have the largeness of the spirit to recommend to his colleagues that Rolphton remain shut down. If he wanted to put in an amendment that the committee should give an interim report and not go over all of the safety aspects of the other power plants, surely that would be completely acceptable.

I regret very much that the government is taking this stand. As a matter of fact, I feel that they are doing it only to protect the minister, who launched himself on this particular position without sufficient advice and consideration. He has been around for a long time, and they say: "Well, we'd better support good old Jim. After all, he's got a double portfolio; nobody wants either part of it, and he's got to continue to carry it."

We know how difficult it is for anybody to take this heavy responsibility, but I regret very much that the minister has taken this stand. I would ask that he give consideration to this: Why can we not make a deal to leave it shut down, and I am sure the committee will undertake to start the review without delay? We would even accept a sub-amendment from the honourable member who is simply stating the obvious.

[9:45]

Mr. Nixon: All right. Tidying it up, in his own inimitable fashion. If the minister wants to set a time limit, we can make an interim report. If he is so anxious to crank up Rolph-ton by the end of July, he probably can. But it's an affront to everything that we're trying to do around here for the minister to allow Hydro to pull out the control rods in that atomic reactor even as we debate a report as significant and important as this.

Mr. S. Smith: Very well put.

Mr. Cassidy: I've just been trying to calculate what the actual impact on Ontario Hydro would be if the government were to listen to the Legislature and keep the Rolph-ton nuclear power station shut until there was a chance for the select committee to look into the questions of safety, which were raised initially by concerned citizens in the Renfrew area and which have been underlined by the repeated new evidence of further problems with that plant—

Mr. Mancini: Never mind the citizens of Renfrew. We have someone to speak for them.

Mr. Cassidy: —which, clearly after 17 years of operation is beginning to get rather shaky around the edges and beginning to show some signs of its age. That plant has got a capacity, I believe, of 22.5 megawatts which is slightly less than one thousandth of the total installed capacity of Ontario Hydro at this time, which is about 23,000 megawatts. One one-thousandth is all that would be lost over the course of the next six weeks were the government to agree to this motion and keep the Rolph-ton plant shut until the end of July, at which time the committee could have decided whether the plant was safe or whether it was unsafe.

I'm sure the government would agree that if the plant is found to be unsafe it should not be kept open. It's a perfectly simple kind of a conclusion, on which I presume even the member for Durham West, the parliamentary assistant, who lives in the shadow of the Pickering power station, would be prepared to agree. The fact is that we're talking about an infinitesimal loss of power to Hydro and Hydro has been running with 30 or 40 per cent excess capacity.

The request by the committee could have been heeded. The government could have told Hydro to have held off resuming operations of that plant until this debate was through tonight. Instead, the plant has been allowed to get back into operation. I understand, contrary to what the minister has said, it is not working at one hundredth or one thousandth of its capacity but it is very rapidly moving up to full capacity. That's effrontery, but it's typical of the operations of this government when it comes to listening to what the opposition parties say under the condition of a minority government.

I'd say that it's effrontery as well for the Minister of Energy to come up with the recommendation that he has come up with suggesting that the report be referred back. It's a contrary motion and if there were time, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask you to rule that the motion itself was out of order.

When the parliamentary assistant has to get up and subsequently correct the efforts of his minister, because the minister blew it, and suggest something else, that suggests a certain state of confusion, a state of confusion which, in our minds, too often governs the way this government is handling questions of nuclear power.

This week the Premier goes down to the Canadian Nuclear Association and delivers a speech in which he tells the association that they're going to have to be more open and more free with information about nuclear power and in which he suggested to them that there is a danger that they are just engaged in a public relations exercise when the public wants to know an awful lot more. If the Premier really believed that, we would have given the word to the Minister of Energy not just to have gone along with tonight's motion but also to have kept the Rolph-ton station shut. It is not meaningful to Hydro whether or not that plant is shut or open.

When questions about nuclear power are raised, it seems to me that the government has a responsibility to be seen to be taking every effort possible to satisfy the public's concerns. It seems to me that the government should be aware of the concerns many of us have that AECB, to which the Minister of Energy has referred all of his concerns, is not the only appropriate body to look at matters of nuclear safety.

I have great regard for the expertise and the knowledge that has been acquired over the course of the last year and a half by the select committee on Hydro—not just its chairman, my friend and colleague, the member for York South, but also all of the members of the New Democratic Party and, for that matter, I dare say that the members of the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party have maybe acquired some expertise as well.

There is not a single legislative body on this continent which is more qualified as laymen to look into the question of nuclear plant safety, Mr. Speaker, than the select committee on Hydro affairs of the Ontario Legislature, and yet the government is saying, "Leave it to the Atomic Energy Control Board."

This isn't recent information, but back in 1975 the eminent political scientist Bruce Doern did a study of the AECB and he said the AECB is in a relation of "historic coziness" with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited who are the sponsoring agency for the Rolphton plant and actually built it initially. Only five directors, never anybody from the public interest groups or from the labour movement; too many of the directors of the AECB coming themselves out of the nuclear power industry or out of AECL.

These things evolve. The AECB is probably more independent than it once was, but surely it doesn't contain all wisdom on the question of nuclear safety.

I want to suggest a number of conclusions that we have to draw from the government's behaviour on this particular question.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: Before the honourable member suggests a number of conclusions, I realize there is nothing you can do as Speaker, but I should bring to your attention, sir, and the other members of the House, that by agreement each party is to have 45 minutes in this debate; the NDP has now used 45 minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware of the fact that my colleagues have spoken with great wisdom, with great force, and also maybe with not quite as much length as I had hoped.

Mr. Sterling: Then sit down.

Mr. Stong: Sit down before you ruin it.

Mr. Cassidy: If I could be permitted about a minute, I will conclude very quickly, with the consent of the Liberal member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

First, the nuclear establishment is very reluctant to be challenged, otherwise why would it and the government quibble over the shutdown of a 21-megawatt plant during the course of this inquiry? Their fear and the government's fear is that the course of the nuclear power program will be threatened. I want to suggest that raises questions about their confidence in the nuclear power program and the questions of safety which are clearly involved, when three separate serious events happen in one power station which is 17 years old.

Second, the government itself seems prepared to go to extraordinary lengths in order to put off a searching inquiry into this particular power station. For the government to argue for openness on the one hand and to act for a closed approach on the other raises questions.

Third, what is happening at Rolphton does raise serious concerns about the nuclear program. If a valve that is important to the cooling system can be out for 47½ or 58 days and nobody notices, then all of the estimates about the safety are really in doubt. If a plant like Rolphton can start to come to the end of its useful design after 17 years, when it was meant to last for at least 30 or even 40, then all of the economics of nuclear power and of the more modern stations built subsequently could also be in doubt.

The point is not that we know that Rolphton is unsafe and should be shut down indefinitely; the point is that the public, the concerned citizens in Renfrew, people across the province and members of this Legislature, have the right to seek reassurance, if reassurance can be found, or to know what the true facts are on the other hand.

That's why we think it was arrogant and presumptuous of the government to reject this motion, we think it was wrong of both the government and the Liberal Party to resist debate of the committee's report at an earlier date, and we think even now that this committee's report should be adopted and the government should agree to turn the valves back off, to shut down this plant, to let the select committee look into the safety questions at Rolphton—

Mr. Mancini: Your time was up three minutes ago.

Mr. Cassidy: —and not to aggravate unnecessarily the public concern over nuclear plant safety, be it at Rolphton or anyplace else in the province.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I welcome this opportunity to address the Legislature tonight, because I believe a nuclear debate is both timely and important.

Mr. Mancini: Is this your own speech?

Mr. Cureatz: I think in the context of this debate on the Rolphton nuclear plant, it is important that the opinions and views of the members of this Legislature appear on the record so that all the public may see.

We have already heard from my honourable colleague the Minister of Energy, details of the many safety systems at the Rolphoton plant. We have heard a great deal of opinions and facts about nuclear power expressed by other members. I think the record will show that we in the Legislature are all of one voice when we express our concern that Ontario Hydro's nuclear generation facilities must provide maximum protection from nuclear accidents of any kind for our population. I would like the record to show that I am one who firmly believes Hydro has given us that kind of protection. In Ontario, safety has always been regarded as foremost in the operation of nuclear plants.

Mr. Bradley: How much do they pay the speechwriters over there?

Mr. Cureatz: Backup safety systems have long been a fundamental feature of the Candu reactors used in Canada. Members opposite would like to paint a picture of disaster when they speak on the subject of nuclear power.

Mr. Bradley: Never.

Mr. S. Smith: No one has done that. Be responsible.

Mr. Bradley: When he wrote the speech, he anticipated that and then he didn't have it.

Mr. Cureatz: Members on this side of the House will argue in favour of this efficient, safe and, I might add, very necessary manner of generating electric power needed to meet our requirements in Ontario. By that I mean Hydro's nuclear generating system has proved its reliability and safety. The physical factors that became the problem at Three Mile Island in Pennsylvania have been anticipated in the design of the Candu generation system which, to avoid similar problems, has been designed quite differently. The backup mechanisms incorporated into the Candu reactor, as well as the design changes, would prevent the kind of failure that occurred in Pennsylvania as well as many other problems.

Mr. Bradley: Such an intricate knowledge of nuclear energy.

Mr. Cureatz: This is not to say there cannot ever be a problem of any kind with the Candu system. We must accept, however, the fact that the Atomic Energy Control Board and Ontario Hydro have minimized the possibility of any accident to the highest possible degree.

Mr. Bradley: I thought you couldn't read in the House.

Mr. Cureatz: We must place credibility in findings such as those of Dr. Porter in his interim report on nuclear power in Ontario. He stated that while the absolute safety of any industrial or human activity, including the generation of electricity, cannot be assured, nuclear power as generated by Hydro's Candu reactors is reasonably safe. The record of the Candu reactor reveals it to be the safest form of energy-related technology known to man. In fact, nuclear technology has been so closely monitored and controlled since its inception in Canada that I would suggest it would be very difficult to find another industry work place that is as safe.

I would like to add the comment that I think there has been an incredible lack of perspective involved in the reporting of the recent nuclear issues in the news media.

Mr. Bradley: They've been reporting Jim Taylor's speeches.

Mr. Cureatz: The public has been treated, by and large, to only one side of the case concerning nuclear energy.

We on the government side welcome the select committee's scheduled thorough review of nuclear safety and all of Hydro's operations in this summer to come. We welcome it not only because we have confidence Hydro will be able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of committee members that safety is an absolute priority with Hydro, but also because the public will be reassured by such a frank and open and full discussion of the issues.

Mr. Bradley: That will be something new.

Mr. Cureatz: I would like to remind the members, as has been already quoted tonight, about the Premier's comments to the Canadian Nuclear Association, that the public must have a right to know. I would similarly remind members of this House that we too, as elected representatives of the public, have an obligation to be responsible on this issue. It is our duty and our responsibility to present the whole picture in this nuclear question. I say to the opponents of nuclear generation specifically that their solution, that is, shutting down the source of concern, is neither realistic nor practical. Nuclear generation forms a significant portion of our present energy supplies.

Ms. Gigantes: Not Rolphoton.

Mr. Philip: Rolphoton doesn't.

Mr. Cureatz: No amounts of conservation or renewable technology could replace this contribution, and the cost on our Hydro bills of paying for more coal, oil and gas generation would be staggering.

I would like to add, finally, that the motion to close Rolphoton is without rationale. The Atomic Energy Control Board, which licenses and inspects all nuclear plants in Canada, has found the plant safe to operate at 100 per cent power. In 61 accumulated reactor years of nuclear power operation in Canada, that board has an unblemished safety record, as does Ontario Hydro.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of saying a few words.

Mr. Bradley: Well read.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak as the local member. I do so, recognizing time is reasonably short, but I do want to offer some remarks which, I must say, I offer with a sense of anger and frustration at a lot of what has characterized the so-called Rolphton issue.

I do so as someone who lives, like four and five generations of my forebears, in the Ottawa Valley where this controversy and this plant are now located. I do so as the local member who understands more keenly, I would like to believe, the unique problems Rolphton has presented to both this House tonight and to the select committee over the recent past. I do so as the local member who understands that in my otherwise economically depressed county, the atomic energy industry is clearly an important one, and I do so tonight, appreciating the particular vested interested that brings me to this debate. I do so perhaps as someone who remembers the impact of an earlier family of electrically oriented plants upon my local environment.

I can well remember, and I can take anyone who wishes to come with me to look at it, the environmental impact of what was always thought to be a much cleaner and a much less difficult generation means and that, of course, was hydro power. We butchered some of the most beautiful natural resources in my county, the Ottawa and Madawaska rivers most notably, so that we could export power down here to the industrial heartland of southern Ontario. The dammed areas of my county stand as a living testament to the problems of that earlier family of electrical generation means.

We have accepted the nuclear waste from Port Hope and Carleton East and paid a hell of a price, $2 million I am told, to have the privilege of taking the junk in my county. I didn't hear the member for Carleton East make a great deal of noise about that. I consider it offensive to spend $2 million of the taxpayers' money to export that low-contaminant waste those many miles when clearly it did not need to be so organized.

In the context of the Renfrew county environment, and I see my colleague the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) joining us, I understand the economics that have left us unhappily depressed, relative to the Pickering and to the Carleton Easts where the residents have enjoyed a much higher standard of economic circumstances in the middle of the 20th century.

In that environment I understand the position in which the government has placed us where the 2,200 jobs at Chalk River and the 500 jobs at Rolphton mean a heck of a lot more to my county and those reeves who wrote the Leader of the Opposition and the Premier and others. I understand the corner into which we have been backed in that connection.

So that there is no misunderstanding, I stand here tonight and support in principle what I have always supported. I am a pro-nuclear person. I believe it to be a very valuable part of our energy component, now and in the future. I appreciate what those people working at Chalk River have done for me and have done for all of the honourable members in not only the terms of providing a new kind of power, but the tremendous local, provincial and national technology that has grown up around that. I will not let anyone there or elsewhere cast me as anything but a pro-nuclear person. That is the way I have felt, that is the way in which I have campaigned in two elections, in Deep River and elsewhere, and that is the way in which I approach this debate tonight.

But unlike some, I am not prepared to stand here tonight and say "nuclear energy, right or wrong." I am not prepared, as someone sent here with a mandate, to leave the environment for another generation in a way in which I found it; to dismiss, out of hand, legitimate questions raised by legitimate citizens in my county and elsewhere in relation to this plant or any other. Surely it is a first principle in a democratic society that people, concerned people, whatever their point of view, have a right and I dare say a responsibility to bring before all of us their legitimate concerns about public policy as all of us in this room and elsewhere made it.

I look around the public galleries tonight and I see some familiar faces from both sides of the local debate and I am glad to see them here. I look around me and I see people from Ontario Hydro and to those people and to those from the Ministry of Energy I want to say something that is not very polite. Not in four years as a member and in many years before that have I seen such a terrible botchup in public relations. The people in the ministry, the people at Ontario Hydro have served very poorly those 200 or 300 people at NPD.

Ms. Gigantes: That wasn't a botchup, that was lies.

Mr. Conway: They have not got their message out. They have failed to put any kind of a public image on what it is they were trying to say and the ones they have betrayed most tragically are the very people in their employ, 300 miles away from here and I want them to know it.

For the multimillion-dollar PR operation they have at 700 University Avenue and elsewhere they ought to be ashamed of themselves. I am not about to—now, or in the immediate future—forgive them for that betrayal of some very fine, hard-working Hydro employees who are not very pleased, privately at least, with what it is they have been left.

Neither am I very happy about the way in which my colleague from Carleton East has characterized the Rolphton plant. To use her phrase of the other day it was "a rattletrap."

Ms. Gigantes: It is a rattletrap.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: She should be ashamed.

Mr. Ashe: She doesn't even know where it is.

Mr. Conway: Well, sometimes her virtuous piety is acceptable, but I am not about to stand here tonight or at any other occasion and listen to her make such charges which are clearly untrue and absolutely irresponsible and she knows it.

Ms. Gigantes: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: As the member for Renfrew North has suggested I have made accusations which are lacking in truth and are irresponsible, I call upon you to rule that that is not the correct way to describe my statements at all. There may be a difference of opinion—

Interjections.

Ms. Gigantes: —between the member for Carleton East and the member for Renfrew North on this matter, as there most undoubtedly is, but to describe my statements as untrue is something I cannot accept and I hope you will not accept.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I want to—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: You have to rule on this. The member for Renfrew North said my colleague the member for Carleton East had made statements which were untrue and that she knew them to be untrue. I ask you to have the honourable member withdraw those statements.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I will, if it assists you in your consideration, withdraw the aspect of untrue and repeat, unequivocally, that those statements were irresponsible and absolutely unwarranted.

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: I want to say I was impressed by the Premier's recent speech. I was very impressed by what he had to say about the people's right to know.

We may be 250 or 300 miles away from here but my people, however many or however few, with whatever point of view, with whatever prejudice, real or otherwise, they too have a right to know. They too have a right to know what it is that has been occurring at the NPD at Rolphton. There is, surely, much local concern about the media attention which has been directed at a facility which has existed there for some time. I support entirely my colleagues in the select committee, who in my view acted with responsibility and with genuine concern—

Mr. Ashe: And with no information.

Mr. Conway: —when they put forward their resolution some time ago.

I might conclude by saying that those who would cavalierly dismiss that local right to know and those who would cavalierly make irresponsible and unwarranted statements are in my public and private point of view the real enemies of the people at Rolphton and elsewhere.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to conclude the debate this evening just prior to the vote. I recall when the matter of Rolphton first came to my attention and I issued a statement on it—I think it was May 10, if I am not mistaken, or around about then—I had a real concern because a number of citizens had brought to my attention certain statements and certain documents indicating that there were some real problems with regard to the operation of the plant. They had some genuine questions and they wanted these questions dealt with in a public forum.

One recognizes that the Atomic Energy Control Board is not and never has been a public forum. It seemed to me, therefore, that the logical thing to do, since at the time we were assured the plant was shut down for routine maintenance, was to keep it in a shutdown state and hold hearings as soon as possible in the select committee into nuclear safety. The interesting thing was that our intention was that the committee would have the hearings immediately, but the committee acted in a rather strange way. They accepted the notion that the place should be continued in its shutdown condition, but they refused to hear the matter immediately and instead decided to delay for a month or two.

The interesting thing about that is that it is a bit like a doctor saying, "Hold your breath until I get back to you," and then going on a world tour and leaving the person in this rather unfortunate state of affairs. It is perfectly evident that what should have happened is what I had assumed would happen when I made the statement in the first place, that is, keep it shut down since it was already shut down, and hear the matter immediately. It would have taken a few weeks. By now, we would be long past the point where a decision could rationally have been made by the select committee. But the two other parties had their members decide otherwise. Therefore, we now have this debate this evening in the shadow of the very plant starting up again this very evening. It is just a remarkable coincidence and a remarkable sign of the government's arrogance.

The fact is that what we thought was a routine shutdown, interestingly enough, as time has passed we have found not merely that the plant was shut down on a routine maintenance matter, but that it was shut down because of a very serious leak of heavy water, something which was not known at the time that we made our suggestion that it merely be continued in its state of receiving its maintenance operation.

More than that, the main concern of the citizens' group had to do with the possibility that the emergency core cooling system would not work properly if called upon to work and that there would be certain fuel failures with certain types of ruptures in that plant. What we have now found is that there was indeed a very serious problem in the emergency core cooling system, a problem which was discussed earlier by the Minister of Energy.

What we find, therefore, is that the need to have this matter reviewed is a very important need indeed. What the Atomic Energy Control Board has traditionally been in this province has been a technocracy.

Mr. Foulds: Is this the same man who said it would be irresponsible to keep them closed so long?

Mr. S. Smith: It has been a group of experts deciding for the rest of us what is and is not safe, what should and should not happen.

Almost every aspect of government is becoming more and more complex. If one takes environment or various matters to do with mining or various commercial matters, more and more matters are becoming highly technical and complex. If we leave all the decisions to the technocrats, to those few who are highly educated and trained in the precise technical problem that happens to be involved, then we will find shortly we do not have a democracy, but that we who are elected will merely walk around in the shadows of those experts who will tell us in their own paternalistic way what should and should not be done, what is and is not good for us.

We learned at Three Mile Island that the time is no longer here when it is acceptable to put our faith blindly in technocrats. We learned in the select committee here that we ordinary mortals, we legislators, with very little if any expertise in atomic power matters, were able with a little time and effort, to understand the matters at hand and to make intelligent and rational decisions thereupon. I say the same holds with environment and the same holds with all other technical matters. We must reclaim this authority from the Atomic Energy Control Board. We must bring it into some legislative forum or some new kind of control board with both experts and elected, ordinary persons not wedded to the nuclear industry. We must find a new way of regulating these highly technical matters which will determine for all of us and for our children the nature of our future, energy-wise, environment-wise and in many other ways.

I was very pleased at the conversion of the Premier to his new-found policy of openness. I well remember sitting in this House after we in the Liberal Party had had a very tough decision to make—that is, what to do with the so-called Schultz, now known as Taves, documents. We got the documents and we did not have the option of going to the Canadian Nuclear Association and making a speech in favour of openness. We had to decide then and there: Are we going to make those documents public? Are we going to be truly open with highly technical, sensitive, possibly even inflammatory matters? We made the decision in favour of openness. We have never regretted it. But I remember the Premier standing and pointing at me and saying how irresponsible that was.

I am highly amused on reading a letter to the editor by the friend of the Premier, the newly appointed chairman of Hydro, saying it was Hydro's idea that we have these matters discussed in select committee. Members will remember very clearly that we put the matters down in select committee and asked that Hydro be given an immediate chance to respond. Strangely then, as in other circumstances, we were out-voted by the other two parties for very mysterious reasons. Historians will wonder about that but they will soon learn that the real problem is that whenever the Liberals present something in committee, the other two parties decide to say no, and then a few days later try to figure out why it is that is what they said. That seems to be a pattern.

It is nice to see the same Premier who told me on province-wide television how irresponsible I was for giving out the Schultz documents is now speaking of openness. Can it be that he is speaking of openness on such sensitive matters as nuclear energy, when he is keeping closed and secret from the public the public's own opinion as registered in polls paid for with the public's own money? There is an amazing schizophrenia in that particular government. It turns out the nuclear industry is to be open but the Premier and the cabinet are to be the most secretive government in all of North America. I can make that statement without challenge.

Now what have we? We have this Rolph-ton plant. We have a plant where the more we learn the name of Rolph-ton, the more we learn there have been serious problems. We are told the AECB is satisfied. But when one reads the AECB statement, it is not satisfied there could not be a melt, it is not satisfied there could not be a fuel failure, it is merely satisfied that the number of deaths that might so arise would be comparable to the number of death in the coal industry or in some other comparable industry. After all, Rolph-ton is located at some distance from large centres of population and is a relatively small plant.

I take very little comfort from that. The time has come for open hearings; the select committee is the only place where the open hearings will occur; it will cost us absolutely nothing to continue the plant shutdown for a few weeks more until these hearings are held.

Ms. Gigantes: You called that irresponsible two weeks ago.

Mr. S. Smith: We do not understand the arrogance of the government in insisting upon this type of amendment. I will just say in closing I am highly amused by the fact that the parliamentary assistant—and I might mention when one calls the Ministry of Energy, as we have done, a secretary answers and says, "George Ashe's office." Very interesting.

Mr. Ashe: "Mr. Ashe's office," please.

Mr. S. Smith: We had a certain problem. The minister presented us with an amendment. Then his parliamentary secretary decided to go one better, to trump the amendment, by adding certain words in his own personal style. I wish the two of them would get their act together. The minister and his parliamentary assistant should be able to decide between them what their amendment is so we can vote against it and show that this House has some rights with regard to such matters as nuclear energy; that the government could wait with this minuscule matter, wait until the select committee has decided the matter and not rush ahead in the face of what is clearly the view of the majority of members of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacDonald has moved adoption of the report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs.

Mr. Auld has moved that the words "be adopted" be struck out and the following substituted therefor—

Mr. Nixon: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense with the reading of the amendment?

Some hon. members: Read it all.

Mr. Cassidy: Read it all—all six Tory amendments.

Mr. Speaker: "That the interim report be referred back to the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, and that the select committee be reconvened as soon as possible to begin its examination of Ontario's nuclear commitment, including nuclear safety matters, and that the concerns expressed with respect to Rolph-ton NPD be considered in that examination."

Mr. Ashe has moved an amendment to the amendment that the words in the fourth line "as soon as possible" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "as scheduled and agreed to by the Ontario Hydro steering committee."

The House divided on Mr. Ashe's amendment to Hon. Mr. Auld's amendment to Mr. MacDonald's motion to adopt the report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, which was agreed to on the following vote:

AYES

---

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

AUDIO-VISUAL EXPENDITURES

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to comment briefly on Toronto Star columnist Jonathan Manthorpe's reference in yesterday's edition to my ministry's film and audio-visual operations. Mr. Manthorpe wrote that my ministry operated a film audio-visual operation with an annual value of $160 million. I would understand these figures if they were merely typographical errors—that is, if Mr. Manthorpe was intending to say it was $16 million or even $1.6 million. But the correct figure is $132,741.41. That includes all salaries, benefits, expenses, film stock purchases, private-sector processing and sound mixing charges—even imaginary rental fees against the space occupied by the staff, who, besides shooting film, handle still photography, research photography, slide photography, et cetera. Finally, our audio-visual people do not film major productions. Should MTC require one we would go outside to have it done as we always have.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, questions were raised in the Legislature on Friday, June 1, 1979, by the leader of the third party regarding a request which Rio Algom has made to the local Canada Employment Centre in Elliot Lake to hire skilled tradesmen from outside Canada.

After thorough investigation, I find the facts regarding this overseas recruitment proposal are similar to a statement I made on April 23, 1979, in response to questions raised in the House regarding the General Motors overseas recruiting program.

On June 4, 1979, representatives of Rio Algom met with officials of my ministry to discuss skilled-labour shortages. The company's operation in Elliot Lake consists of the mining and refining of uranium ore. Its current work force is 2,000 employees, and it expects to increase this by an additional 500 employees within the next 12 months. Furthermore, the company's projected manpower planning estimates indicate that by 1985 the work force will be 3,500. The company's ratio of skills is one tradesman to seven other employees.

I must bring to the attention of the leader of the third party that although the company has registered 130 skilled vacancies with the local Canada Employment Centre, it is seeking to hire only 40 of these workers from outside Canada. These overseas requests are for 10 maintenance electricians, surface and underground; 15 heavy equipment mechanics for off-road vehicles, surface and underground; and 15 industrial maintenance mechanics—millwrights, surface and underground.

The leader of the third party said on June 1, 1979, that Rio Algom had 25 trainees. This is incorrect. The company in fact has 146 trainees. He also said that Rio Algom was going abroad to recruit five times as many tradesmen as it had trainees. This is also incorrect.

Mr. Pope: As usual.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The company in fact is seeking to hire 40 skilled tradesmen from outside Canada.

Furthermore, the leader of the third party asked why the company has made no effort to expand its training program. I must bring to his attention that Rio Algom recognized in 1975 a need to increase training in its establishment and its current total of 146 trainees constitutes a ratio of one trainee for every two tradesmen, this being one of the highest ratios in any industry in Ontario today.

Mr. Pope: How about that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For the three skilled trades which may possibly be recruited from abroad, the company is already employing 65 trainees: 19 electricians, 30 heavy equipment mechanics and 16 industrial maintenance mechanics.

My officials inform me that Rio Algom is most co-operative in providing information about its manpower planning. The company's representatives have also discussed the possibility of overseas recruiting with union officials of Local 5417. The company's skilled-labour shortage has become more critical in the last two weeks as a result of the return of Inco workers to Sudbury with the recent settlement of the strike at that company. One hundred and twenty workers have already notified Rio Algom that they are returning to Inco. Fifty-three of those workers are highly skilled tradesmen and comprise a significant portion of the 298 skilled tradesmen employed by the company.

In view of the company's proposed expansion plans and the serious effect that lack of skilled tradesmen may have on the current training programs, my officials are seriously considering the company's request. However, before initiating overseas recruitment, further discussions will have to be undertaken with representatives of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission of course. We anticipate that a decision will be reached within the next two weeks.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide a brief progress report today on the Ontario Youth Employment Program. Now in its third year, this program has once again proved to be a most effective one for the young people of this province.

At the moment, close to 20,000 applicants have been approved under the program, representing over 50,000 jobs for young people and a provincial commitment of some $47 million. Because of the increased interest in this program this year, it already appears certain that the provincial funds requested will exceed the amount originally appropriated. None the less, in keeping with this government's commitment to create jobs for our young people, we will honour the original July 3 deadline date for receipt of applications from interested employers.

As I said, this probably will result in overspending on our initial appropriation for the program but we feel that because of the enthusiastic response from business and the direct benefits to young people substantial numbers of job opportunities should not be lost.

By the July 3 deadline, it is estimated that commitments will be made to at least 25,000 employers, representing a potential of 65,000 jobs under the program this year. However, based on our experience over the past two years, some positions that have been approved under the program will not materialize or will not be filled. Others will be filled for a shorter period of time than was originally anticipated.

After taking these factors into consideration, we still expect that at least 45,000 jobs will be created at a total cost to the program of about $30 million. In comparison, last year about 16,500 employers created some 34,000 jobs; the total provincial expenditure was $20.3 million.

We are pleased and encouraged by the response of business people and the agricultural community to the Ontario Youth Employment Program. When this year's final figures are added to the other summer employment programs of this government, we expect that more than 75,000 young people will directly benefit.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to give the following statement for my colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) in his absence from the House; so the context will be as if I were speaking in his place.

As I have indicated before to the House, today is the date of proclamation for the pieces of legislation affecting children, to which the Legislature gave third reading last December. I want to remind members of that fact and describe, at least in a summary way, the importance which the government has placed on its extensive review of legislation protecting children.

During the period of public consultation which preceded my introduction of bills for first reading almost exactly a year ago, we referred to our legislative recommendations as short-term amendments. This reflected both the housekeeping nature of some of the amendments and the fact that in the longer term we intend to submit even more comprehensive, omnibus legislation to meet the needs of children. That work is going on now.

Despite their interim nature, however, the acts which will be proclaimed tomorrow contain important and far-reaching measures. They enable individuals and agencies to improve the quality of care which they can provide, and they enable my ministry to supervise that care more effectively. The acts establish that a child who can do so may participate in decisions which affect his or her future, whether in a treatment setting or before the courts.

Child abuse, and the whole network of issues which surround it, has quite properly captured a great deal of public attention. Specific provisions of the Child Welfare Act, including a formal child-abuse registry and compulsory reporting requirements, will help children's aid societies, the courts and my ministry to respond more effectively when a child requires protection and to identify sooner family situations which may threaten the safety of a child.

Those children who require protection under the law will be better served by the new legislation. The courts will enjoy greater discretion to pursue the best interests of each individual child. In addition, children who need care in a residential setting apart from their own families will benefit from improved standards of residential care.

Three important changes affect the adoption of children. These changes will extend the benefits of a permanent adoptive home to handicapped children who have otherwise been difficult or impossible to place. They enable the government to control private adoptions to be sure that the best interests of the child are served in private placements. Finally, the adoption disclosure register strikes a balance between the competing interests of the right to know and the right to confidentiality. No person will be forced to surrender confidentiality but, where all parties consent, adopted children and biological parents may be brought into contact.

Amendment has been made to almost all areas of social service to children. The fundamental goal which describes them is the desire for a more effective and sensitive response to the needs of individual children requiring those services.

We believe that, wherever possible, a child should participate to the level of his or her ability in decisions which affect him or her, and the legislation reflects that conviction. Many of the children affected are ones who have suffered traumatic experience and the measures we have taken will ensure, I believe, that the helping process does not aggravate that hurt.

On behalf of the government and of staff within the Ministry of Community and Social Services, I want sincerely to thank members on all sides of the House who gave consideration to these bills and provided criticism which was positive and constructive. I believe they are excellent pieces of legislation.

SECURITIES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, over the past several months, stock bargains, expansion requirements and an improved investment climate have resulted in a flurry of takeover bids. While this buying spree has been a bonanza for many investors, it has also given rise to circumstances which were not considered when the new Securities Act was written. Therefore, I would like to clarify some important provisions contained in the Securities Amendment Act, which I will be introducing later today.

By insisting on time limits on takeover bids, the existing securities legislation helped to assure that the stock market would operate in an orderly manner. But when investors are hit by offers, counter offers and revised offers, as they were when the Thomson and Weston families vied for control of the Hudson's Bay Company, they may need more time to weigh the alternatives.

To solve this problem, the amendment requires that when an offer is amended, the date the offer expires will be based on the date the amended offer is mailed to shareholders, not the date the bid is originally made. If the change involves only the amount of cash offered, a minimum of three working days after the notice has been mailed is required.

The takeover battle among the Bay, Simpsons-Sears and Sears also demonstrated that these events cannot be dealt with strictly from an Ontario point of view. Therefore, the amendments also allow joint hearings to be held with other securities commissions.

In addition, the amendments include minor housekeeping changes to some of the provisions affecting insider trading. These amendments reflect the continuing vigilance of the Ontario Securities Commission in reacting quickly to current situations.

The new Securities Act, which passed third reading last year, becomes effective this fall. The amendments are being introduced now in the hope that they will become law at that time. I ask for the support of the House in ensuring that Ontario securities legislation continues to be both effective and responsive.

TAX DISCOUNTERS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, later today I will also be introducing a form of housekeeping bill. It is An Act to repeal the Income Tax Discounters Act, 1977. The reason for that is that we passed it originally in this House because the federal government dragged its feet on the matter. Now that the federal government has passed an identical act that has precedence in all the courts, this act is entirely redundant and there is no real reason to keep it on the statute books of the province.

Mr. Peterson: What are you going to do about the American exchange?

ORAL QUESTIONS

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, David Schatzky's best friend. Can he tell the House that he truly believes that certain parents are exposing their children to 2,4-D sprays simply as publicity measures in their continuing fights with local authorities to ban the use of these sprays in schoolyards?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that I will repeat here today exactly what I said outside of the Legislature yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: Surely not.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: I heard what the minister said outside the House; he is not going to repeat that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am very pleased to do it, either what I said in the House or outside of the House. I think if the honourable member checks any of the electronic media, he will find exactly the same thing. At that time, I said it has been reported to me that people had presented their children for photographic purposes close to the sprayers. That is precisely what I said. At no time did I make any accusations. I am not worried about that. I am saying exactly what I said then, that it has been reported to our ministry. That is exactly the way it is.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Since the minister said yesterday that it was a matter for local autonomy, whether or not he used the precise words, and since the people who are involved in the arguments associated with the controversy feel the minister has drawn public attention to irresponsible charges that they are needlessly exposing their children simply for publicity purposes, will the minister clear up the matter for once and indicate that school boards really do not have any alternative under the minister's guidelines except to abandon the use of 2,4-D for the spraying of school playgrounds during times when children are on the grounds or might soon be on the grounds?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is quite a different presentation to what has ever been made here before. We are talking about spraying when children are there. Of course, that offends the guidelines. Naturally, there is no question about that. That kind of presentation has never been made in this House before. We were talking about banning the use of 2,4-D.

Mr. Swart: Did the minister never think of it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is quite a separate thing from banning the use for improperly applied applications. Always and consistently, almost every time the question has been raised, I have said we are not going to ban 2,4-D because no other province in Canada has decided that it should and as our scientific evidence tells us we should not.

Mr. Wildman: Be a leader.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But we have always used the precaution, "when it is properly applied." That is true not just for personal injury but for environmental damage as well. If one causes damage to someone else because of the improper application of the chemical, one is violating the rules and should be prosecuted. That's been the consistent position we have taken all along.

The school boards are aware of the guidelines and they are aware of the directions; if they hire a commercial applicator, they have to have a permit for applying herbicides and fungicides. All of that is known. The guidelines, as I reported in the House yesterday, are again being brought to the attention of the school boards, this time on an individual basis, so there can be no doubt they are aware of those guidelines.

The decision should be up to the school boards. As I said yesterday in the House and repeat again this morning, it doesn't make a lot of sense, if one is going to ban non-agricultural uses, to ban only a very tiny fraction of that. I am sure the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk would agree that agricultural use of 2,4-D is widely accepted and very necessary.

The alternative would be to ban non-agricultural uses, and any proposals so far have been for a very tiny segment of the non-agricultural uses. That makes no sense, particularly when the local boards can make that determination for themselves if they so wish. We have a lot of faith that not only will the boards make that decision if it is their wish—it is their right, for sure—but we also have a lot of faith they will use their best judgement as to when and how to apply the herbicide. If not, they should be held accountable for their actions. But I have that kind of faith in the boards, and certainly as regards those with whom they would contract for spraying.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to understand the concern that exists about the use of 2,4-D in connection with schoolchildren. This week I had a call from a mother in Richmond, in the Carleton school board area, where the spraying of 2,4-D in the schoolyard was going forward without the principal and teachers being involved. This woman's daughter went out on a nature study—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy: —the next day and was exposed to the 2,4-D and went home sick.

Will the minister not refer the scientific information which has been brought to his attention in this Legislature to an independent body, not the Pesticides Advisory Committee, since that contains mainly representatives of the ministry itself and of the industry? Will he refer the problems that are connected with the danger to children in schoolyards to an independent review? Will he stop the use of 2,4-D in schoolyards until such an independent review can come back? Will he, in other words, accept his responsibility as Minister of the Environment for protecting children from possible hazards of this herbicide?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That was a fairly long question and I would like to reply to it at some length. I think the leader of the third party originally brought the issue here concerning 20 or 30 children who were affected. Obviously, I was interested in knowing whether this was correct.

Mr. Pope: Now there's only one.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: My friend and colleague the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) has this report which I would like to read into the record, if I may. I think it is fairly pertinent.

"The medical officer of health for Haliburton-Kawartha-Pine Ridge health unit has attempted to locate the alleged case of 2,4-D intoxication. Telephone inquiries to the local physicians and hospitals have been negative. Further inquiries have been made and no schools have confirmed that any children have been so affected.

"Dr. Mikel believes the reference to 'spokesmen for the Ministry of Health' was probably a mistaken reference to the health unit. To our knowledge, no Ministry of Health personnel were involved in the statement."

What I am putting first on the record is that, given that bit of research, we have no evidence at all to substantiate the claim the member made about these ill people. I am still waiting for him to send over the names of those people who were alleged to have suffered from the application of 2,4-D. The member hasn't yet done that. I'm waiting.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: And the doctors.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: And the doctors. But also, if I could put some visual aids here, and I think it's important, because in the context of what the opposition is asking me to do—to ban 2,4-D—I have to reject the comment made by the member for Ottawa Centre—

Ms. Gigantes: That wasn't what he asked you.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —that the Pesticides Advisory Committee is biased because it has some people from the industry. What he refused and didn't put on the record was a list of the full membership of that committee. I think if he did he would find it was a very wide cross-section, predominantly people in the academic community who have no axe to grind whatsoever; none.

Mr. Wildman: Who work on research projects funded by the private sector.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It's their reputation that's on the line. I have a lot of confidence in that Pesticides Advisory Committee.

Let me, to put this in context, bring out my bag of goodies. Let me put on this desk four or five common household items which are used every day.

Mr. McClellan: I'd move out of the way if I were you, Tom. This minister would make a good travelling salesman.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The members opposite may laugh.

Mr. Foulds: Turn the labels towards the television cameras.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The members opposite may laugh, but I don't find this particularly funny. If any of us are needlessly exposing our kids—any of us, myself included—to harmful substances, let me tell the House I'm on the side of the kids, and I'll stand up any day and be counted to try to protect those kids. Let me put that firmly on the record.

Mr. Conway: Does that mean you support motherhood by implication?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think if any members opposite would go home this weekend and look in their kitchens and in their gardens, they will find at least three out of these five products.

Ms. Gigantes: Would you spray your kids with Javex? Shame on you.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I wish you would just for a moment give me the opportunity to make a pretty significant point, at least in my mind. Here is a commonly used bleach. Would any of you like to take even the smallest sip of it? Of course not. You know what it would do to your digestive tracts.

Mr. McClellan: Take some 2,4-D and say how safe it is, Harry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm not going to be put off on this issue very easily.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question period. I appreciate that the minister is trying to make a point by way of answer to a series of questions, but we've spent 11½ minutes and we're still on the first question. I hope the minister will get to his point very quickly.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, if they will allow me to, I'll be more than pleased. I've had the horrible experience of trying to treat a child who had taken just a little out of that bottle and it's an unbelievable experience. It's one that you wouldn't mess with.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us what this has to do with 2,4-D?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Here is a furniture polish. Read the instructions on it, and how dangerous that is. Yet all of us have that in our homes, all of us, and a little bit of it will be toxic, even fatal.

Here is another herbicide-fungicide that many of us are using. Here are probably the two most important ones I want to bring to your attention and one is sugar. Don't laugh about this. If you'll read the article in the current Atlantic magazine you will find that is a proved carcinogenic agent. It is proved—not suspected, as the leader of the third party would say, but a proved one. I refer you to the current issue of The Atlantic. I present the final piece—

Mr. Wildman: Do your kids smoke cigars?

Mr. Nixon: The Premier doesn't smoke cheap cigars.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't smoke cigars at all, now.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm not worried about that.

In conclusion, so many of these people over there are worried about a suspect agent, but every one of us knows there isn't a greater carcinogenic agent in society than the use of tobacco. I'm not being asked to ban that. I'm not being asked to ban sugar. I'm not being asked to ban those that are proved beyond doubt; I'm being asked to ban something that is suspect. I think the leader of the third party is on thin ice.

Mr. McClellan: When is the next Tupperware party?

Mr. J. Reed: A supplementary: I should like to point out to the minister, after that impressive display, that the school board naturally are looking for leadership from the government, and I don't understand the minister's concept or the way he interprets local autonomy in this case.

[10:30]

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. J. Reed: The question is, why doesn't his ministry provide leadership to the school boards so that they can be sure and be confident in what they're doing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Some time ago a man by the name of Lincoln had a pretty famous quote. That quote was that you can't permanently help someone to take the responsibility if, in the short-term, you make those decisions for him. He said it a little better than that. It's a bit of a paraphrase, but let me say again to the member, the leadership that we're taking—and I think it is right—we have investigated.

We have asked the best minds, not only in our own jurisdiction, but of all jurisdictions in Canada. I raised that just last week, a week ago yesterday, and have confirmation that no province feels we should ban it. None of their experts feel we should ban it. We have to reinforce the fact that everyone knows how to apply it. We have sent those instructions out to the school boards. We have had them on file and we've supplied thousands of copies to various people.

We've licensed those who apply commercially. If that isn't showing leadership, Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid the member opposite and I have a different sense of what responsible leadership is.

Mr. Wildman: There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have a responsibility to this community to be sure that the products we are issuing guidelines on are known and safe if applied properly. I think we have shown the leadership that this very important subject demands.

MORTGAGE INTEREST DEDUCTIBILITY

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to direct a question to the Premier who might turn to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) for assistance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Then ask him.

Mr. Nixon: Since the Premier had a chance to have dinner with Prime Minister Clark the evening before last, was there an opportunity between the soup and the fish to discuss the properly reiterated federal policy to make mortgage interest payments deductible, as this will have a rather dramatic impact on the income tax revenues for the province? Does the Premier recall the Treasurer had some difficulty describing to the House before the federal election what the impact would be? He indicated once that there might be $600 million involved, then $300 million involved, and the next time he couldn't remember how much was to be involved. Has the Premier been able to convince Prime Minister Clark that if this is going to be implemented at the federal level it should be and could be done in such a way that it will not reduce provincial revenues?

Mr. Conway: Who was the fish and who was the fowl?

Mr. Makarchuk: How was the fish?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I had a very interesting discussion with the new Prime Minister of Canada. Actually, the subject that the acting Leader of the Opposition—who really does it very well; I've got to tell him we miss him in that former capacity over here—

Mr. Peterson: We miss the Premier's leadership too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why is the member here today?

Mr. Speaker: What was the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What was the question? What we had between soup and fish? Actually I raised this after dessert.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Premier can use the pool; at least Joe can't.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We were working so hard I didn't have an opportunity to use the pool, but I do want to say this, that for the first time in my memory, at least in my not too frequent visits to 24 Sussex Drive, the new Prime Minister of this country served domestically produced wine from the province of Ontario. I thought that was very good.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the question had something to do with mortgage deductibility.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But that, Mr. Speaker, indirectly relates to provincial revenues which are somewhat dependent upon domestic wine production. That's how I was trying to relate it.

Mr. Speaker: That's a bit convoluted though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I see.

Mr. Foulds: Did he use Alberta oil on the salad?

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question quite directly, as I say, we discussed a number of matters and this question was raised, the question of the implementation of mortgage interest deductibility. I pointed out to Mr. Clark that we were obviously in support of this, as were the majority of Canadians a few weeks ago—

Mr. Nixon: I thought more people voted against it—half a million.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, listen, a lot of them voted for it. My friend's leader probably voted for it, from what I sense.

Mr. Nixon: He hasn't got a mortgage.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He hasn't got a mortgage? How fortunate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He will have.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to come to the point, and they are interrupting me.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has already put two supplementaries, and he has not got an answer to his initial question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right. The reason he has not yet got an answer to his initial question is that he has interrupted me with his supplementaries.

Mr. Speaker: Quite right—and you're enjoying it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, I am. I pointed out to Mr. Clark that it was important from our standpoint that there be no significant impact on provincial revenues when this program is introduced. My recollection is that, both during the campaign and during our discussions the other evening, he was extremely sensitive to this particular problem. He showed a greater sensitivity, I must say, than was shown by the preceding government.

This was raised and discussed, and Mr. Clark is quite aware of the fact that while we support the mortgage interest deductibility program we feel it should be done in a way that would not interfere with the traditional revenues for the provinces, particularly this one.

Mr. Nixon: Since the Premier is concerned about who supports the concept—and evidently he does—can he assure the House that he has received a commitment from Prime Minister Clark, who has indicated his first budget this fall will contain this, probably as its cornerstone, that there will be no fiscal impact in Ontario and that the Premier will have his cake and eat it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the phrase is, "will have his cake and eat it as well", or "too." I can assure the acting Leader of the Opposition that this point has been made with Mr. Clark, and I am really quite confident that he is aware of it, sensitive to it and quite understanding of the problems of the provinces if they were to experience any diminishing return from the traditional tax sources.

Mr. Stong: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: If this plan is implemented by the federal government, there will be a market created. What steps is this government taking to encourage municipalities to bring serviceable lots on to the market to meet the demand that will be created?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I could report that not only are there a lot of plans close to completion in terms of registration, but at this moment there are also a lot of serviced lots on the market.

The honourable member may be lobbying indirectly for further registrations in the Markham area; I am not sure. If he has some people who cannot find registered lots there, I would invite him to send them over to the great municipality of Brampton, where we have a lot of registered lots, a lot of activity and great optimism and enthusiasm.

In other words, on a provincial basis, there are at this moment a lot of registered lots and, incidentally, a large number of unsold homes on the market.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another question of the Minister of the Environment respecting the matter of 2,4-D. My concern is that the minister first sought to muddy the waters of this issue by attacking the parents of children in the Northumberland school area, and now he is trying to muddy the waters by suggesting that, because other substances may be carcinogenic, he therefore has no responsibility with respect to 2,4-D.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We should have sprayed it on your front benches.

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister retract his allegations about parents and kids in Northumberland or, alternatively, table reports he may have had from his officials so that the parents there can know of what it is they are accused and can reply in detail, if need be, to the allegations that have been made?

Will the minister also explain, if he thinks parents should be responsible for controlling access to toxic substances in the home, how the parents in Northumberland are to act when the law says they must send their children to school but the school board refused last night, on a tie vote, to take away the spraying from the schools, the spraying to which they are objecting?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I find it impossible to do what the leader of the third party asks me to do. He asks me to retract the charges I have made. I have not made any.

Mr. McClellan: You just made innuendoes; is that all? It was just smearing innuendo; is that all?

Mr. Pope: Where are your 20 medical reports, talking about charges?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: May I tell the honourable members that on the way in this morning, in an effort to clarify the point a bit more, one of the people in the media who was present yesterday during the whole discussion on the item said, "I didn't hear you say that." Fair enough. He didn't hear me say it. I am maintaining that on no occasion did I say I accused the parents of doing this. I said it was reported to me. That is all I have ever said; so I can't very well retract an accusation that has yet to be made.

Ms. Gigantes: Why did you raise it then?

Mr. Cassidy: Then table the reports.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will table whatever report comes in from a regional office on the circumstances of that event, which will likely deal with the reports I talked about yesterday.

The member for Ottawa Centre asked me today to do those things which he is consistently refusing to do. The reason I bring this material here is not to obscure the real issue. It is to highlight the issue. The issue is simply that there are thousands of chemicals in our society and a multitude of uses. As responsible citizens, as responsible members on boards, as responsible members of the business community or wherever, we have to make choices daily and hourly on how we use the chemicals. They must always be used wisely. I am sure members agree with me on that.

I am not trying to obscure the 2,4-D issue. That is a speck on a large spectrum. It is called the use of chemicals in our society. All of us must take the responsibility to treat them wisely and soundly. That is what the issue is and that is where it should stay.

Mr. McClellan: That's not quite the issue.

Mr. Havrot: Stop grandstanding over there.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister answer my second question? How are parents who wish to treat this issue wisely and soundly to act if they believe from their knowledge and study of the literature and so on that 2,4-D use in schoolyards is dangerous to their children, but if they are not in sufficient numbers to have the school board of the area to which they are compelled to send their children act and refuse to use the spray in those very same schoolyards?

Are they to disobey the Education Act and pull their kids out of school or are they to abdicate their responsibilities and send their kids to school, despite the risks involved? Given that dilemma, why will the minister not refer these matters out to an independent committee and stop the use of the pesticides only in schoolyards until they can establish for sure whether or not dangers exist for children in the schoolyards from 2,4-D spraying? That's the question.

Mr. Sterling: Let's see your medical evidence. Be responsible for a change.

Mr. Pope: Be responsible.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Had we only referred this to the Pesticides Advisory Committee in Ontario, I think there would be some merit in the member's suggestion. For the umpteenth time I am going to repeat that every single province has looked at 2,4-D from a scientific point of view. They have their respective committees. Environment Canada has looked at it and has said exactly as we are saying—

Ms. Gigantes: In schoolyards?

Mr. Wildman: They have a lot of serious questions about it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —that when properly applied it is a chemical which should stay on our market.

As to how local people are to deal with their local school boards, I find a variety of reactions throughout Ontario. Some are not discussing it, some have agreed to ban it and some have said they will get more evidence. That's the way it should be. They know the situation. They control the schoolyards. It is their responsibility.

Mr. McClellan: Spray first and find out later.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am not copping out on my responsibility. We looked at it very carefully. I had personally raised this issue and some months ago I had to give notice of it. As a matter of fact, the deadline for giving notice to the conference was May 1. I had that paper put on at my own personal request before May 1. Had I not done those things, I think I would have abdicated my responsibility. That was an indication of my concern. The member can check it out. It is well recorded that I wanted to know the best scientific evidence in Canada and it is very clearly on the record. The answer to the member's request is no.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: If the minister did not charge the parents with exploiting their children in this way, what was the point of repeating such a scurrilous innuendo? What was the point of even repeating that?

Mr. Havrot: This is turning into a comedy hour.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I sometimes wonder what the point is of many of the questions opposite. I'm trying this morning not to be unduly political.

[10:45]

Mr. Nixon: What did you raise that for?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think this issue is far greater.

Mr. Pope: He didn't write the article.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When we talked about the harm to children, would the honourable member not agree the issue was joined here by his party and by the New Democratic party well in advance of any comments by myself about people? Would he not agree with that? I think he must. I didn't raise that issue. It wasn't raised by me for any purpose. I am saying there were all kinds of charges about illnesses which I can't get any information on at all, let alone substantiate. I think that is also a very significant point.

Mr. Warner: Then you shouldn't have made the comment.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister is concerned about local autonomy as opposed to his responsibility—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you going fishing this weekend?

Mr. Wildman: Yes.

Can the minister assure me he will investigate the concerns raised by parents north of Sault Ste. Marie about the health of their children, as a result of spraying done by Great Lakes Power Company, Ontario Hydro, the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications? Also, can he assure this House that spraying by MNR will not cause any undue harm to wildlife in the area?

Mr. Speaker: That's straying quite a bit from the original question.

Ms. Gigantes: No it's not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You would have MNR stop spraying, is that it?

An hon. member: The only wildlife is on those benches.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't really honestly think that's a supplementary to the original question, Mr. Speaker.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health regarding the closing of the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital. I want to ask the minister why it was that on Tuesday of this week, when the social development committee reconvened to look at the question of Lakeshore Psychiatric and when it had been told it would have full documentation about the transition plans, it only got a three-page document from the ministry when the administration at Lakeshore had a 21-page document. This latter document fully detailed everything happening with the transition at the hospital including warnings about a concern that there would be overcrowding at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre unless there was significant control over the outpatient services. Why was this document kept away from the committee this week?

Mr. Swart: Freedom of information, eh?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all I'd have to say that from the beginning of this it was unclear exactly what the committee wanted by way of a report. That report was delivered last Friday—

Mr. Foulds: That's the same false argument that Hydro is using to force—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That report was delivered last Friday so the critics and other representatives of the parties opposite, if they wanted additional information, could have the weekend to look at that report and then let us know on Monday morning.

I should tell the honourable member that contact was made Monday morning with the chairman of the committee to determine whether or not my presence was required. He felt no, that I shouldn't change my plans to go to the Salvation Army Grace Hospital and then to London. My assistant deputy minister was waiting in the wings, as was the director of the psychiatric hospitals branch and other members of my staff, to answer any questions the committee had—and they weren't even called.

Mr. McClellan: We are coming back to it on Monday, as the minister well knows.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it not the fact that this management document which was being used to plan for the shutdown of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital indicates clearly the danger of overcrowding at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre right now as a result of the shutting of Lakeshore and therefore that mental health centre might be hard pressed to meet any expansion of service needs in the area? Isn't it also a fact that this document, which was kept away from the committee, indicates the eight-day inpatient alcoholic treatment program at Lakeshore is going to be ended completely? That's another cutback, when the minister said there would be no cutbacks at all resulting from the shutdown of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member has very selective recall of things—he's shown that for many years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Selective, and blurred.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If he will recall, the last time I was at the committee and discussing outpatient programs, I acknowledged then—

Mr. McClellan: You were there only briefly—you had to leave, remember?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—one of the possibilities was that the alcoholic program would be changed to a four-week outpatient program from its present setup inasmuch as a very small number of the people in the alcohol program—I can't recall the exact number—had come by way of the detoxification unit. I am not sure which report the member has, but I can assure him we are simply not trying to hide anything from him. The committee was very vague about what it wanted.

We gave the member the report last Friday so he would have a couple of days to consider what additional information he needed, and could let us know on Monday morning. We heard nothing from him and what is more, my staff were available to answer questions and he didn't even see fit to call on them.

Mr. McClellan: Leaving aside the question that we are going back to it on Monday, as the minister well knows, let me ask the minister, is it not a fact he will not be able to accommodate wards A and B of chronically disturbed patients from Lakeshore unless he moves the Queen Street adolescent unit to Whitby?

Second, is it true he is planning the destruction of the alcoholic services program at Lakeshore by removing the detoxification unit? What possible justification on medical grounds is there for these kinds of destructive moves?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, let me just come back to the alcohol program. I indicated at committee there was a possibility it would change from a one-week inpatient and three-week outpatient program to a four-week outpatient program. What we are doing is pursuing with a hospital in the area the possibility of establishing a detoxification unit in that hospital and converting the alcohol program to a four-week outpatient program.

Mr. McClellan: At which hospital?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will let the member know once the negotiations have been completed.

Mr. McClellan: You don't know. St. Joseph's Hospital.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, I do know, but I think at this point we will finish the negotiations first and then I will be glad to share all the information with the member.

With regard to the question of the accommodation of wards A and B, no, it is not correct to say it would result in overcrowding. Yes, the child and adolescent unit, as we have already acknowledged repeatedly, will have to be moved in order to make optimal use of facilities, but I would point out to the member it is not going to result in a deterioration of the program for those children in any way.

CT SCANNERS

Mr. Conway: A new question to the Minister of Health: Is the Minister of Health aware that a subcommittee of the social development committee meeting in Ottawa on Wednesday of this week was told by the executive director of the Ottawa Civic Hospital that the CT scanner which the government and this minister in particular has allowed eastern Ontario, to be located at the Ottawa Civic Hospital, will be available only to the people of Ottawa-Carleton because this government's restraint program will not allow that hospital sufficient operating funds to make it available to the people of eastern Ontario to whom it was promised and for whom it was designed?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is not the sole scanner in eastern Ontario. As the member knows, there is a scanner in Kingston at Kingston General Hospital. In addition, following that meeting, we checked on this and my staff advised me we have not had a budget appeal from the Ottawa Civic Hospital in connection with that matter. Certainly, if they were to submit one, we would be pleased to give it consideration.

Mr. Conway: Will the minister report to this House at his earliest opportunity that the appeal which we were told was being made to his ministry from the Ottawa Civic Hospital will be met very positively, so the people of Lanark, Renfrew, Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry will have access to that technology and so the restraint program will not have a regional discrimination in the disfavour of the people I and many other members represent in this House?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the administrator of that hospital is one of the better ones in the entire province, I am pleased to say—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and certainly, if an appeal is submitted that can document this problem, we would be pleased to give it consideration.

[Later (11:17):]

To complete the answer to the question from the member for Renfrew North with regard to CT scanners, I should have added Ottawa Civic Hospital is, under the regulations, a group M hospital and can therefore charge back to any other hospital for services provided on the CT scanner to patients from those hospitals from wherever in eastern Ontario.

[Reverting (10:55):]

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. McClellan: I want to ask the Minister of Health a question in connection with the visit of the social development committee to the four regional centres the other day. Has he had a chance to review the material presented to the committee, and have his officials brought to his attention the problems raised at each of the centres? When can we expect to have a detailed response from the minister to the very real problems identified by those committee hearings in each of the four regional centres we visited?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have had discussion with some of the staff that outlined some of the issues raised. We are in consultation, through the area teams, with most hospitals and hospital centres in the province on the specific concerns they have. I can't say I will give it to the member in 24 hours, or that I can give him detailed answers next week. It may take longer than that to arrive at resolutions to some of the concerns raised, but every single one of them will be dealt with.

DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Ms. Bryden: I have another question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that the ministry may not renew the licence for the PCB transfer station near Smithville, which expires June 30, can the minister tell us where used transformers containing PCB material will be stockpiled until the minister gets on with the job of finding a safe and effective way of disposing of PCB-contaminated transformers?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We could go back to the discussion in committee on liquid hazardous wastes and review very briefly the serious problems on finding sites. I think the committee members made it very clear, one by one, that they were opposed to the incineration of those substances, they were opposed to temporary storage, they were opposed to shipping of those materials, they were opposed to landfilling those materials, they were opposed to the solidification process—I think it is easy to check the record—in other words, they are opposed to everything.

We are going to have to make some tough decisions on this one, too. We are using Smithville for the time being on a temporary basis. Hopefully, the member would join and be part of the support mechanism for a good scientific study on the test burns of PCB material—that might be one excellent way of getting rid of the materials—but I notice that she is very much opposed to a test.

If she is going to prevent me and our ministry from testing any solution, I don't know where they are going, and she had better be as concerned about that as I am, because with her approach there will be no place and they will stay in the local communities with the potential of harm or death to thousands of people. Is that what the member wants? She is turning off the possibility of solution at every opportunity, and then she is saying "You find one." It is not possible.

Ms. Bryden: To set the record straight, the standing committee on liquid industrial waste did suggest that finding new technologies for disposing of PCBs should be the top priority, but so far the minister hasn't assisted any groups who are experimenting in this.

I have a supplementary question regarding the test burns that are contemplated for the Mississauga hearings. Does the minister think that the people of Mississauga should be guinea pigs for a test burn in a highly populated area, or can he not test PCB burnings in some other place, not in a highly populated area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: A little bit like the Minister of Health said, there is some selective memory going on here. What the member failed to put on the record this morning is that there is no guinea-pig approach to this experiment. I would be the first to stand—maybe the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) would be ahead of me in protesting that. He has spoken to me many times about the issue.

It is a very serious issue, no question about that.

Let me refresh the member's memory. What are we doing prior to the burn? We purchased the most sensitive machine that money can buy, the TAGA 3000. There isn't a better machine in the world, and I don't think she would argue that point. We are now testing in parts per trillion, and we will have, prior to any burning, not only that machine, but that machine calibrated to perfection before we will ask for the burn. Then we will take that machine and put it in the stack, right where the concentration would be highest, and if there are high concentrations, beyond any reason of doubt we will turn it off immediately. [11:00]

But surely, with the tremendous amount of preparation for a test, and the assurance that if those PCB numbers are high enough to injure anyone's health, it will be turned off immediately, the honourable member has a responsibility to come forward and say, "That is good preparation, it is a good test, I support it."

Mr. Hall: Given that last December the minister applied 22 conditions to the previously unconditional temporary licence, and given that the operator has an opportunity to appeal and has had time since last December, could the minister tell me why the Environment Appeal Board has not addressed itself to this matter and, according to the news articles, will not be addressing itself to it until September?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I suspect the appeal board is rather busy. I know they are in the midst of a pretty complicated appeal right now. I will be glad to ask the appeal board if that date can be put forward. I cannot answer why the appeal board is not doing something, but I can get the information from the appeal board for the honourable member.

AUTOMOTIVE FUELS

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: What steps has his ministry taken to inquire into the practices of the auto manufacturers and the oil industries relating to a breach of contract concerning required fuels with a higher octane rating than had been agreed upon, with the result of higher gasoline prices added to the increased inflation cost? And what legal steps has his ministry taken, along with his federal counterparts, to correct the breach of contract and ensure that consumers will be compensated for the violation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the history of this goes back some time. As you know, some time ago the automobile industry, which for practical purposes exists only in the United States, at least on the developmental level—

Hon. Mr. Davis: And in Brampton.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, and in Brampton. There was a concern in the United States about emissions, particularly of lead. There were undertakings and understandings arrived at in the United States concerning the addition to automobile engines of various emission controls and so forth.

At that particular time there were understandings and arrangements between the government of the United States, certain states and the automobile industry about the type of fuel that could be used. Quite obviously, the leaded regular gas and the leaded premium gas were to be replaced on a graduated basis by unleaded regular and, at a subsequent time, unleaded premium entered into it.

It was the understanding at that time that leaded regular and leaded premium gasolines would remain on the market and that gradually they would be replaced by unleaded regular. For a number of reasons, and really, since they are in American jurisdiction—and how they keep their understandings of their commitments for more than a day at a time I have never been able to understand—that simply did not come about.

For some time, as a ministry, through our energy safety branch, which has some jurisdiction in this matter, we have been trying to pressure the federal government on this matter. Over the summer time we will be attempting to get the new federal government through my federal counterpart, Mr. Lawrence, much more interested than was the previous federal government.

It is not now a very easy thing to move on because, for practical purposes, the oil companies maintain that the fait accompli that is out there on the gas pumps today was caused by the automobile engine designers. In terms of whether indeed there can ever be compensation or not, I have never even thought about that.

Mr. Conway: You two guys look like you are about to amend the Human Rights Code.

Mr. McClellan: Get to the point.

Mr. Wildman: Moving right along.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, if the House wants an answer to a very complicated problem which is costing the consumer of this province an awful lot of money, I would humbly suggest that certain people not interrupt.

Mr. Foulds: We shouldn't have asked you.

Mr. McClellan: Get to the point.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In terms of compensation, as I said, I do not think anybody has any thought on that. There is a fait accompli out there at the gas pumps that is costing automobile drivers a great deal of money.

Quite frankly, as we move forward in this country in two areas of the automobile engine field, one environmental and the other energy-saving, I think we have to come to an agreement between the 10 provinces and the federal government that the automobile industry is not going to be able simply to make arrangements in the United States and to terminate them in the United States without any consultation, either before the arrangements are made or when they appear to be terminated. In short, the federal government of this country is going to have to take a position on what is going to happen to car drivers and consumers when it comes to the utilization of fuel.

Ms. Gigantes: We're lucky to have the American protection, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Wildman: That's what it is to have a branch-plant economy.

MILK PRICES

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my props relate to a different commodity, but I suggest they are every bit as significant—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We'll drink the milk if the member for Welland-Thorold will drink the additives.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He doesn't have the nerve to bring—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Swart: Obviously my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, and it concerns the increase in the price of fluid milk in the conversion to metric cartons.

Is the minister aware that Borden's in Ottawa converted its two-quart carton to a two-litre carton in January 1979 and that, although the price of the two-litre carton was four cents less, the actual unit price of the milk was increased by 10 per cent? Does he know that no increase was made in the price of milk in all their other containers, which remained in the imperial measure?

Would the minister not agree that Borden's is using public confusion about the relationship between metric and imperial measure to price-gouge?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what I am going to do. I do not know why the member keeps doing this: there is a limit to the ability of the head to go into a buzz-saw. I am going to send today's Hansard to Metric Commission Canada which, as the dear member knows, has been begging for complaints and wants to do something about them. I will pay the postage.

Secondly, I would caution the member not to use phrases like price-gouging and a few others until he is absolutely sure he is correct. If he is wrong again, he is going to have to apologize.

I am delighted that the containers will come over to me. Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention the fact that the New Democratic Party, through the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), on the day of the Carnation milk debacle, said they would personally produce to me 400 individual complaints about mismanagement in conversion to metric. To my knowledge, this is the first that has come, and I will send it to the federal government.

For the information of the House, and so the consumers will know exactly what to do and not have to wait until late on Friday to get results, the federal government has a procedure where any consumer in this province, or indeed in the Dominion of Canada, who has a concern about metric measurements, either for information or complaint purposes, can immediately refer the matter and an investigation will be started. It would save an awful lot of time.

Mr. Swart: Does the minister not realize that the packaging and the packaging size of milk falls under the Milk Act of Ontario, and that he has control over retail prices? To verify what I have said, I will send across to the minister the wholesale price list of Borden's in Ottawa.

Will the minister also note, when he ultimately receives these containers, that there is no equivalent imperial volume listed on the top of one carton, although on Borden's two-quart carton the metric volume of 2.27 litres is prominently displayed, which is a clear indication that Borden's is trying to hoodwink the public? Does the minister not realize that this is a pilot project by Borden's and, if they get away with it with the minister and with the public, they will do the same sort of thing when they convert the rest of their cartons to metric?

When the minister finds that I am right—and he will—will he notify Borden's that he disapproves of this practice and that they must prominently label their litre cartons in both metric and imperial volume and that they're not going to be permitted to use the changeover to metric to gouge the public?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I will do as I said I was going to do a few moments ago. I would admonish the House that I'm going to really urge the federal government to look into this extremely quickly. After all, it is Ottawa—

Mr. Bradley: Your friends.

Mr. Conway: Your kissing cousins.

Mr. Swart: It's not all Ottawa and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What concerns me is that if the honourable member is right I will probably have cardiac arrest, and if I'm going to have it, I think I should have it before the House adjourns.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order: In the interest of accuracy may I say to the minister that during the Ministry of Agriculture and Food estimates I brought into those estimates two Carnation cans bought in the Thrift Store at the corner of Jane and Trethewey in the borough of York, each of which was priced at 36 cents and one of which was 10 per cent less in volume.

Mr. Swart: The minister will get them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Now or never.

Mr. Swart: You don't dictate when you get them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Send them over.

Mr. Swart: Dictate over there, not here.

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Solicitor General, if I can get his attention. Leaving aside the disturbing reports we have read in the past two years and even this month involving Metropolitan Toronto police shootings, I would like the minister to investigate and assure this House about other tactics reportedly used by Metropolitan Toronto police in the Gordon Allen case and reported more recently in this morning's media, wherein it is alleged by a lawyer that police had laid a charge against an individual who was to give evidence against them at a hearing to which they were responsible, though subsequently those charges against that individual were dropped for lack of evidence. Would the minister assure this House that there is no involvement or any chances of obstructing the course of justice by the Metropolitan Toronto Police, particularly in the light of these allegations and in the light of the allegations he is investigating now in the Gordon Allen trial?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm not sure I quite understand the question. Obviously, if any police officers are involved in obstructing justice in this province they will be charged. They're not above the law in that respect.

I read the report in relation to the Henderson matter. If that lawyer chooses to make a complaint, I'll certainly review it. But I want to make it clear that the police in this community and in any other communities know that if they are involved, as the honourable member has put it, in obstructing justice, they will be dealt with according to law. There's no question about that.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I hope it's appropriate to ask the minister on the basis of this question dealing with law enforcement what he meant when he was quoted in this morning's Sun as "blaming an apathetic public for accepting the increase in violent crime and warning that the situation will get worse if attitudes don't change." That's the quote. Should the public carry guns? Should we get a new Attorney General? What does he mean?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I haven't read the Sun and I certainly did not say that. I was reflecting yesterday on the public's apathy in relation to certain aspects of violence as entertainment, for example, and expressing my concerns in relation to that, having been questioned in that area. I was not suggesting that the public are apathetic about crime.

Mr. Conway: Once more with Juliette.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Certain questions were put in respect to violence as entertainment, and I did express my concern in relation to public apathy in that area.

PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS DISPUTE

Mr. Bounsall: In the absence of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) I'm addressing the question to the Minister of Labour. With his obvious great interest and growing experience in negotiations, would he confer with the Minister of Education regarding the situation where the negotiations between our provincial school teachers and Provincial Schools Authority have now broken off and appear to have broken down completely? Will he urge the Minister of Education, with whatever advice he may give her, to involve herself directly therefore in that situation with a view to reaching a solution, particularly since the contract ran out over 10 months ago? R. E. Saunders, the commission negotiator has completely refused to negotiate over staffing and working conditions and to tolerate a salary increase as high as six per cent, a figure which has become an acceptable base figure now for—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Bounsall:—virtually all other government employees?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'll be delighted to share that question with the Minister of Education and give her the benefit of whatever little experience I've obtained over the recent months.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been taken as notice and the member will have ample opportunity when it is referred to the appropriate minister.

X-RAY EQUIPMENT OPERATORS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, very quickly, the other day the leader of the third party raised a question about the ministry's answer to Order Paper question 199. I regret to say there was an error there in that the communications referred to with respect to developing a program to upgrade the qualifications of some of our technicians is with the Board of Radiological Technicians and not with the society. I regret that error and I apologize to the member and to the House.

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) made a statement today about Rio Algom at Elliot Lake. I want to bring to the House's attention the fact we stated Rio Algom applied for 130 tradesmen from abroad. It was subsequent, in fact, to the question being raised in the Legislature, it was decided by Canada Manpower they should be cut back to 40 who were being sought abroad.

Secondly, the minister said the company had been very co-operative in discussing this matter with the union. The union learned of the application to bring workers in from abroad only after it had been raised with the manpower centre locally. Mr. Speaker, we have been unable to establish where, nor can the union establish where, the 146 trainees referred to by the minister come from. They do not appear on the seniority list that has been made available to the union.

Mr. Breithaupt: I would like to speak to that point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It's not a point of privilege. It probably was an effort, and probably a legitimate effort, to correct the record, but by no stretch of the imagination could be construed as a point of privilege.

MOTION

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to meet concurrently with the House the evening of Monday, June 18.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

VILLAGE OF POINT EDWARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 131, An Act respecting the Village of Point Edward.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains several provisions dealing with municipal taxation on the real property of the Blue Water Bridge Authority located in the village of Point Edward in Lambton county. In 1940, legislation was enacted to make the portion of the bridge in Ontario exempt from taxation, including local improvement and school rates, except for a fixed annual payment of $5,000 to the village. The village became dissatisfied with this arrangement. Since 1970, a number of attempts have been made to increase the tax revenues realized by the village from the bridge authority. In fact, no payment was made in 1978.

This bill proposes a long-term solution to the problem, while allowing a four-year phasing-in period. Section 1 of the bill provides that the provisions of the Assessment Act will apply to the real property of the authority located in the village, except for the bridge structure. Section 2 sets out a proposed new schedule of payment to the village for the years 1978 to 1982 in lieu of municipal taxes, including school taxes on the bridge structure. This means that until the end of 1982 the authority will pay to the village the amounts set out in section 2(1), plus local improvement taxes, as well as full municipal taxes, including school taxes, on all of its real property except the bridge structure.

Section 2 also provides that starting in 1983 the authority will pay full municipal taxes, including school taxes, on the bridge structure as well.

SECURITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 132, An Act to amend the Securities Act, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it plain in my statement that this bill was for first reading at this time so it could be reprinted in full in the weekly summary of the Ontario Securities Commission and so receive the widest possible dissemination over the summer months in the financial community. That is a commitment we have on every bill of significance to the financial community. As I said, I thought it had been made plain, but since there appeared to be some confusion I chose to read that into the record at this time.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 133, An Act to repeal the Income Tax Discounters Act, 1977.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just to make it very plain, the purpose of this bill when enacted was to regulate this field. The federal government was dragging its feet at the time. The federal government subsequently passed an identical bill and now this bill has no standing whatsoever. Were we to charge under it, it would be ultra vires because federal legislation has precedence. We will continue to act as a referral service for the federal government, but this bill is now entirely useless and we feel it serves no purpose whatsoever in the Ontario statutes.

ALL ONTARIO PITCH-IN DAY ACT

Mr. G. I. Miller moved first reading of Bill 134, An Act to provide for an All Ontario Pitch-In Day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ashe: It sounds like a very important piece of legislation. Is that a national holiday or only a provincial holiday?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to provide for an all Ontario pitch-in day. The Ontario pitch-in day would be a day during the year on which all residents of Ontario would be encouraged to undertake special efforts to keep the environment free of litter.

LITTERING

Mr. Nixon: Sir, I don't know whether you observed, following the demonstration yesterday, that the grounds around this building were littered with signs and discarded refuse.

Does it concern you that we would have large groups here leaving all of that stuff and that nothing is being done to ask them to clean up after their own demonstrations?

Mr. Speaker: It does concern me, but it is the responsibility of the Ministry of Government Services and I am sure someone had heard your admonition and something will be done about it.

Mr. Riddell: Surely Lorne can throw his weight around there.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: I wish to table the interim answers to questions 236 and 237 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2983.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: With the permission of the House, may I take this opportunity to amend the statement given yesterday with respect to the order of business next week so that we might include Bill 96 for committee stage at the end of Tuesday afternoon of next week? We would like to put the bill introduced by my colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), dealing with the village of Point Edward, on the end of the list of the legislation we hope to get to next week standing in the name of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 46, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a simple bill. There are three sections. The first section deals with the time in which a municipality can issue debentures for a local improvement. Until now the municipalities could issue these debentures only when the project was completed. We have had representation from many municipalities asking if debentures could be issued sooner so they can save interest money because debentures are cheaper on interest and interim borrowing.

We have already given this power to one municipality, the city of London, in private legislation, and what this section really says is that the municipality can issue debentures when the contract is let and approved and when work commences, so they can issue debentures when work starts, rather than when work is completed, in order to save money.

Let me skip to the third section of the bill, Mr. Speaker. When we did our metrication we omitted to convert three forms to metric and we are picking up those that were omitted. There are so many things in metrication I think we can be forgiven if we left out a couple.

The second section of the bill deals with municipalities which have approved projects expressed in units of imperial measure, rather than metric measure. As members can see, section 2 of the bill says that any project approved and started before February 1, 1979, in imperial measure will be okay, even though from then on we are supposed to use metric measurement.

Because some of the forms were not properly published and because we have had some problems with several municipalities which, in good faith, issued contracts in imperial measure after February 1, 1979, I will be introducing an amendment in committee of the whole House, changing the February 1 date to September 1, 1979, so that all municipalities will be clear. They will have the metric forms, hopefully, as soon as we pass this act. They will have a breathing space until September 1, 1979, in order to clean up any contract, so any contract which has been let or will be let before September 1 in imperial measure, will be all right. After September 1 they all must be metric.

Mr. Epp: I want to indicate from the outset we are going to support this bill. Although it is important, I am sure it will not rate as one of the landmark pieces of legislation dealt with in this Legislature in the last 110 years.

My colleague, the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman), just asked me if he digs a ditch or something, with a shovel, will he have to now dig it with a metric shovel, or can he still use the imperial kind of shovel he used before? Maybe the member for Wilson Heights can reply to that later on. I am sure it is a very pressing problem.

Mr. Rotenberg: An imperial shovel, but just taking metric-measured pieces of dirt.

Mr. Epp: It doesn't really matter? One can still get the same depth and so forth? Thank you.

Essentially the legislation recognizes a practice carried on by many municipalities for a number of years. That is, wherever municipalities existed, whereas they could carry on issuing debentures what they used to do essentially is issue these debentures prematurely. They often did not complete the projects, the sewer projects and some of the other projects, before they issued debentures. What the provincial government now is doing is it's legalizing something that has been illegal for some months.

Essentially what the provincial government says is that it has on occasion been doing things illegally, and since the errors the municipalities have been committing have not been as important or certainly not as severe as what the provincial government has been doing on a number of occasions in violating the law, it has now brought in a piece of legislation that will permit municipalities to debenture projects prior to the completion of a particular project.

I think this is important, because as the minister's parliamentary assistant has pointed out, this will essentially save the municipalities money because they can obtain their money at a lower interest rate when they are debenturing than they can when they are borrowing the money in order to carry on the expense of the project until it can be debentured. So we obviously endorse this piece of legislation and we think it's a move in the right direction. We only wonder why it has taken so many years before the government has recognized the need to have this done.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have very few comments on this bill. As has already been suggested by the member for Waterloo North, it's fairly straightforward. It's not benchmark legislation. I do have a couple of comments on both of the parts, first of all on the metric conversion. I think this is just one more example of the muddle that metric conversion is causing for municipalities, corporations, boards, agencies and for the general public.

While I support the two sections in this act which relate to metric conversion and which remove a difficulty that municipalities have been finding themselves in because of the timing laid down in the previous bill, I do think it's unfortunate we got into this the way we did. I hope there will not be too many more examples of where bills like this have to come forward to enable us to weasel around provisions that for one reason or another have been proven to be impractical.

With regard to the matter of debentures, I have no concern about the provisions that are contained in this bill as they relate to municipalities. As the honourable member suggested, it will regularize something that has been going on in an indirect way for some time and it will also provide money at a lower rate of interest to municipalities when they are having to pay their contractors.

I want to use this opportunity though to ask the parliamentary assistant if he would respond to a problem that may arise in this circumstance through the imposition of the local improvement charge on the home owners and property owners who are affected by the local improvements. It is my understanding, going through the act, that the change that's before us now will also enable the municipality to start recovering the costs that are to be met by the properties on which the improvements front.

Given that there have been an apparently increasing number—and it may not be true, but an apparently increasing number—of projects that have run into trouble for one reason or another, and I'm thinking particularly of sanitary sewer projects, where it's been a period of two or three years before the project has been properly completed, does this amendment mean that the property owners concerned will start paying their repayments on the sewer projects before the project is available for their use? If it does have that implication then I see that as something that's rather unfortunate, because when a project does go bad, when municipalities are involved either in litigation with the contractor or alternatively in major fix-up projects, when a sewer project is for some reason not available for the use of the home owners, then I think it's a little unfair to ask home owners to start paying for the sewers. It's like having to pay for a car you haven't yet got but for which you have placed the order.

If indeed that is the implication of this bill, I really wonder whether that provision is what we want to have happen. I would appreciate the parliamentary assistant's response on that point on whether he sees any way around that for the municipalities or for this House to avoid complications and to avoid a lot of complaints I know we will be getting from home owners when they are asked to pay for something they haven't yet got because the project has run into problems. I realize, Mr. Speaker, it's not every municipal project that runs into problems. Only a very few have problems but I think that circumstance is sufficiently frequent that we should be concerned about it and I look forward to the parliamentary assistant's response.

Those are my comments on this bill. We will support it on second reading and we have no amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate? If not, the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the member for Wentworth, I am informed this has not changed the time or the method in which the members of the public, the home owners who are assessed, start paying back. They pay back in accordance with the bylaw as passed by the municipality which indicates when the home owners start to pay. This has no relationship to when the debentures are issued, so that part of it doesn't change. It doesn't change the powers of a municipality as to when they issue it.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.
House in committee of the whole.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 46, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that section 2 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"2. The said act is amended by adding thereto the following section: 74. Notwithstanding section 39 of the Metric Conversion Statute Law Amendment Act, 1978, where, before September 1, 1979, a municipality passes a bylaw for undertaking of work or obtains the approval of the board to an undertaking, the areas, diameters, distances and frontages, and frontage rates may for all purposes of this act be expressed in units of imperial measures and forms 1 to 4, as they existed on January 31, 1979, may continue to be used with respect to such undertakings."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does anybody wish to discuss this amendment?

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, very briefly as I mentioned in my opening remarks, this is simply to facilitate those municipalities who may have planned up until now, or be planning at the moment, projects in imperial measures until those forms mentioned in this act are converted to metric. The September 1 date seems to be a cut-off date which municipalities have accepted.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any other sections of the bill that the committee wishes to discuss?

Sections 3 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 46 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 46, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act.

DISTRICT OF PARRY SOUND LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill 100, represents a milestone in local government in the district of Parry Sound. Serious attention to local government was focused on the area in 1972 with the annexation hearing by the Ontario Municipal Board of the Parry Sound and related annexation applications.

In early 1973, the district municipal association called for a planning and local government study, which commenced later that year and concluded in the fall of 1976. After receiving many briefs, the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs made a number of proposals early in 1978. This bill is the result of extensive dialogue between the ministry and the municipalities involved and the many cottage, ratepayers' and home-owners' groups in the area.

It was clear from the outset that the people of the district did not want any form of second-tier or regional government. The concern to strengthen local government itself was apparent, and this bill deals strictly with amalgamation, annexation and consolidation of local municipalities and currently unorganized territories.

Five municipalities are involved in this bill.

First, the new municipality, Georgian Bay Archipelago: The bill incorporates the unorganized township of Cowper and major portions of the unorganized townships of Conger, Harrison and Shawanaga into the township municipality bearing the name of the township of Georgian Bay Archipelago.

The population of this municipality is approximately 7,000, including the seasonal residents. It is composed of some mainland cottage areas, a significant group of permanent residents in the Pointe au Baril area, and the permanent and seasonal population of the many islands in front of the above-mentioned townships.

The municipality is a recreation-oriented, essentially water-based community, focusing on the islands and the shore of Georgian Bay, and will have northern and southern sections being separated by the existing Carling township. The government of Ontario has opted for a single municipality, rather than two, because of the common focus of the entire area and the desire to avoid duplication of administrative costs that would undoubtedly follow if two units were established.

The area appears to be quite large geographically; however, when one looks at the vast expanse of water and recognizes the relatively small permanent population of fewer than 500 people, then it becomes apparent it is not nearly as large as it would appear at first glance. Some might argue—and I think some will—that it should be set up as two separate sections, perhaps to be joined later. Knowing the difficulty of joining municipalities, we believe it would be easier to separate the two portions later if that should be warranted. To abandon the possibilities of some economies of scale and to establish duplicate administrative structures to deal with areas of great similarity does not appear to be appropriate at this time.

This new municipality will serve both seasonal and permanent residents, and give them a voice in local affairs, by providing the basic institutions of township government now enjoyed by most residents and property taxpayers in Ontario. In addition, this new municipality will begin to contribute financially to certain district-wide functions such as health, welfare and homes for the aged.

The inclusion of certain inland areas with the shoreline and island communities was based on two essential factors: (1) the preference of seasonal and permanent residents of the affected areas and (2) the feeling of the government of Ontario that certain areas not be cut off from the assessment and revenue base which exists on the islands and the Georgian Bay shore.

The legislation provides that the first head of council of the new township—who will be a reeve—will be selected from among the 10 members of the council who will be elected. After the first term, the legislation provides for a separately elected head of council. I would point out that the request for the first reeve to be selected from amongst council came from the various associations which will make up the new municipality.

Coming to Carling township: Carling township is an existing, organized municipality. In their correspondence, their resolutions and their discussions with our staff they have indicated absolutely no desire to join the new municipality. We are aware that some ratepayers in Carling, particularly seasonal residents, would like to join the proposed municipality. However, Carling township is an established municipality with a duly elected council. To this date that council, in all indications to us, clearly wishes to remain separate from the new municipality. Of course, we try at all times to go along with local autonomy and as best we can write legislation in accordance with the wishes of the local people.

The suggestion has been made by some that Carling township annex the areas to the north and leave Cowper and Conger to the south as a separate unit. This idea has no support whatsoever outside Carling in the areas affected. In fact there is strong opposition to it. The government of Ontario does not believe that the people in the unorganized territories should be denied local government institutions provided the establishment of these institutions does not adversely affect existing municipal arrangements. It is one thing not to force an existing township into new arrangements against its will, but it is quite another to deny organization to others in the form that they desire.

We have clearly indicated that Carling township could be part of this new municipality but we will not force them to join it. If at some future date Carling indicates a desire to join the new municipality, we of course will give it consideration.

Moving to Humphrey township, it has by resolution asked that the eastern portion of Conger adjacent to Humphrey with road access from highway 69 be annexed to Humphrey. So that this part of Conger can easily be serviced by Humphrey township, this annexation has been included in Bill 100. Humphrey township already contains a large number of cottagers and we believe that property owners, both seasonal and permanent, in eastern Conger will be well serviced by Humphrey township. In addition, this annexation brings the new Parry Sound airport into an organized municipality.

In the portion of Conger township adjacent to Foley township it has been quite a matter of controversy whether this portion should go with Georgian Bay Archipelago or with Foley. In Bill 205, the one we introduced last year, the area was included with Georgian Bay. In Bill 100 before the House today it is included with Foley township. Virtually all of the permanent residents—about 50 permanent residents in this area representing 15 households—wish to join Foley while the majority of the seasonal residents—and there are about 600 seasonal residents—want to go with Georgian Bay Archipelago.

This has been a difficult issue to deal with and we have been pulled in two directions on it. However, it is now clear that the people wishing to join Georgian Bay Archipelago feel so strongly about the issue that to include the area with Foley township would be destructive to the interests of Foley as well as to these people. We are therefore prepared to amend Bill 100, and will be introducing an amendment when we get to it, to put Crane Lake and Blackstone Lake areas back into Georgian Bay Archipelago.

Moving to the east, away from Georgian Bay, the town of Kearney under this bill is joined with the geographic townships of Proudfoot and Bethune and the portions of Butt and McCraney townships outside of Algonquin Park. They will have a new council, to be elected from three wards, providing balanced representation from the three basic component areas in the new municipality. The area is closely knit and should work well when amalgamation takes place.

The ministry has acted to deal with all the concerns and issues that have been raised in the area with respect to this amalgamation and we feel that with all the meetings and all the discussions—discussions even taking place over the past few months—we have satisfied, if not all the concerns, all the major concerns of the various groups in the area.

Parry Sound itself: To the town of Parry Sound will be annexed a small portion of Foley township and part of McDougall township, which will help rationalize local government servicing in that area. This essentially involves spillover development in the township just outside the town boundaries. The boundary changes which are in this bill have been agreed to by the councils of all the affected municipalities.

The startup date for all these reorganizations is January 1, 1980, to coincide with the beginning of the municipal financial year. The costs of the municipal elections in the archipelago and Kearney in the fall of 1979 will be paid by the province. This will be for a three-year term until the next regular municipal election. The costs of the school board election in those areas in the fall of 1980 where there will not be a municipal election will also be picked up by the province.

The bill will enable residents, both seasonal and permanent, to have a stronger voice in local matters affecting them and continues a significant step forward in the improvement and strengthening of local government to the district of Parry Sound. Mr. Speaker, I commend the bill to the Legislature and hope I can have the support of all members.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's with pleasure that I'm able to participate in the debate on Bill 100, which replaces Bill 205.

It is a very historical occasion as far as the Parry Sound district is concerned because they are coming from being basically unorganized. There are many municipalities that do have local government, but these are changing times.

As a critic for the opposition party on Intergovernmental Affairs, I take the opportunity at this time to point out to the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck) that we would like to be constructive, not destructive. We have had the opportunity of being in his riding, at the request of many of the local councils.

Mr. Rotenberg: On a strictly non-political visit.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That is correct. The member for Wilson Heights made a good comment.

Mr. Riddell: They spoke very highly of Lorne Maeck.

Mr. G. I. Miller: If we are requested, I think it is the duty of the opposition party to accept its responsibility, and that is what we have tried to do.

I would like to point out in the very beginning we have been through the reorganizing our own area, the region of Haldimand-Norfolk. It was a very controversial issue. I would like to have some constructive input on how this new area may be reorganized to be the most efficient for that particular area.

I would like to point out also we are quite well acquainted with the district of Parry Sound. For many years we've gone to Burk's Falls and done a little fishing at Pickerel Lake. We've been in Kearney and at resorts around Kearney. It is a beautiful area. I think it has a great future.

During our visit and our discussions with local councils, we went into Parry Sound. It does have a natural harbour, probably second to none in the north. The thousands of islands along Georgian Bay and along the lakefront are being utilized perhaps more by people from southern Ontario. It is a resort area. As a matter of fact, one of my constituents from Haldimand-Norfolk has an island there. He's had one for many years. I know it provides a lot of enjoyment.

When we take an overall look at it, and from the discussions we had, there seems to be a bit of a conflict between the local residents and the ones who are using the islands. Again, we're talking about a bay front of approximately 50 miles, with Parry Sound in the middle.

From our observations it appeared that perhaps two municipalities would be more effective than one. Maybe it should be designed so the residents who use the islands are encouraged to work along with the permanent residents. The income of many of those folks is not comparable to that of those who are using the islands. I think they are as concerned about the environment as anyone. That is their homeland. That is where their roots have been down, and will be down for many generations to come.

As members of the opposition, we would like to be constructive. We do have some amendments we would like to put forward, but first of all, I would like to point out we did have an opportunity to visit the airport. It is a fine facility and there is room for expansion, and it gives quick access to the area. I would like to commend the government for providing that facility.

We also were able to take a look at the industrial park. I think they have 1,000 acres, with roads, a sewage system and a water system installed. They have three or four businesses established there, but I question the soundness of the background research of their financial ability. Muskoka Steel was established only one or two years ago—the member perhaps knows much more about it than I do—and there is a huge building now left vacant because they were not able to make a go of it; they were also manufacturing log houses, or squared timber, prefabricated houses, and that business was moving ahead quite well. There was also another building, which was in the process of being put up, but it appears to have been sitting there now without going ahead.

What I am really saying, I suppose, is that we have 1,000 acres there that has the potential, and it is perhaps the responsibility of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, in co-operation with some other ministries, to encourage the development of that particular park, because to get a return for Ontario it certainly has to be working. That is perhaps a side point and maybe should not be brought up in this debate; however, I just wanted to make that clear.

We did have the opportunity of staying in Parry Sound and, as I indicated before, there is a great future there. We do have some environmentally sensitive areas with the islands and, again, the local people are concerned that they are not going to have access to them; that maybe they are going to be eliminated. Perhaps we can pull these people together. We have had discussions with the cottage associations. I feel there may be some misunderstanding. They are both trying to achieve the same thing but are going in different directions. It is important that we have that in mind as we realign these new municipalities, because we are laying the foundation for this organized district for many generations to come. While there is a tremendous future there, and we have to listen to the local people, we cannot expect the people in Toronto, or in my riding in southern Ontario, to give total direction to what happens in that area because, while they can share and utilize our natural resources, they do belong to everyone. We have to keep that in mind.

I would like to say that the reeve of Carling township, Jack Plowman, gave us a complete tour. Mike Konoval was very helpful during the tour in trying to be fair to both sides and making us available to all political viewpoints. The reeve of Foley, Ken Hunter, gave us a tour to show us what they have and what they have accomplished over the years. I think they can both be proud of what they have done on behalf of their communities. They have good equipment and they have good facilities, including a community and parks centre. They indicated to us that they could provide snow ploughing and roadbuilding equipment for a larger area than they have at present.

It seemed to me that maybe Parry Sound, with its boundaries expanded, and communities to the north and south, would have been an ideal situation. But further research indicated that the local people perhaps did not want to go in that direction at this particular time. Given a little time, and with more trust between the ones that are concerned about the new municipality, maybe that will come about in years ahead. To get to the islands, they have to go through the municipalities we are concerned about. They have to use the road facilities and the services that are provided. Again, it would be good if that were encouraged, because that is basic to the economy of the area. I assume they would want to see the improvements made to both areas, whether they are permanent residents or islanders, or just concerned about the holidays and resort areas. It is a matter of teamwork.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I think we would like to make four amendments and maybe the one that has already been indicated by the parliamentary assistant, the member for Wilson Heights, who is taking the bill through the House this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The appropriate time for amendments is during committee of the whole House.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I am not going to make the amendments, Mr. Speaker. I am just going to bring our proposals to your attention. Our critic will be moving them at a later time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the honourable member's comments, but the proper time to bring forth amendments is in committee.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Fine, thank you. I will go on and point out that our view is we would like to have the archipelago divided into two townships, north and south. The reason for that is that back in August 1976 the final report and recommendations of the district of Parry Sound local government study, the Martin report, the red book, suggested two separate municipalities: a township to the north called Pointe au Baril and a township to the south called Sans Souci.

Another reason is that it is 50 miles from one end to the other. In order to get around there, one has to go through Parry Sound or around Parry Sound to make that connection. Secondly, the Foley area, left out in Bill 205, was included in Bill 100. I think this rightly belongs to the archipelago and should be in the new south archipelago. I think the ministry indicated that.

Another concern is the fact that in the first election the reeve is to be appointed by the elected group. We feel that the reeve should be elected in these new municipalities in the same way as in any other council in the province.

It's important from a communications point of view that the heads of council should be located within the boundaries of the municipality because they are the focal point. Hopefully, the township hall will be located in those municipalities so the residents have quick access to it. That's another reason for maybe not going to such huge areas, but keeping them down where the local people or even the cottage people have access to them. If the cottagers want to join in and try to be elected to council, I think that would be good. That was accomplished in Carling this past year. Mr. Bill Davis, who has the same name as the Premier, was elected. I think that is the democratic system working. Everyone can take part and it will make for good relationships in this new municipality. Local autonomy has to be considered, protected and encouraged.

With those few remarks, I would like to say it has been a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in the debate on the bill. Perhaps we will have some further comments as the bill proceeds.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise and to indicate to you and the House that this party too supports the principle of this bill, although we have some concerns about some of the specifics contained in it.

The bill, to me, is a bill that should be a non-partisan bill. It deals with the establishment of good local government and good municipal government structures in a very important, a very beautiful and a very significant part of this province. As that, I think it is inappropriate that we look at it as a bill on which we divide on party lines. It is a bill that will be very important for the people of the district of Parry Sound, not just this year or not just next year, but for many years to come. It is bringing into local government structure parts of the province that previously have been unorganized.

I am concerned, however, about a few of the things that were said by the parliamentary assistant and a few of the things that relate to the way this bill has been handled. First, I am particularly concerned that it was brought to us with just days remaining in this sitting of the House so that there really wasn't the time to look at the one very significant change that was introduced since Bill 205 was presented to this House. There really wasn't time to wrap up the few loose ends that I believe are still remaining in regard to the issue of the structures.

Given that the bill is not that much different from Bill 205, I really have to question why the government left it to the last minute to introduce this bill and put the townships presently in existence in that area, the cottagers' associations and other concerned residents, in a situation of hardly being aware of what was going on with regard to the introduction of this bill, because it has been very difficult in the last two weeks, since we first saw this version of this bill, to inform people and keep in touch with people the way we believe communications between this House and the residents who are affected by a bill such as this should work.

I think the timing has been a problem. I think too there have been problems with regard to consultation. It may well be that our view of consultation is a little different from the government's view of consultation. I really have to ask who has put the main input into this bill. Who are the people who were consulted and whose voices were given the most weight? At what stage did that consultation take place?

There are people who are unhappy with the way the bill stands today and, therefore, the consultative process obviously hasn't worked properly, because if it had worked properly we wouldn't need these last-minute amendments with regard to the northeastern part of Conger township, and we wouldn't need the amendments with regard to the archipelago municipality. Those things should have been ironed out before the bill came into this House.

I also want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that his comment that it was something the people of the area really wanted may not in fact be true in so far as some of the groups who live in that area are concerned.

Mr. Wildman: That's why I asked if you agreed.

Mr. Isaacs: The information I have from consultations with groups of residents in the district is that they were coerced back in 1973 into believing that they had better go for some kind of municipal organization, because if they didn't things were going to get worse. I hope that pressure being applied to groups of residents and those residents then submitting to that pressure isn't interpreted by the government as a desire on the part of the residents for municipal organization.

In fact, it is my understanding that one of the reasons we want to deal with this bill fairly quickly—I understand that and support that—is because some of the groups are still a little unhappy with the idea of turning unorganized territory into municipally organized territory, and we should put it in place at least while they are happy, before they change their minds and start rebelling against it. That is a relatively minor consideration.

I want to say to the parliamentary assistant and to the minister, who is not here, that we support bringing into organization those parts of this province where there is presently no organization and in which municipal structure would be viable. There are vast parts of the north where municipal structure would not be viable, so viability has to be a key.

It is very obvious from the reports that have been done and from the studies that have been conducted during the last five years that municipal organization of the presently unorganized territories in the district would be viable, and that the creation of a group of larger municipalities than presently exist in other parts of the district would be desirable.

I am very pleased that the government has seen fit to bring in a bill that is essentially a one-tier form of government rather than any kind of regional government, and that is as a result of the concerns and the comments received from local residents.

It is a pity that when the regional governments we now have in other parts of the province were set up this kind of consultation did not take place. They were set up whether or not the local residents wanted them, and in many of those regions the local residents very clearly expressed that they did not, but they are stuck with them now whether they like them or not.

When we look at setting up municipal organization, I think we have to ask why it is being done. As I have expressed before in this House, the structure of municipalities is there primarily to serve two purposes. One is the planning role and the second is the provision of services. I think planning in this area is very important. As the parliamentary assistant is well aware, we in this party believe in local autonomy for municipal government, subject to guidelines laid down by the government on matters that are of provincial significance.

I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant, and perhaps he will relay it to his colleague the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), that this part of the province is of very great provincial significance. The councils we are setting up in this bill will undoubtedly see their planning function as very important—a function they will get into right away. I hope we don't get into a situation where councils decide to set up an official plan that deals with what they see their needs to be and then the province has to intervene at some stage and say that official plan is not what the government wants. I hope the guidelines can be put in place now before the planning process locally gets underway so those councils really can work within the framework that's laid down and exercise the autonomy that the bill, at least in theory, gives to them.

I regard that as very important. Development is desirable in that area because of the tax base it brings in, because of the viability it gives to the communities that exist right now, and because it enables the people who live in the area to have a guaranteed source of income. But indiscriminate development—development on much of the shoreline, development of industries that for some reason can't locate elsewhere and see the district of Parry Sound as a place where they can get away with pollution that might not be tolerated by residents elsewhere—those things would be very undesirable. I hope we can make sure right now that the councils know the guidelines they are operating within.

The other function I mentioned was the provision of services. Much of this area requires very little in the way of services. But there will be certain functions the local councils will be assuming from the Ministry of Natural Resources. There will be other functions which, because there is now a local government structure, those councillors and the residents who elected them will see as being desirable.

I just hope this is not a way of making the people who live in the area pay more. There's a tendency, at least at the present time, for the government to be relying on property taxes as just another way of raising money. This money should really be raised by the provincial government through income tax and corporation tax, the fair methods of taxation.

If through the transfer of the costs from the Ministry of Natural Resources to the local residents we are really only establishing a mechanism whereby those residents can be taxed in total more than they are at the present time, then I think it's a very backward step. I hope that's not what's going on with regard to this bill.

The previous minister of what was then Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs mentioned that the government would be prepared to consider startup grants and other kinds of special financial assistance to the municipalities in the district to get over the transition period and to deal with some of the special problems they will face as a result of the new structure of local government. I hope when we go into committee stage the parliamentary assistant will be able to provide for our information, and for the information of the councils in that area, details of all the special grants the government is proposing to make to those municipalities, both immediately and in the longer term. I can refer the parliamentary assistant to the commitments that have been made in the past if he's not aware of them.

I'd like to comment with regard to the commonality of interest that has been suggested as the reason for combining two separated parts of the district into a single municipality. There is no doubt that there's commonality of interest there, but there is also commonality of interest of other kinds in many other parts of the province. In trying to deal with this question, I think we have to look at what municipal government is for and how large a municipality should be in order properly to serve the people.

It concerns me that through the provision in this act for one municipality separated into two widely spaced parts, we are establishing something new in Ontario, something that might be regarded as an experiment, but perhaps is not even seen as an experiment but just as a convenient expedient. I have to say I am not sure we should be experimenting with that kind of thing in this area.

I am not convinced that it's going to provide any significant benefits at all, either to the people of the southern portion or to the people of the northern portion. I cannot see that the municipal council is going to have any option other than to run the two separated portions. Transportation of men, material and equipment between the two portions isn't going to make any economic sense. Therefore, the services are presumably going to have to be provided by locally contracted companies or individuals. Given that situation, given the fact that the study report recommended the two separate municipalities and indicated that they were very very viable and given that subsequent reports from the ministry have indicated the viability of the two portions, I really have to say to the parliamentary assistant that we will support the amendment introduced by my colleague for Waterloo North to separate those two portions into two independent municipalities.

I am sure that the local councils for the two separate municipalities will work together, just as the councils for the other municipalities in the district are going to work together to deal with common problems. That's the way we should be going. Councils come together to deal with problems they can best solve as a group, rather than being forced into regional or other peculiarly structured bodies.

We feel that that's very important and, as the parliamentary assistant is aware, we were concerned about introducing that kind of amendment in this House without proper consultation. We honestly have not had the time since this bill came before us to undertake that proper consultation. I know he will respond that we have had since last December, but I will reply that we didn't know what changes were going to be in Bill 100. If the government knew that the changes were going to be very minor, then why wasn't Bill 205 introduced in March or April so that we could have dealt with it in a proper way with proper public consultation, rather than trying to deal with it now?

I am also concerned about the rationale that has been used for the problem of location of the northeastern portion of Conger township, whether it should go with Foley or with the southern part of the archipelago. I understand what the parliamentary assistant is saying about the permanent residents and the concerns of the permanent residents, although I suggest to him that the numbers that we have are quite a bit different from the numbers that he has. I don't know which set of numbers is right, though I'm inclined to believe those that were provided to us because they came from a very reliable source.

When there is a situation where there are only 15 households or 27 residents or maybe 40 residents, or whatever the small number is, in a relatively large area that has a very substantial summer population, then I really am not sure that one can take the views of the permanent residents as being of that much overriding significance. They are important and I would weigh them more heavily than I would weigh the views of the seasonal residents, but one comes to a point where weighting gets so absurd that it's no longer the reasonable thing to do. I think this is a clear case of that situation. It's very clear to me that it makes much more sense to keep those two lake areas, Blackstone and Crane lakes, with the archipelago rather than putting them with Foley against the will of the majority of the people who own property in that area.

Mr. Rotenberg: I indicated we are going to do that.

Mr. Isaacs: We will be supporting that amendment too. We will be raising a number of comments on particular areas of this bill during committee stage, but I want to commend the government for the approach it has taken and say that I hope that if we have more of these in the future there will be the same kind of public consultation, only more of it, and that it will be very clear as to what weight is being given to the views of which group of people.

Just one final comment: There is the suggestion that the municipality of Georgian Bay Archipelago may one day be extended all the way to Manitoulin Island. I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that if that is something the government is looking at, then I, as a private member of this Legislature, would have great problems with a municipality that big. I believe one function of municipal government is to have local politicians close to where the people live so that they can deal with day-to-day problems. I cannot see that that could happen in a municipality that stretched across hundreds of miles of shoreline. If we see municipal organization farther north, then I hope it will be on the basis of distinct and financially viable townships, stretching around the shores of Georgian Bay, rather than by annexation of property to the townships that are being established by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this particular debate because it is a situation in which I have been involved for the past six or seven years. This reorganization of local government in the district of Parry Sound goes back a long time. As the parliamentary assistant indicated when he started to speak, there were applications for annexation and amalgamation, and counter-applications, over on the west side of the Parry Sound district, back in 1971, 1972 and so on, which indicated to the government that some change was needed; that the local people themselves could see the need for change but that they could not actually agree on what that change should be. The Ontario Municipal Board, when it came down with its decision, stated simply that it felt it was not in a position to make that decision, and suggested it should be done through legislation.

In 1971, shortly after I was elected—I am sure other rural members, particularly in northern Ontario, had the same type of problems I had; that is, having to do with planning, severances, subdivisions and other applications—the standard response from the Ministry of Housing and, before that, the Department of Municipal Affairs, was: "Why don't you people get an official plan and some zoning bylaws? Then we will talk to you. Until then, we really can't look at your applications very well."

I discussed this matter with the Treasurer, who was then the Honourable Darcy McKeough, and he made the promise that some funding would be made available to the district of Parry Sound to produce an official plan. He suggested it would have to be a year later, simply because it was not budgeted in that particular current year; and I understood that. But in the following year the suggestion was made that, before we developed an official plan for the district, perhaps we should see what the municipalities wanted to do with reference to any changes in local government. It was understood from day one that we would not be discussing regional government. I am personally not in favour of regional government in an area such as Parry Sound; the area is too large and spread out. It would be unworkable.

Mr. Nixon: So you gave the rose another name.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No. We are a long way from regional or two-tier government in this bill.

Anyway, the study was finally constituted. I must say that the cost of the study was borne completely by the province, which is rather unusual because most counties which have had a study done on local government have had to pay a percentage, and in some cases all, of the cost of the study. The province paid for it completely in the district of Parry Sound, which indicates the province was interested in trying to assist and to solve some of the problems that existed.

The Martin report, mentioned by both of the speakers, was the result of that study. The study and the report were not acceptable to the people in the district of Parry Sound. We are now using parts of it in some of the debate to say that is what the study said. But I must tell the members that study was rejected in the district of Parry Sound almost in totality. It is very convenient to use what part one might want to use to further one's argument, but I must say in general terms the Martin report was rejected almost completely.

The situation remained where we had some municipalities that still felt some amalgamation should take place. The Kearney area is an example. Kearney, Bethune, Proudfoot, Butt and McCraney—those portions of Butt and McCraney outside of Algonquin Park—decided after consultation and after public meetings that they would like to amalgamate and form one municipality. There were resolutions passed by the town council of Kearney and by the local roads boards in both Bethune and Proudfoot. The other two portions that were being discussed in this bill did not have local roads boards. They had no local representatives. There are very few residents there as a matter of fact.

The elected people in those three areas unanimously decided they would like to amalgamate and they made that submission to the province. It was examined and, in that particular instance, after examination they are going to be the beneficiaries of additional grants they do not receive at this time. That is simply because in the two unorganized townships and the other two pieces of unorganized townships, as some members know, resources equalization grants and per capita grants do not go back to the taxpayer, but they will under this bill.

When it is figured out from the financial viewpoint, they will gain in assistance from the province. But it is not a matter of saying we are giving them more money than we would give some other municipality under the same circumstances. Under the grant system as it now exists, those people will gain financially. There is nothing in this bill that indicates we are going to give any seed money or anything of that nature. They are not asking for it. They feel they can handle it quite nicely.

To be very honest, in that particular proposed municipality, there have been reservations from the township of Proudfoot. I have discussed this matter with representatives from the township of Proudfoot. They have talked with representatives of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. All of the things have been explained to them. While there are still some reservations, we feel the bill should proceed as it is. That is not a part of the bill that is going to be amended, as I understand it. So it will proceed as it is.

I will deal with the other smaller amalgamation next, involving the town of Parry Sound and the township of McDougall. For the last four years at least, both municipalities have requested the province to amalgamate, to apply to the Ontario Municipal Board. The Treasurer of the day, Mr. McKeough, suggested that they should not make applications for amalgamation because of the past experience with the OMB, but they should wait and we would legislate it.

It is rather important. These people have been waiting a long time. There are matters of sewers and water services and of a shopping centre that is built outside the municipality of Parry Sound that they would like to put into the town of Parry Sound. All of these things have been agreed upon by those two municipalities, the township of McDougall and the town of Parry Sound. There is no problem there, provided of course the bill does get through this Legislature. It is rather important for those two municipalities because they have wanted a long time to get that amalgamation which is at the request of those municipalities.

The third matter, and the one that's probably going to get most of the debate in this bill, is the archipelago. I have had some difficulties, particularly with North Conger, on this particular matter. Originally, as members know, Bill 205 had all of Conger attached to the archipelago. What happened I am not sure, but suddenly—and not very long ago—there was some opposition to this particular part of the bill.

The local residents—37 I believe, in 13 or 15 families—suddenly decided they felt they should belong to Foley township. Foley township had originally, some time ago, suggested that they would accept North Conger. This was when submissions were made early on in the study. However, the area that Foley had suggested taking was not really a workable situation at all because it would have divided a lake—half the lake would have been in and the other half would have been out—but that could have been corrected.

We get to the point where letters start to circulate—I'm talking about in very recent weeks—both from the cottagers' associations, the Crane Lake association and Blackstone Lake association, and the residents of Foley. In the final tally—I don't know how accurate these figures are—and I stand to be corrected—there seemed to be roughly 200 names in favour of going with Foley and over 400 to go into the archipelago.

To correct the record, I must say that while we talk about 37 local residents there were also some cottagers—not the biggest number of them, of course—who obviously wanted to join with Foley.

I had the pleasure of meeting with representatives of the Blackstone Cottagers' Association along with the Crane Lake association very recently and we had a very good discussion on this situation. I did go back, as I had promised, and discuss the matter further with representatives of the local people and the opposing side. While they are certainly not happy with the situation, if they had their druthers certainly they would sooner go with Foley.

I think they also understand—and I tried to make it very plain to them—that it is time that people who pay property taxes have something to say about how those property taxes are spent. When you have a condition where you have some 400 names wanting to go in one direction and 200 going in the other, it really is rather difficult to provide that much weight to local residents.

Speaking from a selfish point of view I suppose, I like to support my local residents where I can, but I also must be realistic. After my discussions with them I then discussed the matter further with the minister and the parliamentary assistant and it was decided that we would amend the act—which I'm sure both of the opposition parties are in agreement with, because I had discussions with them before that. We are now to the situation where proposed amendments might come from the Liberal Party, supported by the NDP, in the matter of two municipalities and the archipelago.

I must admit to the Legislature that when these matters first came up for discussion, the Georgian Bay association, which I'm sure all members are aware spearheaded the archipelago municipality—paid a great deal of money to do another study over and above the one that was done by the government in relation to the archipelago. So they have a financial investment in this situation as well as a genuine interest, because they are summer residents and because they feel they should really have something to say about how that area is going to operate in the future.

I must agree with that. They are taxpayers and they should have some rights. That's one of the reasons why this bill is here today. I would caution the members that we have talked about local autonomy, local input and listening to the local people. The reason the bill is the way it is today in the Legislature—and I'm referring now to the archipelago in two pieces but as one municipality—is that the majority of the taxpayers in those areas want it that way. We've said we want to respect the taxpayers. They're the ones who are going to pay the shot. They're the ones who should be able to decide what's going to happen. They have asked for this, although, granted, people in Carling township certainly would like to see it in two pieces.

I met with the township of Carling also last Saturday and they pointed out their views, which are honest. They have their own viewpoint in these matters and I respect those viewpoints. But I must point out to the township of Carling and to the people in the Legislature that the township of Carling's views have been respected. They have been left alone. The original proposal called for Carling township to go into the archipelago. We respected their wishes. The government has respected them and I have respected them.

The only reason that the bill is here now and that the archipelago is in two pieces is that this government respected the wishes of Carling township and left them as they were. As a result we end up with an archipelago in two pieces, rather than one which goes right down along the shoreline. The fact is that those local people and the cottagers are not asking us for two municipalities. They're asking us for one municipality.

We have set up a ward system so that there is proper representation as between the north and the south. We've done everything that is possible to ensure that everybody who is involved in that new municipality will have equal rights and will have proper representation. I also have to point out again that that area of Georgian Bay is not the same as any other area in the province of Ontario. It's composed of many islands. Many of the people of the Georgian Bay shoreline travel a much greater amount by boat than they ever do by road.

One of the concerns of the local people that the new council will be concerned about is the roads. I've been assured by the Georgian Bay association, by the Crane Lake association and all the other cottagers' associations that I talked to that they're just as concerned about the roads as the local residents are. I have conveyed that message to the local residents who have indicated their concerns.

If we amend this bill and make it into two municipalities, what we're going to have is two municipalities, neither one of which is viable. They won't have the assessment they need to have a viable community. They will have to set up two administrations, which is double the cost. I just implore at least one of the opposition parties to support the viewpoint of the local people and the cottagers who have indicated their views to us. They have said that they want an archipelago municipality and they want one municipality; they don't want two. As I indicated, early in the conversations that we've had, they rejected that. If we're going to preach autonomy, and going to preach that we're listening to the local people, then let's do it and let's leave the bill as it is.

I have not too much more to add at this time. Certainly, from time to time, I will enter into the debate when we get into clause by clause, but I would ask the members to consider what I've said over the weekend. We are not going to get into clause-by-clause today. Members have some time to think about it. They have some time perhaps to phone some of their friends who have cottages up there to find out what they say about it. I think members will find that what this bill proposes, as far as the archipelago is concerned as it relates to whether it should be one or two municipalities, reflects the views of most of the people in the archipelago.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I guess it's been a little more than two years since I first heard about this particular kind of restructuring. I'm not sure whether it was just prior to my election or immediately afterwards when I was speaking to a resident of my constituency who told me about the study Mr. Norman Pearson had done. Subsequent to that, I understand, the Georgian Bay residents' association spent about $50,000 to supplement what the government of Ontario was doing in studying some kind of restructuring for the Georgian Bay area, the Parry Sound district.

I think the bill we have before us is important, not as a piece of provincial legislation, but it is more localized in dealing with the Georgian Bay area. In principle, we support this. As my colleague has indicated, we will be putting forth four amendments which we hope will get the support of the House and which this party thinks will improve the bill immensely.

I also want to say my colleague from Haldimand-Norfolk and I spent about three days in the area studying what we could and trying to get first-hand information. The first time was about a year ago when we went up there and met with a number of the councillors, of Carling township particularly, who were very concerned about this and who asked us to come up and get first-hand information on this and hear their points of view. We indicated we not only wanted their points of view, but we also wanted opposing points of view, and we received them at that time.

I might also say we attended a very large meeting that night when we were there, about a year ago, and there must have been about 100 or 150 people out to that meeting. They certainly extended to us every courtesy they could and gave us their views. As a result, we were waiting with somewhat bated breath to see what kind of bill the government would come out with. It came out with Bill 205 which we know has many of the ingredients of Bill 100.

I might also say we have received numerous letters, had delegations here at Queen's Park and received a number of phone calls trying to appraise us of the views of the residents, some of whom were seasonal and some of whom were permanent.

One of the things that upset me a little during the course of the last year or two is that in going to the Parry Sound area—and, as the Minister of Revenue and the member for that area has pointed out, it is a very nice area and we enjoyed our stay up there very much—we heard on more than one occasion that the opposition was to blame for holding up this particular bill. I said; "You must be kidding." They said, "Yes, the opposition is holding up the bill." I said, "That just can't be. We haven't even had a bill yet and we haven't indicated in any way whether we will or will not support it. Therefore, how can we be holding it up?" Nevertheless, these people insisted word was getting around that we were holding up legislation in one form or another that would bring some kind of greater local autonomy to the area.

Of course, that isn't true. We never have held it up. We have encouraged the government to come in with the legislation. We only wanted an opportunity to study the legislation and have some contact with the people, after the bill had been introduced, to apprise ourselves of their views with respect to the various conditions and clauses and so forth in the bill.

Addressing my remarks to the areas of Kearney, Proudfoot and Bethune particularly, I think the people there wanted to have a meeting in recent months with respect to what was in Bill 205 and, subsequently, Bill 100. I think the government could have assented to their views and could have held another hearing. It was an easy copout to say the local councils should have the hearing. [12:45]

I am sure that the government hasn't, in every instance, done exactly what local councils wanted, either in this bill or in other bills. By suggesting local councils should sponsor those meetings, or agree to have them or to host them, and that the provincial government couldn't without their assistance go ahead and have a meeting in which the local taxpayers and residents of the Bethune, Kearney and Proudfoot areas could give their views, is somewhat misleading.

The other thing I want to say is that the term "regional government" has come up today and it has come up on a number of other occasions when we have discussed restructuring of government. Even if this isn't regional government per se, the fact that many people think it is regional government gives a good indication I suppose of the feeling people have towards regional government. Every time the provincial government proposes some kind of restructuring, as it did in Northumberland and then withdrew it, and as it has done it in a number of other areas, people immediately say, "Well, it is regional government and we don't want it."

This should tell the provincial government something about what the people of Ontario fear about regional government. Therefore if they try to impose some kind of regional government on any other parts of this province they know they are going to get the backlash of the residents in that and other areas of the province. As far as we are concerned, we don't want to hear any more of it, but it also tells us what the people across the province think about it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Tell your candidate that up there.

Mr. Epp: As my colleague from Haldimand-Norfolk has indicated, we will be introducing a number of amendments. I just want to speak to a number of points I think members will find of interest. I want to address myself particularly to the archipelago. It is a large area and, as the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the member for Wilson Heights, has pointed out, there is a population of about 7,000. There are many municipalities across this province with a population of less than 2,000 or 1,000. Granted, some of these people are seasonal residents; nevertheless they still pay their full taxation—education taxes, property taxes and everything else which will go towards supporting an administration. I am sure the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will work with the government up there to try to establish a viable administration to deal with the many aspects of municipal government that it obviously has to deal with.

I noted that in putting forth his argument that we shouldn't have two municipalities in the archipelago the parliamentary assistant has indicated there would be a duplication of costs. If there is a duplication of costs in setting up two municipalities that same argument could be carried on to have one municipality right across the province, because we have 835 municipalities. I suppose with the new municipalities it will be 837. Then to suggest that in order to avoid duplication of costs we should have only one municipality, and to give that as his major argument, I don't think holds water, particularly when speaking about the archipelago. It has also been noted the Martin report, part of which was rejected, indicated there should be two municipalities.

The other very important consideration this House should give is that it doesn't make sense to have one municipality bisected in the centre by another municipality; in this case, Carling township. To have one municipality up here and another one down here and another municipality in the centre doesn't make sense. That is another good reason why there should be two municipalities.

I want to address another point: I am very pleased the government is changing Bill 100 to correlate more closely with Bill 205 as it relates to Foley. I suppose to a degree some of the permanent residents of Foley would like to have that part of Conger which was included, as the government indicated, in Foley. I guess it was going to have about 600 or so residents. If we look at the numbers, we find out that, give or take two or three—and I'm treating the permanent and the seasonal residents equally here—there were about 400 cottagers who wanted to stay in the archipelago.

There were about 210 people—I think that figure has been revised down to about 210 from 260—according to a petition, which I guess was conducted in about as fair a way as can be conducted, who did not want to be part of the archipelago and in turn wanted to be part of Foley.

We had about a two-to-one ratio of people who wanted to be part of the archipelago, and it is very pleasing to see that the government in this instance will be proposing an amendment which will coincide more closely with the wishes of the residents of the archipelago.

It was also pointed out by one of the councillors in Foley that if the archipelago people did not want to be part of Foley there was no reason for them to be part of it. They should choose their own destiny, and in this case I think it is overwhelmingly in favour of not going with Foley.

I might also point out that that was not in any way negative as far as Foley was concerned. Both my colleague and I visited Foley, and they have very adequate facilities there and a very good administration. Although they could have been able to deal with the annexed area, I think the government is right in not including that area in this bill.

In fact, when the parliamentary assistant was speaking to this point, he was so lucid and so articulate in his comments about why that part of Conger should not be part of Foley and should be part of the archipelago that I could not see why they ever included it with Foley in the second place, I suppose I should say, because they did not in Bill 205.

I was surprised to learn in the bill that the reeve is going to be appointed by the councillors in the first election. I thought democracy would dictate that the mayor or the reeve—certainly the head of the municipality—should be elected by the people.

Mr. Rotenberg: That's what you wanted for Metro yesterday.

Mr. Epp: We are talking there about a two-tier administration, and I am sorry the parliamentary assistant cannot distinguish between the two. We are talking here about a different form of government altogether. I suppose the parliamentary assistant is already thinking in terms of regional government in that area—

Mr. Rotenberg: No way!

Mr. Epp: —and it's unfortunate that he is already thinking that the person should be appointed rather than elected. Anyway, be that as it may, we feel very strongly that the reeve should be elected during the first election, that the people should have a choice as to who that person is and that the first person should have an opportunity going about and meeting the residents and trying to get some support by the residents.

We also believe that the township hall should be in the municipality. There may be some argument to have that in an adjacent municipality, but certainly not any place in the Parry Sound district. The reason this was put in, as I understand it, was that there was a fear that the residents were going to have their meetings here in Toronto; I heard that on more than one occasion. So they could not have the meetings here in Toronto, the government decided to say, "Look, we'll restrict this to the Parry Sound district," which is a very large district. They could almost have it in Toronto but not quite. We feel they should have it in the municipality but, failing that, they should certainly have it in the adjacent municipality. I will be interested to hear some points of view expressed by the parliamentary assistant with respect to that particular matter.

In conclusion, we think the structure is a fairly good one, consequent of course on the amendments that we are going to introduce. Taking unorganized areas and making a township out of those unorganized areas is a step toward autonomy and certainly a step toward the right direction. As far as planning is concerned, many more benefits are going to accrue to the area because they are going to have more organized planning and maybe not as many severances and annexations and so forth. It will bring some order out of, I suppose, a form of chaos and bring about greater consultation with the people.

In conclusion, I support the principle of the bill and recommend it to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I had wanted to speak for five or 10 minutes on the principle of this bill but, in the interests of getting finished at one o'clock, I will confine that to about two minutes. Perhaps during some of the amendments, with the Chairman's permission and not being out of order, I will be able to interject some of my thoughts at that time.

The member for Wentworth has pretty well outlined the position of our party in this. I recognize all the difficulties of restructuring government anywhere. I do want to commend the government for going about it in this manner, rather than in the form of annexation, which is much more costly. One also can look at the total perspective by doing it legislatively.

There are two good measures in the final bill with the amendment that is going to be introduced. One is that we are moving quite a lot of unorganized territory into organized municipalities. I am in favour of that. I think local self-rule is a good principle. Secondly, we are moving the northeast part of Conger into Georgian Bay Archipelago, which is advisable.

When the amendments come up, I am going to listen rather closely to them. We have decided some things, but I am going to listen rather closely to the amendments and make decisions based on the arguments that are put forward, with perhaps two exceptions. One is that it seems to us that there should be two municipalities there rather than the one. There is a place for two groups being formed at the same time to experiment and perhaps go in different directions. At some future date, we can determine which one should be preferable to follow if it all goes into one municipality. The second is that it leaves more options open than if we put them together at this present time. It is always easier to unite than it is to divide, once we get a structure set up and vested interest.

The second thing we have decided is that there should not be an exemption from startup grants. The member for Parry Sound must know that Mr. McKeough in his report back in the winter of 1978 made the comment that the government of Ontario is prepared to give special financial and other support to municipalities in the district of Parry Sound. He went on to say this legislation would give the Parry Sound district municipalities the provision of special financial assistance. I don't think we should rule that out at this time. They may be going to be better off at the beginning than other areas. But this government has given startup grants to regional governments across this province and that principle should be in the bill which we finally adopt in this House.

As I say, I hope to make some more comments during the clause-by-clause discussion and I will be listening very closely when the debate takes place on that.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the approval in principle of Bill 100. My family has had a very happy connection with this area and the area to the south for some 80 years. While I personally have not spent many recent summers in the area, I know how much enjoyment so many of our Ontario residents and others have gained from the cottage and summer activities which they have enjoyed in the area. I would particularly include the Premier (Mr. Davis) and his family, who also know the entire Georgian Bay area particularly well.

I was impressed with receiving copies of the brief that had gone to the ministry in March 1979. After Bill 100 had come before us, it was important to see the changes from that original Bill 205. I am pleased the ministry has accepted the recommendations which the majority of the cottagers and other residents of the area have suggested concerning the matter of annexation.

I think the member for Parry Sound and Minister of Revenue has very well stated the balancing which has had to occur. I know the large numbers of persons in the cottagers' associations particularly will be pleased that the bill in that annexation matter has been returned to its initial state. The brief that has been submitted has been well put together, and I think thoroughly considered.

So far as the development of two municipalities is concerned, I presume we will wait until the matter goes to committee to discuss that item further. However, I do hope these two areas, now that the first one has really been resolved, will be dealt with in amendments to the bill, and I commend the ministry for dealing with that first item. I hope when the time comes they will reconsider the second matter, also.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

236. Mr. di Santo: Would the ministry calculate the total annual spending on goods and services for the Ontario government by ministry, by agency and by public corporation? Would the ministry calculate the percentage by value of those goods and services that are not manufactured or produced in Canada? [Tabled June 5, 1979.]

237. Mr. di Santo: Would the ministry table 50 examples of Ontario government purchases since January 1, 1978 where a price preference of more than 10 percent was applied to a Canadian bid? Would he indicate the date of each of those purchases, and its value? [Tabled June 5, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The answers to questions 236 and 237 cannot be obtained within the 14 calendar day limit. This serves notice that the answers will be forthcoming as soon as the information has been obtained and compiled, approximately July 15.

TRIBUTES TO HELEN ALLEN

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with the House's concurrence I am doing something different today. It is a privilege to pay tribute to Helen Allen, the author of "Today's Child," a woman of great dedication and sensitivity, whose efforts on behalf of hard-to-place children have earned her the gratitude and affection of thousands of children and their adoptive parents.

Miss Allen has worked quietly and without fanfare for more than 16 years in this most important social area. Her column began at a time when there was difficulty gaining acceptance for older children, those with mixed racial backgrounds and the handicapped. Children such as these more often than not had little more than institutional care ahead of them. Miss Allen became a mother to them all. Her detailed and personal portraits of the children she featured in her column presented the challenge and rewards potential parents could expect through adopting one of her children. Each column, I believe it is fair to say, reads as if it was written by a proud mother, anxious to talk about a favourite son or daughter. She opened the hearts and minds of many people, and for that the people of this province, the children and their families owe her a great debt of gratitude and appreciation.

"Today's Child," which was started in 1964 in the Toronto Telegram with the co-operation of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, now appears in more than 100 daily and weekly newspapers throughout this province. In addition, Miss Allen inaugurated the television version, Family Finder, in 1969. When the Telegram closed in 1971, Miss Allen continued the column in co-operation with the ministry. It has now many imitators throughout North America and indeed throughout the world.

Miss Allen has freely shared her experience with children's workers from these jurisdictions and helped them along the way towards establishing their own programs. She was able to reassure these people, many of them professionals, who were concerned about the use of the media in the adoption process. The same concerns about confidentiality and the like were quickly overcome in Ontario through the positive results that came almost immediately from "Today's Child." Since then, more than 10,000 adoptions have taken place in Ontario.

Helen Allen had already made a considerable contribution as a newspaper woman in the province before she began "Today's Child." She has been a general reporter, movie critic, women's editor, features editor and political writer. Her work saw her involved with many of the major events of our times. Her readers could always count on the clarity, fairness, sensitivity and accuracy of her reports, qualities that she brought to each "Today's Child."

Therefore, in this International Year of the Child, I believe it is proper and fitting that we in this Legislature acknowledge to Helen Allen, on behalf of the people in the province and those whose lives she has touched with the joy of family-sharing, that we do truly appreciate the great work she has done and wish to commemorate it through this ceremony here today.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those of us in the official opposition, I wish to associate ourselves with the excellent remarks just made by the Premier. People have tried over the years various forms of social organizations. All of them have their good and bad points yet one finds, as the years pass, that there is no real substitute for the family as we know it, the traditional family unit. There have been very interesting attempts at group and communal living; there have been interesting and valuable institutional arrangements with excellent people, but there is still no substitute for the family.

Miss Allen took the fact that there were thousands, tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of children around the world who did not have easy access to a home and family. Instead of doing as so many of us do, cursing the darkness, she thought to light a candle. Little by little, she herself and those who have taken on the method which she pioneered have brought about that warmth and that family life for thousands and thousands of young human beings who otherwise might not have had that chance. All of us are in her debt. It is an honour simply to be associated with those who would do for humanity what Miss Allen has done. We salute her and wish her well.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the voice of a child who was contributing his or her opinion about the scroll which is being given to Helen Allen. I think it is a very positive endorsement coming from the gallery. I would like to join with it and with the words of the Premier and of the Leader of the Opposition.

I would like to speak not just on behalf of my party, but also as a parent who has on a number of occasions discussed with my wife, after reading a column of Helen Allen's with maybe one or two girls in it, since we have boys, the possibility of adding to our family. Helen Allen's column has for us, and I am sure for many thousands of other people across the province, always kept to the fore that question of whether you can in fact be a parent to some kids who need parents? Can you expand your heart and can you expand your family in order to include these particular children? I think that kind of challenge is very important in a society which for too many of us tends to be, or is becoming, a kind of "me" society where we look only at our own personal needs and not at the needs of the community as a whole.

Adoption has traditionally been thought of as going to the hospital and bringing home a bright little blond baby, a week or two old, who will coo, be adoring and do what babies are meant to do. But the facts are—and that's what "Today's Child" and the Family Finder television show have shown—that there are real children out there and that there are problems in adoption in terms of finding adoptive parents for older children, for kids who have health problems, for kids who in some cases have been scarred emotionally because of their family background or who have other kinds of mental problems, for kids who perhaps have some degree of retardation and for kids who have enormously strong ties with their family, their cultural group or ethnic group or with their siblings, ties which if possible should not be broken.

I think it is almost a miracle that at times Helen Allen, through her column and through the TV show, has been able to find parents for family groups of as many as four or five children together, who should not by any stretch of the imagination be separated, but who might otherwise be condemned to live out their childhood in institutions rather than with a family. Through her column over the course of the last 16 years, Helen Allen has helped to make adoption of the difficult-to-place children just as acceptable as adoption of the adorable young infant.

On behalf of everyone here in the Legislature, I wish to say that the fact that the column itself has placed 3,600 children over the past 15 and 16 years—and Helen Allen can look to that as an accomplishment—and many thousands more children in this province and other parts of the world have also been able to find families because of this column and because of its imitators in other jurisdictions, is an accomplishment to be proud of in one's life. If I were able to reach my senior citizenship—or any of us—with that accomplishment behind me, I would feel it was a life well spent.

We congratulate Helen Allen on her accomplishment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that we have not done this in the House before—or certainly not for some time—I am not sure exactly what the rules provide. I thought that since Miss Allen is not allowed to come on the floor of the Chamber, perhaps you would join me, Mr. Speaker, and we would go to the edge of the assembly for this presentation of a scroll to Miss Allen.

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is to some extent in the same spirit, so I wonder if I could have your indulgence and the indulgence of the members of the House for just a moment.

I want to rise to draw the attention of members to the plight of Vietnamese refugees who, we are told, are being put out to sea in leaky boats. I would hope, and I know that our House would be unanimous in the view, that Ontario, through the Premier, should state our willingness to accept our share of these refugees and to encourage the government of Canada to state its willingness on the international scene to accept our fair share of these refugees from Viet Nam.

We have in our time as a country accepted on a humanitarian basis people in great difficulty and I am sure our country and our province would want to rise to this occasion. I know that members would share this sentiment with me. If we could express ourselves through our government, I know we would feel much better about it at this important time on the world stage.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was intending to say a couple of words about what is happening in southeast Asia as well. Yesterday at the provincial council meeting of the Ontario New Democratic Party, my party passed an emergency resolution that condemned the genocide taking place in Viet Nam and expressed grave concern at the actions of the governments of Malaysia, the Philippines and other countries in the southeast Asia area, in seeking to turn away the refugees, the boat people. We called on the government of Canada to open Canada's hearts and open our doors to provide leadership to the rest of the world in accepting more of these refugees and also in providing financial and material support to the countries such as Malaysia, which are now bearing the burden of having to lodge them.

I would like also to join in the sentiments that have been expressed and to ask the Premier if he would convey those to the government of Canada. I would like to suggest it would perhaps be appropriate that, by agreement between the three parties, a motion to that effect could be adopted by this Legislature, perhaps at our sitting tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, actually the new Minister of Immigration was in touch and we had a brief discussion in cabinet on Wednesday. We have already communicated to Mr. Atkey the agreement of this province to accept and assist an increased number of Vietnamese people. This action is already underway. Mr. Atkey was in communication, I believe it was last Tuesday or Wednesday. Cabinet discussed it on Wednesday of last week and I believe the communique has already gone to Mr. Atkey indicating our intent to assist and co-operate on the assumption the government of Canada is probably going to increase the number of Vietnamese refugees coming into this country.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Last Thursday, just prior to leaving for Israel, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) promised to give updated information on tenders called by the ministries and said he would have that for us "tomorrow morning," which was last Friday morning. That information was not provided. In fact, the minister has instead gone off to Jerusalem or other places in Israel.

I want to bring to your attention, the information we have that companies in Canada are still being asked to bid on tender documents which require such things as Kodak Ektalite or Bell & Howell SR-900 microfiche readers. In other words, products of multinational firms often made outside of this country are being used in Ontario government specifications, rather than neutral documents or documents that specify Canadian-built equipment.

EXCHANGE OF TAX INFORMATION

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the honourable members that this morning four exchange of information agreements were signed between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The agreements, signed by myself, the Honourable Jacques Parizeau, Quebec Minister of Finance and of Revenue, and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), formalize the exchange of taxpayer information to ease the tax administration process and to provide for intergovernmental fuel tax adjustments between the two provinces. Tax statutes of the two provinces provide for this type of exchange of information by mutual agreement.

I would like to point out that Ontario has interprovincial taxation agreements in one form or another with every province in Canada.

Specifically, the formal tax agreements between Ontario and Quebec provide: First, for the exchange of gasoline and fuel tax information and direct intergovernmental adjustments of tax where fuel has been taxed in one province and transferred in bulk to another.

Second, for the exchange of audit information and joint audits where taxpayers operate in both provinces.

Third, for both provinces to advise the other of the proposed tax assessments which affect the other's revenue or income allocation to avoid double taxation.

Fourth, for Ontario and Quebec to carry out tax investigations on a co-operative basis in an effort to reduce tax evasion.

Collectively, these formalized measures will largely reduce the incidence of double taxation and will significantly simplify the taxation process for taxpayers with dealings in both jurisdictions. Additionally, the ongoing exchange of taxation data and the use of joint audits will put to more effective use the manpower resources of both revenue ministries, and the combined investigative capacity of the two provinces working together should have a substantial impact on the incidence of tax evasion.

Although these same exchanges of information between Ontario and Quebec existed until today on the basis of informal letters of understanding, not unlike present arrangements with other provincial jurisdictions, I see the formalization of these arrangements as a very important advance in the reduction of double taxation affecting the citizens of our two provinces.

The staff of both ministries have worked very hard for a number of months to formulate this comprehensive set of agreements. I am sure the signing this morning will be of mutual benefit to both jurisdictions in the administration of our respective taxing statutes.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that a 50-50 cost-sharing agreement has been reached between the government of Ontario and the government of Canada to provide $58 million over the next five years for the development and demonstration of renewable energy and energy conservation technologies.

As honourable members know, in the last 12 months Ontario has launched a number of energy conservation programs, including an innovative program at the municipal level; a program to encourage commercial building operators in downtown Toronto to dim the night skyline; a program to identify energy conservation techniques for the province's 800 skating rinks and arenas; several pilot thermography information and home energy analysis projects in selected communities throughout the province; an experimental car-pooling and van-pooling project; and programs to advance knowledge and understanding of the potential for district heating and industrial cogeneration.

The agreement announced today is an important additional contribution towards realizing Ontario's policy objective of reducing the provincial rate of growth of demand for energy to two per cent by 1985 from the present growth rate of 2.9 per cent. This reduction would represent a saving equivalent to about 40 million barrels of crude oil per year in 1985. I am pleased to say we are well on the way to achieving that goal. Prior to the 1973 oil crisis, Ontario's demand for energy grew at a rate of more than five per cent per year.

In the area of renewable energy development, the Ministry of Energy has played a key role in demonstrating the potential for solar energy equipment in the first solar-heated school in the country in St. Catharines, Ontario; a public swimming pool in Richmond Hill; a hospital in Oakville; a high school in the borough of Etobicoke; Ontario Housing Corporation's homes in Toronto; and a senior citizens residence in Aylmer.

Similarly, the ministry has been working with municipalities, the private sector and industry on projects to turn waste, whether it be in the form of garbage, wood waste, farm waste or waste heat, into usable energy.

Mr. Wildman: What's happening in Hearst? Tell us about that.

Hon. Mr. Auld: By the year 2000, we expect that at least two per cent of Ontario's primary energy requirements will be met by the further development of indigenous renewable energy resources. While that goal may seem modest, it translates into roughly the equivalent of 20 million barrels of oil annually, enough to heat almost one million new homes.

In the ministry's view, it is an entirely reasonable target, keeping in mind the current state of renewable technology and the reality that other competing energy supplies are still cheaper and more reliable for most applications. It is our hope and our expectation, however, that the new agreement will significantly enhance the prospects that technology being developed elsewhere will be successfully adapted to Canadian conditions and that Canadian renewable energy technology will be developed on a selected basis.

Because Ontario is already a leader in Canada in most areas of energy conservation and renewable energy, this program will stimulate the province's growing renewable energy and conservation industrial capability. It will also further strengthen the competitive position of Ontario firms to take advantage of the industrial development opportunities arising from similar agreements being negotiated between the federal government and other provinces.

The Ministry of Energy will administer the program in Ontario. The allocation of funds will be approved by a management committee consisting of representatives of both governments. In general terms, the following principles will govern the disposition of the funds:

First, funds will be allocated to those areas where there is the greatest potential for achieving energy savings or for demonstrating the application of renewable-energy technology rather than to individuals for small-scale, private projects.

Second, the general criteria for choosing projects will include the potential for conservation of energy or for the development of alternative energy; cost-effectiveness; contribution to employment; impact on public awareness; private-sector interest and participation, including cost-sharing; and the potential contribution to Canadian energy, industrial, trade, regional and environmental objectives.

Under the terms of the agreement, the governments of Ontario and Canada will share equally the costs of projects. Third parties may also participate in projects and would normally be expected to assume a portion of the costs.

In this latter connection, and to assist us to allocate the funds to achieve maximum results, we will be seeking the co-operation of many sectors of the community. Specifically, we will be asking those industry associations and groups which can benefit directly from information resulting from development and demonstration projects, to identify those opportunities and candidate projects which can best serve the needs of many. In fact, a key condition which must be met before a proposal will be considered by the Ministry of Energy is whether it clearly sets out in a demonstrable way the benefits which the project will bring to the community at large.

One example of the kind of proposal which could be considered is a proposal from condominium associations which may want to get together to identify conservation or renewable-energy projects for their buildings. In this way, projects in a few locations will help many others determine what is feasible and cost-effective. Church groups may want to do the same thing.

Another example: The Ministry of Energy has been working with the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada in preparing a guide for builders on how to incorporate energy-efficient layout and design, passive solar heating design and solar domestic hot water units in new home construction.

We have discussed with the Ontario executive of HUDAC the possibility of adapting the designs of some model homes to incorporate these new approaches to give all builders and the home-buying public an opportunity to see what can be achieved. This kind of project could have a significant impact on the energy needs of new homes.

In brief, this will be our approach to the allocation of these funds.

Over the next few months, detailed announcements of how the funds will be allocated and invitations for submissions of project proposals will be forthcoming.

I should stress that this is not a program to subsidize the investment costs of individual businesses or home owners. Rather, it is a program to advance energy conservation and renewable-energy technologies so that reliable new products and techniques will be available for the public to invest in according to their own needs. As such, it will make a significant contribution to safeguarding our energy future and conserving our non-renewable resources.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BALLOT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that, as the House is to sit at 10 o'clock Thursday morning, the ballot for the private members' business will be held at 9:30 a.m. on that date.

The Leader of the Opposition for question period.

Mr. S. Smith: I was waiting for "Oral questions," Mr. Speaker. Without that, I don't salivate on time; I need that signal.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Energy on one or two points stemming from his statement to the Legislature?

First of all, how does he imagine that Ontario can achieve the technological leadership in the field of conservation of renewable energy, which we believe is within our grasp if we only work at it, when he and the federal government are going to put about $6 million each per year into this enterprise, while in the United States, for solar energy alone and without even talking of conservation and all the other forms of renewable energy, they are putting in $650 million in one year alone?

With these paltry sums, compared to the $4.5 billion or $5 billion that Darlington is scheduled to cost, how does he imagine we can possibly compete on the world scene? Why is he letting that particular area of technological expertise pass us by with these trifling sums of money?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I have said in the House previously, we don't intend to attempt to solve all the problems and invent all the new technology. What we are doing is, first of all, observing what is being done in a public way in other jurisdictions, and spending some time and money on adapting schemes that seem to have promise in other jurisdictions to the unique situations we have in various parts of our province, which differ again from situations in other provinces in the country.

In my remarks a few moments ago I did not say we are expecting to become the world leaders in conservation and exploitation and technology in renewable energy and conservation; I said the program "will stimulate the province's growing renewable energy and conservation industrial capability. It will also further strengthen the competitive position of Ontario firms to take advantage of the industrial development opportunities . . .”

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, why shouldn't we be world leaders? We spend billions on education here. We don't have to go totally down the nuclear road. Why doesn't the government aim high and make us world leaders in renewable energy and conservation techniques? The world will need it.

May I ask, furthermore, what is this interesting new government policy objective of reducing the provincial rate of growth of demand for energy to two per cent by 1985? That sure isn't what Ontario Hydro told us when it was in front of us. Their electricity projections are about four and a half per cent, and their projections for total energy growth are well above two per cent.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am speaking of total energy growth, and that is the goal announced by this ministry and by my predecessors in this ministry some time ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why this government has set its sights so low in terms of what renewable energy and conservation can contribute to our energy needs? Is the minister not aware that through conservation techniques it should be possible to bring our energy demands back down to the level of eight or 10 years ago; that is, to cut our energy needs by about 20 or 25 per cent with no loss at all, either in industrial production or in the standard of living? Why is it that the government is only talking about two per cent of our total energy needs coming from renewable energy sources or from conservation when the potential, if the government showed leadership, is so much greater?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Again, I don't agree with the leader of the New Democratic Party that we can have an actual reduction in energy use. Quite frankly, my personal opinion is I don't think that is a feasible target in any part of North America. I do think we can reduce the rate of growth of the total energy demand significantly, and that is exactly what I said.

RAPE CRISIS CENTRES

Mr. S. Smith: I was going to direct a question to either the Premier or the Deputy Premier. Oh, there is the Deputy Premier with his back to me.

Let me ask a question of the Deputy Premier in his capacity as Provincial Secretary for Justice. In view of the minister's comment last week that rape crisis centres should establish community support for their ongoing projects and his statement that the government was no longer willing to give them ongoing funds but rather wants to use its money for short-term projects, would the minister explain what organizations such as the Hamilton rape crisis centre are supposed to do when they have a source of community funds from the United Way but that support is contingent upon their also getting some money from the government? They have some $14,500 from the United Way, if the government comes up with its $15,000. Would it not be fairer to give an incentive to these rape crisis centres and offer at least to match contributions they receive from their own communities?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition will perhaps recall, when the community information centre program of the province was established by the former Ministry of the Provincial Secretary, that was the relationship and that is how Hamilton got involved. The interesting question which the member may want to ask at the community level is how much fragmentation do we want on community information facilities? There may be some point at which to approach this whole question in some co-ordinated way. How many crisis telephone numbers, how many facilities for this type of community response, does each community want to support?

I would point out to the member that it is not a case of giving up support of the rape crisis centres. There has been no established formula for support in so far as this facility is concerned. In an attempt to be helpful, we have been saying to the Ontario rape crisis co-ordinators let's discuss ways in which we can help them to become better known in their communities and to assist them in some practical ways to invite the community to become far more involved in support of their programs. Let's be honest. We have a number of competing needs in each community. Where are we going to stop if we get involved in each individual program along the way? Aren't there other ways in which we can be helpful?

To go back to the member's original question, he will find in Hamilton and in many communities throughout the province, community information centres already in place with this relationship of so much from the United Appeal and so much from the provincial government. I am wondering how much consultation there has been with these people, the Ontario rape crisis people and those community information facilities that are already in place and are being funded the very way the member talks about.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister not understand the very important difference between the function of a rape crisis centre and the functioning of a community information service? Does the minister not recognize in Hamilton the rape crisis centre will have to close down if the government doesn't come up with its share of the money so that it can collect the community share of the money from the voluntary sector?

At the very least, why doesn't the government make the same offer? First of all, give Hamilton its share so that it can get its money from the United Way and, secondly, make the same offer to the other rape crisis centres across Ontario.

If the government wants us to believe the reason it is holding back on them is that it wants to avoid a multiplicity of services, why is the government starting a new service in Brampton, announced by the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) recently, to assist victims of various other crimes?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Great town.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister not realize the importance of assisting the victims of one of the most serious crimes of our time, one which is on the increase, namely, rape?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would assume that the very progressive program announced by my colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services, would encompass the victims of that particular criminal activity. There is no reason to say that would be precluded.

Secondly, I point out to the member that in many of the communities throughout this province there are care lines and there are crisis centres, most of which are looking to the community for support. I am quite aware that there are special needs, depending on the crisis. There are battered children, battered wives and all sorts of specific areas of concern to which we would address ourselves in this co-ordinated way.

Mrs. Campbell: Does the government care about any of them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I must say that I haven't met with the Hamilton people, but I would be very happy to meet with them to sit down and discuss their particular needs with them.

Mr. S. Smith: Give them the government share and let them get their community share. You won't even do that.

Mr. McGuigan: Supplementary: Would the Deputy Premier confer with his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry), and inform the House of his response to the request by the Ontario Status of Women Council for an investigation report on the recent OPP study which described young rape victims as promiscuous and indiscreet?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I suppose the straightforward answer is yes, I would be very happy to ask the Solicitor General to respond to that. This is not the first time this matter has been brought up in the House. I thought the matter had been responded to at an earlier time. I will bring the matter up again with the Solicitor General.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING: NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: I want to ask the Chairman of Management Board a question about government purchasing which arises from the case of Canadian Applied Technology, which we raised last week, and its unsuccessful bid to supply the Ministry of the Environment with an air quality monitoring device in Nanticoke.

Is the minister aware that there was no public opening of bids for this contract of roughly $200,000? Is the minister aware that although the company, CAT, knows that its bid was lower than that of the winning firm from Texas it has never been able to find out what the winning firm bid? Is it government policy to prevent companies that bid for Ontario government contracts from knowing what the other bidders bid or what the winners bid? Is that now government policy and is that also government policy with regard to the public's knowing what is bid on Ontario government contracts?

Hon. Mr. McCague: It is my understanding that where tenders are for items on which there is a certain element of judgement and a certain number of conditions attached, they are not opened publicly. If it's for a specific item in which several are able to supply exactly the same equipment, those tenders can be opened publicly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: We've been talking with the ministry's officials today. Is the minister aware that according to the information we've been able to gather, a majority of purchases which are made by the government do not have public openings of tender but are carried out in some other way to which the public appears to have no access? Could the minister explain why it is the Management Board doesn't require as a matter of course that ministries of the government publish a list of all bidders and of bid prices on government contracts? This is the standard practice in major municipalities across the province. Surely if we had a government that was committed to ensuring that the taxpayers' money was spent effectively, it would also be a matter of course that bidders and bid prices would be published by the Ontario government.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think I already explained that to the leader of the third party. Where a very complicated evaluation process is necessary with a tender, those are not opened publicly. It wouldn't serve any particular interest to do such. Where the tenders involve a standard kind of equipment and it's a question of price only, then the normal procedure would be to have a public opening—if the bidders requested it.

Mr. Hall: Supplementary: In view of the fact that on Monday, June 11, my leader asked the Minister of the Environment to make public the reasons for the rejection of Canadian Applied Technology's bid on the Nanticoke environment management program, and since the company had informed us they are willing to have the information made public, and since the written permission the minister requested from the company has been received in two separate letters dated June 11 and June 13, will he speak to his colleague and see that this information is made available to the House? Does the government intend to stall on this matter until the session is over?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'll be glad to bring to the attention of the Minister of the Environment the fact that the honourable member asked that question.

Mr. Laughren: As it would appear the weighting government ministries apply in the decision-making process is weighted more to things like technical considerations rather than Canadian content, would the Chairman of Management Board direct all the ministries to attach a very heavy weighting to the Canadian content part of the decision-making process, so we can see there is a real commitment to the whole idea of Canadian content in the awarding of government purchases?

Hon. Mr. McCague: As the honourable member knows, there has always been a Canadian and Ontario preference. However, I will be glad to take a look at that policy to see it is fair to those people in Ontario and Canada.

Mr. S. Smith: May I read by way of a final supplementary to the minister a quote which says: "I think we are interested in fair trading, but I think we understand without realistic access to at least our own domestic market on a nation-wide basis we will be effectively prevented from developing the technology that is needed in many critical industries"? That quote is from the Minister of Industry and Tourism in the minister's own government. How can he possibly say things of this kind and then discriminate against Canadian companies the way he has in the case of CAT?

Mr. Eakins: Where is Larry today?

[2:45]

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I want the minister to answer this question. Is it not the case that any ministry that says there are technical questions involved with a particular purchase can thereby suppress public scrutiny of the tendering process and refuse to publish the tender prices and the bids on a particular contract? Is that proper stewardship of the money of the taxpayers of Ontario? Should not they be compelled to publish all of the tenders and, in cases where technical merit had greater weight than price, explain why it was that price alone did not govern the choice of contractor on that particular bid?

Mr. MacDonald: This is a retreat to pre-Hydro scandal, early-1950 days.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member knows the answer to that question.

Mr. S. Smith: Is that arrogance or ignorance?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I thought we had open tendering in this government, and obviously we do not have any more. I am really shocked to find this out.

Hon. Mr. Walker: You look it.

Mr. S. Smith: The Duplessis regime was the same.

Mr. Cassidy: It is back to the days of George Drew—away back in the 1930s—

Mr. Speaker: Question!

SKILLS TRAINING FOR WOMEN

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Since women make up 40 per cent of the work force of Ontario, could the minister explain to the House why, according to the figures she has tabled in the House, less than one per cent of the workers who have been enrolled in employer-sponsored training are women?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot explain that. But it is my hope, as a result of the encouragement that is being given to women to consider very seriously skill training as an alternative and viable career choice, that many more women will be interested in involving themselves in such programs.

A new employer-sponsored training agreement in the machine building trades was signed just last week, and an increased percentage of the applicants for that educational process will be women.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister aware that over the course of the past four years 1,700 women have taken courses at community colleges across the province to introduce them to non-traditional occupations, they have taken 75,000 training days to prepare for non-traditional occupations, and yet the ministry's most recent figures show that only four women are taking apprenticeships in the construction trades, compared with 11,957 men, and only 11 women are taking apprenticeships in the motive power trades, compared with 9,793 men?

What steps is the government going to take to ensure that women have adequate access to the apprenticeships, which they are obviously eager to take but cannot get into now?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: To my knowledge, the doors are wide open to those women who choose to enter that kind of apprenticeship program. It is non-traditional. We have been attempting to demonstrate to many young women that these are reasonable career choices for them and some which they should pursue, and it is my sincere hope that that is exactly what they will do. To my knowledge, there is no impediment to the entrance of women into any of those skill-training programs.

Mr. Wildman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware that, since the government has not yet declared the sections of Bill 70 which replace the old Mining Act, women are prohibited in mining communities from taking part in most apprenticeship programs because they cannot work underground, according to the law?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am aware, too, Mr. Speaker, that all the employers in that area know that section of the bill has been modified and will take effect when the bill is promulgated. There is no reason at all why the women should not be involved in apprenticeship programs on the basis of that foreknowledge.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs.

With respect to the minister's recent decision regarding the declaration of some of the townships surrounding Lake Nipissing as disaster areas, but not the four unorganized townships of Macpherson, Loudon, Latchford and Bertram in the northwest area, is the minister aware that there are still some tourist camps in these townships that are still under some water at this time?

Since the appeal to the Minister of Industry and Tourism last month for his support, as head of the province's tourist sector, was the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs informed of their plight by the Minister of Industry and Tourism, and what steps is the minister taking further to help the townships at this time?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I do not have any record of having any direct contact from those areas to be designated as a disaster area. If they so wish to be considered, I would be happy to look at the situation.

Mr. Bolan: How does the minister explain the government's reasoning in declaring the townships of North Himsforth and Nipissing as disaster areas, which incidentally are in the riding of the member for Parry Sound, but not the unorganized townships of Macpherson, Loudon, Latchford and Bertram, when they received every bit as much damage as those areas which were declared disaster areas and which did apply to the government for some form of assistance? Is the level of the lake at one end lower than at the other?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If you will remember you asked about the other townships first. You got caught. Look after your own people.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There is a rather strange connotation in my friend's question. I should think he would be the last one to point a finger and suggest, which I take from his question, that there is some kind of favouritism towards ridings represented by the government in this program.

Mr. Bolan: What other interpretation do you have?

Mr. S. Smith: Then there is no reason to vote Tory if that is the case.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I might point out that if those particular areas are interested in being considered—I have not had them drawn to my attention—we will certainly look at those particular areas, but I draw to my friend's attention that probably one of the biggest co-ordinated government enterprises in response to a flood situation is occurring in his particular riding in the area of Field.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware of testimony given to the social development committee last week by several prominent Toronto physicians, mostly from teaching hospitals, which questioned the current statistics provided by the Ministry of Health on the number of beds per thousand, and indicating that the ratio might be substantially less than the ministry currently purports it to be if one considers nonresidents and teaching hospitals and several other variants? Is he concerned that this might lead to a rather drastic shortage of beds in the city of Toronto this summer?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that such a presentation was made, although I must admit I have not yet had the opportunity to sit down and read the Hansard of that meeting. At least six to eight weeks ago we held a meeting with representatives of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the University Teaching Association of Metropolitan Toronto, at which time we discussed the whole question of beds in Metro. From having spoken to the Wellesley clinical day, I was aware then of this view. In fact I think I acknowledged when I was last at the social development committee, to discuss beds and the like, that that view is not unlike one we share that there is a certain level of utilization of what we at present call active treatment beds for long-term purposes.

I asked this joint planning group made up of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and UTHA to look at this matter and to work with us on how that might be rationalized to ensure that in Metropolitan Toronto we do not fall below the planning standard for active treatment beds available for active treatment purposes.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Might I ask the minister if he is then rejecting their contention that he is already below that standard, and would this fall into the category of what the Ontario Medical Association referred to as a situation in which clinical brinkmanship is coming into play?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I understand from those of my staff who were present that in their calculations they do not show, I believe it is, nonresident use. I said to them when the theory was first broached with me that certainly we would be concerned about that. That is why I asked to meet with HCMT and UTHA, as part of planning for the future to ensure that in Metro we do not fall below that planning standard, and at the same time we ensure that we are meeting the ongoing needs for extended and chronic care.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary to the minister: Has the minister any knowledge of, has he expressed an opinion about, or is he concerned about the fact that large hospitals such as the Wellesley in Toronto and the Ottawa Civic are going into the summer planning to shut down a very substantial number of beds? Granted they've done this in the past, but is he concerned that, for example, the Wellesley will be closing, I believe, about 161 beds for the summer period? Is that of concern to him?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is a practice that has gone on for as long as most can recall, to take account of the fact that in the summertime, first of all, doctors and nursing staff have to have their holidays; and as well to take account of the fact that for elective procedures, as often as not, it's difficult to get patients to take bookings in that time. As long as it is not putting life and limb at risk, it's a procedure which is an indication of good management of the resources.

Mr. McClellan: Since the minister is treating the matter of the impact of nonresident patients on the ratio as news; new information, can the minister tell us whether or not he received Dr. Hugh Smythe's calculations which were sent to him, according to Dr. Smythe in committee, on April 4? Secondly, why has the minister never bothered to respond to Dr. Smythe when he sent him that material some three months ago?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: April 4, by my calculations, is a little over two months ago, but yes, they were received. As a matter of fact they were, I believe, referred to by me when I met with the joint planning group of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the University Teaching Hospitals Association.

Mr. McClellan: So you didn't just find out about it last week.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As well, I understood there had been a response sent from my ministry which apparently wasn't received. When I found that out last week when he appeared before your committee I asked somebody to check to see why and what had happened. I haven't had a report on that yet, but I understood we had at least acknowledged receipt of that. We have followed up with HCMT and UTHA, who are the planning bodies for hospitals in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. McClellan: Do you want to share that with us?

ESSEX OPP DETACHMENT

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is the Solicitor General aware that in the county of Essex 401 detachment, one shift has as few as two people on duty for the whole county of Essex?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I'm not, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to inquire into it if it's the wish of the honourable member.

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that this detachment at one time had 64 on the staff and now it's down to 38 and it covers all the provincial highways in the county of Essex, plus about eight municipalities?

Mr. S. Smith: That is why you've been looking for more money. Right Roy?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, that's one of the reasons. I'll certainly be very pleased to inquire into that matter and attempt to ascertain why what would appear to be a dramatic reduction, if the member's figures are correct, has taken place.

Mr. Bradley: They're all on the QEW harassing drivers.

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Mr. Laughren: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the apparently final decision of the Sudbury Board of Education not to re-employ a first-year teacher who had diabetes and whose sight may deteriorate, has the Minister of Labour talked to the chairperson of the Sudbury Board of Education? Does he agree that the reason given by the Sudbury board, which is that the students had the right to the best teachers available and that that teacher must be in good physical and mental condition and so forth, was really a self-serving decision to save money just in case, in the years to come, there are sick benefits which would have to be paid to Mr. Morrissey if his sight does deteriorate?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: In answer to one part of the question, no, I have not spoken to the chairman. I understand the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) has had that matter looked into.

With regard to the individual question of Mr. Morrissey, it's difficult, as the member knows, to get into a discussion of an individual person's problem, because diabetic retinopathy, which is what Mr. Morrissey has, varies greatly from individual to individual and so I think it would be improper to try to assess his case individually. As a general principle, I would agree with the member that protection for the physically handicapped, which would include someone with diabetic retinopathy, is an item which will be dealt with in the new code.

Mr. Laughren: I suspect the minister will agree with me that what the students will learn by the employment of someone who is handicapped, even if his or her condition does deteriorate, is that the value is much greater than can be measured by the saving of sick benefits to the board of education. I suspect the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) raised this a week or so ago with him as well, but would the minister not bring forward recommendation 79 of the 1977 human rights report, A Life Together, which does just what the minister mentioned a moment ago? I suspect that all parties in this House would support it and I see no reason why he could not bring it in this week. Would the minister make that commitment so that we can get this problem dealt with and prevent it from recurring in the future as well?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I want to make it very clear that we all have the same objective, that is, to get that particular amendment in place. As the member knows, it is part of a broader review of the code. That issue will be dealt with in legislation. Whether it will be dealt with this week is unlikely, but it certainly will be dealt with in this session in one way or another, and it will in particular refer to that matter of the handicapped.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of situations where people are refused employment on the basis that the group disability insurance might not be willing to insure that particular individual because of a known disability and of perhaps greater propensity of likelihood of eventual long-term disability? If the minister is aware of this practice, will he take steps either to eradicate the practice or to arrange for people at the very least to have some pro-rata arrangement made regarding their insurability so that their lack of insurability doesn't turn into a lack of employability, doubling and trebling the hardship upon these individuals?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am well aware, as the honourable member is from his practice, of the fact that people with disabilities, including, for example, my own wife with a congenital disability, have great trouble getting insurance for that type of protection. Certainly that is an issue that will have to be dealt with as part of this whole business of giving the handicapped some protection under the new Human Rights Code. I hope to be in the forefront in trying to give that kind of protection through the insurance portion of the industry that we are concerned about now.

Mr. Laughren: Would the minister tell us what he will do now to protect the job of Mr. Morrissey?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is interesting that the member wishes to pursue it, but I am telling him that it is impossible to introduce the code this week. As he knows, even if it were introduced this week, it couldn't be passed this week. But I would give him the assurance that a new code will be introduced to this Legislature, probably early in the fall. He has my undertaking on that.

Mr. Laughren: What will you do for Mr. Morrissey?

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Is the minister satisfied with the level of funding being provided to regular schools for special programs and specialized training for teachers, in light of the fact that these schools are at present being asked to accept those who have been in institutions previously where the pupil-teacher ratio has been favourable, where there has been specialized training and where there have been special programs that have been fully funded? Is the minister satisfied that the schools to which they are now being sent have sufficient funding and availability of specialized teachers to handle this situation?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The special education weighting factor can be applied in a number of ways by the school board when it requires that kind of special assistance within a school establishment. The board makes the decision about the most appropriate schools for those young people to attend if they are being transferred from other kinds of institutions into group homes and then into the educational system.

That process has been going on for several years and most of the boards are fairly expert in developing the appropriate kinds of arrangements. The special weighting factor for that educational program most certainly does apply to those as well. It depends upon the way in which the school boards utilize the funds, once they have been allocated from the ministry.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Would the minister agree that unless, as she says, the school boards utilize those funds appropriately and unless those funds are in sufficient number, it would have a severely disruptive effect on the regular classrooms, or classrooms where the mentally retarded are being educated in regular schools, having severely retarded individuals being sent to these schools where the teachers are not sufficiently trained or are not there in sufficient numbers to handle the situation they are being asked to handle? Would she not agree also that it would not really benefit those who are being taken from the institutions and placed in those classrooms?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the principle and the policy has always been that the equality of educational opportunity for those children with development handicaps is a reasonable alternative—in fact an effective and much-to-be-desired alternative—to institutionalization.

That principle I think has been accepted by a number of boards. They've also accepted the principle that this should be done without damage to the educational program for the students within the regular system. I think most boards are attempting diligently to ensure those two policies are carried out effectively. We're trying to support them as effectively as possible in that.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it not true that boards were already taking advantage of this weighting factor before the government started its massive deinstitutionalization? The government has in effect deinstitutionalized students but has not taken the money it has saved from this program and redistributed it to school boards, so there has not been an increase in funding to school boards to cope with these types of children.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the weighting factor depends specifically on the numbers of children within the programs within these school boards' jurisdiction. Indeed, there is a transfer.

Mr. Cooke: You know better than that.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware that elderly people receiving Gains in this province and who have spouses in nursing homes are being asked to pay as much as $80 a month out of their own pockets to supplement the fees paid by their spouses for nursing home care?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the per diem rate is calculated on the basis of the maximum OAS/GIS/Gains income and then deducting from that the comfort allowance of $51, to arrive at the amount of the co-payment.

If there are any particular problems where that formula is not working I would suspect it's probably in cases where individuals are eligible for but have not applied for GIS and/or Gains. If there are particular cases the honourable member would like to draw to my attention, I'd be glad to look into them. That's really all I can answer at this time.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: At least two cases have been brought to my attention that have included costs which have risen as high as $390, which is well above the Gains limit. I would like to be assured that if that is the case around the province, amendments to the Nursing Homes Act would prohibit the nursing homes from billing these spouses for these costs.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, it's a little difficult to answer without some of the details. If the honourable member has them with him, if he would send them over to me, or if he would send them in a letter, I will investigate each one and get back to the member.

Mr. Cooke: When are you going to bring the amendments in? When do we get the amendments to the Nursing Homes Act?

ANNEX PLAN

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. Will the Premier ensure to the residents of the Annex, including the Elgin-Lowther residents, the payment of their costs in the sum of $22,000 to successfully support their part two plan at the OMB? In view of the fact the cabinet has now returned that decision to the OMB, they require those costs to be able to once more try to protect their plan.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't give that undertaking. I don't recall a precedent whereby we have paid costs for groups or individuals as a result of official plan discussions before the Ontario Municipal Board which may or may not have appeared before cabinet by way of appeal.

I understand the member's concern on behalf of her constituents, but I think she is also relatively experienced in these procedures and understands that for the government to start to pay costs for a particular party to any of these hearings would be a difficult precedent to live with, and in this case to establish. As I say, I understand her raising the question, but I am in no position to give such an undertaking.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary: Is the Premier not aware that under the previous administration there was provision and in fact some costs were allocated by the previous chairman for those who had to appear before the Ontario Municipal Board? In this case, since the cabinet has intervened and not given reasons for the intervention, surely those people should be protected and not placed in a prejudiced position to try to protect their own plan.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a distinction between what the board chairman may order or award and the request the member for St. George is making of the government, which is payment to this particular group of ratepayers for their costs. I think there is a distinction.

ASBESTOS WORKERS

Mr. M. Davidson: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Can the minister explain why it is that the Workmen's Compensation Board has slowed down its program of allowing workers of the Johns-Manville plant, with proven cases of asbestosis or asbestos fibre dust effects, to come out of that plant and enter into the special rehabilitation assistance program, a program his predecessor described as being innovative and a leader in this area of the world?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'm not certain that what the member says is true. I certainly have personally looked into the question of the special rehabilitation program.

Mr. Wildman: If the member says it, it is true.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If the member has information that would lead me to believe it isn't being utilized at that Johns-Manville plant as it should be then I'd be pleased to have it.

Mr. M. Davidson: Given the last occasion a person was taken out of that plant was in November, 1978, is the minister not aware there are still 14 employees on partial disability pension resulting from asbestosis or dust effects working in that plant? Does he not feel that they should be removed from that environment as soon as possible? If he does feel that way, will he demand that the compensation board speed up rather than slow down the program of special assistance?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, first of all I don't think there is any argument about the value of that program. I concur completely with it. If the member has information on those people he feels are being kept out of that program when they should be in it, if he will give it to me I'll look into it.

LEARNING-DISABLED CHILDREN

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. Given the announcement by the minister approximately two weeks ago that the school boards of the province were informed by memorandum that they must, by September 1979, begin a program of early identification of learning disabilities; also given that such a program can only work if at least the teachers in kindergarten and grade one are properly trained to diagnose the kinds of problems we're looking for, what kinds of training programs have been prepared for the period between now and then to implement that?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the models of the early identification programs which have been established successfully in various areas of the province have been publicized to the various school boards. I would remind the honourable member that, indeed, the memorandum to the school boards directed that they must begin the implementation of a program which was to be complete by September 1980. The educational programs for teachers which will be functioning this summer will be ongoing during the winter as well.

I think it would be improper to suggest we are anticipating that teachers will make specific diagnoses. In the early identification program we don't particularly want to label children with anything. What we do want is that the school boards, and the teachers in the school system, are sensitive to the potential problems which children may have in the learning process. I think it would be a mistake if we were to suggest that teachers should be saying that this child has a specific kind of deficiency or problem or attach another kind of label to that child. Labelling does not really seem to help most of the children, but it certainly should help if the whole system becomes more sensitive to the needs of the individual child, particularly in the light of potential problems that child may have.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister aware that the vast bulk of primary teachers across the province are quite insecure about the role they are going to play in this new program? They simply do not understand it. What steps is the minister taking to correct this insecurity and to help them prepare, even if we are talking about a year or two years away rather than September 1979?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have had no indication from directors of education or from primary teachers' groups that there is any insecurity. Most of the teachers I have talked to, and certainly the directors of education and the boards, are enthusiastically in support of the development of this kind of program. If there is that kind of insecurity, we will be very happy to look at it and see what we can do to assist in removing it.

NIAGARA OMB HEARINGS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. Does the Premier recall that last February the Ontario Municipal Board announced its decision on the first half of the hearings on the Niagara food lands? Is he aware that the developers and at least one municipality have used every means at their disposal, including appeals to the OMB, appeals to the courts and an appeal to the cabinet, to upset that decision?

Now that the OMB has adjourned the hearings on the second half until those appeals to the OMB and the courts are cleared up—because everyone agrees that the final determination on the first half is so fundamental to the hearings on the second half—what possible reason is there for the deliberate delay in the ruling on the appeal to the cabinet until after the hearings on the second half are completed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just trying to trace the chronology of this. Is the member suggesting we are deliberately delaying the appeals on the first half?

Mr. Swart: The appeal to the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are not deliberately delaying anything.

Mr. Swart: May I read to the Premier the letter sent out by the secretary of the cabinet, which states: "I have been directed by the cabinet to inform you it has been decided that no decision will be made with respect to the petition mentioned above until after a decision has been pronounced by the Ontario Municipal Board, following the hearing with respect to the official plan for the Niagara planning area. This hearing has been fixed for June 4." June 4 was the start of the second hearings. May I ask the Premier—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just a second. I said there was no deliberate delay. It has been deferred, and there is a very real distinction.

Mr. Swart: If I may complete my supplementary: Does the Premier not realize that the second phase of the hearings will cost between $500,000 and $750,000, and does he know it is the taxpayers of the Niagara region who will have to pay most of that?

Does he not understand that if he rules on the appeal, and if there is a policy decision by the cabinet before the second hearings start, a base could be established that might cut those costs at least in half? Now that the hearings have been postponed until at least July 15, to get these decisions from the courts and the OMB, will the cabinet reconsider and make a ruling on the appeal to the cabinet as soon as the courts have decided?

Hon. Mr. Davis: After listening to that lengthy dissertation, which may or may not have contained a question, my guess is that my answer would be the same: My answer would be no.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Premier: Would he convey to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), who I trust will be back tomorrow, that despite what has been said about the banning of 2,4-D in school yards, 2,4-D plays a most important role in the food production process—in other words, the discovery of 2,4-D to the farmers is almost equivalent to the discovery of penicillin to us, the general public—and that before the minister has any thought of banning 2,4-D he must consult with the agricultural industry?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the honourable member, where was he last week? Why did he sit there in abject silence when this issue was being debated? Why did he not get up and have the courage, as he has today when the television cameras are no longer on, to say how essential 2,4-D is to the agricultural community in this province? Why doesn't the member talk to his leader about it?

I will certainly convey that to the Minister of the Environment because I am delighted to hear somebody opposite for once say something important on this issue.

Mr. S. Smith: On a matter of privilege, if I might, because there was some allegation made about the courage of the member, I would remind the Premier, who may not have been in the House, that the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) rose to explain that 2,4-D had a very valid use in agriculture and encouraged that use in agriculture. However, he pointed out something of which the Premier apparently is unaware, that there is a difference between spraying crops and spraying children in school yards.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On that matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I recall the member talking about corn and the fact that he was spraying 2,4-D on corn. I recall it well. I also recall the member for Huron-Middlesex sitting there, I think sending notes back and forth. I am just really congratulating him on standing up today and speaking out on behalf of the agricultural community.

Mr. Cassidy: Since our questions were devoted to the question of spraying school yards where children could be exposed and not the question of agriculture at all, will the Premier join in our request to the Minister of the Environment that he stop the spraying of 2,4-D in school yards until they can establish just what the health hazards to school kids are because of this spraying?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Minister of the Environment has dealt with the subject very well, and extensively—

Mr. Martel: Badly is the word.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh no; the member for Sudbury East doesn't know what that word means.

I can't add anything to what the Minister of the Environment has so effectively discussed here with the members of the House on this very important issue.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Last week I asked the Premier about the emulsifier that was used in the spraying of the chemical. The Minister of the Environment still has not answered that question. There is great concern that the emulsifier, or the vehicle with which 2,4-D is combined, can have a serious detrimental effect on the youngsters, possibly causing Reyes syndrome. Will the Premier ask the minister to reply to that question please?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In that some members opposite obviously want to eat up some of the clock I will endeavour to answer that question.

I recall very well the member for Windsor-Walkerville asking the Minister of the Environment this question. I would be quite prepared, when the Minister of the Environment returns from his appearances in London, to have him seek out an answer for the member for Windsor-Walkerville. The member himself could have quite easily sent him a note on Friday to remind him, but I would be delighted to convey this message.

If there are any other messages for the Minister of the Environment, I would be delighted to communicate them on behalf of any member opposite.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Isaacs: I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. What does the minister intend to do to relieve the extreme hardship faced by chronic-care patients who are confined to hospitals and confined to wheelchairs, and who face the almost total elimination of their freedom and enjoyment of life as a result of the government's $9.80 per day, or $3,577.00 a year co-payment charge?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member is taking a great degree of licence in assuming those numbers of patients in chronic care are being disadvantaged. There are in fact cases where some are undergoing hardship. Those cases are under review and will be dealt with. There is no intention on the part of this government that anyone in a chronic-care facility undergo any undue hardship.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary: I believe the provincial secretary is aware of the situation facing patients in Chedoke Hospital in Hamilton. Is she also aware that her colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), told this House on March 12 that he would take a look at this problem and see what could be done to help those people, and that nothing has been done to help them to date?

Could the minister give us more than light assurances and indicate exactly what those people can expect to relieve them of the hardships that they are facing today?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, through you to the honourable member: At the invitation of the Leader of the Opposition I did attend with him in Hamilton what was supposed to have been a private visit between the Leader of the Opposition, the people who are handicapped and who are facing difficulties and myself. It turned out to be an attempt to use those people politically. I was very distressed with the press being called in and the television interview set up; however, I can assure the honourable member I will be in touch with those people in the chronic-care facility and all of the needs and the concerns expressed to us that day will be dealt with.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege Mr. Speaker: I am amazed the minister would say this. Does the minister not recall that in this House, quite publicly when we were discussing this very matter about the wheelchair patients she took one view about it, and I another? I invited her to come to Chedoke. After many phone calls back and forth she finally hit on a Sunday when she could come. I then rearranged my schedule so I could accompany her. All that happened there was this matter, which was a public matter, resulted in one reporter from the Hamilton Spectator being present and one reporter from station CHCH-TV.

I do not understand why the minister would say this was some kind of political trick or they were being used for political purposes. I invited her publicly in this House. She came. The other half of the deal, in fact, was I would go with her to some senior citizens' establishment to see some who are happy with their circumstances. That was the deal in the House, and I stand ready to accept that. I deeply resent the notion there was any kind of trickery involved or any sort of undue publicity when the matter was a perfectly public matter right from the word go.

Mr. Havrot: You should apologize.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: On a point of order: The honourable member did invite me publicly to attend a meeting. My office immediately contacted his office and unfortunately, it was not convenient for the honourable member. Finally it was arranged on a Friday afternoon that it would be on that particular Sunday afternoon. The notes we have between our two offices were that it was to be a private visit. I was to be given the opportunity to speak with those handicapped people who were undergoing difficulties with the co-payments and there would be a tour of the hospital for me to see what was happening there. I arrived at about a quarter to five and I was met at the door by the honourable Leader of the Opposition who was accompanied by a television cameraman. I was taken into a room that was already set up with the wheelchair people and I was to sit at the head table.

Mr. Yakabuski: You were set up.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I was set up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: If you can't stand the heat, don't stay in the kitchen.

Mr. Breough: What a despicable thing to hear.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Maybe I am naive, but I still find it very offensive.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I find it very offensive, when handicapped people are exploited. I went there to hear what they had to say, I can assure members that many of them didn't speak to me because they didn't want to speak publicly about the problems they were encountering.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order: I just want to point out to the members of the House that I have before me, as a result of earlier questions asked here and as a result of my colleague's visit to Chedoke, a draft memorandum to administrators of chronic-care hospitals and chronic-care units to address this particular issue.

I've been particularly assisted by the observations of my honourable colleague.

Mr. S. Smith: May I have a copy of it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: When it's finalized, yes, sure.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

PETITION

GEORGIAN BAY ARCHIPELAGO

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 1,036 residents of the Georgian Bay Archipelago area. It is addressed to the members of the Legislature in connection with the debate on Bill 100 regarding the establishment of the Georgian Bay Archipelago township and municipality debated in the Ontario Legislature on Friday June 15, 1979.

"We wish to emphatically indicate our strong support of the creation of a single municipality rather than two separate entities. We also wish to have the first reeve of the township selected by the elected councillors from amongst themselves. A single municipality can best protect the unique environment of this area and provide effective and efficient local government."

I submit this from 1,036 people, plus the endorsement of all of the ratepayer groups in the area.

REPORT

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mrs. Campbell from the standing members' services committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that standardized procedures be established by the government to ensure that the Legislative Library receive automatically and as soon as possible after publication two copies of all published research, public briefs and submissions, published back-up documentation and published reports of commissions of inquiry related to the government of Ontario.

Mrs. Campbell: We did table a report from the committee on May 31. At that time the wording of it created some ambiguity in the mind of the archivist. This report is simply to clarify that particular report. I will move the adjournment of the debate but I hope it won't be until 1980.

On motion by Mrs. Campbell the debate was adjourned.

MOTION

SITTINGS OF HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that on Thursday, June 21 the House will meet at 10 a.m., with a luncheon interval from 1 to 2 p.m. and with routine proceedings being called at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

POLICE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 135, An Act to amend the Police Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The purpose of the bill is to remove the requirement that one member of the board of commissioners of police be a county or district court judge. The bill implements the resolution of the honourable member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), which was adopted by this House on May 10, 1979.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 137, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: The purpose of this bill is to provide for the separate taxation of mobile home park operators and mobile home owners. Where a mobile home is assessed and taxed by a municipality, the tax collector must send a tax notice to the mobile home owner, indicating the amount of tax to be paid in respect of the assessed property. Any taxes due in respect of an assessed mobile home constitute a lien on the mobile home rather than against the land of the owner of the mobile home park.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 138, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is the same as the previous one amending the Municipal Act, only to apply to education taxation in unorganized areas of northern Ontario.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved first reading of Bill 139, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, this bill gives effect to the recommendations in the June 14 report of the commission on election contributions and expenses with respect to indemnities and allowances of members of the Legislative Assembly pursuant to section 70a of the Legislative Assembly Act. In addition, the bill makes interim adjustments to indemnities which were not resolved in the commission's report, except for the question of per diem payments which is being left entirely to the commission for further study as they requested.

In a moment I shall introduce the usual companion bill to amend the Executive Council Act by providing for the same uniform interim adjustments as in the first bill.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved first reading of Bill 140, An Act to amend the Executive Council Act.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 225 and 226 and the interim answers to questions 222, 223, 224, 227 and 235 standing on the Notice Paper.

[Later (6:00)]

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the answers to questions 228 to 234 standing on the Notice Paper.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

DISTRICT OF PARRY SOUND LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments on any section of this bill?

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, you will recall at the end of second reading on Friday last that I dispensed with my closing remarks, indicating I would make some brief remarks at the beginning of the committee of the whole so that we could have second reading on Friday afternoon. With your indulgence I would like to take just a few minutes to review some of the points that were raised on second reading.

Members of the Liberal Party particularly indicated they would be putting some amendments. I will deal with those in detail when we get to that section of the act, but I would like to thank all the members opposite for their support of the act in general and for their support of the principle of the bill.

The member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) did raise a point about a lack of consultation, the fact that some residents in the area had asked for a public meeting and that public meeting was not forthcoming. I would indicate to the members of the House this request for a meeting came after a considerable number of meetings were held in the area. A number of people had signed a petition asking for a meeting but included in their petition a number of doubts they had about the bill. Before deciding whether or not to have the meeting, these points were answered by our staff person, Mr. Roger Warner, who has been dealing with this area for some two years and who visited a number of these people personally. We also sent them all a letter answering the points they had raised and the request for a meeting and saying if after reading the letter there were further problems, they should consult us again. Having heard nothing more from those people we felt there was no need to have a further meeting because the points they had raised had been answered by letter and answered by our staff person.

I would also say to the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs), who indicated some lack of a consultation, that there was intense consultation—this going back five or six years—with the people of the area and many meetings over the past several years with Mr. Warner of our staff. There was a lot of consultation, before the introduction of the bill, with all the residents, both permanent and seasonal.

Now, of course, on any bill you don't have the unanimous consent of everybody in the area to everything in the bill. But I would point out that a vast majority of the matters in this bill have the consent of almost everybody and there's no one there who's really unhappy with the bill, except for the possible amendment which will be raised this afternoon.

The member for Wentworth did raise a very legitimate question on Friday afternoon. He indicated there was nothing in the bill about the grants which would be paid to the new municipalities. That was not put in the bill because all of the grants are laid out in other pieces of legislation.

I think the member is correct in that possibly that matter should have been raised in the House, and I do apologize to him. I'd like to take a moment or two to indicate to the House the level of grants which will be forthcoming to the new municipalities which will be organized in Parry Sound.

Firstly, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications provides subsidies for roads and maintenance. These will be continued. Townships will be subsidized at the rate of 80 per cent, both the new town of Kearney and the new township of Georgian Bay Archipelago. I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that Kearney now being a town receives only a 50 per cent subsidy, but under the reconstructed municipality, the new township, they will receive the full 80 per cent.

Secondly, both townships will receive the Ontario unconditional grants. These consolidations of all the unorganized areas will specifically benefit from those grants, since as the areas are now presently unincorporated, they are not eligible for grants under this program. These grants include a per capita grant, a general support grant, a northern support grant, as well as a resource equalization grant.

The per capita grant amounts to about $7 per resident and includes a consideration of seasonal residents.

The general support grant is related to the municipal tax levy. Each municipality in Ontario receives a general support grant amounting to six per cent of its levy for local purposes.

Municipalities in northern Ontario are eligible for the general northern support grant. This provides an additional subsidy of 18 per cent to the levy for local purposes.

The resource equalization grant is paid to all municipalities who suffer from a "resource deficiency," measured in terms of equalized assessment. Again, this grant provides a subsidy that is related to the levy for local purposes; the maximum rate is 25 per cent.

All of these grants put together are now in present legislation and did not have to be included in this bill. Through this grant program a municipality could conceivably qualify for a subsidy of up to 49 per cent of its levy for municipal purposes. In fact, it is estimated both Kearney and the archipelago will receive close to the maximum level of assistance.

In addition, each area will receive the per capita grant paid in respect of its substantial seasonal population. To be specific, it is estimated that Kearney will receive an increase of about 85 per cent or $15,000 in entitlements under the program and the township of Georgian Bay Archipelago will receive an amount of about $65,000.

I put this on the record because the member for Wentworth quite properly asked about it and I think it should be noted. It is not required to be in the legislation because all of these grants are covered by present legislation, all of which will apply, and there will be transitional grants. In the bill it's indicated that the province will pay for the first elections.

I hope this covers all of the points raised by the member for Wentworth.

There's just one other point which I will deal with more fully when we get to the clause by clause, but as you noted, Mr. Chairman, I did file a petition earlier today from the majority of people in the Georgian Bay Archipelago who noted on Friday there's an indication there would be an amendment made that the Georgian Bay Archipelago would not be one municipality, as all the residents want; there will be two municipalities. [3:45]

Although I will go into more detail a little later on about this petition, I'd simply like to say to the members opposite that both parties have from time to time and almost at all times preached the philosophy of local autonomy. In this particular situation, yes, there are some reasons why it should be two; there are some reasons why it should be one. I do not think there are any reasons that it should be two municipalities that would override the fact that the vast majority of the people who have been consulted over the past two years have opted at all times for one municipality, and that from roughly Friday evening, when they were aware of the notice of motion in the House, until Sunday afternoon, some two thirds of the households in the area signed in favour of keeping it as one municipality.

Whether or not they bring this amendment forward, I hope the members opposite will realize that if they do bring in the amendment and vote for it they will be doing that in the face of the vast majority of the people there who want it the other way. The reason there are only about two thirds of the households represented in the petition is simply that there were only 48 hours to gather signatures. Had they been given another few days, I am sure that many more people would have been able to sign this petition.

With those few remarks, I suggest that we go on to clause-by-clause consideration, and I will deal with any amendments as they come up in far more detail.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 2 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"2. In this part 'township' means the township of Georgian Bay North Archipelago as constituted under section 3 or the township of Georgian Bay South Archipelago as constituted under section 3(a)."

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, without belabouring this archipelago subject too long, I do want to reiterate just briefly the position I took on Friday. I thought it was the right position then, and I have no reason to believe at this time that it is the wrong position.

Essentially what we have here is a series of islands and some of the mainland, bisected in the centre by at least two or three other municipalities, including Parry Sound and Carling township. I do not think that it is very rational or very logical to have this one municipality made up of two parts, bisected in the centre by other municipalities, and to maintain that that is a logical extension.

In the future, if it does come about that all the people who are in the archipelago wish to have one large municipality, I suppose we might have to look at that again, but that is not the proposal before us.

The other thing is that we genuinely feel that the spirit of co-operation can prevail much better if there is a division here rather than a feeling of threat, whether that is legitimate or not. I am not a psychiatrist or one of those people who can read all kinds of minds, but there is a genuine feeling by many of the people on the mainland who live in some of the other municipalities that some kind of threat exists here if we have one large archipelago municipality.

As far as the new municipality is concerned, we feel it should be two; this will better serve not only the archipelago but also the whole area. In the future, if it should come that we want one large municipality, that can be determined at that time.

I want to comment just briefly about the petition that we have here. I commend the people for having the petition, but I think it must be reiterated—and the member for Wilson Heights indicated one or two or three times that this was a majority of the people, and then some other times he changed it by saying it was a majority of the people who signed. I do not disagree with the fact that it could have been a majority of the people who signed, but if 1,000 signatures are a majority of the people in the archipelago then we have been misled by a number of sources. I thought the population of the whole archipelago was closer to about 7,000 than 1,000; a majority then would be about 3,500. I think the parliamentary assistant to the minister owes us an explanation of that.

The other thing is, I told him earlier with respect to this particular petition that I would like to have some evidence that these people signing the petition were given an explanation of our views as we explained on Friday. He couldn't give us any commitment that our views, as we explained them in the Legislature the other day, were put forth to the people in the archipelago; in other words, that they could see the other side of the story and not only one side.

I've served on municipal council on many occasions over nine and a half years and we've found that in signing a petition not everybody gets a full explanation of the pros and cons before they sign. I would like some kind of confirmation or some kind of statement by the parliamentary assistant that this took place, that both sides were presented. I hope he can give us that.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, during the weekend I had the opportunity to speak to a number of people who live in the district of Parry Sound, especially in the western portion, the subject of this amendment. I have to say to the parliamentary assistant that that has reinforced my view that there has been very poor communication and very poor consultation with the people of the area with regard to Bill 100 that is before us now.

I had a total of 28 telephone conversations with people who are either permanent residents or seasonal residents in that area. Of those 28, 20 thought the bill that was before us provided for a single archipelago municipality encompassing all the islands, including the islands offshore of Carling township.

I have to say to the parliamentary assistant that if the proposal that was before us now was to do that, our views on it would be very different from our views on the bill that is before us.

There's no doubt in my mind that there is considerable confusion in the archipelago as to what's going on with regard to local government. I've checked as quickly as I could the petition that has been presented to us, and some of those who signed the petition were people I had spoken to, and they thought that a single municipality meant one municipality stretching all the way down the islands. I really don't think we can say that the people who are involved in this have been adequately informed.

I'm not at all convinced that priority has been put on trying to come to a conclusion which satisfies as best as possible the majority of people in the western part of the Parry Sound district. The motion that is before us talks about splitting the already-divided municipality into two separate municipalities. I regret that it also changes the size of the council from 10 members to six, but we can live with that.

The amendment will provide the people of the two parts of the Georgian Bay Archipelago municipality with the right to decide for themselves, in consultation with the residents and local councillors in Carling and other townships, the best way to organize the provision of services for the whole of the archipelago.

The parliamentary assistant mentioned that he has had no objections to the single municipality concept. I wanted to say to him that perhaps that too reflects poor communication, because I have communicated with a number of people who live in Carling township, both seasonal residents and permanent residents, and they oppose the single municipality and support the divided, two municipalities.

For the parliamentary assistant to say local autonomy is all very well—and he knows full well that we in this party do believe in local autonomy—but I want to say to him that what goes on on neighbouring lands is very important to the people who live in an area. If an industrial development were to take place next to your home, Mr. Chairman, or next to my home, we would want a say in that industrial development—for, against or how. That is why we have provisions that allow people who live in neighbouring lands to have input into planning decisions. I suggest this is a planning decision.

I also want to touch briefly on some of the points that have been made in the conversations I've had with residents of the area. One concern relates to the possibility of two municipalities being more expensive, and therefore higher taxes resulting than in a single municipality. That's a legitimate concern. It is one that I very much hope does not come about and need not come about because the two councils can co-operate in any way they wish and can come together for the provision of services under the Municipal Act in order to provide services at the lowest possible cost to all the residents of the archipelago, and in particular to the residents of that part of the archipelago who are not subject to normal services because their only access is by water.

The studies that have been done by the former Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, studies that were provided to us by a number of people who have been involved in this over the years, indicate that not only would the two municipalities that are being proposed in the amendment be separately viable, but that smaller units would also be viable. Therefore I have to assume that the viability of the two areas is not a question within this amendment.

There have been concerns about planning aspects and about the future need to preserve the archipelago. I fully support those concerns. I submit to the parliamentary assistant that to see indiscriminate development taking place in any part of the 30,000 islands, be it the part that is in Carling township or the part that is in the one or two archipelago municipalities, would be very undesirable.

I want to suggest further that it may well be that development can be better controlled by having two councils speaking with a single voice to oppose development applications that are undoubtedly going to come before that area than it would be to have one. If the concern is preservation of the environment, and I believe from the conversations I had, that that is the concern and a laudable concern, then the more people involved in making the decisions, in setting the rules and in keeping an eye on what's going on in the area, the better for the welfare of the citizens of the area and for the preservation of that part of this beautiful province.

I really don't feel the concerns that are being raised are based on a full understanding of the facts. The concern for the wishes of the people of Carling township is certainly a valid one, but it's not the only one. Unfortunately, we're not being presented with a bill that can be amended to set up a series of municipalities that might even better represent the wishes of the people of the islands and the shoreline to this House and to the rest of the province; instead we have to make do with making boundary changes as best we can to what is before us, to a proposal that in my view has not necessarily been rammed down the throats of the people of that area, but which certainly has been presented to them as a single option and not as one of very many options such as exist in reality.

We will be supporting the amendment. We don't regard it as the final answer. We hope when problems arise in that area, as they will whatever the final structure, that the government will be prepared to introduce legislation to overcome those problems.

Finally I want to say that I believe the parliamentary assistant mentioned transitional grants without giving an indication of their amount. I'm confused as to whether the people of the archipelago municipalities and the other municipalities in the district can expect special transitional grants, special grants that are not provided for in legislation at the present time, or whether they will have to make do with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications grants and the other grants that are provided to every municipality.

I particularly ask about that because I am concerned there may be a tendency, especially if this amendment fails—and I very much hope the amendment will not fail—for tax dollars from the southern part of the archipelago municipality to go for the provision of services in the northern part. I could not support that under any circumstances. As the matter of grants was raised in the parliamentary assistant's opening remarks, I hope, Mr. Chairman, that he will see fit and that you will permit him, to respond once again on that very important matter of transitional grants to meet the undoubtedly excessive start-up costs the municipalities in the area will face.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, to deal briefly with the last point raised by the member for Wentworth, no definite amount of transitional grant has yet been decided. It will depend on the expenses of the two townships, that is Kearney and Georgian Bay Archipelago, when they start up. Transitional grants are available for the hiring of initial staff, securing accommodation and facilities, getting an official plan going and so on.

Transitional grants are available. Unlike the other grants the amounts are not set in legislation. We will simply decide on the amount of the transitional grants when the townships are going and when the budgetary problems are known.

To deal with the matter at hand, that is the one or two municipalities—and I would point out that there are a number of other amendments to the bill today but we, on this side of the House, consider this by far the most important—we consider this amendment one that changes the whole concept of the bill and we feel it is a very serious amendment. We would certainly ask members opposite to reconsider supporting this amendment.

There are some problems in having two municipalities. There are, in total, exactly—well I shouldn't say "exactly," I should say "about," because population figures aren't exact—about 450 permanent residents in the two parts of the municipality. There will be about 300 in the northern section and 150 in the southern section. We really question whether or not that is a sufficient number of permanent residents to have a viable municipality.

In the past it was the attitude in Ontario to set up very small municipalities at every little junction, every post office and every corner. The 20th century feeling is that as municipalities become more sophisticated and require more services, more expertise, more engineering, planning and so on, a municipality should have a sufficient population and assessment base in order to be able to provide for those services and to provide reasonable staff, and in order to give the people of that municipality the services, staff and advice they deserve.

There is a communal interest, despite the fact that there is some water, and yes some land, between these two communities. There is certainly very much a communal interest between the two units. That is why a single unit was created, because the people are essentially cottagers and permanent residents who make their living from the recreation industry. There is a common bond to protect the Georgian Bay environment, to promote the cottage and recreation industry. Attempts to divide this community I think would frustrate the wishes of the people, the wishes of the cottagers and the wishes of the permanent residents.

A great deal has been made of the physical discontinuity, the fact that the northern and southern sections have the township of Carling in between, but it is no greater than the physical distance separating parts of these municipalities alone. These are both very much water-based municipalities. If you go from a point in the southern part of the archipelago municipality on the west over to the east, it is just as far by water as if you went from the south to the north. The vast majority of people in both municipalities get to their homes, their cottages, their permanent residences by water. What is the difference if you go by water around Carling or if you go by water through your own municipality?

Much was made the other day, but not today, about the fact that the Parry Sound study originally recommended two separate municipalities. This was part of a total package of recommendations, because the key to the original Parry Sound study was that Parry Sound district would be divided into two planning districts, east and west. This would give power to the western planning district. You would have one planning authority. If there was one planning authority for the northern and southern parts of the archipelago, plus Carling, plus Parry Sound, plus the other townships, then it might make a little bit of sense to have a smaller local area. It would be almost a two-tier system of government; not two-tiered in the way of Metro or some of the other regions but certainly a two-tier planning district.

In some of the early initial meetings a two-tier system of regional government was rejected by the people pretty well out of hand. The government, in its wisdom, abandoned the idea of a two-tier system because the people up there simply wouldn't go for regional planning; therefore the idea of two municipalities as raised by the official study really falls by the board because the corollaries to that just aren't present in the bill.

The proposed municipality is a water-based recreation community requiring limited physical services but with great need for activity in planning and environmental protection. There is need for municipal government throughout the area, illustrated by the activities of the Georgian Bay Association which is really the unofficial municipal government so far. It is their intention, and I think our intention, to bring all the area into some form of organized municipal government. The association now provides such services as fire fighting, garbage sites—with the assistance of the Ministry of Natural Resources—emergency communications and rescue, community centres and water quality testing. All these are now provided by the association, but they can be much better provided by a viable municipality, not by two very small municipalities. They are provided now by one association on a co-operative basis.

The member for Waterloo North has said there should be two separate townships. He mentioned there can be co-operation but that people—I think he referred to the people of Carling—feel threatened. I don't know why they would feel they were threatened. If they felt there was some reason this archipelago would absorb them, if they felt the provincial government was going to force them into a union which they didn't want, then it would have already happened.

This government has taken the stand, quite frankly, that we are not going to force people into a marriage they don't want, there will not be shot-gun weddings. If the people of Carling do not want to go in with the archipelago we are not going to force them into the archipelago, either now or later. This feeling of threat, I think, is a red herring. What the people in Carling township are really saying, I think, is keep it as two municipalities and then it will be much easier for Carling to absorb the two parts of the archipelago, one at a time, rather than being able to absorb a larger municipality.

Who knows if this feeling of threat is there or not? It can't be substantiated. Is that more important than the feeling, put in writing by over 1,000 householders in the two parts of the archipelago, who said very plainly, "No, we do not want two municipalities; we want to be one"?

Mr. Bradley: You have a short memory over there. Remember Niagara?

Mr. Rotenberg: Oh I remember Niagara.

Mr. Bradley: Our fears are based on the experience in Niagara.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member for Wentworth talked to 28 people over the weekend, I am sure. Twenty of them were a bit confused as to which islands were going in and which islands weren't going in.

Mr. Kerrio: Bigger is not necessarily better.

Mr. Rotenberg: What he didn't tell us was how many of those 20 people said yes, they wanted two municipalities. Reading between the lines of his remarks, I gathered they wanted one municipality but he feels some of them didn't have the total facts.

Mr. Bradley: Is this regional government with another name?

Mr. Rotenberg: I speak particularly to my two critics who are here this afternoon, each of us having service on municipal council. We all know it is difficult at all times, no matter how many times you explain, no matter how many public meetings you have, no matter how many information books you send out, to explain all the time, to all the people, all the facts. People do skim read, people only hear what they want to hear, people forget. It is human nature, it happens all the time in every government.

Mr. Epp: What you are saying, then, is that this petition may not be exactly legitimate?

Mr. Rotenberg: Sometimes people forget what they have been told between the time they talk to the government representative and the time they talk to the member for Wentworth.

Mr. Kerrio: That's not how my people operate.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member for Waterloo North did raise a problem about the petition.

Mr. Breithaupt: You certainly had a busy weekend up there.

Mr. Rotenberg: Yes, they had a busy weekend up there. It shows the people up there are serious about having local government. When I talked about a majority, remember this was signed by adults and although there are places where more than one person per household signed it was basically to get one signature per household.

Mr. Bradley: It is very difficult to get people to sign petitions too.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would point out to the member for Waterloo North there are 1,563 households in the area representing approximately 5,000 people. When I indicated a majority, we had 1,036 households out of 1,563. I will say that among the 1,036 signatures maybe two from one household, there may be 50 or 100 that are duplicated in that fashion, but certainly far and away a majority of the households in the area have signed. Many of those who went around collecting the petition asked for only one signature per household. They didn't get the husband and wife and certainly did not get the children to sign.

Mr. Isaacs: Did you organize it?

Mr. Rotenberg: I helped to organize it and I'm proud of the fact that I did.

Interjections.

Mr. Rotenberg: After the second reading debate on Friday, I spoke to the head of the Georgian Bay association and said to him: "Look, there has been some question raised in the House as to whether it should be one municipality or two." I spoke specifically and privately to the member for Wentworth and indicated to him that the majority of the people in the area wanted one municipality.

Standing just outside this chamber at about 1:10 p.m. or 1:15 p.m. on Friday, he said to me: "Have you any evidence as to the fact that this is what the people want?" I said: "I haven't at the moment, but I will get it for you." Basically to get the information for the members of the New Democratic Party, who are usually sensible when it comes to the majority of the people and local autonomy, I did say to the president of the association: "Look, we need some evidence that the people up in your area do want a municipality." What I really anticipated was a resolution from the six associations. He went much farther than that and went out and got the petition.

I'd like just to read this to you from the South Channel Ratepayers Association which came up with 267 signatures: "In an effort to give everyone in the South Channel area an opportunity to express their point of view concerning this important issue, we visited every cottage on June 16. Unfortunately many people were not at their cottage on this particular weekend." That's why they didn't get more people than they could have otherwise.

The Sans Souci and Copperhead association said: "In order to stress the support of our constituency, we have contacted as many of the residents of the area as was possible in the less than 48 hours available. We found overwhelming support for legislation creating a single archipelago municipality. We enclose signed petitions from over 300 residents to the members of the Ontario Legislature in evidence of this. Many of these signatures"—and this is the point I wish to make to the member for Waterloo North because he is talking about majorities—"represent the support of entire families whose other members were not immediately available." They went after one per household.

I think that covers the points raised. I really have heard nothing from the other side of the House as to what is wrong with having the township in two parts. I have heard nothing, really, of any substance. I wonder whether members opposite, having gone over the bill—which is a very good bill, as they themselves have said—and having talked to the residents of the area and said to them—because it's been reported back that they did so—"What's wrong with the bill?"; having done all that they have now found out that the association up there told both parties that there was really nothing wrong with the bill. The only thing they found wrong with the bill was the fact that it took so long to get here.

Having been able to get no criticisms of the bill, I think members of the opposition feel they have to find something wrong with the bill and have picked on this as the place where they are going to take a stand. They have picked on this just to show that they have studied the bill—and I commend them for it—and picked on this as a place to say: "We've got to make a change to show that we're the opposition and we have power in this Legislature too."

There are places where this position is valuable and I certainly appreciate their point of view, but I would say to them in all sincerity:

"Please do not impose your will in this particular case against the overwhelming"—I certainly will not claim unanimous—"wishes of all of the people in the area who are affected. Please do not impose a form of government which they do not want."

For these reasons we will oppose this series of amendments, all of which say the same thing. I hope the members opposite will reconsider their position in light of the fact that the vast majority in the area don't want this amendment and support the bill as originally brought forward.

Mr. Grande: You have now made your maiden speech.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I just want to respond on two counts. First of all, I think it's a cheap shot by the member for Wilson Heights to suggest for a moment that either this party or the other party would be submitting an amendment for the sake of just trying to flex their muscles. Despite the fact that he has this inclination from time to time, we don't operate that way on this side of the House.

Mr. Handleman: You've never done that before.

Mr. Rotenberg: What's wrong with the bill?

Mr. Epp: We've told you what's wrong with the bill and we'll show in some other places what's wrong with the bill. Just be patient.

Mr. Rotenberg: There is nothing of substance wrong with the bill.

Mr. Epp: The other thing that's happened, which is very apropos to divulge or bring out, is the fact that he continually makes assumptions that because some people have signed a petition and have favoured one municipality, therefore their spouse or somebody else in the family also favours that particular leaning. Maybe the other people didn't want to sign. That could very well be the case. We also don't know that they had the full explanation.

With that, I'll leave it: I am prepared to vote on it.

[4:15]

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I indicated to the members on Friday my feeling on this particular proposed amendment, but I have to point out that I cannot understand the inconsistency of the members opposite. They were quite prepared to accept petitions and so on when they decided that the northeast part of Conger township should become part of the archipelago. Now we have the majority of the people in the other portions of this proposed municipality who want to remain as one municipality, but the members opposite are not prepared to accept that.

If we are going to accept the argument that was used, and the amendment that is going to be made by the government, to which I finally agreed, then there should be some give and take. Because there was an overwhelming number of people who wanted northeast Conger to become part of the municipality of the archipelago, we agreed to that—the members on this side, myself and the members opposite—based mainly on the fact that that is what the people wanted. But now we stand here with a situation that the people want, and the members opposite have reversed their whole procedure and said: "We don't care what the people want. We are going to make it into two municipalities." It is not being consistent.

I beg the opposition to reconsider, because I believe the majority of the people in the proposed archipelago do want one municipality. If the members opposite are going to be consistent with the thoughts they had regarding the other amendment—I do not know whether it has been proposed at this point in time but it will be later—then let us be consistent and listen to the people and give them what they want.

Mr. Swart: I am going to speak very briefly on this, Mr. Chairman. On the question of whether there should be one municipality or two municipalities, and with regard to the wishes of the people, I would like to say a few words philosophically.

All of us in public life realize that we must give very substantial consideration to what the people want in any given area. On the other hand, it is also true that, if we are going to discharge our responsibilities as elected politicians, we have to look into things in depth, and if at times we determine from our in-depth investigation that there should be some deviation from what the people want, or what we think they want, sometimes we may have to do this. Good government works that way; it is one of the major factors, but not always the final factor, especially if we have no clear-cut indication of what the people want in any given area.

I am a bit perturbed, quite frankly, because during the four years I have been in this House—and certainly before that time—on some occasions when we were forming regional governments, there were meetings et cetera in the area, but the decision by the government was never taken on the basis of what the people wanted in that area. The regional government was determined by the government—I will not say without consultation with various groups, but it was determined by the government. Now it looks as though we have gone almost the complete cycle.

Mr. Rotenberg: So have you.

Mr. Swart: Sometimes we have to go down the centre and give weight to the evidence that we have on the one hand compared to what we may think the people want at a given time on the other hand.

I want to say quite frankly on this amendment that we have before us that I do not think it is going to be disastrous whether we end up with one or two municipalities in that area. In fact, I think the decision that has already been made is the one that is going to end up being either an advantage or a great disadvantage to the people in the area, the decision that there is not going to be one archipelago municipality, there are going to be at least two. At the present time one has the Carling township area, the bay frontage along there. There is no question about it, that is going to be one municipality in an entirely different setting, an entirely different principle to that established with the archipelago municipality.

There are these conflicts and they are very legitimate conflicts, again philosophical conflicts, where one group says: "We should have the lake frontage in with the municipality—the area behind and a large number of the permanent residents there—to help pay the costs." There is some legitimacy in that.

On the other hand one says: "The municipalities have a community of interests. The archipelago should be together because their interests are the same." They are not the same, the permanent residents in the area who may be farmers or whatever the case may be. We have already made a division on that basis. We are going to have one that incorporates one concept and another that incorporates the other concept. So we really have not followed through with anything in principle there.

Again I say I do not think it is going to make a great deal of difference. I think the people who are going to be in the one or two municipalities are going to be in a recreational area, a recreational community, a recreational municipality. They are going to dominate it. I think it will probably work well. The few permanent residents who are in those areas, from the discussions I have had with the recreational people and the permanent people it seems to me that there is not any great conflict between the two. But certainly the recreational area is going to dominate that. That will be true whether it is one or whether it is two municipalities. So I am not convinced that this is an earth-shaking decision being made at this time.

I find it difficult to believe that the two municipalities, even the north municipality, will not be viable on their own. The north municipality may be more viable, granted, if it is in with the other municipality. But there is no question that in an area like this most of the services are going to be contracted out. The municipality is not going to start buying a garbage truck immediately or buying road equipment. It is going to be done by contract. I suppose the same contractors will probably be doing it for the south part of the archipelago as will be doing it for the north part and may even be doing some of it in the Carling area.

So it is not like a normal municipality. By normal I mean one that does not have that kind of lake frontage and does not have that high percentage of summer residents whose main purpose there is recreational. It is not like one of those municipalities where one would only have a municipality of 500 or 1,000 people endeavouring to run the operation on their own. This is an entirely different situation. I suggest they will basically be viable.

To counter that there are the arguments put forth by the member for Wentworth that one would have the smaller more contiguous units where the people certainly would have more input into the local municipalities, if there are two of them, than they would into the larger municipality. I think perhaps the opportunity for some greater degree of democracy overbalances the viability aspect of this.

We were sold on regional government by the fact that it was going to be efficient, that in the long term it was going to save money—

Mr. Kerrio: Mel, you said you would be brief.

Mr. Swart: —that in fact we could have regional planning, we could have that overview that you couldn't get when you had the local municipality.

Mr. Ashe: Do you support regional government?

Mr. Swart: Not the kind that you people put in, no!

Mr. Kerrio: Now you're qualifying it.

Mr. Swart: Not the kind you people put in.

Mr. Kerrio: There's only one kind, Mel; where do you find two?

Mr. Ashe: The old flip-flop again.

Mr. Kerrio: You are stuck with that one, Mel.

Mr. Swart: I just suggest to the member for Niagara Falls if he wants to have my views on regional government he should read the—

Mr. Kerrio: I've seen them, a hundred times over.

Mr. Swart: —brief which I presented to the study group in Niagara at the time they were setting it up. He would find them so much at variance with the present one he would never recognize it. I challenge you to do that and then come back and say what you're saying now.

Mr. Kerrio: You were in favour of regional government, Mel, you were in favour.

Mr. Swart: I'm sure you'd like me, Mr. Chairman, to get back to the amendment we have before us.

Mr. Kerrio: He blew it.

Mr. Swart: I guess just to sum this up, I believe there probably would be greater viability if you had it within one, if it was one municipality; but I believe there is greater accountability and democracy if you have two municipalities there.

Mr. Kerrio: Or three or four.

Mr. Ashe: Or 10; that's even more.

Mr. Swart: I think there is a situation that can lead to considerable conflict if you have two separated areas, separated by another municipality, incorporated into one municipality. One will be strong, one will be weak. The majority of the members of council will come from one or the other; certainly the head of the municipality will have to come from one or the other. I suggest over a period of time you can build up some conflict with that sort of arrangement. Certainly it's a new one; it would be the first of its kind in the province of Ontario.

The final reason for my support of the two municipalities concept is it is always easier to join them together than it is to separate them. This has been found wherever it has taken place. In the Niagara region, when they wanted one regional government for the whole thing I said; "No, have two regional governments based largely on the old county line. Then you can join them together later if you determine it is advisable." It is very difficult to break up this kind of marriage. It's easier to live in single bliss for a period of time, take a look at the situation, and if there are arguments for joining together do it at that particular time.

Mr. Rotenberg: Just briefly; I've listened quite closely to the various members opposite.

Mr. Kerrio: They both started out briefly, neither one of them have lived up to it.

Mr. Rotenberg: Really, I've heard nothing from the members opposite which would in any way override the feeling of the people. Nothing is 100 per cent, nothing is completely black and white, but certainly none of the reasons I've heard this afternoon would indicate why one would, on a great matter of principle, have to vote against the wishes of the people in the area in order to have two municipalities instead of one.

I would point out I'm not basing the fact of the wishes of the people just on this petition. The petition is a reaffirmation. As you all know, there have been at least two years of public hearings and of meetings in the area—ratepayer meetings, group meetings, meetings with ministry staff and meetings among themselves. Consistently, throughout all of these hearings of the past two years, the feeling has been at public meetings, at ratepayer meetings, with executives and so on, that they wanted one municipality. This has been everything they have asked for over the past two years. It has been consistent in all of that time.

Mr. Grande: When did this start, this business of you starting to listen to people anyway?

Mr. Rotenberg: We don't listen to you.

It's been consistent in all of that time, this is what the people want. Suddenly at the 11th hour, for whatever reason, and certainly I wasn't casting any aspersions on the motives of the member for Waterloo North, they say, "No, you can't have the one municipality you've planned for the past years, you must have two." Frankly, I don't think this is the way to run a province. This is not the way to deal with these many citizens of our province, who in good faith have over several years attended many public meetings, have planned the organization of the new municipality, to now suddenly pull the rug out from under them for whatever reason. I would hope the members opposite will reconsider.

Mr. Isaacs: If I might just respond very briefly to some of the comments that have been made in this debate. First, to the parliamentary assistant: yes, it's quite correct the overwhelming majority of people in the area want one municipality, but not this municipality. This municipality was not even being considered prior to the beginning of last year. The one municipality the people want is a single archipelago municipality stretching all the way from the northern limits of the archipelago to the southern limit. I think we should put on the record that if the sample of people who signed the petition and with whom I had the opportunity to communicate is representative, that is what many of them thought they were signing for.

Mr. Rotenberg: It's not representative.

Mr. Isaacs: As an example, the chairman of the Bayfield and Narrows Inlet environment committee, who is a signatory to this petition, was speaking to me just after lunch today before coming into the House and she was surprised to learn that Bill 100 does not mean a single municipality for the whole archipelago but is the split concept introduced here. If the chairman of a ratepayers' group is confused as to what is going on, then I suggest to the parliamentary assistant the consultation he thinks has taken place really hasn't, and people don't know what it is they are voting for when they sign this petition.

There are other letters that have been submitted here today that indicate it is not a unanimous opinion. There are opinions on both sides, all the way down the archipelago.

Mr. Rotenberg: It's not unanimous, it's just overwhelming. If one person disagrees it's not unanimous.

Mr. Isaacs: I agree. I even challenge whether it's overwhelming if the facts are laid out. In his earlier comments the parliamentary assistant asked me how many of the 28 I spoke to supported a single municipality. I want to tell him that they all supported a single archipelago municipality after I had explained to them what this bill proposed and explained to them the reasons we have and that have been presented here today for feeling that it might be better, at least as an interim step and possibly as a permanent step, to have two municipalities. Then they agreed that at least maybe we had a point. They did not necessarily agree with us because they hadn't had an opportunity to think about it, but they felt that we had a point.

I really think that the views I expressed on Friday still hold; this ought to be a non-partisan issue. What we ought to be looking for is the best way of providing local government to the people of this area and making sure that local councillors are accessible; making sure that local problems are dealt with by local people, rather than by municipal councillors who come from something that is close to being another municipality.

While there is a community of interest along the 30,000 Islands and along the shoreline itself, I really have to wonder whether the inclusion of fairly large pieces of inland territory, particularly those in the northern portion, doesn't confuse the whole thing. If the people expressing their opinions through this petition really haven't had the contents of Bill 100 presented to them, then I think it's a pretty sad day to be saying this is what the people want. We certainly stand behind the views we expressed.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Epp's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 3 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "On January 1, 1980, the inhabitants of those portions of the geographic townships of Shawanaga and Harrison, all of which lands are described in schedule A hereto, are incorporated as a township municipality bearing the name 'The Corporation of the Township of Georgian Bay North Archipelago.'"

Mr. Epp: Just briefly, Mr. Chairman, there is a provision in the bill that would permit the government to have a plebiscite with respect to the name. If the inhabitants were not happy with the name we've designated, they could change it at their pleasure at the first election.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, this implements what we have in the previous amendments and all the arguments are the same. We, of course, will oppose this as being part of the previous amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Epp's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section 3(a): "On January 1, 1980, the inhabitants of the geographic township of Cowper and that portion of the geographic township of Conger, all of which lands are described in schedule AA hereto are incorporated as a township-municipality bearing the name 'The Corporation of the Township of Georgian Bay South Archipelago.'"

Is there any further discussion on this matter?

Are we agreed the vote will probably be the same and that we may stack this one likewise? I'm trying to short-circuit the procedure, but if we're agreed to that, I'll declare this one stacked as well.

Amendment stacked.

On section 4:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that subsections 1 and 2 of section 4 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "(1) The council of a township shall consist of a reeve, to be elected by general vote, and six councillors."

I gather the gist of this motion is somewhat different from the preceding amendment and maybe the member would like to speak to it.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects to this. First, the bill as it now stands suggests the reeve should not be democratically elected by the people during the first vote but should be chosen by the councillors after they are elected. This is similar to the regional municipalities, where the chairman is selected by the elected representatives.

We have been told this is not a regional form of structure. We agree this is not a regional form of structure and yet we see here they are trying to slip in some things that have similarities to regional municipalities. We really believe the population has a right to have a say as to who the chief magistrate of that municipality is. We don't think it should be given to half a dozen councillors to select who the leader of that municipality will be.

I think the people in the area deserve more than the government is prepared to give them. They deserve an opportunity to say who that person is going to be, whether it's a lady or whether it's a man. This is the reason for the amendment.

In addition, we feel that since the municipality will be smaller than the one originally envisioned there should be a smaller number of councillors. We feel that six is a reasonable number that can deal with the problems and the challenges of that municipality.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion?

The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Isaacs: I have to begin to wonder why the section regarding appointment is in this bill and, again, I raised this matter with the people to whom I spoke over the weekend. I notice it's also included in the petition.

It worries me greatly that the government feels and the petitioners seem to feel it's okay to dispense with democracy. The only argument that has been presented to me in support of dispensing with democracy—and perhaps the parliamentary assistant will have other arguments—is that the people of the area will not know enough about what's going on and enough about the people in the area that they can properly elect their own reeve.

I have to say that if that's the reason then surely that's in total contradiction to the points that have been made previously by the parliamentary assistant in terms of commonality of interest. If there is a commonality of interest there—and obviously there is one; obviously these groups have been working together in the Georgian Bay Association, and we don't dispute that—then why is it not appropriate for the people to elect their own reeve from among the people who have been active in the association or in some other way? Or perhaps they will reject association members and choose to elect a newcomer to the municipal political scene.

I really think that it is inappropriate to allow people to dispense with democracy on the basis of a petition. And I think it's inappropriate for this bill to dispense with democracy on grounds which have not been properly explained and which, I suspect, cannot be properly explained.

So, Mr. Chairman, we too will be supporting this amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, again this is not a totally black and white situation. In all the arguments the members opposite have ignored the fact that in section 4(2) the word "first" is there and is in there very prominently. The idea of this was that only the first reeve would be chosen by council. Thereafter, of course, the reeve would be elected at large.

On the basis that they would be going to an organized from an unorganized territory, this is the first time there will have been an election. It is felt that, in the first election, if 10 people run in their own particular district that would be democracy. Then the 10 people would choose their first reeve, and only the first, from among themselves. In the second election the reeve would have to run at large.

This is in order to help the people get to know each other a little better than they do now, so if there are a number of good people who are running they can each run for council and you won't have three or four good people running for reeve and then be lost to the first council where the most serious work is to be done.

This would apply only in the circumstances that the previous motion which we stacked is not carried. If there are two separate municipalities and it's a much more localized group then, of course, there will be much less need to have a council choose a reeve. If the first two motions do carry in the stacked vote, then this would be reasonably appropriate. But if the first two do not carry, I think we should continue the way we are.

I would put it to the member for Waterloo North on a strictly non-political, non-partisan basis that he has set up a reeve and six councillors. Normally, in most townships of the province, there is a reeve and four councillors. I'm just wondering why he has chosen six rather than four. If you have two separate municipalities it would seem, if you followed the precedent of other small townships, a reeve and four councillors would be sufficient rather than six. I don't have that much feeling about it one way or the other but does he have any reason why he wants this motion a reeve and six councillors or would he be happy with a reeve and four to be consistent with most of the townships in most other areas of the province?

Mr. Swart: I rise to speak on this perhaps because, unlike the first amendment, I am not a bit equivocal about it. I think there's a very real principle here that whether it's a first election, or a second, or a third, people have the right to decide who is going to be the most important politician in their municipality. I don't care whether it is a regional government or whether it's a local municipality, that principle should stand. I am constantly appalled when we are talking about the chairman of a regional municipality, or as in this case, that over there they don't seem to be greatly concerned that the public should have the right to choose that person.

I'm sure the parliamentary assistant knows very well that the first person who is selected from this select group has an in for the next election. There is no question about that. If he serves there for two years, he gets to be known and it is going to be more difficult for one to replace him. It's like the members of regional council. Once they get their foot in the door and get their vested interests set up, they have a greater chance of being re-elected to that position. The same thing is true here.

The comments of the parliamentary assistant on this, if I heard them correctly, which I think I did, are further arguments in support of the first amendment that there should be two municipalities. If I heard him correctly, he said that with two smaller municipalities there wouldn't be the same need for the appointment because the people would know better those in their own community and could select their reeve in a local election.

The converse to that is that if it is a big municipality they won't know the individual and therefore the public will not be able properly to select that person. That confirms the position put forward by this party that there is some merit in having the two smaller municipalities.

I have to say that when I heard about the petition that had come in, asking not only for one municipality but also that the reeve be selected, it raised some doubts in my mind about whether it was a petition which had been initiated locally by the people. Normally, the public doesn't petition a Legislature in order not to have the opportunity to select the head of its municipality, even if it is the first time. It raised some questions in my mind about where that petition started and whether it was spontaneous within that area with that particular clause in there. The parliamentary assistant has now admitted at least that it wasn't entirely spontaneous within that area.

I support this amendment. As to whether it should be four councillors or six, I don't have strong feelings. I think four members of council would be adequate. But I strongly support the principle that the people should have the right to select by ballot the first person who is going to lead that municipality and who is a very important person, certainly even more so in the first term of office than in the second or third or fourth. My party and I will be supporting this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I have just a very few remarks on this particular item. I have no hangups about whether or not the reeve is elected by the council or at large by the voters. As a matter of fact, my personal preference is that he be elected by the voters rather than chosen by the council after the election.

My main point in rising is to suggest to the member that if the other amendments pass and we do have two municipalities that he consider reducing the council to a reeve and four councillors rather than a reeve and six, simply because it is consistent with the other smaller municipalities in the riding of Parry Sound. We don't know at this point whether or not all the amendments are going to carry, but this amendment obviously takes into consideration that the previous amendments are going to carry. I just wonder if the member would consider reducing the number from six to four so that it is consistent with the other municipalities.

Mr. Epp: If I may respond to that immediately, like the member for Parry Sound, I have no particular hangups on this point. I would be glad to accept that amendment and make it four, rather than six.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That will depend on some person moving that when they see the developments on the other amendments, I don't mean now, necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If I could conclude my remarks, I would have to advise the member we would still have to oppose this amendment, because if it passed and the other ones didn't we would have quite a mix-up. It is dovetailed into the other amendments already made, so we would have to oppose it, obviously; but I am only suggesting the four.

Mr. Epp: I understand that, Mr. Chairman. If no one disagrees with that, I will be glad to propose we make that four councillors rather than six.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If the other amendments pass when they are finally put, right.

At the present time I will put this amendment, unless there is some further discussion?

Mr. Isaacs: Just for clarification, Mr. Chairman, if I might. Do I understand that whatever happens to the previous three amendments, you will permit an amendment to this amendment when we see the results of the stacked vote? What I am saying is if, perchance and unfortunately, we should lose the first three amendments, would you permit this amendment at that time to be amended to read 10 councillors, which is the number of councillors on the single municipality council?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am not so sure there has been any general understanding about that because, of course, now is the time to put the amendment. I think the suggestion made here by the member for Parry Sound is reasonable. Maybe we can get the consensus of the committee on this; it is getting a little complicated. Let's hear what the parliamentary assistant has to say.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the amended motion now before us is for a reeve and four councillors, is that correct? That is accepted by everyone?

Because of the stacked vote, it would seem that if the votes previously stacked are not agreed to by the committee, it would be only fair at that time to allow the opposition to place a different amendment to section 4. The amendment placed to section 4 now is based on the fact that previous amendments will carry. If they do not carry later on when the stacked votes are taken, this amendment really would not be the one the opposition would wish to put. If it were one township, members wouldn't want a reeve and four councillors for the larger townships.

If the amendments to sections 2 and 3 do not carry, I would then consent that the member for Waterloo North put a different amendment to section 4 at that time. I think we can do without debate. We would just put a different amendment and take a vote at that time.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am not so sure that answers the proposition of the member for Wentworth, the proposition of putting it back to 10.

Mr. Isaacs: Yes, it does.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. Let me put this amendment now so we will know where we stand.

Mr. Epp has moved an amendment that section 4(1) and (2) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "The council of the township shall consist of a reeve to be elected by general vote and six councillors."

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, just one point. I thought we had agreed it should be four councillors rather than six and I thought there was general consensus in the committee that it be four, rather than six councillors.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: But you are only going to do that, depending on what happens later on?

Mr. Epp: No, do that right now.

Mr. Bolan: You can do anything on consent.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The amendment should read: "The council of the township shall consist of a reeve to be elected by general vote and four councillors."

That is your amendment now?

Mr. Epp: Yes. Mr. Chairman, do you want me to clarify the other point? That was, having four councillors here and six in the other municipalities, is a total of 10. That is what the government has proposed for one single municipality.

As the member for Wentworth pointed out, if our earlier amendments don't pass we still want to have the opportunity of voting on the principle of having the reeve elected rather than appointed. That is a basic principle we want to have a vote on, if by chance the others didn't pass. We don't want to forgo that opportunity.

The parliamentary assistant has indicated he is prepared to permit us to put that particular vote as a separate vote, rather than forgo that opportunity.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would just like to indicate again I would consent that if the first two amendments carry, then we will put this to a reeve and four councillors, if the first two amendments do not carry, the motion will be a reeve and 10, is that correct? We consent to that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This must still be on the record, though.

Mr. Epp's amendment to section 4 now reads as follows: "That subsections 1 and 2 of section 4 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"1. The council of the township shall consist of a reeve to be elected by general vote and four councillors."

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Bolan: There's nothing left of the bill—nothing that the government presented. Just the good stuff is in there now.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You guys will take the responsibility.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 5 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"The meetings of the council of a township shall be held at some place within the township or, where the council of the township by bylaw appoints, at some place within an adjoining municipality."

Mr. Epp: As the bill now reads, Mr. Chairman, the council may meet in any area within the district and, as I pointed out on Friday, the district is very large. To try to keep the council meetings close to where the people reside, whether they are permanent or seasonal residents, we felt that it should be in the municipality. However, there is one small problem; rather than force the new municipalities to build new township halls and therefore have the facilities to house the council chambers and so forth, we felt it would probably be more logical and more economical to permit them to meet in the immediate area or in an adjacent municipality. We have proposed this amendment so that they can meet in the municipality or in an adjacent municipality.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, we cannot support this amendment; it appears to us to be unduly restrictive. If the matter of place of meeting is a significant issue—and I am aware that it is in parts of the district—then we believe that should be an issue at the local election. The people of the area should decide whether they wish to elect councillors who want to hold their council meetings and conduct their council business within the municipality, or whether they do not regard that as of paramount importance and are prepared to allow their councillors to hold meetings anywhere in the district.

I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that, while we are not prepared to move an amendment, I am even concerned that the district itself may be too restrictive and there may be a good case for allowing the council of any of the municipalities to hold its meetings at some place near to, but not necessarily within, the district of Parry Sound. But, as I indicated, we do not want to get into that kind of amendment today. We are prepared to accept the wording that is in the bill with regard to holding meetings within the district of Parry Sound.

I want to point out to my colleague from Waterloo North one problem with his amendment; that is, if the previous amendments carry, then the township of Georgian Bay North Archipelago will not be able to hold its meetings in the town of Parry Sound. I regard that as particularly undesirable, because the council of the Georgian Bay North Archipelago may wish to hold its meetings in Parry Sound and, because Parry Sound is not adjacent to Georgian Bay North—in fact, Carling is the municipality adjacent on the south—then this amendment introduces that difficulty. We will not be supporting it.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I am almost speechless. The member for Wentworth has said it all. I endorse everything he has said, except I think the members of one or two townships should be free to choose wherever in the district of Parry Sound they wish to meet. Certainly they are not going to go away off to the far northeast corner; they are going to find a convenient place that will probably be in the town of Parry Sound. We also will not support this amendment.

[5:00]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 6 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 10 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"10. On and after January 1, 1980, a township shall be a planning area under the Planning Act, to be known as the Georgian Bay North Archipelago planning area and the Georgian Bay South Archipelago planning area respectively, and the township council shall be the planning board thereof, and where the township council meets in respect of matters pertaining to planning no separate meeting of the council as a planning board is required."

Mr. Epp: This is consistent with what is in the bill right now except that if our earlier amendments to divide it into two municipalities rather than one carry, this gives provision for that. So it is just consistent with the amendments I introduced earlier.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member is quite correct. This just implements what happens previously and it would be, I think, the same vote and the same stacking.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 11 to 19, inclusive, agreed to.

On sections 20 to 22 inclusive:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that part V of the bill be struck out and that schedule A of the bill be amended by striking out the first four paragraphs and substituting therefor:

"Firstly, part of the geographic township of Conger, commencing at the intersection of the northerly boundary of the township of Conger and the eastern limit of lot 10 in concession XII of the township of Conger;

"Thence southerly along the eastern limit of lot 10 in concession XII to IV, both inclusive, to the northerly limit of concession III in the township of Conger."

Mr. Rotenberg: This implements what we indicated on Friday, and I felt that there was unanimous consent for this, that the bill now provides part of Conger township to go into the township of Foley.

As you will recall, the first bill we had a year ago had it going with the archipelago. Having had a series of meetings, it seemed there was sympathy and reasons for putting it in with Foley, but having decided to put it into Foley there was an overwhelming—not unanimous but overwhelming—public opinion that it should be in the archipelago.

On this side of the House, unless there is some very overriding reason why we should not, we listen to the vast majority of the people in these situations. In this case, as in the archipelago case, the majority of people indicated very strongly which way they want to go and we certainly are not going to put the people in Conger township into Foley against their will. That is why I have put forward this amendment which in effect puts the people back where they were in the original bill last summer, the cottagers in Conger going in with the new archipelago township.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, we certainly support the amendment, but in view of the fact it is now before us, I cannot help but comment as to how it got changed in the first place. If the members opposite are so interested in listening to overwhelming public opinion, why did they change it from Bill 205 to Bill 100, and what sort of public consultation went on there? Is it because of the fickleness of the ways of determining public opinion or was there some other reason for changing it back? I will allow the parliamentary assistant to dispense with an answer at this time.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I am glad we have the question. When we met with the people after the first bill came out there was considerable objection to these people going with the archipelago. A number of people came to us and said, "Hey, we want to go with Foley." Having investigated and not getting too much flak the other way, that seemed to be public opinion. We switched it back when we got far more people going the other way.

Frankly, yes, one cannot always judge public opinion. Sometimes it changes. But more often the people who think they are winning do not make a lot of noise until something changes. Maybe that is what happened in this part of Conger township. People who thought they were getting their way did not make too much noise at the meetings while those who objected made a lot of noise; there was a feeling that public opinion went the other way.

Having changed the bill, quite frankly we are willing to state here that maybe we did somewhat misjudge public opinion. But that certainly does not apply to the archipelago where more than two thirds of the households have already signed a petition. That really is an indication of public opinion.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the parliamentary assistant, which one of the 23 Gallup polls applies to this section of the bill? I think that is very important information as far as this House is concerned. I would like to have it and I am sure every member would like to have it—probably including some of the cabinet ministers here. So I wonder if he can elucidate on that and give us some information on that. Maybe Mr. Warner, who is in the gallery, could help him out.

Mr. Rotenberg: I cannot speak totally for the government. I am only the parliamentary assistant and I have only been in the job for three months. But all the briefings I have had, and all the information I have—all the polls taken were taken publicly, to the best of my knowledge. There has been no Gallup poll taken in this area. Opinion was solicited in public and the results were recorded in public.

Mr. Epp: I was wondering whether the parliamentary assistant would check into this and if he has information whether he would make that public, to see which one of the Gallup polls affected this area.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I think the member is just being facetious about this whole thing. He knows very well what has gone on in this study. He has been up there; he spent three days there; he has talked to all the people; he knows there are people there who wanted to go to Foley township; he has talked to some of them. He is just being very facetious and I think he is trying to take advantage of the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I do not like to disagree with anything my colleague says, but certainly it is going to be a long, long time before the member for Waterloo North can take advantage of me.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 20 to 22, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 23:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The bill will take some renumbering, which I assume the editors will do. Looking at part VI, section 23, shall that section be reported?

Sections 23 to 27, inclusive, agreed to.

On schedule A:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Anything in regard to schedule A? I think Mr. Epp has an amendment for schedule A.

Mr. Epp: I'm going to require some guidance on your part with respect to schedule A which, as you can see, is fairly lengthy. I'm not sure whether you want me to read it into the record or not because it's consistent with our earlier amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, I'm not going to suggest you read it either.

Mr. Epp: I'm not sure it would be necessary to read this whole schedule and then have another schedule read after that, schedule AA and so forth. All I can do is say that I've had legislative counsel help with respect to this schedule and some of the other amendments. It has been drawn up on that basis. I'm prepared to read it if you wish, but I'm not sure it's necessary.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let me hear what the parliamentary assistant has to say as to the accuracy of schedule A and schedule AA.

Mr. Rotenberg: I'm prepared to accept the accuracy, based on the word of the member opposite. Certainly I think we can adopt those schedules. If there are any minor corrections, I think all members of the House would agree they could be corrected before the bill is finalized. I'm prepared to go without the reading of these schedules.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think we're agreed then with the parliamentary assistant, that if there are any corrections to be made if these amendments carry, they can be done in keeping with the wish of the committee and eventually the wish of the House.

Mr. Epp moves that schedule A of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor—then follows a long metes and bounds description of what he proposes for the new schedule A.

All those in favour of Mr. Epp's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp, you move a similar amendment to schedule AA?

Mr. Epp: Yes, I do.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Do we agree that the result will be the same and that we will stack schedule AA?

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm looking at an amendment I have here from Mr. Epp, on part V, schedule E.

Mr. Epp: That won't be necessary because we've already adopted the amendment the parliamentary assistant has made, which is the same amendment we have here. Although it's drawn up a little differently, it has the same substance, so I will withdraw this.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: So you are withdrawing that.

Mr. Rotenberg: Before adopting the final schedules of the bill, could we agree that we will rise without adopting the final part of the bill and then return to committee of the whole at 5:45 for the stacked votes?

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole reported progress.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 103, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to highlight briefly some of the changes to the Municipal Act being proposed. The majority of these amendments were prompted by requests from municipalities or from municipal associations.

The requirement to produce financial statements will be extended to include every municipality, including counties, excepting Metropolitan Toronto, by deleting the reference "local" municipalities and referring to "every" municipality. A similar amendment has been prepared for Metropolitan Toronto.

Statements of surplus have been replaced with other more informative statements based on modified minimum disclosure requirements recommended by a committee of the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario.

Section 236 will be amended to permit municipal councillors discretion to extend the deadline for taking the oath of allegiance and declaration of office by 30 days.

The amendment in section 4 of the bill is intended to make clear that where a committee of council conducts a hearing under section 242(b) of the Municipal Act, the procedures and requirements on hearings under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, 1971, apply only where a statutory power of decision is being made. As members are aware, the Statutory Powers Procedure Act sets out a number of formal proceedings and requirements, for example, notice of hearing, cross-examination and the submission of written decisions to be followed by tribunals exercising a statutory power of decision. This change, therefore, is to make clear that these formal proceedings are not required in certain other less formal hearing proceedings under the Municipal Act which are not considered to involve the exercise of a statutory power of decision.

Municipalities will be exempted from seeking the assent of electors before undertaking agreement with the province for a loan under the Main Street Revitalization Program and the Ontario Downtown Revitalization Program. This amendment would enable a municipality to proceed directly with an application for OMB approval on the debt application without the necessity for an OMB order to dispense with the assent of the electors.

The existing reward section will be expanded to enable a municipality to provide rewards for information leading to the location or return of missing persons or property. This change was requested by the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth.

The term of office for boards of management for special undertakings will be made the same as that of council or until a successor is appointed.

Municipal councils will be enabled to allow municipal sewer inspectors to enter into private commercial and industrial property but not a residence, without a search warrant, for the purpose of examining discharge into municipal sewers.

Another change will extend municipalities' general power to prescribe penalties of not more than $1,000 under section 446 to contraventions of the bylaw prohibiting the leaving of unattended unlocked motor vehicles.

Ministerial approval for roads over 30 metres has been deleted, which is in line with our efforts to delete unnecessary ministerial approval.

Municipalities will be able to lease or licence the use of untravelled portions of highways in any area within the municipality. Presently, these powers are restricted to lands in areas zoned for industrial or commercial purposes only.

Provincial judges will be given the power to issue an order to restrain the repetition of a breach of a municipal bylaw where a conviction has been entered. This will facilitate the prevention of continued infraction by people who may regard the fine as a sort of a fee. This, I think, is more common in zoning bylaws where people pay their $50 fine and continue the infraction, but under this new amendment of the act a judge may issue an injunction upon conviction restraining the use contrary to the zoning bylaw.

Another amendment will be the minimum deemed tax bill will be raised from $6 to $10.

The minimum interest on tax arrears is to be raised to one and a quarter per cent a month from one per cent a month, and 15 per cent per annum from 12 per cent per annum, a rate comparable to commercial rates. This charge is intended to encourage ratepayers to pay their taxes on time and to avoid hardship for municipalities.

Municipalities will also be enabled to authorize taxpayers to pay their taxes into a credit union or caisse populaire in the same manner they are now authorized to make such payments to a bank or trust company.

Where a taxpayer claims to be unable to pay taxes because of sickness or extreme poverty, municipalities will not be permitted, as they are now permitted, to delegate the hearing of such cases to the assessment review court.

The minister will be empowered to prescribe forms required under the Municipal Act in a bilingual format. The minister indicated this morning at the AMCTO conference that he intends to have these forms ready as soon as possible. Municipal council will decide on whether to use the English forms contained in the act or the bilingual forms prescribed by the minister. Any municipality opting for bilingual forms will be able to administer the oath of allegiance and declaration of office in French following the next municipal election, if they so decide. I emphasize that the choice will be up to each individual council.

These are the highlights of the many sections of the amendments to the Municipal Act and I commend the act to the Legislature.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, we will support this bill in principle. I regret, however, that we have not had very much time to consult with a lot of municipalities with respect to the particulars included in this bill. I do hope that in the future the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs would give a little more time to the opposition parties to look at the various bills he brings in, particularly during the closing hours or the dying breaths of this Legislature before it recesses for the summer. This bill has been out for only about two weeks now. When members have other responsibilities, it's very difficult sometimes to have as much consultation with municipalities with respect to new bills as they should have.

I would point out that in consulting with some municipalities we found they hadn't even read the bill themselves. When I called them within the last few days about some of its aspects, they had to then look at it to see whether there were points they were sensitive about and whether they agreed with them or not. I hope the parliamentary assistant will convey that to the minister and to the ministry officials so that in future they can take that into consideration.

As the parliamentary assistant has pointed out, there are some very important sections in this bill, particularly as it applies to sewer inspectors being able to inspect the discharge on a property. They can go on to private property, providing it's commercial or industrial property, and take samples of that discharge. I think that's an important change in that it will not be necessary now to get a warrant in order to do it once this bill receives royal assent, whereas it may have been in the past.

Another change is in the tax fines for motor vehicles, which will be increased from $10 to $100, minimum and maximum, from $1 and $10 respectively. The $1 and $10 amounts are somewhat less than minimum in the sense that it would hardly be worth processing the fine, even if there was a maximum charge.

The extension of the oath of allegiance and the declaration of office to French forms from English-only forms is a welcome change, and we wholeheartedly commend the government for making such a change in the particular bill before us.

I want to comment on one other matter. This has to do with the fact that the interest that municipalities will be able to charge will be increased from 12 per cent to 15 per cent a year, or by one quarter of one per cent per month, which is something that some municipalities have requested. We agree with that, as we do with the investment that municipalities can now take to credit unions and caisses populaires institutions as well as to banks and trust companies. We think this is a natural extension, one that we applaud, and one about which we sometimes wonder why it took so long in order to make these very necessary and very logical changes.

We agree with the bill, its conditions and provisions and we will support it.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, this is another bill that's not exactly landmark legislation, but it's certainly a compendium of things that's going to make life a lot easier for a number of our municipalities.

I certainly concur with the comments of the member for Waterloo North about the way this legislation was introduced into the House and about the very short notice we and the municipalities have had to check that it really meets the needs they have. There are a number of sections I want to make comment on. We will be introducing an amendment to section 12.

I think it's appropriate, in view of the fact that this is a compendium of a number of different subjects, that those subjects be dealt with as separate issues during this second reading of the bill rather than at the committee stage, and that should mean that the committee stage proceeds that much more smoothly and we can move to only those sections to which there are amendments.

Section 2 of this bill makes the publishing of financial statements compulsory for all municipalities. That's certainly a step forward, but it removes the time limit or, at least, it permits the minister to impose the time limit rather than having the time limit that was specified in the Municipal Act at present.

While making the publishing requirement compulsory for all municipalities is obviously desirable, I think it's unfortunate that the act itself does not, or will not when this is passed, specify the length of time that municipalities have for publishing their financial statements. I think those who are concerned about the financial well-being of their municipal council may well see this as a step backward rather than one forward.

The matter of extending the time for taking the oath by 30 days is obviously a convenience, given that municipal elections are now held in November.

The clarification of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act is very useful. I want to say to the minister and to the parliamentary assistant that we fully support that, because some councils have got themselves in some difficulties regarding the administration of that act and this is a step forward that will assist them greatly.

In section 5, the deletion of an assent of the electors in a planning matter is fairly minor but will certainly solve legal technicalities that have existed in the past.

The section 60 extension for permission for rewards is a good move. I want to remark particularly on the second part of that section, which clarifies the right of council to pull members off boards of management at any time. I think that's a good move forward. That is saying very clearly that the council is in charge of the activities of the board of management. I think that's a step in the right direction.

It's something that should be extended to a number of the other boards and special purpose bodies that exist around this province for two reasons: one, because it makes it clear that it's elected people who are in charge; and, two, and perhaps more important, because it will encourage councils to set up boards to manage special projects such as recreation centres, community centres, historic sites and that kind of thing, whereas at the present time they may be reluctant to set up what appears to be an autonomous special purpose body. I commend the minister for bringing that amendment forward.

With regard to the permission for inspectors to enter premises, except dwellings, to inspect sewers and the contents of sewers, that too is obviously a necessary step, though

I regard it as rather unfortunate that there could be some duplication where municipalities are going to have to have inspectors who are qualified to deal with matters of effluent. I think it's unfortunate that this is not something that is being dealt with by the province, or at least by a large district area rather than by, in some cases, lower-tier municipalities which are still fairly small municipalities.

So while we support the permission for inspectors to enter the premises, we regard it as unfortunate that this is a municipal responsibility and would be much happier if sewers and matters of the environment such as this were a provincial responsibility.

Mr. Philip: It used to be known as the affluent province. Now it's known more as the effluent province.

Mr. Isaacs: Right. Allowing an open penalty for leaving keys in a vehicle is something that municipalities have been requesting for some time.

With regard to section 9, removing the restriction requiring ministerial approval for roads over a certain width is certainly a move forward, but I'd like the parliamentary assistant to explain why ministerial approval continues to be required under this bill from municipalities to set up narrower than usual roads, given that that matter is already covered by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and narrow roads are generally not eligible for subsidy. It seems to me that this provision is just a bit more red tape and a bit more bureaucracy that is redundant because things are already being satisfactorily handled elsewhere.

Leasing or licensing the use of untravelled parts of highways is something that municipalities are requesting and I think it's worth trying as an experiment. I hope it does not turn into a nightmare where municipalities are extending the use of the untravelled portions of highways so much that sidewalks and parts of the untravelled portions that appear to be sidewalks become totally cluttered with vehicles.

[5:30]

The matter of courts issuing restraining orders on municipal bylaws is a big step forward, and I hope it is only a first step in permitting municipalities properly to enforce bylaws which at present are still causing a great number of problems.

On section 12, as I have indicated, we will be introducing an amendment because we feel the collection of taxes is best left to the municipal council to handle. We see no reason at all why the minister should have the right to set the amount of a minimum tax bill; this seems to us to be something perfectly within the ability of municipal councils, and our amendment will give municipal councils the right to determine the size of the smallest tax bill they issue.

On section 13, we have some concerns about raising interest on overdue taxes from one per cent to one and a quarter per cent per month. We are supporting this amendment because it is a permissive amendment which will allow municipalities to set the interest on overdue taxes at up to one and a quarter per cent per month. I can understand that that flexibility is needed.

I have to express some concern, though, when there may well be good cause for a person to have overdue taxes—a cause which may be due to his personal financial circumstances or more likely may be due to some problems he is encountering with property taxes in general and with his relationship with the municipality over property taxes. When municipal councils are still able to borrow money at less than 12 per cent per annum, I really don't see why we have to add a surcharge to that for citizens of the community who, for good reason, may have overdue taxes. So we will be supporting that section, but we do have some concerns about it.

On the second part of that section which allows the municipality to make use of credit unions, we have to say, "Hurray." But we suggest to the parliamentary assistant and to the minister that we feel this isn't going far enough. Municipalities ought to have the right to use credit unions for their entire financial services if they so wish. I recognize that is something which cannot be done by amendment to this act, because it would require quite a bit of liaison, discussion and co-operation with the credit unions themselves and then might require amendments to certain other acts.

On section 15, which requires that tax appeals on grounds of sickness or extreme poverty go to council rather than to the assessment review court, that certainly is a good move because the assessment review court is not an appropriate body for dealing with appeals on this basis. I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant whether his staff can advise him and us whether this section would permit the council to delegate that responsibility to a committee so that tax appeals on the grounds of sickness or extreme poverty could be heard by a committee rather than having to be heard by the whole council. I would like clarification on that.

On the final section, regarding the matter of English and French and bilingual forms, we are concerned simply that the discretion of the minister and of the council remain in that section. We find it difficult to understand first of all, why the minister has to prescribe the English and French versions of the forms and then the council may decide whether it wishes to use either or both. We would be a lot happier if the entire discretion rested with the municipality and the minister were required to provide copies of all forms which the Municipal Act specifies in both English and French versions so that municipalities could provide service to their residents in either English or French, as the municipal council sees appropriate, rather than having ministerial discretion intervene in there as well.

To sum up, yes, it is more than a house-keeping bill; it's a bill that makes some of the functions of municipal government a lot easier. As my colleague has indicated, it's most unfortunate that it was brought to us at this very late date when we haven't had an opportunity to consult in the way we like. But I know it has been discussed very briefly by the PMLC and that consultation on each of these sections has taken place. I regret to say we will have to take the word of the minister on a couple of these things—that municipalities are going to approve of our passage of these sections—because they haven't had proper chance to deal with them.

I think it's unfortunate when we get to an omnibus bill such as this that the legitimate concerns municipal government brings to this government on a monthly basis don't get dealt with as they come up. Instead of being dealt with expeditiously, apparently they are put away in a file drawer until there is a great big bundle of them and then we see an omnibus bill such as this brought out with rather short notice. I think that's very unfortunate.

I would urge the government to respond more quickly to requests municipalities bring to it; say yes or no, and if the answer is yes, and in many cases hopefully it will be, then the government could bring forward pieces of legislation which deal with one specific change, rather than trying to deal with everything all at once—everything being that which has accumulated for the past couple of years in many cases.

So those are our comments and we will be asking that this bill go to committee stage so we can introduce an amendment on section 15.

Mr. Hall: Just briefly, I wish to rise in support of section 13 of the bill. It's been a particular problem in the town of Lincoln, which is part of the riding of Lincoln, to the extent it would appear that rather than pay taxes, established business firms have been using the municipality as a banker. Therefore the opportunity to charge interest on arrears will possibly ease the heavy tax rolls municipalities have been having to carry.

For example, at the end of 1978 Lincoln's tax arrears were some 71 per cent of the portion of the whole levy it got to keep for the year—having, of course, had to forward the regional and school board levies. One business alone owed the town some $143,000 in unpaid taxes and interest payments. While I don't like to see higher interest payments, it certainly puts a municipality in an awkward position if they are going to be used as a bank by established business firms.

Other municipalities may have also faced the problem, but I do want to compliment the town of Lincoln for initiating some enthusiasm from other municipalities to support a change in the interest rates. I believe some 85 municipalities eventually responded to the minister to share in this concern over the problem.

For a small municipality such as Lincoln, facing a tax delinquency of $990,000 in 1978 is a substantial problem for them. It is unfortunate there's no other way of doing it easily, but this amendment does seem to be necessary so I certainly support it.

Mr. Swart: I rise specifically to ask the minister to deal with a point raised by my colleague from Wentworth. The question I want to put is why has the government not brought in a comprehensive amendment which would have permitted municipalities to deal with caisses populaires and credit unions exactly on the same basis now that they can deal with trust companies and banks? There was a concession made—I believe it was last fall; it was some time last year—when an amendment was made to the Municipal Act which we supported and which I believe everybody in the House supported. It permitted municipalities to make term deposits with credit unions. That was the only—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the honourable member will keep in mind he is to restrict his comments to those principles that are contained in the bill rather than those that have been left out.

Mr. Swart: I am, because we do have a section dealing with the right of municipalities to have certain financial dealings with credit unions, but in the instance of borrowing and in other fields of financial services, they may not deal in the same way with credit unions and caisses populaires. Credit unions and caisses populaires at this stage in our society, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, are major financial institutions, perhaps the largest in the nation. They are responsible financial institutions, democratic financial institutions, and it seems to me this should be recognized when we are bringing in bills that are dealing with the relationship between municipalities and these institutions. I would like the minister to elaborate as to why there is still that great restriction.

I, too, have some concern with a section of the act which empowers municipalities to increase their interest rates from 12 to 15 per cent, because it is permissive legislation. My party and I are going to support the bill in that regard.

There are many people within municipalities who, for one reason or another, are very much behind in their taxes. At a time when we have high unemployment and through no fault of their own they may be going to have to pay these much higher interest rates. The municipality, unlike many lending institutions, has security; they know that ultimately they are going to get that money. There isn't the same reason for them to charge the interest rate that exists in the commercial area of our society. Therefore, I would hope municipalities would use this permission very sparingly.

I recognize there is the other side of the coin, as mentioned by the member for Lincoln. There have been some commercial enterprises and some others which have difficulty in borrowing and have to pay very high interest rates, which have been using the municipality to some extent as a lending agency. I guess I just have to say this perhaps is a fair compromise. When it is permissive we will go along with it, but it can certainly hurt some people who have their own homes, are out of work, or for some other reason are unable to pay their taxes at this time.

The only other thing I want to mention is the legislation which removes the restriction on a municipality having to get approval for constructing highways or rights of way wider than the standard. I think it is very advisable to remove that restriction. As my colleague from Wentworth said, perhaps we should have gone the other way.

I can't help but mention the anomaly of this legislation, which means the municipality can't in fact, have municipal roads which are under 69 feet, or 20 metres. They have to get special permission and yet within condominiums we have narrow streets. You can say, "Well, they are not public; they are private." They are private, but many of them are going to be public at some time, I am afraid, and yet there is no control put over them. They are wholly inadequate, perhaps only 14 feet or something in width, and that is something at which the government should be taking a look.

As my colleague for Wentworth said, we are going to be supporting this bill, but I would like to have that one particular answer from the parliamentary assistant.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the debate was adjourned.

House in committee of the whole.

APPENDIX

(See page 3006)

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

CO-PAYMENT FEES

222. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health indicate to the House what is the total number of persons in nursing homes at present? How many of these persons are obliged to pay no more than the equivalent of the chronic-care co-payment fee of $9.80 per day? For those persons who pay more than the equivalent of the chronic-care co-payment fee, what is the total amount paid by such persons in the last fiscal year for which figures are available; what was the total number of persons who paid above the rate of $9.80 per day; what was the average and mean figure paid by such persons? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

CHRONIC-CARE BEDS

223. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health inform the House how many additional chronic-beds he is prepared to designate for funding in public hospitals in Ontario in 1979-80? To date, how many additional chronic-care beds have been approved for funding by hospital; and what is the projected number of additional approvals for the rest of this fiscal year? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

NURSING HOME BEDS

224. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health review Ontario Regulation 599/75 nursing home beds he expects to be added to the existing stock in 1979-80 by county? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

AMBULANCE AND EMERGENCY SERVICES

227. Mr. Stong: (a) Will the Minister of Health review Ontario Regulation 599/75 under the Ambulance Act, and more particularly sections 9 and 10 thereof, with a view to extending the deadline of August 1, 1979, which deadline would cause the discontinuance of full-time employment as a driver-attendant for anyone who has not by that date taken and obtained a pass standing in an emergency medical care examination set by the director pursuant to that regulation? (b) Will the minister review the compulsory ambulance and emergency care courses offered by the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology, which are not available on a part-time basis, which require approximately

320 hours of study and the average annual tuition for which costs the student $325, excluding examinations, so that those courses may be more accessible in terms of time and cost? (c) Will the minister review the competency of the ambulance and emergency care courses offered in light of the failure rate in both the practical and theoretical aspects of the examinations set by the director pursuant to this regulation? (d) Will the minister consider revising the regulation and allow for retraining as opposed to discontinuance of full-time employment by any candidate who is not successful in completing an ambulance and emergency care course or obtaining a pass standing in an emergency medical care examination? (e) Will the minister consider establishing an association of ambulance driver-attendants which, when set up, could operate on the same basis as the pilot project provided by the College of Physicians and Surgeons for its members and which pilot project calls for periodic re-examination of doctors with a view to requiring doctors to improve in the areas where they are deficient rather than cause dismissal or suspension from the College of Physicians and Surgeons? (f) Will the minister act immediately to extend the August 1, 1979 deadline to allow those driver-attendants who have not yet qualified pursuant to the regulation to do so, so that the already considerable investment in training and experience in these staff members will not be lost. [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

LAB BILLING ERRORS

235. Mr. Ziembra: Will the Minister of Health advise the House how much private medical laboratories billed OHIP each and every year from 1970 to 1978? How much money does the ministry consider was paid in error and how many laboratories were involved in these questionable billings? When will the necessary steps be taken to recover these amounts? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to Notice Paper questions 222, 223, 224, 227 and 235 reads as follows: More time is required to provide this information and answers will be tabled on approximately June 27, 1979.

TREASURY FURNITURE INCORPORATED

225. Mr. Nixon: How much money was granted or loaned from provincial sources to Treasury Furniture Incorporated of Strathroy? What is the present status of the company and of the indebtedness? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Ontario Development Corporation loaned $120,000 to Treasury Furniture Incorporated of Strathroy during July 1971. The loan was fully repaid in August 1972, pursuant to the borrower's going into receivership and upon the sale of its assets.

STARCRAFT RECREATIONAL PRODUCTS LIMITED

226. Mr. Nixon: How much money was granted or loaned from provincial sources to Star Corporation of Listowel? What is the present status of the company and of the indebtedness? Where is the head office of the corporation? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No loans or grants were made to Star Corporation of Listowel. However, the Ontario Development Corporation made a performance loan of $100,000 to Starcraft Recreational Products Limited of Listowel during November 1971. Final forgiveness of the loan was granted during December 1978. At that time the borrower was operating satisfactorily but was attempting to diversify its product lines as general economic conditions and the cost of gasoline resulted in a downturn in the recreational trailer market. The head office of the company is in Listowel.

ECONOMIC IMPACT ANALYSES

228. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table a list of (a) new programs, (b) legislation, (c) regulations, for which an economic impact analysis has been undertaken since the establishment early in 1978 of the cabinet policy requiring the production of such studies? Will the minister also indicate the approximate number of man-hours of work spent on each of these studies and the public costs incurred? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Additional time is required to prepare the answer to question 228. It is anticipated that an answer will be ready for tabling on June 22.

229. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry indicate whether or not economic impact analyses have been done, since the tabling of the budget on April 10, 1979, on major items such as the changes to the Mining Tax Act, abolition of succession duties, the raising of OHIP premiums, the creation of the Employment Development Fund and small business development corporations? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

232. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. F. S. Miller: I expect to have the answers to questions 229 and 232 available for tabling on or about June 22.

230. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Due to the number of questions being worked on by my ministry, this question will be answered on June 22.

231. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: We require additional time to submit our response to question 231. An answer will be tabled on June 22.

233. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: More time is required to respond to this question. A final answer will be available approximately June 22.

234. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act? [Tabled June 4, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: The answer to question 234 will be ready to table on or about June 22.

---

MONDAY, JUNE 18, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

VETERINARIANS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McNeil, on behalf of Hon. W. Newman, moved second reading of Bill 80, An Act to amend the Veterinarians Act.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is, first, to provide for classes of membership in the Ontario Veterinary Association and, secondly, to remove the maximum amount for the penalty that may be prescribed for late payment of annual membership fees.

The Veterinarians Act does not permit any person to practise veterinary science unless he or she is registered to practise in Ontario, except where treatment of animals is being carried out under the supervision of a member of the Ontario Veterinary Association. Until two years ago, the Ontario Veterinary Association granted a temporary registration for nine months under an association bylaw to accommodate certain specific situations. At that time, the bylaw was repealed by the association, which questioned the authority of such a bylaw under the terms of the act.

The dean of the Ontario Veterinary College has expressed concern that since the repeal of the bylaw permitting temporary registration, veterinarians brought on staff from other countries cannot legally perform clinical work until such time as they write and pass the provincial examinations for registration and become registered. The college considers it impractical to cause such personnel to work under the supervision of an association member.

The Ontario Veterinary Association has agreed to pass a bylaw providing a class of registration to cover employees of the Ontario Veterinary College as soon as it is granted authority under the act to do so.

The amendment to provide classes of membership is designed to achieve that end.

The act currently provides authority to the association to set a penalty by bylaw for the late payment of fees, but the penalty is limited by the act to $25. The removal of a penalty limit from the act would permit the association to establish by bylaw a limit agreed to by its members at its annual meeting.

The proposed amendment dealing with classes of registrations is based on representation to the Minister of Agriculture and Food by the Ontario Veterinary Association and the Ontario Veterinary College and parallels similar provisions in the Health Disciplines Act with respect to health professionals. The proposed amendment dealing with a penalty for late payment of fees is based on representation from the Ontario Veterinary Association.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, we certainly have no difficulty in supporting this amendment. It's something the Ontario Veterinary Association has asked for and it's something that the Ontario Veterinary College has asked for. The OVC has been somewhat vulnerable inasmuch as when it brings in temporary staff or people from outside Ontario who haven't been exposed to Ontario examinations or registered to practise in Ontario, they have not been legally able to practise veterinary medicine at the college unless under the supervision of a licensed or registered vet. In that regard, there is certainly a need for an amendment to the act.

When the amendment to the original act was repealed, it created some hardships for retired veterinarians, or veterinarians who were doing some work other than actually practising veterinary medicine, who wanted to be members of the association. It is my understanding that this amendment would permit these people I refer to to be members of the association and to practise veterinarian medicine if the time came when they so chose.

Concerning the second part of the amendment, dealing with the limitation on penalties imposed for late paying of registration fees, this has been a problem with some veterinarians procrastinating or not getting fees paid on time. Twenty-five dollars does not seem a big penalty for them and this will allow the association to establish a limitation on penalty by bylaw. We certainly don't foresee a problem here.

Had the minister been here I could have asked why he hasn't accepted the recommendations laid out in the Botterell report. He certainly hasn't incorporated many of those recommendations into the Veterinarians Act. It is my understanding the association is at present working on redrafting a new Veterinarians Act. I am sure in that act it will incorporate some of the recommendations from the Botterell report, because I know some of the veterinarians have spoken to me about separating the two bodies; in other words, the professional body and the licensing body.

At the same time the one association is not only doing the licensing but acting on behalf of the professional group, the veterinarians. They would like it to be set up and structured much like the Health Disciplines Act where we have a licensing body and a professional group. It is my understanding the Ontario Veterinary Association is at present thinking of incorporating this into the redrafting of a new act. I am sure when we do see the new act in the Legislature one of the changes will be two bodies, or a structure similar to that of the Health Disciplines Act. There is no question that the profession wants to see that split, and it sounds reasonable to me that it should have it.

As far as some of the other recommendations in the Botterell report are concerned, I am sure we will see some of those incorporated into the new Veterinarians Act, whenever it does come into the Legislature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member is straying from the act before the House.

Mr. Riddell: I am not so sure, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about the amendments to the Veterinarians Act and simply saying there was a report that came out some time ago known as the Botterell report. Included in that report were some of the amendments we see here today. For some reason the minister has shied away from incorporating many of the recommendations made in the Botterell report into the amendments to the Veterinarians Act. I am simply trying to encourage the minister to accept the recommendations made by the Ontario Veterinary Association whenever it finishes redrafting the new act.

If the minister sees fit to bring the new act into the House, he will be supporting it. This is a start. The amendments we are dealing with are a housekeeping thing right now. Hopefully some of the other recommendations from the Botterell report will be incorporated into the new act. We will be prepared to debate it at that time.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that our party is in support of this bill, although we have some reservations for some of the same reasons that the member for Huron-Middlesex has expressed. The changes which are proposed are reasonable and necessary on the basis of the present legislation. Certainly since the Veterinarians Act was originally passed, and even since it was amended, there has been much more specialization in the field of veterinary medicine, as there has been in almost any other field. The veterinarians need to have classifications for that purpose as well as to deal with the special circumstances that exist with veterinarians coming in from other jurisdictions.

Our apprehension is that the bill extends, albeit to a very limited degree, the powers that exist totally with the association and with its college. It is, almost without exception, a self-governing body and really is accountable to no one unless the legislation is changed. In the college there is no representation from the public generally, and it seems to us in this party that, whether it is the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario or the Ontario Veterinary College, there should be a place for a public voice in those bodies.

It is hoped, as has been said by the member for Huron-Middlesex, that there will be a new bill or a bill with some substantive amendments brought before this House in the not-too-distant future. When that happens, we will be taking a very major part in making amendments which we think will meet to a greater degree the needs of the farmers and the citizens of this province.

I think you would likely rule us out of order, Mr. Speaker, if we tried to bring in any of those substantive amendments at this time, and rightly so; we will just have to wait until that bill comes before us. But I would also urge the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture and Food to discuss this matter with his minister, and perhaps in the not-too-distant future, in the form of a statement—even before the House adjourns—he might inform this assembly whether there are going to be substantive amendments in the near future and, if so, what form they are likely to take.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that the minister has been talking to the Ontario Veterinary Association and has told the association that he is quite prepared to put forward legislation to provide for a separate governing body when the association indicates that this is its desire.

I might inform the member for Welland-Thorold that I am told that there are two-way observers now in the council of the Ontario Veterinary Association, although that is not officially provided by legislation.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

HUNTER DAMAGE COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McNeil, on behalf of Hon. W. Newman, moved second reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend the Hunter Damage Compensation Act.

Mr. McNeil: This amendment would remove from the act the maximum amount of compensation for loss of livestock or other property damage caused by hunters, and permit the amount to be established by regulation. This change is needed because in recent months the value of livestock named in the act has exceeded the amount allowed by the act. Amending the legislation each time livestock values fluctuate, as the honourable members can understand, is a cumbersome procedure which can be overcome if amendments are made by regulation instead.

Mr. Riddell: We certainly support this amendment. Again, it is a case of seeing a fluctuating market, and it is going to continue that way. Rather than have to come into the Legislature every time to amend the maximum compensation rates, it would simply leave it up to regulations, and I think this is only feasible. If we take a look at beef prices today, they have escalated away beyond what the maximum compensation permits now, and we certainly do have to initiate a change and do it right away. If we give the minister authority to do it by regulation, then these changes can be made as the market more or less fluctuates. So, once again, we certainly support this amendment.

Mr. Swart: I looked over this bill, and the subsequent bill to follow, with a fine-tooth comb and I couldn't find anything we could actually oppose in it, nor could I find anything that really should be amended. However perhaps I would qualify that. Certainly the figures set in any bill are in danger of not being relevant to the situation that exists at the time when cattle or livestock of any kind are killed. It is much better to have it by regulation.

I am not sure, even if you set it by regulation, that this type is the most desirable, unless the maximum is set very high. There are cattle, more and more, that are in a class by themselves and worth thousands of dollars. If you set a general average as the maximum for cattle it will not adequately compensate the farmer who has the pure-bred that may be worth several thousand dollars. Perhaps the maximum should not be there, but should be left to an evaluator to determine the actual value of the cattle or the sheep or the swine. However, once again, that is a bit outside the scope of this bill.

I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant one question: In the Hunter Damage Compensation Act as it exists at the present time, any payment that is made by the province under this act is to have deducted from it the amount of compensation a farmer or the owner of the livestock may receive from an insurance policy he or she may have.

In looking rather quickly over the subsequent act, which we will be dealing with in just a moment—and you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, for referring to it, but they both deal with the matter of compensation for livestock and poultry—it doesn't have any clause similar to that. At least it doesn't appear to have. I am wondering why it dealt with one case one way and another case another way. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant could speak to that when he rises. If my observation from a very quick glance at the two acts is correct, perhaps that should be remedied.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address myself to Bill 81, An Act to amend the Hunter Damage Compensation Act. I appreciate the introduction of the bill and it certainly will resolve some of the problems rural people face. Sometimes a hunter will enter upon property and there may be cattle or other animals shot.

I notice the amendment says it will provide compensation "in respect of various species of livestock." I wonder if the act covers everything produced on a farm today. Sometimes hunters cross fields and do quite a bit of damage even to grain and vegetables. Sometimes there is a drive with five or 10 dogs and about 20 persons to control wolves or foxes, and there can be quite a bit of damage done to personal property. I am talking about fences and other areas that may not be covered under this act; I do not think they are. This act just deals with livestock.

An hon. member: And other property.

Mr. Haggerty: "And other property." Perhaps there are regulations that give it more detail as to whether it includes other personal property. I have had instances brought to my attention where there has even been damage done to farm equipment such as tractors—a tire was accidentally shot out. Maybe the hunter thought he saw ears or horns sticking out; I do not know. I just call that to the parliamentary assistant's attention on second reading of this bill.

It pretty well covers every area in the agricultural industry where damage is done. In a number of instances the hunter does enter the land without permission. I suggest, based upon that, whoever issues the licence for the hunter to go out and hunt or kill different wild animals, I think there must be some responsibility on the other side to say that where damage does occur on farm property, whether to animals or personal property the farmer should be compensated for that damage or loss.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, the minister will make regulations as soon as the bill is enacted to increase the amounts of compensation. The industry will be consulted as to those amounts.

I might also respond to the member for Erie that damage to crops or other damage will be covered under the new trespass act.

To the member for Welland-Thorold, the amount of insurance received will be taken into consideration and deducted from the value of the livestock.

Mr. Riddell: Does that pertain to other acts as well? I think his question was why is that not found in the other acts? Is the parliamentary assistant saying it is being put in the other acts?

Mr. McNeil: It is placed in this act.

Mr. Riddell: Does that apply to any of the compensation acts?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McNeil: I may have to get that clarified.

I am also informed that farm equipment such as a tractor, if damaged by a careless hunter, is covered.

Mr. Haggerty: Under what act?

Mr. McNeil: Damage to fences or crops is not covered but will be, we expect, under the new trespass act.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

DOG LICENSING AND LIVE STOCK AND POULTRY PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McNeil, on behalf of Hon. W. Newman, moved second reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act.

Mr. Makarchuk: Another memorable piece of legislation.

Mr. McNeil: In this case, as in the hunter damage legislation, compensation as set out in the act no longer relates to the current market value of the livestock and property covered. Hereto, the government deems it advisable to establish compensation by regulation limited to the market value of the items at the time the loss occurs.

I would like to point out that the act as it stands allows compensation for rabbits and fur-bearing animals to be set by regulation. This amendment would make the compensation provision apply uniformly to livestock, poultry, bees and hive equipment as well. In this act the amount of compensation, similarly as in the other act, would be reduced by any insurance money received by the owner of the damaged property.

We believe these amendments will enable us to avoid the lengthy delays involved in legislating compensation rates every time market value alters. Such delays are not in keeping with the purpose of the original legislation.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, this is simply performing the same function as the previous amendment just discussed. It never ceases to amaze me how this government is always looking for a cure rather than a prevention. Every day I come into this House and look across the other way, I am reminded of a comment I heard one time where somebody said: "Down in America, they tell a lot of political jokes. Up here in Canada, we elect them."

I have to think there is a certain element of truth in this. Last year when I introduced a predator control bill, which was to get the government involved once again in trying to control predators so that we don't have to be paying out compensation for livestock that have been damaged by dogs and wolves, such a bill got the support of the farm organizations. I know they wrote to the minister and told him they were highly supportive of the bill. But why do we keep passing legislation setting maximum amounts of compensation by regulation, instead of by legislation, for livestock damaged by predators, rather than getting something done about controlling the predators?

I ask that the parliamentary assistant to the minister convey to the minister that he should be acting on a predator control bill. I think some of those municipalities that are still paying bounties are doing it illegally. We can't seem to find anywhere, even under the Municipal Act, where municipalities can legally pay bounties for dogs, wolves and other predators that are destroying livestock.

In connection with this act, I might indicate to the parliamentary assistant that there was a pretty irate farmer around to see me over the weekend. His purebred ram was killed by a dog just at the time he turned it out with the ewes at breeding season. He was hard-pressed to find a ram and, finally, he had to settle on a grade lamb, which meant that he ended up from his purebred flock of ewes with grade lamb. As the parliamentary assistant well knows, one should be able to get somewhere in the vicinity of from $50 to $75 more for a purebred lamb than one should for a grade lamb.

He brought this to the attention of the minister and indicated to the minister he should be compensated for his flock damage. The damage in this case was he wasn't able to get purebred lambs out of those ewes, having to resort to a grade lamb. The minister wrote back and said, "There's nowhere under the act where we can pay that kind of compensation." I really think a farmer should be compensated for flock damage. If dogs get into a flock of ewes and maybe kill some ewes, he's going to be compensated for those, but if the dogs got in with the ewes just about the time the ewes are ready to lamb and the ewes either aborted or they gave birth to deformed lambs that would eventually die, then there doesn't seem to be any compensation for that type of thing. There is compensation only for those ewes that were actually killed or had to be destroyed because of injuries caused by dogs and wolves.

I'm just wondering if the parliamentary assistant doesn't think there should be some kind of compensation for flock damage. If he does, would he talk to the minister and talk to the ministry officials to see if they would reconsider that case brought to their attention by this farmer—who happens to be from Middlesex county. The farmer brought this matter to the attention of the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) and the member simply wrote him back and said, "I brought this to the attention of the minister and the minister says nowhere under the act can he find any compensation for flock damage."

He wasn't satisfied with that answer and he came to somebody he knew could get answers for him.

Mr. Turner: What did you tell him?

Mr. Riddell: I told him, "You came at an ideal time because we're going to be discussing this very thing in the Legislature this evening." I simply draw that to the parliamentary assistant's attention, and I would seriously ask he give reconsideration to this farmer who, because of dog damage, had to resort to a grade lamb and had to take a lot less money for his lambs when he sold them.

Mr. Swart: The discussion by the member for Huron-Middlesex, I think, follows on the suggestion I made earlier that, in fact, perhaps it's not fair to set limits on the payment made for livestock. The more I think of it, the more I am convinced there should be valuers who determine the remuneration when livestock is killed. There can be so many varying circumstances, as was pointed out by the member for Huron-Middlesex, that you just can't put all of those circumstances in regulation.

There is, as I mentioned previously, a great variety in the type of livestock, in the quality of that livestock, in the condition of that livestock at any given time, or the purpose of that livestock. I don't know whether "yos" or "yous" is the correct pronunciation.

Mrs. Campbell: There you are. You see, you don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Kerrio: You'd make a fine famer, Mel.

Mr. Swart: When I was on the farm we called them "yous." I think that may be right, but if you have a number of ewes and have a ram, there's a particular time when that ram is a great deal more valuable than he is at other times of the year.

Mr. Conway: That's a startling deduction.

Mr. McClellan: To say nothing of bees.

Mr. Swart: Therefore, there should be that kind of flexibility in the valuation and even regulations will, I'm afraid, not provide it.

I too, on this bill, would like to ask the parliamentary assistant if he can give us any indication of the amount of money received by municipalities when they collect from the owners of the dogs or the other animals that destroy the livestock. This has a bearing, of course, when we're going to be markedly increasing the maximums and the average amount being paid to the farmer or to the livestock owner.

I would like to know what percentage, if, in fact, in most municipalities there really is any follow-up whatsoever in trying to ascertain the owners of the dogs that destroy the livestock or the chickens or the bees, or whatever the case may be, under this act. Under this act, unlike the previous one, it is the municipality that has to pay these costs and, therefore, it is important to know what municipalities are recovering from the owners who are at fault.

I mentioned that the act dealing with the compensation for hunter damage has a clause in the act that there is deductibility for any insurance carried by the owner of the livestock. However, I didn't mention that this act which we have before us, of course, now puts that clause in, so there will be the same clause in both of the acts. I have looked that over and have to apologize that inadvertently I had missed that.

I just want to summarize by saying that I think the intent of this act and the previous one, because they are similar, should be that the farmer or the livestock owner, usually a farmer, should be reimbursed for the market value of that livestock at the time that it is destroyed or damaged. This bill goes part-way towards that, I say to the parliamentary assistant, but it does not have the necessary flexibility to ensure that that will be the case.

However, because it is an improvement, is there a likelihood that there will be a comprehensive bill brought forward on this matter similar to the act dealing with hunter damage? Am I to assume that this is correct? At that time we will be moving the amendments which, hopefully, will be in order when we have a more complete bill before us to assure that appropriate compensation is given to the farmer.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to speak to Bill 82, An Act to amend the Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act. It seems that Bills 81 and 82 could almost be combined as a Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act. By combining the two you could have hunters and wild dogs or dogs included in both of them without having all the red tape to go through two particular bills that are almost serving the same purpose.

I think my main concern about this particular bill is that if one looks at the explanatory note the act also provides for compensation to be paid where bee colonies are damaged by bears. The maximum amounts payable are set out in the act.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that he should be looking perhaps at an amendment to include compensation where you have a number of beekeepers in Ontario who move a colony of bees from one community to another, from one area to another, which does cause some difficulties with local beekeepers in the area. You can have what are known as killer bees come in. They will move them in at the particular time that the honey crop is almost ready to be taken off the hives or the colonies. They will move in these transient bees, I guess you would call them, and the first thing you know they are robbing the honey and killing the colonies of bees.

I think the parliamentary assistant should have something in this bill that would protect these beekeepers from that particular type of bee operation in Ontario.

I hope the parliamentary assistant will consider that, because I find there is a lack of bee inspection to ensure that colonies of bees are healthy. I suggest there should be compensation in this area, not only against bears but against those persons who are transporting bees into an area. It's been brought to my attention that in one particular area close to my place a chap has a habit of bringing bees in every year about the same time, and the local beekeeper loses his crop and loses his bees.

The other area I support the two previous speakers on is where it says "the municipality shall be liable to an owner for an amount in respect of" not more than $500. That doesn't cover the actual value of particular livestock if you get into registered cattle, or even thoroughbred horses. It will not cover the loss.

This is one of the difficulties I found in my experience on council. Under the Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act usually a municipality would pass a bylaw, and I believe at that time it only covered a certain weight of poultry. For example, you could have prize geese or turkeys where one bird would weigh almost 25 pounds as spelled out in the bylaw, but they could never be compensated for it.

I suggest we should single out any one of a particular species of animals or poultry that should be included here that they should be compensated fully for. I see we have rabbits in now, and often persons do carry on this farming business. It is profitable, but often they do have a number of losses in this area due to wild dogs or just an ordinary dog that perhaps may go astray some time and may cause some loss to a particular animal.

In section 1(f) it says: "Poultry of one owner killed or injured in any year in excess of $1,000." I don't know why we would have $1,000 in there. I don't think there should be any limit at all. If a dog happened to get into a poultry pen I think he could kill 20,000 birds and the $1,000 would not cover it. I suggest that perhaps there shouldn't be any limit on the loss of a particular animal—$500 or $100, whatever it might be. I think it should be perhaps set at the market value of the day, whatever the cattle or cow may be worth. We may be dealing with a pure-bred animal that may be worth $6,000, and we could be dealing with another one, a grade cattle, that's only worth about $1,200 or $1,400 in today's costs.

I suggest that the parliamentary assistant consider some of the comments of the previous members and what I've brought to his attention. I think there are many areas where the bill could be improved.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, flock damage includes compensation for a reduced lamb crop or dead lambs that result from an attack by dogs or wolves. However, reduced value due to the fact that it would be necessary to replace a purebred ram by a grade ram isn't covered under the act.

Mr. Riddell: They couldn't stretch it to cover it?

Mr. McNeil: That would be pretty difficult, I think. I think the honourable member realizes that too.

Members may be interested to know that payments by the province for wolf damage total approximately $100,000 per year.

Compensation for losses caused by dogs are paid for by the municipality. In answer to the member for Welland-Thorold, it's very difficult to identify the dog. One almost has to shoot the dog at the scene of the destruction and if he's tagged one can trace it to the owner. But in most instances it's pretty difficult to identify the dog. Consequently, there is no record of who the owner is. It's very seldom that we're able to recover losses from the dog owner.

Mr. Ziembra: Why don't you just follow the dog home?

Mr. Riddell: You can follow the dog home but you have to open its mouth to see if there is any wool in its teeth.

Mr. McNeil: That's right. After the dog leaves the scene of destruction, it's pretty difficult to prove that it was even there.

The proposed amendment will allow the maximum compensation rates to be set by regulation. It is intended to increase the present maximum awards to reflect current values. I am informed that a minimum of 50 pounds of poultry must be killed or injured before compensation will be paid.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

NEWFOUNDLAND ELECTION

Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, I think it should be brought to the attention of the House that the forecast in the Newfoundland election shows that the Conservative government will be re-elected with 34 seats, the Liberals will have 18 and the New Democrats once again will have none.

Mr. Bolan: We want to be the first ones to form the next Liberal government anyhow. We don't mind that at all.

Mr. Gregory: You will have a long time to wait.

PROVINCIAL COURT (CIVIL DIVISION) PROJECT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 113, An Act for the establishment and conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto for the development of improved methods of processing certain Civil Actions.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I regret I was not able to be in the House at the time this bill started into second reading, nor have I had the opportunity to read Hansard to ascertain just what statements were made at the time it was introduced for second reading.

I would like to state that I was very appreciative of the opportunity to meet with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and with his parliamentary assistant in advance of this act being introduced for debate. I raised a number of concerns. The first concern I had was with reference to the jurisdiction. The Attorney General advised me that it was his ministry's position, obviously, that this bill was not ultra vires. The reason he gave me was that this jurisdiction has had approval in the province of Quebec. I, therefore, am prepared to accept that statement.

I would like to state that as far as we are concerned the philosophy of the bill is one which we approve. I don't know whether any statement was made with reference to legal aid, but it certainly is one of my concerns that in small claims court, at the present time, it is difficult, I'm advised, to obtain legal aid. Certainly, with the jurisdiction increased to $3,000, I will have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that for most of the people in the riding of St. George, $3,000 might almost as well be the Hydro debt. I trust they will be able to have appropriate legal aid for representation in this court. I would hope that statement has been clearly made by the parliamentary assistant in his discussions of this particular bill.

I am sorry we are not able at this time to see what the rules committee is going to produce in the way of rules because, once more, it is difficult to debate a bill in the absence of any kind of concrete knowledge. To most of us, there has been a feeling that the development of the small claims court and the reform of it has been, shall we say, rather long overdue. Certainly, some major moves have been made in the fact that in Metropolitan Toronto we now have full-time judges for this court.

This is, of itself, useful. I understand this is one court, one court alone and we will continue with the other small claims courts across Metropolitan Toronto, and this one will be, as it is indicated, a trial balloon, as it were.

At this time there are many people who experience a great deal of difficulty, not only with the formalities of our courts and our court systems, but with the costs. It is for this reason we are prepared to accept the philosophy of the bill as it is before us, but I think it only appropriate those concerns should be expressed at this time.

Mr. Lawlor: From time immemorial, the Liberal critic down through the centuries, and certainly myself throughout many years, have had sharp things to say about the small claims courts in this province as being collection agencies, as being dependent upon credit houses of various kinds as their emissary and as their agent.

It is an egregious phenomenon. It is the one area in which justice, the courts, that most public of public institutions, was in private hands. With the government members' mania of trying to privatize everything, I can't help but rejoice tonight that they have reversed their position, at least in this particular area and at least in Metropolitan Toronto. In other words, for the first time they are giving cognizance to seeing the public interest in the administration of justice at that lowest level of the courts where a very large number of citizens, far more than ever appear in a county or supreme court, have to appear in order to have justice administered.

To be in the hands of court clerks who are the owners of their establishment and who are to a considerable extent outside the jurisdiction of the members opposite, who paid their own secretaries, who had bailiffs under their immediate control, is an anachronistic system in the extreme which has perpetuated itself down.

When they come to grapple with it, they do everything these days upon the basis of an empiricism. They never do anything across the board and forthrightly, everything is a pilot project. They are mad on experiment, with little courage with respect to projects.

By the way, I want to take exception again and castigate Arthur Stone, my dear friend, on the title of this thing. I almost moved an amendment on this thing, say for the establishment of a provincial court, civil division in Metropolitan Toronto or something. What is this all about?

With the cost of public printing, what is being expended in printing alone at this particular point would supply each of us with a dinner, perhaps even for one week. In any event, I would like to hear some justification for the minister's portentous title in this particular regard.

At the provincial courts level we have established a family court, and we are moving into a pilot project in the Hamilton area with respect to a unified concept having a very broad range of jurisdiction affecting family matters of all kinds which at present are divided into 16 different courts with respect to juvenile offenders and those who are less than offenders, the young people in trouble. We have set that up for some time past.

The most populated courts in the province by far are overwhelmingly the provincial courts, criminal division. Every court, as far as I can see, and certainly in this area, is loaded to the doors every morning of the week; so they have to begin earlier and earlier in order, first of all, to take the two and a half hours necessary to get the adjournments before they can start the work of the day. With everybody crowding to try to get out of there by three o'clock, there is not much time left. But those courts are the pivotal courts in the whole province. Now the government is launching into a scheme to set up the civil side of the thing and wants to expand its jurisdiction in monetary terms to $3,000, which is fine.

I would have only two or three nostrums in this regard. The Small Claims Courts Act or, as it previously was known, the Divisions Courts Act—when the government set up a divisional court, it had to give it a different name so the lawyers wouldn't get confused; sometimes I get confused to this day. In any event, it was set up. The old Divisional Courts Act had special clauses in it with respect to such wording as courts of equity and good conscience. It meant—but not for all the judges who sat in it, by any means. I won't mention names. The particular judge I am thinking of is dead; so let him rest in peace tonight. In any event, he thought he was in the High Court of Justice even when he was in the low court of relative injustice.

Equity and good conscience meant that a certain informality ran that court. The rules of evidence were not as strictly applied; there was guidance for the poor devil who came in without a lawyer to face all the plaintiffs in the court—I am thinking again of the credit agencies—who sent their lawyers. As a matter of fact, when I first started practising law that's what I did. I think it was $10 a shot and take as many as you can;

It would be quite a few in a day. Maybe I shouldn't mention that; it's one of things that I have to live down. In any event, it supplied the rent money at the opening of the practice.

The bulk of such individuals appear without lawyers. In Quebec, as the minister well knows, they will not permit lawyers to go to that kind of court, which I thought was an enormous advance along the line of Thomas More's Utopia. He said: "The first step in social justice is to abrogate and cancel out the legal profession." Thank heavens our friend is not here tonight. He was one of the greatest lawyers of them all; he ought to know.

When the individual appeared, he would not know the strict rules, but almost invariably the judge would guide him along, take him by the hand, permit him to ask his questions in the best way he could set them up. He would testify with a feeling of security and of not being under undue pressure, particularly with somebody malignly seeking to upset him in the witness box. The judge acted as a buffering mechanism between the witness and the cross-examination. He was given time and patience and kindness in the process of trying to set forth his case, and was given a good hearing. Everything didn't turn up an iota and all t's were not being dotted. That is the way that court should and must run.

It remains his intent to leave a goodly measure of flexibility. He can't have chaos, but his intent is a goodly measure of flexibility in that all those onerous and clever rules that have been set up over the centuries, most of them are completely useless with respect to extracting the truth, and they serve only one purpose—to suffocate it. That is the next major project, I trust, that is afoot around here. I would like to see that Evidence Act really worked over, but I suppose we are waiting upon Williston, to see what he might suggest in this regard. I won't prejudge him in this particular matter, although I doubt whether we will see any miraculous new nostrums as to how evidence may be handled in our courts.

The parliamentary assistant mentions in his section 2, which could have been a preamble, I suppose, the purposes of the act. It is for the development of simplified procedures and of methods of making civil remedies more accessible and reducing the delays. Of course, by an amendment he will put in there, "and reducing the costs magnificently," or something like that, which will really upset people. If he moves into that area with these particular intentions, then I give him every credit. This court would be a welcome addition.

Just before I sit down, I want to repeat that bringing it within the ambit of the direct surveillance of the Attorney General and of the government, et cetera, recognizing in other words, that tonight we are doing the signal act of provincializing one of the chief levels of our courts in this province, is a worthwhile and monumental act. I welcome it. I am not going to go too much out of my way to give the parliamentary assistant accolades; we waited too damn long.

Mr. Sterling: This has been debated over a period of two days, and so I respond to the members who spoke not only this evening, but who spoke last week on this bill.

The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) asked in his remarks if we could comment in relation to the rules which the advisory committee would draft. We can't predict all of the things, or all of the directions the advisory committee will take. We hope they will keep in mind when drafting rules, the purpose or the intent of the act, as outlined in section 2, but we do envisage the thrust of the rules will make the proceedings simpler and less technical, and especially less technical in the pleading portion of the trial procedure.

We hope they will provide mediation services and pretrial hearings where we have precedence now in the small claims court in the county of York and in the referee's operation in the Supreme Court which is now ongoing on an experimental basis. We hope to enforce time limits more strictly so that there will be less delay involved in bringing these civil cases to a hearing. We also hope that the rules of evidence will be relaxed in certain cases and subject to a judge's discretion.

We heard some interesting comments and interesting suggestions in relation to the advisory committee and the composition of that committee. In drafting section 8(1) and outlining the seven appointments, we had left two members of the committee who were not specifically defined in that particular section, to allow us some latitude in appointing people from the public. The Attorney General will take note of the comments made in the Legislature as to the interests of perhaps a consumer-oriented person being placed on this particular advisory committee so that we can have that end of the spectrum properly represented. It is likely that someone who is sitting on the civil procedure committee which is at present redrafting the rules for the Supreme Court will also be placed on this committee so that rules that will be outlined for this new civil court will line up more or less with the rules that are being created for the Supreme Court.

As to the report of the advisory committee to the Legislature which was brought up by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), we feel that the Attorney General, in being responsible in the Legislature every day and responsible to answer questions as to the success of this court, would provide members of the Legislature the opportunity to ask that question at any juncture they might wish. Therefore, I feel it would be difficult to place in the bill a definite time limitation as to when it would be appropriate to ask for a report from the advisory committee. I am sure the Attorney General will be more than pleased to provide that information at any time a member of this Legislature asks for such a report.

The member for St. George was unable to be in the Legislature last week as I believe she was sitting on a committee at that particular time. I did not at that time mention some of her concerns. She will not find them in Hansard because the hour was getting late and I did not think we would get to finish the debate. I thought it more appropriate, if she had a chance to be here, to answer her directly.

As we have indicated, we believe the jurisdiction is within the provincial boundaries of the constitution in this particular area and that we do have the power within our jurisdiction to create this court. Under the Legal Aid Act at the present time the section which would cover this particular jurisdiction is a discretionary section. I can understand the member for St. George's concern about it. Subsequent to her request we contacted John Bowlby, chairman of the legal aid committee. He assured the Attorney General that the creation of this court would not limit in any other way the present rights of individuals to apply for legal aid under the existing system. In effect what Mr. Bowlby has said to us is that the policy will not change in regard to claims which would fall within this increased jurisdiction.

I think I mentioned earlier, as it was brought up by the member for Kitchener, the thrust of the advisory committee, the rules that would be created by that advisory committee, and what we expect that advisory committee to produce in terms of rules. I would therefore expect my answer in relation to his first point would probably answer the member's concern as well.

With reference to the member for Lakeshore who brought forward the problem of our small claims court and the fact that the administration would fall outside the private sector in this particular act, I must say I agree with him 100 per cent, in terms of saying this is one part of this government's policy which perhaps should be reversed.

Mr. Warner: What an admission.

Mr. Sterling: I would think that in order for the small claims court in future to become more accessible to individuals and for claims to be dealt with in a fair and equitable way, in my view the small claims court should be under the wing of the administration of justice as is the case with the other courts.

I do think there is much room within the small claims court and this new provincial court to explore new avenues where we can cut down the use of lawyers in small monetary matters. I would hope this court will lead to further revisions in the structure of the small claims court and that it will be more accessible to consumers.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Warner: I raised some concern on second reading and I would like to explore it a little bit. The terminology used in the bill is that the interest may be "at the prime rate established in the same manner as for the purposes of section 38."

Section 38 of the act says, "interest which is now payable by law, or in which it has been usual for a jury to allow." What I was trying to get at was the rate that is "usual." I am no expert in this, but it seems to me that the rate for a long time was established at about five per cent and then was adjusted to, currently, 10 per cent.

What I would like to know is when it says "prime rate," if that is pegged into the prime rate as established by the Bank of Canada, or is there some other definition? Secondly, if there is that kind of definition, should it not be in the legislation, or should it at least be in the regulations; that when you say "prime rate" you mean such and such, the prime rate of the Bank of Canada or whatever it happens to be. I would appreciate having that clarified.

Mr. Breithaupt: On the point that the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere raises, it's my understanding that the Interest Act is a federal statute and, therefore, prevails if interest is set out and no particular amount is mentioned with respect to interest. I recall that for years that was five per cent. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere mentions it has been amended since. That is news to me.

It would seem to me that the prime rate that he does refer to would in fact be the commercial bank rate, which at the present time is 12 per cent. Since the Bank of Canada does not lend funds, I would have presumed that we're dealing with a consumer rate here because surely if a judgement was paid, that person could deposit the receipt of that judgement in a savings account and should no doubt at least receive that prime rate. If the rate for that savings account or the rate at which money could be lent with no difficulty would not be received, then indeed it would be a penalty for a person to have to wait in order to receive the payment of a judgement.

I would expect that it is clearly the intention of the government and indeed of this House that judgements not be delayed so that interest which could otherwise be obtained, if that was the wish of the successful litigant, would be able to be received promptly. If that is the case, then I presume the interest rate is that prime banking rate for a commercial bank. If it's not that, then I share the concern of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere and the matter perhaps should be more clearly defined.

Mr. Sterling: I think I know where the confusion may come from. I would say to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere if he looks at the amended section, which was amended in November, 1977, that may answer his questions. He'll see at the top of the section, which I have sent over to the member, that prime rate means the lowest rate of interest quoted by chartered banks to most credit-worthy borrowers for prime business loans as determined and published by the Bank of Canada. That's done on a monthly basis.

Therefore it's well defined. Was there a problem in terms of getting the amended section?

Mr. Warner: The problem is clearly mine. You won't find this too often, I assure you. I was using the 1970 Judicature Act, chapter 228, section 38, and had inadvertently overlooked that section having been amended in chapter 51, 1977. I apologize for whatever confusion I may have caused not only yourself but the hard-working people who bolster you.

Mr. Lawlor: There have been members of the legal profession who have been known to do that.

Mr. Breithaupt: There are still some using the 1960 RSOs.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 48(1a)(b) of the act as set out in section 5 of the bill be amended by striking out "the judge" in the first line and inserting in lieu thereof the Chief Justice of the High Court or a judge designated by him."

Mr. Sterling: Perhaps I could outline the reason for the amendment. The purpose of the amendment is to provide clearly that the Chief Justice of the High Court will hear applications for a hearing by a single judge sitting as the divisional court. It will allow the chief justice to make proper scheduling arrangements for the sitting of that individual judge. It was thought it should be the chief justice who should be making that judgement call, or someone designated by him.

Mr. Lawlor: The effrontery of this ministry will know no bounds. They have not listened to my cri de coeur in this matter and they have side-stepped it, tried to make an end run—whatever the football lingo is. Since the Attorney General is a great football fan and player, I am sure he adopts the strategems of the game.

I am concerned with two things: First, it is a fairly arbitrary power, and I wanted some kind of clause on the consent of the parties. As I say, that has been circumvented. I trust you gave it good consideration because it is contained in many places. The parties in most circumstances wish their cases to be tried and got over with. If the gravamen of the case is such as to lend itself to an expeditious treatment, they bow their heads. A judge ought not to be placed in a position of imposing the hearing upon them.

Second, there is nothing here—although I suppose in natural justice it might be; I'm a little perplexed about that—precluding as it did previously the judge who did the designating from also being the judge in the substance of the case on the appeal. That ought not to be.

If part of your move to the chief justice is to overcome that—that is, the likelihood of the chief justice sitting on one of these cases is somewhat remote—still the judge he designates I trust would not be the judge who would be sitting on the matter. I would like some assurances in that regard and bland assurances will not be enough.

Do you not think the legislation should be worked out and given explicit statement to debarring that possibility from taking place? It is very high power indeed to arrogate to yourself the disposition of a case, saying that you alone will determine it, and then proceed to determine it. This is a court of appeal. This is a court with at least three judges normally sitting.

While I am quite aware of the wait in that court, the number of cases and the need and necessity at this time in history to expedite proceedings within that court, are you not letting money be your guide? It is the tendency in all areas of government—but it must not be allowed as far as I am concerned particularly to obtrude upon the administration of justice—that money is the guiding nostrum and the norm by which you operate.

So I would like you to answer why you did not include the consent of the parties as one of the criteria in the matter and, second, whether the rules of natural justice in your opinion preclude a judge sitting on his own case, on his own decision.

Mr. Sterling: I think the major objection to including consent of the parties in this particular act would come about in this way. The section is designed to take care of an out-of-town situation, where one can't convene a panel of three high court judges to sit as divisional judges. If consent of the two parties was required, it would leave one of the parties, who perhaps wanted to drag his feet on the appeal, in a very strong position. In other words, if there were an appeal from an Ontario Highway Transport Board decision, it might very well be in the interests of one party to drag his feet as long as he could. That, therefore, would defeat the purpose of the particular section if it required the consent. That would be the major objection to that.

The only objection I can see in terms of the other point is that in a manner it could be a method of selecting the judge that might be hearing the divisional court trial.

Mr. Lawlor: The second point is that the judge, as you have amended it, and no doubt the chief justice, will in many instances designate a judge to say that this particular case should take the expeditious route. Would he be the same judge as is hearing the appeal? I think he ought not to be. He's had to peruse and analyze to some degree the evidence in the case in advance of the matter, and make certain judgements with respect to the weight of that case. In other words, he may have formed some fairly basic opinions in order to say that it's the sort of case that should be subject to this treatment. Then for him to go in and sit on it, it seems to me, is a mistake.

Mr. Breithaupt: I share to a degree the concern which the member for Lakeshore has raised. I think that the point of having someone sitting in on the expedition of the appeal and possibly sitting then on the case itself is something which we should attempt to avoid.

It may be difficult to give instructions to the Chief Justice of the High Court or one of the senior judges involved as to how this routine may be handled. I would, however, hope that the ministry would at least consider discussing the matter with the Chief Justice of the High Court so that there is some understanding of the concerns which have been expressed by the member for Lakeshore and by me.

This is likely to be an administrative matter which will not cause particular problems. But I would hope that any possibility that problems might be caused could be avoided. If that can be done, then I would be prepared to have the amendment pass, with the understanding that our concerns will at least be remembered and, hopefully, no particular conflict will develop because the administrators of this particular section will remember what those concerns were.

Mr. Warner: Following along those lines, there seems to be at least three different points raised here. On one of them I had tentatively thought about an amendment along the lines for section 48(1a)(b) of the act as set out in section 5 of the bill, because you've reduced the three to one, to add in a little part that says "can and ought to be heard by a judge sitting singly, provided that both parties agree." There must be some cases where it is advisable to have three judges sitting on the matter. That would not only allow flexibility, but also it would ensure that the parties are agreed as to why there should be only one judge instead of three.

Obviously, I do not want to place the amendment. I would like some explanation from the parliamentary assistant. If I can get that clear in my own mind, perhaps we will not have to amend it. I am curious to know why the wording has been left the way it is without writing in the provision that both parties should agree.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I thought I outlined that in replying to the member for Lakeshore. There is a significant problem in terms of requiring the consent in that one party could unduly delay the hearing of the trial and, therefore, do away with the entire thrust of the section. For instance, if there is only one High Court judge in Sudbury and you want to have a divisional court hearing on a very important matter that should come on very early, then basically one of the parties, if it is advantageous to him, could withhold his consent and, in effect, delay the matter from coming to trial.

The other one is a little harder to answer; that is, the objection in terms of the Chief Justice of the High Court, or a designated judge, not sitting and, in fact, hearing it as a divisional court judge. I would hope, and it is our belief, that it would not be the practice of the High Court judge to use his discretion in that manner.

The only problem with that, in terms of the statute, is that it would limit that possibility if both parties wanted that particular judge and that was okay by everybody involved in the situation.

My answer on that particular matter is that we would not expect the High Court judge, or a designated judge, to sit on the case which he had designated one divisional court judge to hear. We just do not see any real necessity to put it within the terms of the legislation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the section, as amended, stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Lawlor: Except that the member for Kitchener is an overtly, almost grotesquely trusting soul; he is relying upon some whispering in ears and saying the right word in the right place or dropping the hem of the garment. Tonight, I am prepared to go along with him, curiously enough.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps we can just agree that, whatever the discretion is that will be used, it may not necessarily be because we are short of judges that the parties might choose to have the same judge deal with the matter. We have shared our concerns and I would expect, administratively, the thing will probably sort itself out.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 6 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 111, as amended, reported.

COUNTY JUDGES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 112, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Sections 1 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 6(6) of the act, as set out in section 6 of the bill, be amended by inserting, after "may" in the first line, "subject to the authority of the chief judge."

Mr. Sterling: The purpose of the amendment is to clarify that the senior judges' discretion, regulation and supervision over the other judges is subject to the authority of the chief judge. We just wanted to clarify that in this section.

Mr. Breithaupt: I don't know if that necessarily does anything more than split an infinitive, as the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) has mentioned. I would have presumed the chief judge would have these administrative authorities without question. You might feel it necessary to underline it in a section such as this, but in view of the comment made by my friend and colleague from St. George I think it would be better probably to put this addition into the section either at the beginning of the section or after the word "court." However, I shall leave your version of the English language to your present associates and friends and you can deal with it as you see fit.

Mrs. Campbell: This is as a result of our intolerable educational system.

Mr. Lawlor: It's okay, I like splitting infinitives. Why not split hairs?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It used to bother your former leader.

Mr. Lawlor: What's wrong with that? While we have eliminated the word "junior" from those grey-haired fellows, twice as old as the senior judge who happens to be in that county, I can see there might be on occasion some rubs, a senior judge taking himself rather too seriously, as is the wont of senior judges, simply because he retains the designation under your legislation and being somewhat puffed up.

It might be just as well to have the chief judge sitting as referee in the background, judging the judges and bringing some peace into that particular court, whatever court it might be. As is the way with human relationships, often a certain amount of irritation or even acrimony develops among the different judges in a court. To give him complete, arbitrary, dispositive power over the situation would probably on some afternoon prove to be a mistake. The other judges may have resort to a more neutral figure, et cetera, of enormous sagacity as these chief judges happen to be, placing their case before him and bringing some order into the judicial process, which is something, generally speaking, in all aspects devoutly to be desired.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 7 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. Warner: The subsection that is numbered (1a) says: "Every judge of a surrogate court shall hold office . . ."; it then goes on to say they can be removed "for inability, incapacity or misbehaviour established to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council."

I am interested to know whether there are formal provisions involved in that procedure. While I don't know all that much about the whole system, I do get the impression that these judges are being treated in a somewhat different manner from other judges as to this test of ability, capacity and behaviour. Also, is there a hearing involved for the judge, and is there an appeal process for the person who has been deemed to be unable, not of capacity and is not behaving? I guess, in summary, what I am looking at is how formalized are the proceedings and what protection is there for the judge who has been given these three labels?

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can define just what the satisfactory misbehaviour is.

Mr. Sterling: Before one can be appointed a surrogate court judge one must be a county court judge. The county court judges are appointed by the federal Parliament, whose members have the right to appoint all county court judges. The rights to a hearing and so on would be covered under the federal Judges Act; there is a judicial council which deals with appeals, et cetera. Practically speaking, if someone was misbehaving as a surrogate court judge he would basically be misbehaving as a county court judge and the dismissal would come from there; the case would first go through that particular procedure and then the Lieutenant Governor would also cancel the appointment as a surrogate court judge in conjunction with the results of that hearing.

Mr. Warner: Is there an appeal process?

Mr. Sterling: The decision really would be made by the federal counterparts as they are appointees; if they made the decision that a county court judge was to be dismissed then he could no longer be a surrogate judge and therefore he would be dismissed by the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Lawlor: It's the other way around. The mere fact one ceases to be a surrogate court judge would not necessarily mean in the least that one would cease to be a county court judge.

Anyhow, with regard to these surrogate court judges, I think it's high time the amanuensis of the Attorney General's ministry earned his spurs in this House. Would the parliamentary assistant give this assembly this evening a brief history of the surrogate court in Ontario? Was it formed formally under equity practice? How did it evolve? Was it King's bench, Queen's bench, common pleas? What was it back a few years ago, just before he was born?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Since this is not a part of the bill, I'll allow the parliamentary assistant 30 seconds to deal with the matter.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I would have loved to turn my attention to it but since you have ruled it out of order I will not answer the question.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I want the House to know this. The only reason I relent is I wish to see this House go forward tonight at a snail's pace.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Well, it's doing just that.

Sections 18 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 112, as amended agreed to.

[9:45]

PROVINCIAL COURT (CIVIL DIVISION) PROJECT ACT

Consideration of Bill 113, An Act for the establishment and conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto for the development of improved methods of processing certain Civil Actions.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Warner: I wasn't satisfied with the response about the reporting. When the House is in session and we have question period, of course, that is an opportunity for each member of the opposition and government members who are not cabinet ministers to ask questions. I don't think that is good enough, particularly when you are running an experiment. I understand this court to be set up as an experiment and it has a termination date, January 1, 1983. Since it is a defined period of time and it is an experiment, and as it is deemed to be important and is going to operate in the largest city in the province—and we assume it is going to fulfill a useful function—I think it makes sense to have a regular report back to the assembly as to how this thing is functioning, what are the good points and the bad points about it. Surely if you are having an advisory committee they are advising on how the thing is progressing. Would an annual report be too much to ask, once every 12 months?

That is one item. The second I wish to raise is that out of the group of seven on the advisory committee we can identify five people, if I am correct: the Deputy Attorney General; the senior judge or his nominee; and three of the five to be appointed by the Attorney General, one of whom shall be a county court judge and at least two shall be members of the law society.

Is it the intention of the government that the remaining two people be non-lawyers, people out of the "at large", community? What is the intention with respect to the remaining two people who aren't identified by position in section 8(1)?

I would like an answer to that. My preference is that you have a couple of non-lawyers from Metropolitan Toronto sitting on that advisory committee, I think there is a good argument for that. If I understand the argument for the court it is that you are trying to have some flexibility built into it, to reduce some of the formal strictures of normal court proceedings, while attempting to handle some of the functions of the small claims up to $3,000. If you are attempting to do that perhaps it makes sense to have a couple of non-lawyers on your advisory committee. I would be interested in knowing, first, if there is a response regarding the two people whom we cannot identify in this section 8.

Mr. Sterling: Basically we have no objection to filing the report, if that is the desire of the members of the Legislature, but I just find the logic a little bit failing. If you want an annual report, the session sits, generally speaking, six months of the year—although we are out of session for periods of three to four months, I guess that is the largest gap in time—so if members are just saying they want an annual report, as I indicated in my previous remarks all they need to do is ask the Attorney General to prepare a report for the members of the Legislature. We are quite willing to entertain that. It is just a question of whether it is in the best interests of all concerned to have a report prepared each year and whether the expense is worthwhile. If it is the desire of the members I could suggest a motion for that.

In the matter of the intention of the government in relation to the two other individuals, I believe the member for Kitchener brought up the matter of appointing someone outside the legal profession in terms of a consumer-oriented person. We do not know how well that would work. It has some very positive points. Basically, though, the advisory committee is going to be dealing with procedures of the court. Whether there would be much interest on the part of somebody who is not familiar with those procedures, I do not know. There is some question in my mind as to whether such a person could have a meaningful input into the whole process and would be making a valuable contribution to that kind of committee.

Basically, the structure is such that it is left open for the two final appointments. We talk about practising lawyers, two judges and the Deputy Attorney General. I would have expected that the other two appointments would probably be law-related people. That was our original thought on it. But the Attorney General is giving some consideration to the appointment of a consumer-oriented person; if we could find such a person who is not a lawyer and is particularly interested in this kind of matter, we would certainly consider that kind of person for the advisory committee.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary assistant has certainly skated around the problem very well. I recognize, if one is dealing with the development of the rules, that it is to be that the rules will have been pretty well sorted out within the next several months so that this project can get under way. I share the parliamentary assistant's view that the annual report idea may not be particularly useful, because questions could be asked of the Attorney General, either in the House or during his estimates, when matters as to how this project is working out can be gone into at some length.

The other point, with respect to the membership of the advisory committee, does still somewhat concern me. The parliamentary assistant has very carefully set out seven persons and has sorted out five particular persons, but still he does not say who the last two are going to be. It may be, since we are dealing with the rules of the court, that the consumer type of person is not the most useful in this kind of project.

I still would like to know what the parliamentary assistant means when he says "law-related people." Is he thinking, for example, of perhaps having a registrar of a county court or possibly even a clerk of some other small claims court who is an experienced person and might be of help? Is this the kind of person being considered? If so, perhaps the parliamentary assistant might share his thoughts with us. Certainly the appointment of persons such as those two kinds, to take those two examples, would likely be very useful when developing rules.

It may be, as I say, that the consumer advocate or such involvement is not as necessary in this particular example. If in fact the ministry is looking at these other two persons as being some type of clerical, advisory or administrative person now in the court system, the parliamentary assistant should say so. That is perhaps the kind of person they want to have. But surely we should know at least the kinds of people being thought of to make up those two appointments who may be lawyers but may not necessarily have to be.

Mr. Sterling: Two of the type of people you mentioned are two very definite possibilities and are within the realm of our possibilities. Another one who was not mentioned is a professor of law who is not practising civil litigation who might be very interested in this area.

Mrs. Campbell: It's always helpful in practical matters.

Mr. Sterling: Yes, I know.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Lawlor: I'm still disturbed with the nomenclature connected with what this act is supposed to be about. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant would entertain an amendment to that along these lines. "An Act to provide for a Provincial Court of Civil Jurisdiction in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto." Then the short title would read as you have it in your present legislation.

I don't want to go on with it but "An Act for the establishment and conduct . . ."—how portentous. You don't need all that. You are providing for the setting up of a court, why don't you say so?

Then it goes on, "for the development of improved methods of processing certain"—certain uncertain; I think the only thing certain is the 3,000 bucks—"Civil Action" Why all this?

I am asking you to consider altering the title—I don't know how. I've never heard of the title of a piece of legislation being amended in this House, but I am sure it is possible on the fundamental basis that anything is possible.

Mr. Breithaupt: Particularly speaking on section 12, when we look through the index or even the Order Paper you can get some idea originally about the contents of a bill. If you look, for example, at the title of Bill 8, it's an Act to amend the Trees Act. Now, chances are it has got something to do with trees, and anyone looking through the legislation or the index will be able to say, "Under 't' for trees; was anything done about that subject in the Legislature?"

If, on the other hand, one is considering this matter they have heard about, some new division of the provincial courts in Metropolitan Toronto, you would sure never know it by looking at the title of the bill. You would have absolutely no idea that you are in fact dealing with something as neat and tidy as the provincial court (civil division) in Metropolitan Toronto.

The short title I must say makes an awful lot more sense than the long title.

Mr. Sterling: I wish I was carrying some other act. I am really at the wish of the members opposite in terms of the titles to these acts. We can only change them to what you would desire—or the good editing you would desire.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't push that one too far.

Mr. Sterling: The only reason for the length of the title is so that someone who is going through a list of the different acts would have some idea of what the act is about.

Mrs. Campbell: You're kidding.

Mr. Sterling: I can't say I was personally involved in this particular title. If any member feels strongly enough about the name of the act, I would entertain a motion to change it. I think the act will generally be referred to by its short title anyway, and that the long title will only be known—

[10:00]

Mrs. Campbell: By the mother of the bill.

Mr. Lawlor: Rather than prolong the agony—I was testing the water with my little toe—why not an act to provide for a provincial court of civil jurisdiction in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto; wouldn't that do it?

Mrs. Campbell: On a trial basis.

Mr. Warner: Too straightforward; must be something wrong.

Mr. Breithaupt: There may be some point there; but of course the bill has already been brought into the House under this title and has received second reading as well under this title. I think some points, though, could usefully be considered. If there was reference to the provincial court (civil division) for the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto it would certainly be a lot easier to find. However, if there is the technical reason that we started under this title and must continue, then let's do that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: My information is that the title can only be amended if there have been some amendments in the bill which would warrant an amendment to the title. Don't ask me to give you chapter and verse to back that up, but that is the information I have. Of course, we're looking at section 12, which is the short title not the long title.

Mr. Lawlor: I can't bow to that. Have you got the page in mind?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, I have no authority for it, and I'm not going to guarantee that I can give you authority for it.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm getting very close to challenging the chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Maybe we can, if you'll just be patient.

Mr. Lawlor: Just bear with me for a moment before I launch into the blue. It seems to me that we have it within our jurisdiction to amend anything as we see fit, and as long as no one raises too much of an objection. I mean there are certain people, if they raise objections we can ignore them, but—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let me read rule 86: "It shall be an instruction to the committee of the whole House to which bills may be committed, that it has the power to make such amendments therein as it thinks fit if they are relevant to the subject matter of the bill; but if any such amendments are not within the title of the bill it shall amend the title accordingly and shall report the bill to the House." That's rather the converse of what we were saying.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't know whether it's converse or reverse.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I didn't say "reverse" I said "converse." This bill has to go for third reading, eventually. Does the member for Lakeshore wish to make an issue of the point?

Mr. Lawlor: I'd love to, but I'm not going to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I appreciate that.

Mr. Nixon: That's a big change.

Section 12 agreed to

Bill 113 reported.

TREES AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act.

On section 4, as renumbered:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: When we were last looking at this bill the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) had moved an amendment to section 3 but had not spoken to that amendment. So that we'll know what he's speaking to I'll read the proposed amendment to section 3 to you.

Mr. Swart moved that section 5(1)(j) of the act, as set out in section 3 of the bill, be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(j) apply to trees which, subject to prior approval of the enforcement officers, it is necessary to destroy in order to lawfully establish and operate or enlarge any pit or quarry on land that has not been designated under section 2 of the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971."

Mr. Swart: It was our party's view in considering this bill that where a permit wasn't in existence, whether relative to section 8 when there is a house or structure to be built on land, or as in this case relative to pits and quarries which have not been designated under section 2 of the act, that the enforcement officer should view that property prior to any tree cutting taking place. He should agree with the owner and inform the owner of the land what trees he would be able to cut down without infringing on the act.

This, of course, gives discretionary power to the enforcement officers, but we feel it is preferable to an owner who goes ahead and cuts down a great number of trees, some of them unnecessarily, and then afterwards has a charge laid against him or the alternative of not having a charge laid against him. We just think on this occasion, as in the previous subsection of the same act, it is desirable to have the enforcement officer there ahead of time before the action takes place. That is the purpose of this amendment to this section.

There has been real concern, of course, among the conservationists and others about the desecration of trees to enlarge pits and quarries. We recognize that in some places this is necessary. The old act may have been unduly restrictive and we think the clause which we propose here finds the right compromise where it is permitted but where the enforcement officer would view it first.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, my feeling about this amendment is really the same as the one before. Giving the authority to an official to decide whether or not a project really would go forward subject to no appeal whatsoever I think is improper. It should be the rule of law rather than that of individuals.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, we feel the section of the amendment to the act which is presently in Bill 8 is adequate and we will not be supporting the amendment.

Mr. Swart: Just one more word, if I may Mr. Chairman; I would point out that the decision of the enforcement officer may be rejected by the owner of the land and then it would be up to the enforcement officer or some other person to take him to court. It could be decided there whether he had cut down trees which should not have been cut down. I just repeat that I think it is better to decide ahead of time rather than afterwards.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on the amendment? If not, is the committee ready for the question?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 4, as renumbered, agreed to.

On section 5, as renumbered.

Mr. Bolan: On section 4 in the bill, which has been renumbered to section 5, I have an amendment before you, Mr. Chairman. It is a three-part amendment, and I propose to abandon the first part of the amendment and the third part of the amendment. The second part has great significance for the future growth and development of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bolan moves that section 6(2) of the act, as set out in the said section 5 of the bill as renumbered, be amended by inserting after the word "just" in the last line of the subsection the words, "and to adequately maintain the replanted trees in such manner as the judge considers proper."

Mr. Bolan: This is not the same wording as the amendment which was before you. I have spoken to the minister about this matter. It is something which was drafted a very short while ago.

Mr. Chairman: Would the honourable member send one to the table?

Mr. Bolan: I will; I do have one here.

Mr. Swart: On a point of order, I'm confused about the number. We didn't renumber the act. Are we not actually talking about section 4 of this act, and not section 5?

We had a great deal of discussion on this before, but the act was not really renumbered because of your accepting an amendment. Is it not section 4 we're talking about now?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, as I recall there was some confusion when we were last dealing with these amendments because at that time the first amendment was an amendment put forward as section 1(a). However, legislative counsel indicated, and the committee agreed at the time, that instead of 1(a) it should be called section 2. Consequently, all the following sections were renumbered one number more.

I see the legislative counsel is nodding and the Clerk is nodding, I think.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member for Welland-Thorold satisfied? I'm quite sure the numbers can be corrected on editing later.

Mr. Bolan: The amendment which is in the bill reads as follows: "Where a person is convicted of an offence under clause (a) of subsection 1, the judge shall consider all evidence given in respect of the necessity of replanting the area on which trees have been destroyed and the owner of the said area to replant or have replanted thereon such trees in such manner and within such period of time as the judge considers just."

Unless you have the amendment I have proposed, what that means is that a judge may make an order with respect to replanting and then that's the end of it. There are no provisions at all for maintaining those trees for a reasonable period of time.

In order for the order of the court to be effective, the section will also have to grant to the judge the authority to compel the owner to maintain that particular tree cover. That is the purpose for the amendment.

[10:15]

Mr. Swart: We have no objection to that amendment. It perhaps strengthens the section. We'll support it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 5, as renumbered and amended, agreed to.

On section 6, as renumbered:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 7(b)(2) of the act, as set out in section 6 of the bill as renumbered, be amended by striking all the words following "to" in the third line and substituting in lieu thereof: "(a) the owners of each parcel of land that abuts the land of the owner of the trees in respect of which application is made; (b) any person who requests notice of such application; (c) any other person as the council considers proper."

Mr. Swart: The significant part of this amendment is clause (b) which would provide that it would be required for a municipality to notify any person who requests notice of such application. This would be in addition to the owners of each parcel of land that abuts the land of the owner and any other person the council considers proper. The intent of this is, of course, that special interest groups would be notified if it was so requested.

The act as it now stands requires that they would have to notify a neighbour who abuts on the property. This is proper and correct, but the basic reason for the Trees Act is the preservation of forest cover. The person who abuts the property might not have any particular interest but there may be other groups in the community, such as in the Niagara region where they have the Association of Conservation Clubs, which might have some real concerns about cutting off or giving an exemption to cut off part of a bush. There could be other interest groups and there could be other people who might not be the neighbours who would have some concern about this.

For instance, people who might be downstream from a section of the bush might not want to have it cut off. It might affect their water supply. There are a variety of groups of people who might be concerned about it. It seems to me that anybody who asks to be notified about the intent should have the opportunity of knowing. In our subsequent amendments it would mean they would have the opportunity to appear before council and give their reasons for objecting—if it was a case of objection—to the permit being issued for having this special exemption to clearcut in an area.

The council still makes the final decision, this is just relative to notification. It seems to us it makes sense that there should be that broader notification with regard to these exemptions. I would point out the exemption part is new, that hasn't been in the act in the 30 years or so since the act has been in force. If we're going to put it in now then let's establish the broader notification policy so those people who are concerned about it can at least make their views known to the council. That is the intent of this amendment.

Mr. Bolan: We do not support this amendment. We feel allowing this clause to remain would mean any group at large would merely register with every municipality and every township in the province where they have a bylaw pursuant to the Trees Act. Whenever somebody comes along to cut a tree, they have to send a notice out to everybody in the bloody province. It just doesn't make sense. For that reason, and being sensible people, we are not going to support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to hear the perception of the honourable member opposite. Actually, he could go outside the province and say that it could be anybody in the world, the way this amendment is phrased. "Downstream" might be

Kansas City. County councils are elected, and we assume county councils will act in the best interests of the people they represent. Consequently, I would oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 6, as renumbered, agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8, as renumbered, agreed to.

On section 9, as renumbered.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Auld moves that section 13 of the act, as set out in section 9 of the bill as renumbered, be struck out.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, we obviously support this in view of the fact that we had submitted the amendment long prior to the time the minister had proposed a similar amendment. We think the minister should not have this arbitrary power to make regulations which could almost change the act in any way he wished to. Therefore, we are obviously supportive of this act and pleased that the government has accepted our amendment and will remove it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 9, as renumbered and amended, agreed to.

Sections 10 and 11, as renumbered, agreed to.

Bill 8, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McCague, the committee of the whole House reported three bills with amendment and one bill without amendment.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 111, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Bill 112, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Bill 113, An Act for the establishment and conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto for the development of improved methods of processing certain Civil Actions.

TREES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved third reading of Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act.

Mr. Swart: I wish to speak very briefly to the third reading of this.

Bill 8 was an act that was introduced by the government under the guise of strengthening the Trees Act; a statement to that effect was made. I want to say that the end result has been the exact reverse of that. Policies of 30 years duration, enacted to preserve our forest cover and our water tables in southern Ontario, have been dramatically weakened. Consequently, the New Democratic Party is voting against the bill on third reading. We're not going to force a recorded vote because we recognize we're not going to be supported by the Liberals in this.

Whereas formerly the legislation covered all the territory in a municipality, it now permits elective and partial coverage. In addition, local councils will be able to give minor exceptions, with inadequate notice to people who are concerned. These two amendments alone destroy the act's universality and fair application. For years conservationists wanted the exemption of control on woodlots of less than two acres abolished and the Liberals and the Conservatives combined to keep it intact. Minor improvements such as higher penalties for infractions in no way balance off the damage done to the act by the other amendments.

Future generations, I suggest, will pay a stiff price for our backing off from protection of this valuable resource, the forest cover in southern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for third reading of Bill 8.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

---

TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Bolan: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) indicated to the House that the unorganized townships of Loudon, Macpherson, Latchford and Bertram in the district of Nipissing had not applied for assistance under the government's disaster relief program with respect to flood damage in those areas.

I wish to bring to the attention of the House that in the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs in the House on Friday, May 25, I said the following to the Minister of Northern Affairs in the House on Friday, from Hansard, page 2214: "There is one other thing I want to mention. I'm glad to see the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) here because I was going to ask him a question on this point. However, I was not able to ask it during the question period. It has to do with the request made to the Minister of Industry and Tourism by the West Nipissing Tourist Area Association.

"These people are in four unorganized townships which have been seriously affected by the flood. Some two weeks ago they requested, through the Minister of Industry and Tourism, that the four townships in that area be declared a disaster area. These four unorganized townships are the townships of Loudon, Macpherson, Latchford and Bertram. They are not the townships which were referred to in the statement made by the Premier (Mr. Davis) some three weeks ago, when he announced certain unorganized townships as being part of the disaster area. They are not the same unorganized townships. They are separate townships altogether.

"Two weeks ago, the association, whose president is a Mr. Rick DeSantis, wrote to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism requesting that those townships as well be declared a disaster area so that they might qualify for assistance. Some of these people are in very dire straits. I might say the government has responded to the tourist operators on the other side of the lake by declaring the township of North Himsworth and the township of Nipissing disaster areas so they would be able to qualify for the funds. However, these unorganized townships, not having any government body through which to speak, have not been able to get any results from the government. I believe there is a cabinet meeting on Wednesday, and I would ask the minister to take this up at that time. The lake is the same level right across. If the tourist operators at one end of the lake, i.e. the townships of Nipissing and North Himsworth, are affected by the rise of the lake, the same thing applies to the other side."

Mr. Speaker, the remarks made yesterday by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs are inconsistent with the facts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On this point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I understand the honourable member is reading from the Hansard of the committee. I think what the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs said was that he had not heard directly from the member with respect to this particular problem.

I recall that the member did raise in this House the question of townships that are situated on the other side of the lake, which happened to be in the constituency of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), but quite honestly I do not recall his raising the question of those townships which happen to be in his own riding.

Mr. Mancini: That's because you are never here.

Mr. Bolan: One would expect the Minister of Industry and Tourism to inform the Premier of that. Doesn't the right hand know what the left hand is doing over there?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. It is becoming a habit and a practice around here for a member to get up and claim a point of privilege simply because he disagrees with what someone else has said. There has been a practice in this House in the past to allow any honourable member to get up and merely set the record straight from his perspective, but by no stretch of the imagination does it constitute a point of privilege. I am afraid it is going to be recorded for posterity that this Speaker had brought to his attention on numerous occasions what a member alleged to be a point of privilege.

These are certainly not points of privilege. They are not points of order. They are simply to set the record straight. I hope all honourable members will keep that in mind. Let's call it by its proper name.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise with certain trepidation after your comments, because I do have a genuine—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: If you are going to set the record straight, please say that you are rising for that purpose.

Mr. Cassidy: No, Mr. Speaker, it is a point of privilege which arises out of comments that were made last Thursday by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott). In question period, when we were discussing the matter of 2,4-D spraying in the Northumberland school district, the minister accused me of misleading the House and suggested we had no evidence of children in the Northumberland school district being ill because of 2,4-D spraying.

I have here results of a survey which indicate that 20 children in three schools became ill following exposure to 2,4-D spraying. I will send it to the government House leader and ask him to convey it to the Minister of the Environment when he returns. In that package I am sending the names of the parents of the 20 children. The parents have filled in their names on the questionnaire and made them available to the ministry.

The minister's response to my questioning on the matter last week, and particularly his charge that I was misleading the Legislature, has not only violated my privileges, but also calls into question the integrity of the concerned parents in the Northumberland-Newcastle area. I am now furnishing the material he said we did not have. Mr. Speaker, I ask you to have the minister, on his return, withdraw the remarks he made that I was misleading the House, and I ask him to act on these very clear indications that children have become sick after exposure to 2,4-D spraying in Northumberland.

Mr. Speaker: I too will await the return of the honourable the Minister of the Environment. I am quite sure had the Minister of the Environment actually made the accusation that the member was misleading the House, I would have caught it and had it brought to his attention. I will await the version of the story or a response from the Minister of the Environment.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FOREST FIRES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the members the latest information on a very serious forest fire situation which is developing in northwestern Ontario.

At the moment, a total of 53 forest fires is burning across the province, 23 of which are not yet under control. Most of the fires are in the area from Thunder Bay west to the Manitoba border. Fortunately, no loss of life or personal injury has been reported, but some cottages and some cut timber are being threatened.

As of noon today, we have 400 fully-trained and equipped firefighters in the affected areas, along with 57 aircraft and all of the necessary support. Every precaution has been taken to prevent these fires from spreading, but the situation may well deteriorate in the face of worsening weather conditions.

To give you specific details of the fire situation, the hardest hit areas are west of Thunder Bay around Ignace and Sioux Lookout. The largest fire, identified as Thunder Bay 37, jumped Lighthall Lake late yesterday and has now grown to 16,000 acres. It is still not under control.

The hardest hit single area is around Sioux Lookout where 20 fires are currently burning, seven of which are not yet under control. The largest fire there is fire number 21, which is 3,800 acres in size. In the vicinity of that fire, some one dozen unoccupied cottages have been threatened, and lodge operators have been advised to pull back any guests they may have staying in outpost cabins in the path of the fire.

Another fire, Sioux Lookout 29, is also threatening some 13,000 cords of wood that belong to a private company, McKenzie Forest Products. That wood is cut and stacked in the forest.

Most of these fires were caused by lightning from a disturbance that passed through northwestern Ontario last Friday. Because of damp conditions, those fires did not show up until Saturday and Sunday when the bush began to dry out. Since then, high temperatures, high winds and low humidity have combined to help fires spread and make the work of firefighters more difficult.

Our aerial attack fleet has been strengthened considerably by the addition of a number of heavy water bombers and helicopters from across the country. My ministry is also arranging to have trained firefighting crews flown in from other parts of Canada, if necessary. Auxiliary crews are being formed elsewhere in Ontario and dispatched to northwestern Ontario to relieve crews which have been on fires for several weeks. These auxiliary crews will also be used to ensure adequate fire attack forces are available to cover off other parts of the north and south.

This is an up-to-the-minute outline of the situation, as reported to me by our provincial forest fire centre in Sault Ste. Marie, as of 11 o'clock this morning.

DRIVING SCHOOLS

Hon. Mr. Snow: Today I propose to introduce a bill, at the appropriate time, which will require driving schools to be licensed and will enable the government to regulate their operation.

This decision is a direct result of the response to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications discussion paper on driver education in Ontario. This response indicated, quite clearly, that the commercial driving school industry was in favour of provincial government involvement in regulation of their industry. A summary of the response to the discussion paper has been prepared and will be tabled with this act.

Four options were presented for the regulation of commercial driving schools: to maintain the existing situation under which municipalities may choose to license driving schools; to improve access to consumer protection procedures; to introduce legislation which would create a body within the industry to regulate driving schools; or to provide authority for MTC to license and regulate driving schools.

We considered these options very carefully. Maintaining the present system provided no solution to the problem of lack of uniformity. Better consumer protection is responsive to complaints, but does not provide positive encouragement to improve the quality of service. The response we received from the industry indicated that some feel they are too fragmented to regulate themselves successfully. Therefore, to provide the regulation requested by some segments of the commercial driving school industry in the past, we concluded that the best solution at this time was to provide authority for MTC to license and regulate the industry.

This new act to regulate driving schools will provide for the licensing of all schools and will ensure that they maintain certain standards for business practices, facilities and instruction. At the same time, we propose to remove the legislation and regulations regarding driving instructors from the Highway Traffic Act and include them in the new act.

As part of the new package, we intend to ensure the quality of driving instructors by requiring all applicants for an instructor's licence to have successfully completed an MTC-approved course. By combining all facets of the driving school industry under one act, I believe we will be better able to control the quality of driving instruction in this province.

With this act, I am tabling a compendium outlining our proposed legislation in more detail. We intend to make these details available to both the public and the commercial driving school industry so that they will have a further opportunity to comment on our proposals. As part of this information program, copies of the act will be available in all driver examination centres.

Driving in today's traffic requires a high degree of skill. I am convinced we can no longer depend on less than the highest quality of driving instruction if we are to keep our roads as safe as possible. I believe this act, which should improve the quality of instruction, is an important step in this direction.

Mr. Bradley: At last.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister recall a report entitled, Report of the Task Force on Controlling the Costs of Payments to Chiropractors, Osteopaths, Chiropodists, Optometrists, and Dentists, by the treatment and rehabilitation division of his ministry, dated April 1973, a report which he has had for six years?

On page five the first recommendation for immediate action at that time was that "radiological services provided by chiropractors, chiropodists and osteopaths be eliminated as planned services and, in return, permit the practitioner to refer patients to radiologists." Why did the minister not implement this recommendation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, a year or two after that, part of it was implemented in that the regulations were changed to allow for reference by chiropractors to out-patient clinics for radiology.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister tells us that what was proposed as something to give the chiropractors in return for preventing them from doing X-rays, namely, to permit them to make such reference, has in fact been given to them, but the quid pro quo, namely, that they not be permitted to do their own X-rays was simply not enforced.

Mr. Speaker: The minister agreed.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister agree that this is what happened?

May I ask whether he can tell us what happened to the study which is referred to on page three of that report? Let me quote: "A study which is now in progress indicates that an excessive number of radiological examinations are performed by practitioners who own their own equipment"—these are practitioners of chiropractic—"and in many cases, total body X-rays, for example, are of possible danger to the patient."

May I ask the minister to table the study that is referred to on page three of that task force report and any other information he may have which might indicate any of the benefits of chiropractic X-rays—information which I have now requested from him on two previous occasions and still have not received?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I take it that the honourable member is indicating his opposition to chiropractic, judging by his line of reasoning.

Mr. S. Smith: X-rays. Can the minister not hear? Is there a problem in the sound system? X-rays.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There's no problem with my hearing.

Mr. S. Smith: There certainly is a problem with your hearing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Pipe down. When the member hasn't got a case he tries to make it up with bombastics.

Mr. S. Smith: Address yourself to what I said. X-rays.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member knows this Legislature has, over the years, through various acts and regulations, endorsed the practice of chiropractic in this province and also included the right to take X-rays.

Mr. S. Smith: Why won't the minister table the study? Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That particular report I'm not familiar with but even in his prelude the member referred to that as a report dealing with controlling costs. I have indicated to him previously, and to this House I believe, that over the last number of years the claims for X-rays by chiropractors have been going down. As well, four or five years ago—I believe it was in 1974-75—we changed the regulations to provide for the ability of chiropractors to refer to outpatient clinics for X-ray services.

Mr. S. Smith: The report permits it here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That report, if I understand what the member read correctly—and I'll dig it out, it's somewhere back in the files in the ministry—deals with the question of costs.

As the member knows, the current interest in chiropractic is germane to the development of new legislation for chiropractic which has been under way for some time. When that gets to this Legislature then those who have concerns about any aspect of the practice of chiropractic will have an opportunity to express those concerns here and, I anticipate, in a committee of the House when they may hear from the public.

I should tell the member, as a matter of interest, that the draft legislation prepared by the chiropractic group has been sent far and wide. The reaction from the College of Physicians and Surgeons was that while they proposed a different scope of practice, their redraft included the use of radiology.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since it was established that in certain hospital radiology units there has been excessive exposure to radiation for patients who came in to get X-rays, can the minister assure us he is satisfied there is no overuse of X-rays by chiropractors? Is he also satisfied that there is no excessive or undue exposure to radiation for patients when they have X-rays in chiropractors' offices? If not, what steps does he intend to take in order to protect patients against the possible excess radiation in chiropractors' offices?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would draw the member's attention to page 2578 of Hansard which is dated June 5, two weeks ago today, at which time, in answer to a previous question from the Leader of the Opposition, I read into the record some figures, developed or drawn from our files by the X-ray inspection people, comparing average exposures for certain common views taken for chiropractic purposes, to average exposures for the same views in hospitals; he will note they compare very well.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister didn't give the other side of the benefit which makes it worthwhile taking the risk.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member takes one person's point of view as expressed through an organization and says, "therefore this service should be banned entirely."

Mr. S. Smith: I asked the question three weeks before this report.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I respectfully submit that, given the information before us, there are no grounds under any reasonable set of circumstances to withdraw this service from the people of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, the minister will recall that I asked this question three weeks before I even heard of such a report from the Consumers' Association of Canada. The minister has still not given us any information he may have for the people of Ontario to indicate any benefit that may stem from having chiropractic X-rays; we await for that information. Will the minister undertake to table the study referred to in the task force report? Is he willing to table that study in this House so we can see for ourselves what the facts are and not just have the minister's opinion?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member might as well ask me to table the report of the benefits that his patients got from his services. What the member is talking about is critical judgement, whether it be radiological services provided by a chiropractor, a dentist, a physician or whoever.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister is unwilling to table the documents, can he explain why, despite four requests, he has yet to table the Ministry of Health's 1977 radiation report, a document which originally led to all of the revelations of overexposure to radiation and X-rays in the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding we were going to have an opportunity to get at this matter in the standing committee; at that time I'm going to be more than happy to share this information with the committee.

Mr. Roy: What is the government hiding over there?

Mr. Cassidy: What are you hiding it for?

Mr. S. Smith: Table the study on page three. That's all you have to do.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Give me the date.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Did I understand the Minister of Health to say that in 28 months as minister he has not been shown this report, which was done by his own staff six years ago and in which there is not only a comment about the cost control aspect, but in which there is a clear indication that the ministry is concerned about the possible danger to the health of Ontarians by virtue of chiropractors X-raying their patients? Has he never seen this? Did he never in the 28 months see it? Is he not aware it says there were possible dangers to the health of Ontarians?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member stands there waving a document around.

Mr. S. Smith: It comes from you.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The archives of my ministry take up whole buildings, with correspondence and reports going back over the years and the decades. The fact this ministry has been involved as deeply as it has with the Ontario Medical Association, with the radiological research laboratories and with various organizations, with the aim of developing standards which don't exist anywhere in the world today for radiological services, is clear evidence of our commitment to developing those standards and improving the delivery of such services in this province.

Mr. Bradley: In other words, the answer is no.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Going back to the research which has been done, the problem that has been identified universally by the eminent scientists at the radiological research laboratories is one of assumptions regarding the levels of radiation that have to be used to get good diagnostic pictures. The member will recall that report, I'm sure. That is the problem we have to address as well as developing techniques for ongoing surveillance.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister's answer was pretty weak.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, the Leader of the Opposition.

DISCOUNT PRACTICES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Premier, which I regret is a somewhat lengthy one. Has the government any comment to make on the statement by Rodney Hull, the counsel to the public inquiry into food store kickbacks? Mr. Hull says he sees no need to make public the information which the inquiry has obtained regarding the size of rebates and discounts on the grounds that competitors may learn something they should not know.

Is the Premier in fact aware that current federal law requires that when discounts are demanded of suppliers such discounts must be offered to all other buyers? That happens to be the federal law. How, therefore, can Mr. Hull argue that this information, which other competitors must already have, unless the law is being broken, needs to be kept secret? Would the Premier not agree that is the main point of the inquiry? Does he not think this is the last straw for Mr. Hull and that his resignation ought to be sought by the commissioner?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know Rodney Hull and I am really not as prompt to express personal points of view about people as is the Leader of the Opposition, without having had the benefit of some discussion, some knowledge and some insights that I am sure he has had. I know he has discussed this with Mr. Hull at great length and is satisfied, in his view, that Mr. Hull is incompetent. I would only say to the Leader of the Opposition that I haven't made that judgement because I haven't had the opportunity to do so.

I would say the commission was appointed with some urging from members opposite, including, I think, members of the Leader of the Opposition's own party. It was a commission supported, as I recall, by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The government takes some responsibility, of course, for the appointment of the commissioner, a very eminent gentleman about whom I have no personal knowledge either, other than that he is a member of the judiciary. He, in turn, has the responsibility, as is the custom in our system, of appointing counsel. If the Leader of the Opposition wants to differ with counsel, that's fair and that's proper, but I would point out to him that all of this information that is being prepared and delivered to the commission is material available to the commissioner himself. There is no question that when the commissioner makes his determination, when he makes whatever determinations he feels should be made, this information can be part of that recommendation or judgement that he might make.

I think it is a bit unfair. I'm not here to defend Rodney Hull—as I said, if he walked into this chamber at this moment I wouldn't know him from Bobby Hull; I don't even know if they are related.

Mr. Bradley: You skate on the issues very well.

Mr. Conway: A good skater like you would recognize Bobby Hull anywhere.

Hon. Mr. Davis: When it comes to this business, I will even skate with the member for Renfrew. It's not easy, but I'll do my best. I really think it is a bit unfair, and I say this objectively, to be critical of an individual in the House and say he should be removed.

The Leader of the Opposition can differ with his point of view, I think that is fair, but surely his function as counsel is to advise the commission and to do his job as he sees it in the context of the order in council establishing the commission. I think to make a personal judgement of that nature is ill-advised, but I am not as prone to make judgements on personalities as is the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: I don't remember saying anything about Mr. Hull's personality, but rather about his point of view.

By way of supplementary, is the Premier himself not following the deliberations of this commission? Is he not aware the agricultural community has come to feel the whole commission is a whitewash anyhow? Does he not believe to keep secret the very information the commission is seeking, namely the size and impact of these discounting practices, is contrary to the very purpose of the commission? Does he not recognize the contradiction in so doing, in as much as competitors are supposed, by law, to already have the information as to what sorts of discounts are being offered to their competitors?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the wording of the order in council with me, but my recollection is that the commissioner or the judge has very broad terms of reference. Some of the Opposition Leader's colleagues who used to practise a little law, or some who are still practising rather actively, would inform him—

Mr. Roy: Who would that be?

Mr. Warner: Name names.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know who that might be.

I think they might advise the Leader of the Opposition that commission counsel is there to advise. If the commissioner wishes to do something not in keeping with the recommendations of commission counsel, then he has the right so to do.

All I am saying to the Leader of the Opposition is I think his observations about the competence or incompetence of Mr. Hull are ill-advised. I don't think it is fair to make that assessment. Second, I do follow the deliberations of the committee. I think there are some things that will emerge when the judge makes his report, and I think the Leader of the Opposition is premature in his criticisms of counsel, who is acting as he thinks proper.

Certainly at this stage I don't second-guess these people.

Mr. S. Smith: He has lost all credibility.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition can say Mr. Hull has lost all credibility. Once again, I think that is an unfair assessment to make. One would have to be there on a day-to-day basis. One would have to have a greater understanding of what is happening than the Leader of the Opposition, in my view, happens to have. As I say, I am not defending Mr. Hull. I don't know.

Mr. S. Smith: It sounds like it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say one of the great shortcomings of the Leader of the Opposition is that he is too prone to make personal judgements about people—

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Premier not aware—and if he hasn't done so, will he check out—that everybody who has been following this commission has come to the conclusion Mr. Hull has already lost his credibility?

If the Premier is not aware, will he not examine the basic point that has been put to him—that since discounts are the main mechanism for establishing competitive advantage, not only among the supermarkets but in destroying all independent operators and small suppliers, how can he conceivably withhold information as to the size of those discounts and not subvert the whole objective of the inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will repeat for the member of York South, who obviously isn't trying to gain an Emmy Award like the Leader of the Opposition, that he too—

Mr. Mancini: Is that a personal judgement too?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that he too has had some experience in these matters. He too may have reservations about the way counsel is performing at this particular inquiry. As I say, I am not prepared to make that sort of judgement because—

Mr. S. Smith: Because you don't follow the matter.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect to the Leader of the Opposition, once again, I may not follow it in as great detail as I know he is following it, as he does everything. I realize I am not as knowledgeable or as expert in all fields as he purports to be.

Some hon. members: We know that.

Mr. Speaker: Back to the supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I confess that. I do not pretend to have his absolute knowledge or the arrogance that goes with it.

Mr. Bradley: Don't talk to us about arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier have an answer to the supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was just trying to confess the fact that I do not have absolute knowledge. But I would say to the member for York South—

Mr. Riddell: You're embarrassing the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Hon. W. Newman: Not at all.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health regarding the serious shortage of beds in Metropolitan Toronto hospitals this summer.

Does the minister agree with Dr. Peter Clarke, the chief of internal medicine at the Toronto Western Hospital, who said that the lives of four heart attack victims were endangered because they could not be admitted immediately into the coronary unit of that particular hospital one night a few days ago?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, all I know about that particular situation is what I read in the paper today. It is interesting that the administration and the board, who are responsible for the overall operation of that hospital, have not indicated, to my knowledge, the size of their coronary care unit as being a problem. They have not indicated that is a problem.

Mr. Swart: They wouldn't even contact you; they know it's hopeless.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Where that has happened—for instance, when the North York General Hospital about two years ago indicated that was a problem, approval was given to expand the intensive care coronary care unit—we can work out problems with individual hospitals.

I may say that, on the question of availability of beds, we have done some checking today, because of some allegations made yesterday. We have checked with a number of hospitals around Metro, and on the whole it appears that no more beds will be closed in the summer of 1979 than were closed in 1978; so to suggest that there are more beds being closed in 1979 is misleading.

Mr. Cassidy: In a letter to the Wingham newspaper, the Advance Times, the Premier wrote a few days ago that if a patient has to be admitted on the orders of a physician the admission will be effected even if temporary inpatient accommodation has to be utilized for emergency cases. Is it therefore now the policy of this government that hospital accommodation will be maintained only to the point where patients, if admitted, will be put into emergency wards? Or will the government ensure that there is enough hospital accommodation available in the province that a patient who has to be admitted for an urgent case can get direct access to the specialized facilities in that hospital?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Recognizing that every service of every hospital at some point is going to experience peak utilizations because of either seasonal or unusual demands, it is the policy of this government that we will have, as we have always had, sufficient resources to serve the health-care needs of the province. Recognizing that the health-care needs are changing, and have changed dramatically in the last 10 to 20 years, so too the system has been changing and will change continually to reflect the needs of the population, but those needs will continue to be met.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can he explain, in this connection, exactly what it was the Premier was telling the province yesterday when he said we were not to assume that this year's funding considerations should be applied without flexibility to the years that follow? Could he be more precise in explaining what this flexibility might mean for the forthcoming years, since there are some of us who are under the perhaps mistaken impression that the active-treatment bed ratios and the funding that is applied to them are reasonably fixed for those small hospitals in particular as they look at the next two or three years?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, we have constantly under review, the development of budgets and budgetary strategy for succeeding years. I think I have indicated to the member in committee and in this House—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Do the members want an answer?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry. Maybe I can tell the member afterwards. His colleagues aren't interested.

With respect to the development of acute and chronic-care beds and extended care, we see in the province today roughly the right number of beds, but an inappropriate mix of beds. As members know, in a number of communities we are actually working with individual hospitals or groups of hospitals to ensure that the programs and services are rationalized in such a way as to take account of the ongoing health care needs and to meet them with the appropriate programs.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary to the minister: In line with Dr. Clarke's comments that there will be a disaster in Ontario if some funds are not released, would he agree that there are a number of hospital beds in Metropolitan Toronto, as one example, that have been, to coin the phrase, dormantized, put out of use, and that he doesn't even know about because the hospitals are not prepared to talk to the ministry any more?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is just about as patently ridiculous as most of the releases from that member's office.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG CAAT GRADUATES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Education. In view of the fact that community colleges are meant to train people for employment, can the minister explain how it is that the unemployment rate of graduates from community colleges in 1977 to 1978 is higher than the unemployment rate for our young people as a whole? Isn't the minister alarmed at the fact that Ontario's young people who have received community-college training have an unemployment rate of 15 per cent compared to the unemployment rate of about 13.4 per cent among young people in general? What are we training young people for—a lifetime of unemployment?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would be fascinated to see the source of the figures which the honourable member has provided. I know that probably he is talking about those who have been trained in the areas of nursing, perhaps in social services and perhaps in the area of early childhood education programs, but in the industrially related educational programs, which the community colleges have, in fact, been providing, and in the business-related courses, the rate of employment is very much higher than that, and the honourable member knows it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since I got these figures from a document which came from the minister's office itself, The Graduate Placement Report of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology, and since it showed that students in business-type courses in the applied arts section had an unemployment rate of 16.6 per cent six months after graduation, students in technology an unemployment rate of close to 12 per cent, those in business of close to 12 per cent, and francophone students a rate of 21.4 per cent, what is the minister or the government going to do in order to ensure that there is adequate planning so that the graduates of community colleges can and will find jobs and not a place on the unemployment rolls when they leave college?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In actual fact, the record of placement of community colleges has been excellent over the last three or four years, and the figures which the honourable member chooses conveniently to report are those areas in which there is an obvious decline in employment opportunities. Some of those are courses which young people still persist in applying for because it is their choice of career, knowing full well that the career opportunities are not as frequent as they were in the past.

It is the responsibility of community colleges to assess the employment potential of every single course which they provide and to make that information known to the applicants to the courses and, in fact, to limit enrolment in those courses in which employment opportunities are either declining or have declined. That is precisely what the community colleges have been trying to do, and I think they have been doing a very good job of it.

ILLEGAL ACTS BY POLICE

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. Would the Attorney General care to explain to this House the consultative process between himself and the Solicitor General where his law officers are proceeding with charges as a result of evidence which appears to have been adduced by way of entrapment?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think to attempt to explain the consultative process between the Attorney General and the Solicitor General would be perhaps highly confusing and very complex and would take up an undue amount of time during the question period.

Mr. J. Reed: We understand that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: So I will refrain. I must admit it is an opportunity to discuss a number of matters of great interest, I am sure.

Mr. Roy: What do you think of the Solicitor General?

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't be coy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will spare the members a complete description at this moment. But I would be much obliged if the member for St. George would advise me as to the particular charges with which she is concerned. Then I would be prepared to respond.

Mr. Lawlor: What do you think about entrapment?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The issue of entrapment, as she well knows, is a complex issue in law. Without knowing the specific facts, I do not think I can respond adequately.

Mrs. Campbell: Could the Attorney General advise as to what his reaction was to the matter which I presented to him some days ago, which certainly seemed to imply entrapment—the difficulty of course being that many of these cases are still before the courts? Does the Attorney General not now realize that with these growing issues there is a definite conflict between his role as the law-enforcement officer and his police role as Solicitor General?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am aware of the matter that was referred to me by the member for St. George. I am looking into it and will get back to her in respect to this particular case.

In relation to the alleged conflict between the role of the Solicitor General and Attorney General, I do not agree that there is any such conflict because the responsibility of law officers of the crown is first and foremost to be servants of the law. That, in my view, should remove the possibility of any conflict.

Again, I would like to remind the member opposite of a little history. First of all, I think in virtually all other provinces the two positions are combined. It is interesting to note that when the government chose to separate the two positions in 1972, the legislation which was introduced to bring this about was opposed by both opposition parties—

Mrs. Campbell: I was not a member then.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —on the basis that the responsibility of the Attorney General for the overall administration of justice was being “watered down” and his “accountability” was being “undermined,” to quote, as I recall, the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), who I think made these observations.

Mr. Roy: We opposed it for different reasons.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Be that as it may, I can assure the member for St. George that I have no particular desire to hold on to more than one cabinet job at any particular time. But I want to make it very clear at the same time that I earnestly and sincerely believe that there is no such conflict.

USE OF MATACIL

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Natural Resources a question about Matacil spraying in northern Ontario. Has the minister yet had anyone analyse the Matacil spray report by Dr. William Thurlow? Is he aware of the latest followup research by Dr. Thurlow and Dr. Lee that shows that Matacil and its solvent, nonylphenol, at subtoxic concentrations have a definite viral enhancement effect, that is, they have the effect of strengthening viruses as in the case of Reyes syndrome? In the case of Matacil, the latest research shows that enhancement effect is 2.3 times; in the case of nonylphenol, it is two times.

Mr. Mancini: And the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) has been asking about it for five years.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister confirm that picketing at the Kirkland Lake airport this morning has stopped spraying in that area? Will he now cancel his spraying program on the spruce budworm for this year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In answer to the first part of the question, it should properly be addressed to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), who deals with the Pesticides Act, herbicides and that sort of thing. In fact, I am sure he would be delighted to reply. We operate on the basis of the approval of the Ministry of the Environment and of the federal authorities for the use of herbicides and pesticides.

As regards the answer to the second part of the question, I understand there were nine demonstrators and nine media people with cameras at the site last night which made it a little crowded. As far as I know, the spraying went on unimpeded this morning, and I assume it is still under way.

The answer to the third part of the question has, I think, been given in the first part. As far as we are concerned, we are acting within all the rules and we propose to continue until we can complete the project.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary question: As it is the Ministry of Natural Resources, for which the minister is responsible, which is doing the spraying, does he not think it is his responsibility to see whether or not the sprays the ministry is using are safe? Has he not been made aware of the telegram sent to the Premier (Mr. Davis) by Dr. Thurlow on June 10, which says in part:

"Ontario decision to spray Matacil must be cancelled immediately. Kirkland Lake residents' deep worry is justified. Maine and Newfoundland both cancelled complete 1979 Matacil spray against budworm. Matacil and its solvent nonylphenol very toxic. New experiment proves enhances viruses, may contribute to Reyes syndrome."

Has the Premier not made the minister aware of that telegram, and does this cabinet not think matters of that importance, and a researcher taking the time to make that contact with this government, should be considered seriously? Should the ministry not cancel the program?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated we operate within the rules of safety which are set by those ministries of the provincial and federal governments that are charged with that responsibility.

Interjections.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that a Halifax medical research team in 1976 indicated there could be a link between the spraying at that time, as a result of the budworm, and Reyes syndrome, and that also in that province over the last seven or eight years 10 children have died as a result of the spray used? In some instances not the source but the spray itself was the cause of the Reyes syndrome, and in others it was the emulsifier used which was the cause. Has the minister looked into that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I simply repeat I am aware of a controversy, but I am also aware that authorities in the United States and Canada have looked at this pesticide and have approved it for certain uses. That is the case with the use for which we are using it in spraying to destroy the spruce budworm.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health with respect to the strike of ambulance drivers in Mississauga, an issue which was raised locally by the member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory). Could the minister tell us the present situation with respect to this dispute, and also assure us no one's need for ambulance service is in jeopardy as a result of this dispute?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Supervisory and management personnel are staffing the vehicles to answer emergency calls. As well, under the terms of the Ambulance Act, surrounding ambulance services in Hamilton-Wentworth, Peel, Metro and Waterford will, as needed, answer emergency calls. I regret to say that routine transfer calls will not be answered, since that makes up the bulk of ambulance use and staff is simply not available to answer other than emergency calls.

Mr. Kennedy: Could the minister give an explanation as to the present state of negotiations or if, in fact, negotiations are on? Possibly that is for his colleague in Labour. I would like to know.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think that aspect of it might more properly be a question referred to my colleague, the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, if I might respond to the member's question, actually conciliation efforts were part of my ministry's involvement, but to date the parties have not agreed that they wish intervention by way of mediation and that is sort of a prima facie request that must come from the parties. If and when it does come we will be pleased to act in a mediation role.

FANSHAWE COLLEGE

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the Minister of Education: In the light of the reported settlement between the president of Fanshawe College and the Fanshawe board of governors, and in the light of the substantial public funding provided for community colleges, and in the light of the original request of the head of Fanshawe, who was relieved of his duties, and his determination that he be paid his full salary of some $56,000 until his retirement, a sum which would equal some $336,000, can the minister tell us the amount of the settlement that was reported to have been made yesterday?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot. The solicitor for the gentleman in question and the solicitor for the community college apparently arranged the agreement which resulted in the dropping of the suit which the gentleman had instituted against the community college and against other people as well, and it was stated by the solicitor for the gentleman himself that there was an agreement that they would not reveal the amount which had been agreed upon.

I share the member's concern that whatever funds are utilized in this area are indeed public funds and that the ministry responsible for that institution should have some knowledge of this and I intend to pursue it. At this point I think the rumour he has heard is very widely blown up, but I'm not at all sure what in actual fact the figure is.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: It is rumours like this, of course, that make us all very concerned, and I would ask the minister, if she has the information, whether she could make it available before the House rises on Friday and, if not, would she please provide it for me? The college is in my riding and I feel an obligation, if she can't, to let the people in my riding know what is going on. I appreciate her concern over the negotiations made within the court settlement, but by the very same token these are public funds and the public has every right to know. Would she please let me know?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The honourable member has just reiterated what I said. I thank him very much.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Would the minister consider asking the provincial auditor to look at the agreement and the settlement and have him report to her and also to the public accounts committee?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I shall most certainly consider that seriously, but I do want to pursue the matter of the alleged secrecy of this arrangement at this time.

FREE TRADE POLICY

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier on a matter on which his government has been ominously silent in recent times, and that has to do with the question of trade, particularly in agricultural machinery, where in the last three years alone we had an increased deficit of almost half a billion dollars. Most of this is on parts, attachments and non-agricultural tractors. Also that the—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Canadian Senate committee on economic relations between Canada and the United States has recommended that we move towards free trade—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Given the honourable member's background—you were a teacher, I believe, in a community college—you can ask a question: "Does the minister agree?" Then he has been asked a question.

[3:00]

Mr. Laughren: I'm worried about the Premier's background, not my own.

Mr. Speaker: I'm worried about whether the member has a question or not.

Mr. Laughren: I did want to know if the Premier agrees with the sentiments expressed by the Canadian Senate committee on free trade that that is the direction in which we should be moving in this and other industrial sectors.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I must confess I lost the thread of the speech and the ultimate question. Was the question whether I agree with the Senate committee? I think my answer to that would be I would agree with parts and not with parts.

Mr. Martel: That's a total copout.

Mr. Laughren: I was serious when I said the government had been ominously silent on this terribly important issue, and the Premier refuses to deal with it.

I'm asking him, is he aware that his Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), when he was in Japan last month, indicated to the Japanese that increased free trade with the United States was going to make it better for them to invest here? Is he also aware the minister said the industrial gateway to the North American market would be through Ontario? Doesn't he feel that really is a move towards a continental integration of the economies of Ontario, in particular, and North America?

I'm wondering if he agrees with this and if that really is the policy direction of the Ontario government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can understand why the honourable member's students on occasion became confused. I too was in Japan and I made it quite clear—because I was discussing the auto industry with some people in that great nation—and this was a layman's perspective, that it made sense to locate here. I said that rather than locate in the state of California, where ultimately some of the products produced there might find access to the Canadian market under the auto pact at some time, it made equal sense—in my view it made better sense—to locate here because the same access would be available to them.

Whether the Minister of Industry and Tourism used this to explain the potential, as certain tariff changes take place over the next several years, as to the advisability of locating in this country rather than in the United States, I think I could follow the logic of that particular argument.

If the honourable member is asking whether I have become a continentalist in terms of trade, the answer to that is no. If the member is asking whether or not I agree with a greater involvement of trade relations with the United States, greater exports to that country, finding ways and means of expediting this, thus increasing investments and job opportunities, the answer to that part of the question is yes; I agree with it.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Premier not be concerned about the fact that with 60,000 agriculturalists and farmers attending the big show at the CNE a few months ago, not one of all the tractors on show there was manufactured in Canada? Is he not concerned about that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think as a matter of fact a number of tractors are being assembled here. I am concerned any time I see foreign goods displayed here, at shows or whatever, that could be manufactured in this province. That's why the Minister of Industry and Tourism; that's why the incentive program; that's why we have been more successful than any province in Canada or any state of the union in creating some 177,000 new jobs, many of them in the manufacturing sector. It is just because we have those concerns. But more importantly this government is doing something about them and we're doing it with some degree of success.

LIQUOR REGULATIONS

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea), I would like to ask a question of the Premier, if I could have his attention.

Is he aware of the fact that since four liquor inspectors in the Ottawa area have been charged, the new acting liquor inspectors in Ottawa are enforcing the law in such a way it will make it impossible for most service clubs—the Canadian Legion, Knights of Columbus and so on—to hold their regular activities, such as bean suppers or bingo? Is he aware that if he permits that, he will be depriving organizations in Ottawa, such as the retarded children, minor hockey, children's hospitals and so on, of needed funds? Would he intercede with the minister and with the new liquor inspectors to advise them not to create chaos and confusion among all the service clubs in the city of Ottawa and deprive them of these necessary activities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I assure the honourable member that one thing this government does not want to see is chaos, in spite of some members opposite. I will do my very best to see that no chaos results in the great city of Ottawa and in Carleton as a result of any policies of this government.

Mr. Roy: Does the Premier not think it is time he looked at the liquor laws pertaining to some of these service clubs and possibly enacted changes—oh, the minister is now coming in; can I redirect the question?

Mr. Speaker: No. Just continue.

Mr. Roy: Can I redirect the supplementary to the minister? I'll say that about the minister: I can get an answer from him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If you want to redirect, then put your question directly.

Mr. Roy: I just want to let him catch his breath, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister intercede on behalf of the service clubs in the city of Ottawa and ask his acting liquor inspectors, who have replaced the four people who have been charged recently, about the enforcement of some of the liquor regulations which makes it impossible for the service clubs to hold some of their much-needed activities such as bingos and bean suppers?

Would he tell his acting liquor inspectors possibly to enforce the regulations in such a way as not to deprive these people of these much-needed activities?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the honourable member's main question was. Did it deal with racket clubs?

Mr. Roy: No, no. I have gone on to service clubs.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In order to straighten out the situation in the city of Ottawa—first of all, in the past couple of weeks the honourable member has brought to my attention the question of racket, squash and similar clubs, where there appears to be some difficulty. In the very near future—probably in the month of July—I will be bringing in a regulation that will settle that problem once and for all. Those licences will be treated as dining-lounge licences so there will be no more problem with youths under the age of 19 being in there for family recreation.

Mr. Roy: Good boy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do not think it is wrong for a father to bring his son into such a place just because the father might be having a drink after playing there.

Mr. Bradley: Does that go for beverage rooms?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. Athletic clubs. Secondly, in the past few months across eastern Ontario, particularly between roughly the city of Kingston and the city of Ottawa and extending up into the county of Renfrew, there has been some concern, not about new regulations by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario but about enforcement of the old ones.

This is the first situation, I can say in all honesty, that has been brought to my attention from the city of Ottawa. In every other situation that has been brought to my attention by members on both sides of the House, the board has worked out a very simple procedure whereby the service club meets with the board—and there have been many dozens of those meetings—and in each and every case the service club has gone away extolling the virtues of the board and gone on to the very necessary and worthwhile fund-raising activities and other social types of gatherings.

Mr. S. Smith: Is that the purpose of the procedure?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would like to draw to the attention of the House that in no way, shape or form does that imply any type of favouritism or something like that. It is merely that the board, since I have become the minister, has been instructed to take indigenous realities into account and not to treat everything in the province as the same.

ESL PROGRAMS

Mr. Grande: My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Education. It is regarding the provision of English as a second language programs in this province. In view of the fact that on Thursday hundreds of parents who have children who need English as a second language programs will be marching in front of Queen's Park, and in view of the fact many times in this Legislature I and other members of this party have raised the matter of the provision of English as a second language classes to teach immigrant children and children from immigrant families how to properly use the English language, and have complained that the ministry's rating factor has been ineffective in providing for that program—

Mr. Sterling: Put the question.

Mr. Grande: —will the minister comment on the following figures from the city of North York?

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware?

Mr. Grande: Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker, indeed.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Grande: Is the minister aware that at Gracedale Public School there are 170 children on the waiting list for English as a second language; 13 are receiving that program now, and as of September 1979 the program will be discontinued;

At Shoreham Public School 93 are on the waiting list; zero children are receiving the program now, and of course there will be no program in September.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Really, that's enough to make your point. Does the minister have a response to what she has heard so far?

Mr. Swart: There's no problem.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware problems of this sort have been raised. I am aware there is a mechanism for establishing the appropriate number of teachers of English as a second language and there are some differences, I must tell the member, in the base upon which it is established within the ministry, the base upon which the Metropolitan Toronto School Board has established it and the base upon which certain of the municipalities in the Toronto area have established it.

I am not aware there are any schools in which English as a second language is required by the students and in which the program is not being provided. I would remind the honourable member it is indeed the prerogative of the school board in that area to staff appropriately for the programs which are necessary within that area.

Mr. Mackenzie: Not if you don't give them the money.

Mr. Warner: They don't have money.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: They have that kind of capability within the fund allocation which is provided.

Mr. Martel: Oh come on, that's a copout.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It isn't. It's the truth. The member just does not want to hear it.

Mr. Grande: Does the minister realize that after taking all the 44 teachers allocated to it by the Metro formula, adding 16 teachers from the regular classrooms and then adding 34 more paid by the special local levy, the city of Toronto still will not be able to provide English as a second language classes for half of the 6,000 children who need it within that board alone?

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked. Does the minister realize?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Those figures I have heard and those figures we are examining.

ISLAND STOL SERVICE

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: As the minister is aware, the federal government, as well as this government, has been supportive of a proposed STOL air service between Toronto Island airport and Montreal. Could the minister indicate to the House whether the federal government is prepared to continue to support this much-needed air service?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet had an opportunity to meet with my new federal counterpart, although I did write to him today outlining a number of topics I would like to discuss with Mr. Mazankowski. One of those items was the Toronto Island STOL service. I hope to meet with him at the first opportunity.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. Peterson: A question to the Minister of Energy: In view of the speculation that the new federal Minister of Energy may want to increase the price of oil more than the dollar a barrel previously agreed upon for July 1, I am very interested in asking the minister what representations he has made to the new Minister of Energy? What is Ontario's position? What is the minister going to do if in fact it goes up more than the agreed upon dollar per barrel?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have had no indication from the Alberta minister that there is any change in the agreement Alberta made with Canada some time ago, although I do see that on June 5 of this year, Hon. Mervin Leitch, the Minister of Energy for Alberta, stated in the Alberta Legislature: "I can say to the members of the assembly that I have no information that would lead me to think the agreement isn't going to be implemented in accordance with its terms."

Furthermore, I met with Mr. Leitch here this morning and among other things we were talking about that. He was on his way to a meeting with Mr. Hnatyshyn tomorrow, I believe. Certainly he didn't give me any indication today he has proposed changing their position.

I remind the honourable member that Alberta has in the past, taken a very strong stand that "an agreement is an agreement and is not to be broken."

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: It wasn't Hon. Mr. Leitch I was referring to. There is speculation, certainly in the press and I understand reasonably well founded, that the new federal Minister of Energy, Mr. Hnatyshyn, wants to increase the price of oil more than the agreed upon dollar. There is going to be some pressure at the federal level in the cabinet to do that.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Peterson: What is the minister's position with respect to that particular initiative if it comes about?

Hon. Mr. Auld: An agreement is an agreement and is not to be broken.

CENTRAL PARK LODGE

Mr. Cooke: I have a question to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development: I would like to ask if the minister is aware of a strike presently under way in Windsor at Central Park Lodge for senior citizens? Does she agree with my position that workers should not have to go out on strike to obtain adequate staffing, that that type of regulation should be brought in by the provincial government through a proper act to regulate rest homes, to provide for adequate staffing, to meet the needs of residents?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, through you to the honourable member, no, I am not aware of that situation and I don't think I would like to comment until I am aware of the facts.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to set the record straight. At the end of yesterday's question period there was an exchange between the Provincial Secretary for Social Development and myself in which she indicated she had certain notes to suggest that our famous meeting at Chedoke Hospital was supposed to be a private meeting. I remember no such thing.

I have now checked with my staff and I assure the minister my staff is prepared to state under oath that at no time did we ever suggest that meeting would be private; at no time did any member of the minister's staff say to any of our staff that it should be private.

I can appreciate the minister may have believed in her own mind, for whatever reason, that the meeting was going to be private, but no such indication was ever given by us. I frankly resent the idea, the notion, that I would offer to have a private meeting and turn around and fool the minister by having a television camera there. It is so ludicrous as to be beyond description. I don't understand how the minister could have formed that impression and I wish, for the sake of the record, that she would withdraw that allegation because it is unworthy of her.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, methinks the honourable member doth protest too much.

I have a note which was hand-delivered to my office on Friday, June 8 from his staff. It reads: "The tour will centre on an informal visit with the patients of the continuing care unit. Most residents are long-time patients with, for example, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, stroke problems and multiple handicaps.

"If time permits the tour will include a tour of the whole continuing-care unit as well as the Holbrook building where shorter-term patients receive rehabilitation services."

At no time was there any indication the press would be invited.

Mr. S. Smith: Where does the word "private" appear?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I make many visits at the request of members to have an opportunity to talk with people in some of our institutions. We have never made it a habit of involving patients with the press. We are there to hear from them what their problems are. Many are intimidated when the press is there.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, under standing rule 28(b) I'd like to give oral notice, and file notice with you and with the table, of my dissatisfaction with the answer the Minister of Natural Resources gave to my question with regard to Matacil spraying. In view of the events later in the day perhaps we could have the late night show on Thursday evening rather than today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let's have it Friday night.

REPORTS

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee has reconsidered the report presented to the House on Friday, May 25, as printed in the votes and proceedings of that date, and reaffirms that report as the committee's final report on the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital inquiry.

On motion by Mr. Gaunt, the debate was adjourned.

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. McCaffrey from the standing general government committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 163, An Act to reform the Law respecting Residential Tenancies.

Report adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Interjections.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Mr. Pope: I win my $2; I knew you guys wouldn't do it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Chair and the table officers are going to be apprised and aware of what is going on we must hear one another and we can't do so with all of this barracking.

Mr. Gregory: You broke your word.

Mr. Eaton: Your word is no good.

Mr. Laughren: You don't always get your way around here.

Mr. Speaker: With any luck at all we have about two and a half days left around here. Will you just keep it nice and cool.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTION

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Mr. Mackenzie be substituted for Mr. di Santo on the select committee on Hydro affairs.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing administration of justice committee and the resources development committee be authorized to sit tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

DRIVING SCHOOL ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 141, An Act to regulate Driving Schools.

Motion agreed to.

Interjections.

[Later (3:31):]

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Would he like to explain the bill?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I made a statement earlier in today's proceedings explaining the bill.

[Reverting (3:23):]

ALLEGATION AGAINST NDP
RE BILL 163

Hon. Mr. Drea: Read Hansard; you broke your public word.

Mr. Laughren: You just can't live with minority government.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: On a point of privilege, the honourable member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: My point of privilege is that sotto voce across the floor of the House there is the allegation being made the New Democratic Party had a commitment not to return Bill 163 into committee of the whole House. No such commitment of any kind was given by any member of this—

Interjections.

Mr. Godfrey: There certainly was.

Mr. Renwick: —by any member of this caucus or of the members sitting on the committee or by the House leader of this party. I want at this time to correct any allegation before it is allowed to mushroom in the way in which the Tories wish to mushroom that issue.

Mr. Pope: It sure will mushroom. Commitments are useless.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have a point of privilege. With all due respect to the remarks made by the honourable member for Riverdale, there was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Will you please take your seat? Order.

There is a legitimate time for a member to seek the eyes and the ears of the chair. There was a motion before the House and the honourable member for Riverdale could have at least waited until the content of that bill was read by the table officers. It is just courtesy. It would have meant another five or 10 seconds.

Mr. Renwick: My apologies. I thought you had recognized me, Mr. Speaker. I would not have otherwise interrupted. I thought you had recognized me.

Mr. Nixon: Just keep cool for another couple of days.

Mr. Martel: Since when does the table cut a member off?

Mr. Laughren: What is the table doing anyway? Is the table running this show?

Mr. Speaker: I really don't think there is enough significance in the objections to really bother about it—

Mr. Nixon: Next vote.

Mr. Speaker: —but for anybody to be saying that anybody who is a servant of this House is out of line I think is uncalled for.

Hon. Mr. Drea: On a point of privilege, just as a reply: With all due respect to the request for a point of privilege by the honourable member for Riverdale, there was a very clear understanding in the committee on general government last Thursday afternoon that the bill would be reported and that it would be ordered for third reading. Some of the people who demanded it go to committee today came to me and asked me if certain things could not be speeded up, in fact one section reopened on Thursday, because otherwise it would have to go to committee. As a personal favour to the committee, and the Hansards can be checked, as a personal favour from the minister I asked that a section be reopened so there would not need to be a burden placed upon this House for one particular section.

All I want to say is I am frankly very shocked and amazed; there was a very clear-cut understanding, and I will just leave it at that.

Mr. Eaton: Right on. Your word is useless, like your policies.

Mr. Renwick: The minister is obviously making a reference to me with respect to section 125 of the bill. The minister came to me and said he was going to reopen that section. I am glad he did. As a matter of equity to the tenants of this province it had to be done. But I at no time, nor to my knowledge did any member of the committee from this party, make any commitment of any kind about the matter.

We asked that the bill be not reported until this afternoon so that the New Democratic Party could caucus on the bill with the amendments, which our party did this morning. It did so, so that we would have the option to determine what our course would be, and that determination was made in the caucus.

I want, once and for all, to lay to rest the canard or false allegation hurled across the floor sotto voce for the record by members of the Conservative Party.

[3:30]

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to clarify something at least from the position of those members of the committee who were there Thursday afternoon last. In fairness, it was one of the only days the member for Riverdale was not present.

Mr. Nixon: No wonder you made progress.

Mr. McCaffrey: The member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) made it absolutely crystal clear—and there is no error in this—that, in the interests of getting out a bill which we all felt was in the best interests of the tenants of this province, we would indeed wait until Tuesday, with the very clear comment having been made that it would give each of us an opportunity to caucus the bill and, more important—there is no misunderstanding this—to preclude anyone, in error, from suggesting it go to committee of the whole. That is exactly how it happened.

Mr. Eaton: Let the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere speak up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You had an opportunity to set the record straight.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 238, 239 and 240, and the interim answers to questions 242, 243, 244, 245, 265, 266, 267 and 269 standing on the Notice

Paper, as well as the answer to question 248 and the interim answers to questions 214, 215, 216, 217, 250, 251 and 254 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 3097.)

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, also before the orders of the day, a point was raised by the leader of the third party on June 18 in connection with some information he was expecting from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. The honourable member directed questions 265, 266, 267 and 269 on Notice Paper 63 to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman). As these questions pertain to purchases made by a number of ministries, the questions should be directed to the Minister of Government Services. My colleague the Minister of Government Services has agreed to prepare a reply to these questions.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of Bill 89, I wish to inform the House of certain amendments to the bill which I propose to introduce during committee. The two opposition critics, I believe, have already received copies of these changes. There are seven sections that are affected, although most of the changes are of a very minor nature.

First, I am proposing amendments to sections 6 and 10 which simply correct the numbering of cross-references.

Section 7 is being amended to clarify the method of notification of licensees of cancellation or modification of their licences.

Section 17 is being amended to enable the filing of a tariff of tolls in a form satisfactory to the board rather than one actually provided by the board, thus carrying one step further our efforts to avoid unnecessary rigidities in the way in which transportation regulations are applied.

Section 27 is also being amended to include the closed-door operating authority, section 6(2), along with those other sections which are proposed to come into force on proclamation rather than on royal assent. The reason is to give us a little more flexibility in bringing this closed-door provision into effect simultaneously with the other neighbouring jurisdictions which are also working at implementing the CCMTA recommendation which was the source of this change.

That covers five of the sections which we are changing. The remaining two have greater substance.

The first of these involves a clarification of the definition of a commercial vehicle in section 1 of the bill to make it very plain that a passenger car loses its exemption from regulation when it is used to pull a trailer for the transportation of goods for hire. This clarification has been prompted by recent evidence that there have been some deliberate attempts to evade the provisions of the act in this manner.

The final change relates to section 11, the commercial cartage zones provision. Before speaking to the specific change I should note that since introduction of Bill 89 I have been made aware of some apprehensions on the part of industry as to the impact of the proposed change on the viability of existing carriers. It is not my intention, nor as I read the select committee was it its, that the implementation of this recommendation of the select committee should lead to drastic change. That was the reason for interposing a hearing by the board on the merits of each individual case.

Given the requirement to justify any change before the board and the opportunity afforded to all parties to present their views, I cannot see this legislation resulting in any wholesale creation of commercial zones. Nevertheless, I can appreciate the fears of some individuals. For this reason it may be useful for me to spell out clearly my intentions in bringing the legislation forward as a clear indication—in fact a commitment—as to the kinds of supporting evidence which I will be looking for in any board recommendation for the creation of a commercial cartage zone.

I need hardly remind members that this proposed legislation gives me, as minister, the right to refuse to create a zone which is recommended by the board.

My intention in bringing forward this legislation is to provide some small measure of relief where local industrial or business development spills across an urban municipal boundary. I appreciate that the present legislation allows local cartage operators to serve as far as three miles from the boundary of their municipality, but this does not apply where another urban municipality is adjacent; in other words, for a major portion of southern Ontario. Not only are there cases where the three-mile limit may be inadequate, but it seems unfair to deny local cartage services to any industry simply because it is located on the fringe of a second urban municipality.

The main criterion, as far as I am concerned, is that a commercial cartage zone should only be established where it has been determined that there is a single local economic community of interest which overlaps an urban municipal boundary. While it is conceived that the board may find that two adjacent urban municipalities in their entirety form a local economic community of interest, I would expect the board to look at such cases very critically with respect to the existing availability and orientation of transportation services.

In most cases I would expect that a commercial cartage zone would be based upon a single urban municipality with the addition of outlying areas which interact closely with it, such as rural strip developments along provincial highways which extend beyond the three-mile limit, or portions of adjacent urban municipalities which are under-served by their own urban cottage zones.

In other words, I simply wish to allow a degree of flexibility in the existing cartage situation. Specifically, in making recommendations as to the desirability of establishing a commercial cartage zone, I would expect the OHTB to consider and report on the following: (a) the extent to which a single local community of economic interest exists throughout the area proposed for inclusion in the zone; (b) the extent of economic interaction among the businesses and industries located within the proposed zone; (c) the patterns of existing and predicted demand for local and line haul trucking services; (d) the present availability of both local and line haul trucking services to shippers throughout the proposed zone; and (e) the impact of the creation of a commercial cartage zone upon existing local and line-haul carriers.

In addition to outlining to the Legislature the criteria which I will consider in determining whether or not to accept any board recommendation for the creation of a commercial cartage zone, I am also proposing some changes to section 11 of the bill to clarify the responsibility of the Ontario Highway Transport Board.

I am proposing the deletion of present reference to the district municipality of Muskoka, which forms subsection 5 of section 11, on advice from my legal advisers that it is redundant. In its place a new subsection 5 will direct the board to consider the economic impact of the creation of any proposed commercial cartage zone upon shippers, carters and public commercial vehicle operators.

In addition, this new subsection will place the board's consideration within the context of finding public necessity and convenience. Once Bill 89 becomes law this will enable the government to issue the criteria outlined above to the OHTB in the form of a policy statement for its guidance in holding commercial cartage zone hearings.

That is the limit of my comments at this time.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to participate in this particular debate today. This compendium of legislation reflects a number of changes that have transpired in the thinking of the government, the minister, the civil service and the Legislature itself.

I think back to a little over three years ago to an item of legislation, Bill 4, which I suppose was the first in a series of steps the government had intended to make with regard to effecting some change as it relates to the operation of the Public Commercial Vehicles Act in Ontario.

It would be redundant to go into the intricacies and the detail that surrounded Bill 4, except to say I think members of all parties and the Legislature itself have come a long way in their understanding of a very complex issue, transportation in Ontario. That is not to say we are complete in our understanding of this issue, but I think since Bill 4, which was not passed, and since the two reports of our select committee, members on all sides have come to appreciate what a complex issue this is and to understand there are no simple or easy solutions to the problems of transportation in Ontario.

After the select committee's reports we saw two items of legislation which unfortunately were inadequate, and I regret the delays that were attendant as a result of the inadequacy of the legislation.

We have seen some progress, though, and I am pleased with the quality of this particular bill. I think the minister should be complimented; I suppose more specifically his staff, who have gone, in my opinion, to some trouble to accommodate the industry, to accommodate the shipping public and to accommodate members of the opposition, should be complimented.

We have here the start of some real improvements to the act, improvements that reflect the spirit and feeling of our select committee report. I think after the passage of this legislation and the enactment of the bill, it's going to be difficult, certainly for myself, to complain that the spirit at least of the select committee report has not been respected.

Changes are going to be made with regard to certain commodities. It would be my hope the ministry would be attentive, aware and alert with regard to the problems that some of the people who move fresh fruit and vegetables are experiencing, and that provisions respecting enforcement, penalties and shipper collusion be enacted as soon as possible; I almost regard that as a quid pro quo for the passage of this legislation.

The restrictions respecting North Bay are to be removed and a new classification respecting lumber will be implemented. I think that in itself marks some sense of understanding we in the Legislature have for the problems in the north, for the problems facing the small carrier there respecting backhauls.

Over the course of the weekend I was doing a little reading on what goes on in other jurisdictions. I must say I personally am somewhat sensitive to the high cost of the movement of goods in northern Ontario. It would be my hope that in time a greater and more flexible licensing system may derive so that we can see a full movement of goods—loaded vehicles wherever possible—in order to do everything we can to reduce the cost of moving goods to our north.

The provisions respecting the enfranchisement of leasing operations or pseudo-leasing operations are most welcome by myself. I think back to discussions that the subcommittee of our select committee had with regard to this rather contentious issue. It was this issue in itself that brought about the select committee. I recall that on that subcommittee the honourable member for Scarborough Centre, now the Minister of Consumer and Community Relations (Mr. Drea), and the hard-working member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) and myself and members of staff spent a considerable amount of time working out compromises and seeing how we could possibly accommodate all people who were concerned.

In many ways the enfranchisement or the adapting to a legal form of people who heretofore were not necessarily operating illegally but were operating without benefit of a PCV licence, in itself is recognition of the commercial patterns that have existed in Ontario, and possibly it reflects the difficulty that many operations have had in getting PCV licences through the Ontario Highway Transport Board.

It would be my hope that the regulated industry will accept their new cousins in good faith and that people who have been operating without benefit of legislation will come forward as prescribed in the act and make application. If they are treated fairly and objectively, in time everyone will be brought under the umbrella of the PCV Act so that we will see everyone in the province of Ontario operating under a regulated environment.

It would be redundant if I said I felt regulation was a panacea for all our shipping problems. But I do believe, especially in these days of very severe uncertainty with regard to the availability of fuel, that we are going to have to maintain a regulated system, a system that would be flexible, would be fair and would be competitive, but would be regulated, to see that we accommodate full loads wherever we can.

I find the various housekeeping amendments are in keeping with the spirit of the act. The improvement as far as uniformity of bills of lading goes will be of great assistance to those who are involved in enforcement, as will the provision for shipper responsibility vis-à-vis collusion.

I am particularly pleased to see there will be once again a formal method for the ministry to communicate its policy to the Ontario Highway Transport Board. During our brief investigation of the operations of the board this past spring it was quite apparent that all too often in too many instances the board was operating in somewhat of a vacuum. This particular provision provides one further mechanism for the minister to communicate his or her concerns and the concerns of the government to that board so that the board will at all times be reflecting government policy.

In conclusion, I appreciate the minister's comments with regard to cartage. I know there was some genuine concern from people in the industry. It is time that we moved to correct the cartage situation and to see that wherever possible cartage zones reflect areas that have a community of interest, areas that have a business community of interest. Having participated on the select committee, I think I know as well as anyone that the whole cartage issue is a very contentious one and a very complex one. I think this particular item of legislation will in many ways help us in that regard.

Mr. Philip: I appreciate the opening statements of the minister and the member for Wentworth North, the Liberal transportation critic. If anything has come out of this long, hard struggle we've had with the problems of regulation in this province it's that the three parties working together can eventually bring about a satisfactory solution so that everyone wins, particularly the shipping public.

I certainly rise in support of Bill 89. The bill has had a long and hard history. Bills 21 and 78 disappeared from the House. My party and the Liberal Party, of course, indicated to the government they were unacceptable, as did members of the trucking industry. Of course, I'm sure the minister realized there was that kind of opposition in the industry and he came back with what is undoubtedly a tremendously improved bill.

This bill in its present form, with its amendments, will be of great value, both to the trucking industry and to the shipping public. Although the bill does not contain all I would have liked to have seen in it, it is such an improvement over earlier bills that one must congratulate the minister and his staff for listening to the criticisms, the constructive criticisms, of the public and of the industry.

I am pleased to see that the hard work of the select committee on the highway transportation of goods is finding its way into legislation. I am pleased, also, to see that the minister is showing some leadership in developing policy that can be identified. That's certainly something for which I and the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), who was my predecessor as transportation critic, have called for a long time. The minister must take personal credit, and I am sure satisfaction, at seeing this kind of evolution.

Undoubtedly some of the praise for this bill must go to the Ontario Trucking Association, which has spoken for the industry and which has always been accessible to members of the government as well as to the opposition. Whenever members of the Legislature have had any real problems with legislation introduced earlier or with concerns about the industry, the association was always ready to answer our questions. Undoubtedly some of the credit for this bill must go to the OTA.

Credit should also be given to the very talented solicitor we had on the select committee, Max Rapoport, who has been a constant source of information and advice to a number of members of the House. Occasionally my long-distance phone bills show that I have not been slow in consulting him even though he is in retirement. Often it required long-distance phone calls to Florida to seek some clarification and to think through some of the problems facing the industry.

Lastly, I cannot help but suspect that the new chairman of the Ontario Highway Transport Board deserves some credit for this legislation. We in the opposition are often critical of the government and perhaps of the key public employees around the government benches and the government ministries, but certainly I have never been slow in saying I was pleased at the appointment of Mr. Alexander. I think both I and the Liberal critic have voiced our approval of his appointment, and of some of the statements he has made since he became chairman of the transport board.

Having said that, I still must confess that I cannot accept the section in the bill on the cartage industry. I am not at all certain that, even with the amendment to section 11, the bill is very much better than what presently exists. I cannot believe that entry regulation is not in the best interest of the shipper, even more than in the interest of the trucking industry. While accepting the reassurances the minister has just given, I still have the gut feeling that section 11 may be used as a form of deregulation. I will not move to delete the section. I think history will show whether or not my concerns are borne out or whether the reassurances of the minister will prove to be true.

I would be remiss, however, if I did not at least put these concerns on the record. Municipal licensing of cartage does not work; I think that is fairly clear. My suspicion is that the new regional form of quasi-deregulation will not work either; instead the board will be tied up in endless hearings. One need only look at some of the subsections of section 11 of the bill to see the board may well spend a great deal of time and energy on this.

Section 12(1) and section 11(4) overcome some of the problems I had with earlier proposed legislation. The weakness of the earlier proposals by the ministry was the possibility of someone getting around the current Public Commercial Vehicles Act by acquiring a series of municipal, or in this case it would be zone, authorities. The minister has plugged that hole and that at least shows he has been listening to what we in the opposition have been saying, to what some of the professional journals on the industry have been saying and also what the industry itself has been saying.

History will show whether I am correct that the movement of goods, be it in tow trucks or other forms of trucking, can only be regulated under the PCV Act; and I don't know of any form other than with proper proof of necessity.

As I said before, having municipal licensing or operating authorities just doesn't work. The regional or commercial zone proposal, I suspect, won't work an awful lot better. Indeed you will have a system more difficult to administer. Again, only history will show whether that is true or not.

I suspect we will have a situation where some trucks will be operating under municipal operating authority, others perhaps even across the street or across a highway will be under regional authority. We know that in the same area you will have trucks going through with PCV operating authority. I suggest that will be very difficult to administer. If we are having trouble policing the present system, I wonder if this added complication will simply make the policing problem more difficult?

On page 1-18 of the final report of the select committee, the committee makes the following important comments:

"If economic regulation in Ontario is to work, it must be viewed as a system or a complex whole, a set of connecting things or parts or a set of co-ordinated doctrines. No system can be implemented piecemeal. A truck cannot be built of parts without a design with which each detailed part is compatible. This is equally true of a regulatory system.

"The committee does not believe in regulation as an end in itself but as a means of accomplishing defined policy objectives. If not part of a policy system, regulation is ad hoc and its effect can be contrary to public interest.

"Measures are recommended in this report which will be integral parts of an effective regulatory system. The necessary system is defined and recommendations are to be made with regard to the actual workings of the system."

The cardinal principle of policy under which an integral system of regulation would be built is stated both in the select committee's interim report on page 22 and in the final report on page 1-20: "We believe that it is crucial to retain economic regulatory controls over the movement of goods on Ontario highways. To retain capability for that movement is an absolute necessity; to retain influence for control over the shape and nature of that movement is clearly in the public interest."

Even though all the government members supported this policy and even though the Minister of Transportation and Communication said in the House after the report was tabled that it is expected it will be in the Legislature, we still had, following the tabling of that report, the following quotation in the speech from the throne: "High transportation costs, particularly in the north, have long been a concern with shippers and consumers. Programs have been introduced at various times to help resolve this and related difficulties. The government has concluded that the adoption of a policy for selective deregulation of the trucking industry will go a long way to removing the inequities that remain. Additional benefits should derive from the effects on the cost of doing business and in terms of encouraging the expansion of secondary industry."

Having listened to Her Honour deliver those sentences, one cannot help but feel that perhaps they refer not to the removal of the North Bay restriction, which is welcomed by members in this House, but one has the feeling that perhaps section 11 may somehow be related to those earlier sentiments.

Pardon my suspicion, but members on that side of the House have expressed those sentiments and it was in the speech from the throne. It's therefore my position that we will be watching very closely to see how section 11, the section dealing with cartage, will be operating. We will be monitoring the minister's policy statements in this regard.

I trust that the deregulation that was mentioned in the speech from the throne does not refer to section 11 and that section 11, or the cartage section, will not be simply the thin edge of the wedge towards deregulation, because the rest of the bill, the rest of the act—and it will become an act in a few minutes I trust—are just excellent.

I have spent a lot of time expressing my concern about section 2 and section 11. However, there's an awful lot of good in this act, so much so that in talking with one executive from the industry he commented: "For heaven's sakes, quickly accept the act, warts and all." The wart that he was talking about was the section on the cartage industry. He says: "We've waited so long that we'll accept it as it is." So if the industry is willing to accept it who am I to disagree with that kind of sentiment? They and the shipping public are the ones most affected by this act.

I guess I was one of the most vocal members on the select committee in advocating action against those shippers who would enter into collusion with those carriers who would violate the PCV Act. This bill sees that equal justice will apply and certainly I commend the ministry for this. This should assist in seeing that the principle of a regulated trucking industry is not violated.

The North Bay restriction is also very welcome. My colleague, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), has been a long-time advocate of this. I can remember how a very important member of the select committee, somebody that all of us valued as a friend, Dick Smith, was a great advocate of this as being an important addition that we needed, and I only regret that a great man who put so much hard work into the select committee report is not here to take some of the credit for the ideas, because some of the ideas were his.

The select committee recommended that the restrictions be removed and the member for Algoma, Mr. Smith and I and other members did so because we had heard from shippers and municipal organizations and we were convinced that it was the right step to take at this point in time. We realized that the restrictions that were imposed in the 1930s made sense at that time but they no longer make sense today.

There are a great number of other improvements in the act that we in the NDP have been advocating for some time: Changes such as uniform bills of lading, which we heard from shippers and from the shipping industry, and particularly those that we had a great deal of information from when we held hearings in the border towns, is now seeing the light of day and of course will improve and facilitate the quick movement of goods. In summary, we will support the bill joyously over most sections, but reluctantly over the section dealing with cartage.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, I rise to express some concerns about one area of the bill which I have had an opportunity to discuss with the minister; that is, of course, the matter of transportation of wood products for the lumber industry, particularly from the north-east section of northern Ontario, and more particularly from the Hearst area. I realize it is only one area; nevertheless, it certainly raises many concerns in my mind, as well as in the minds of the people in the lumber industry.

One of the problems they have up there—I know that the minister is very familiar with the problem, and that he has spent much time discussing the various points with them—is obtaining public commercial vehicles to carry their lumber when a request is made of them for delivery. As the minister knows, these lumber companies have literally millions of board feet of lumber stacked in their yards. When they receive calls for the shipment of so many board feet, they have run into very grave difficulties in the past in obtaining carriers immediately for the transportation of these goods. It is an immediate concern for them when they do get a request and they can't follow through on it because, in the first place, they have lots of money tied up in that inventory—they have bank loans, and they have to pay interest on those bank loans—and the name of the game, of course, is to get that lumber out as soon as possible.

One of the problems was expressed to me by a member of the Hearst Lumbermen's Association, who indicated to me that at one point last winter he had more than 12 million board feet of lumber sitting in his yard. He was on the verge of bankruptcy, the main reason being that he could not get delivery of the lumber.

There are two main carriers in that area, as the minister knows. There is Star Transport, which operates out of Timmins, and there is Alary Transport, which operates out of Hearst-Kapuskasing. In both instances, again, as I am sure the minister is aware—and this has been made quite clear to him by them—upon asking for a carrier of a load of lumber, the answer is from Alary, for example, "We are not going to deliver a load of lumber to Windsor or to Toronto unless we have a return load to come back with." Star Transport will say, "We are not going to Timmins to pick up your lumber unless we have a return load to come back to Hearst" or wherever the place may be. These carriers, understandably so, are not prepared to operate on a one-way load basis only; they want a return trip that guarantees them some form of revenue whichever way they are going.

The problem has been expressed clearly by the lumber company, and their concerns were clearly set out in a letter, under date of May 19, 1979, to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). I would like to put on the record for posterity some of the problems they raise in their letter—again, I understand that the minister has taken these problems into consideration and that through the W licence, as I believe it is called, he has come up with what he feels is a solution, and I would like to speak to the House shortly on that point.

I would like to read some of the comments made by the Hearst Lumbermen's Association.

"We note that we still will be required to prove public necessity and attend hearings before a licence or a certificate can be issued," a point which is the major contention presently.

"In the case of lumber for which transportation is required when the market calls for it, it is not public necessity which should have to be proven but rather industry necessity. We maintain that these special licences should be available upon request, if need be proved by industry that they are required, without the need of any hearing.

When the demand is there it is not time to attend hearings—"

Mr. Philip: How do you prove it without a hearing?

Mr. Bolan: Will the member for Etobicoke just listen?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable member continue and disregard the interjections?

Mr. Bolan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

"When the demand is there it is not time to attend hearings and debate whether you can ship your lumber or not. Certainly by this time it should be known that you do not compare the movements of lumber with that of a department store or whatever."

I think we are all aware of the fact that when one is dealing with the shipment of goods in northern Ontario it is not like dealing with the shipment of goods in Hamilton or Toronto or the golden horseshoe, places where they have transportation, carriage, available immediately. I understand what the lifting of the North Bay restrictions means. However, I am not satisfied in my own mind that that is the answer to the problem.

Although the minister has explained it to me with respect to the W licences, I would like to hear his comments again on that when he makes his reply on second reading of the bill. If I have that assurance that his ministry feels the issuance and creation of the W licence will go a long way to assist the lumber industry in the movement of wood products from northeastern Ontario, I will not bring in an amendment which I have prepared.

I am not trying to be difficult about the matter. I want some reasonable assurance from the minister's people that in the professional opinion of the people who deal with the minister they believe the situation up there, which at times as I have indicated is quite critical, could be solved with the creation of the W licence.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I thank the three honourable members who have spoken for their contribution to the debate on this long-awaited Bill 89.

I recognize the concern of the member for Etobicoke regarding the commercial cartage zones. He and I disagree on that particular matter. I really feel that with what we have now in the bill, plus the guidelines I outlined in my statement and that I propose to make official to the board, he has nothing to fear as far as the shadows or bogymen he sees or feels he may see are concerned. I don't worry about bogymen, I only worry about real things.

Mr. Philip: The bogymen are in the speech from the throne. They are a little bit larger bogymen, that is the only thing.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would want me to ignore the interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Indeed.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to comment, though, on the comments of the member for Nipissing. We did have a discussion on this a week or so ago when we thought this bill was coming up at that time for second reading. I think I explained fully our concerns and our intention regarding the W licence.

I am also very much aware of the desire of the Hearst Lumbermen's Association. They only have one real desire and that is for the total deregulation of the hauling of lumber. This is something that has been discussed and I must say I think the provisions we have now—well, there are several things. First of all, the elimination of the North Bay restriction will have some effect. I am not sure at this moment—and I am sure the member for Nipissing isn't and I don't think anyone is—as to just what effect that will have on the movement of lumber. [4:15]

Many licensed C or D carriers—C carriers mainly—who are presently prohibited from going north to North Bay will have that restriction removed. This may make some units available in the north to haul that type of material down. I doubt if this will help too much with the real lumber part of the commodity, but it may help with the plywoods and the more finished products. Only time will tell how much additional capacity for the mills the removal of the North Bay restriction will make.

We recognize lumber as somewhat of a special commodity. It has been with this in mind we have looked at several things in the last couple of years in the other bills. We now have in the new W licence a type of licence that will be available at a modest fee. That will keep a large fee from having to be built into the rates for the hauling of lumber. It will be a fee similar to that for an R licence for the dumptruck industry. The applications will be handled somewhat in the same way as our licence applications. There will be a hearing of necessity before a licence will be granted, but we also propose there could be a hearing held, as has recently been done with the R licence, to establish the need for the number of additional licensed units necessary in any of the three areas of the province—northwestern, northeastern or eastern Ontario—where these licences will apply.

I think we have the mechanism for keeping a regulated fleet in the lumber hauling industry, while not adding large additional costs to the movement of lumber, which is a competitive commodity, and perhaps more important establishing a system where we can assure there will be the number of vehicles necessary so there will not be a shortage. We will have a method of determining the need so the appropriate number of vehicles can be licensed.

I am satisfied in my mind that with the ability of policy direction with this new type of licence, with the ability to hold a hearing to determine the demand and with the ability to hold the hearing to grant the licences, we can assure the industrialists, the lumber manufacturers of northwestern, northeastern and eastern Ontario, that they will have adequate vehicles to move their commodity.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole house.

House in committee of the whole.

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that clause (ad) of section 1(1) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

“(ad) ‘commercial vehicle’ means: (i) a commercial motor vehicle or a combination of commercial motor vehicle and trailer, as defined in the Highway Traffic Act, drawn by it; (ii) a dual purpose vehicle or a combination of dual purpose vehicle and a trailer, as defined in the Highway Traffic Act, drawn by it; or (iii) any other motor vehicle as defined in the Highway Traffic Act while drawing a trailer as defined in that act, a combination of the motor vehicle and the trailer constituting the commercial vehicle.”

Does the minister wish to explain the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think I explained that amendment in my opening statement. That amendment covers the situation where an automobile now exempt from the act is drawing a trailer and hauling goods for hire and therefore becomes a commercial vehicle. There would be no doubt it would require a PCV licence.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any other member wishing to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister would make it very clear for purposes of enforcement that non-commercial vehicles have no requirement to pull in and be weighed or inspected. I think there is some concern by the public, especially people who have U-hauls, or people who are going back and forth to their cottages, that that might be the case. While it seems to be clear in the legislation I think the public may be concerned.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, if a motor car is hauling a trailer carrying goods for hire this amendment makes that motor car a commercial vehicle and, as such, it would have to go through the inspection stations; but it wouldn't affect people pulling trailers behind their cars taking beer to the cottage.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 6(18)(a) of the act, as set out in section 6(4) of the bill, be amended by striking out "14" in the second line and inserting in lieu thereof "19."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Did I understand the member for Etobicoke wished to speak to section 6?

Mr. Philip: No, Mr. Chairman; we are in agreement with all the sections.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 6(a) of the act, as set out in section 7 of the bill, be amended by adding at the end thereof:

"and the revocation or amendment of the licence shall be effective on the fifth day after the day notice of the revocation or amendment is mailed by registered mail addressed to the licensee at his last known address."

Motion agreed to.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 10(e) of the act as set out in section 10(2) of the bill be amended by striking out "18" in the fifth line and inserting in lieu thereof "9."

Motion agreed to.

Section 10, as amended, agreed to.

On section 11:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 11(5) of the act, as set out in section 11 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(5) In determining whether to recommend the designation of a commercial cartage zone the board shall consider whether public necessity and convenience will be served thereby, taking into account the impact thereof on the users of for-hire transportation services within the area under consideration and the providers of such services; and considering the impact on the providers of such services, the board will take into account the impact on those operating exclusively within areas of the proposed zones to which this act does not apply and those who hold operating licences which would be affected thereby."

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, we think this improves section 11. Even though we are not all that comfortable with section 11, it certainly makes us a little bit more comfortable. We are pleased that the minister met with the industry and, I gather as a result of some of his talks with them, came up with this amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 12 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 17:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 12(k) of the act, as set out in section 17 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"12(k). A tariff of tolls shall be filed in a form satisfactory to the board and any tariff so filed shall be published and maintained available to the public by the board."

Motion agreed to.

Sections 18 to 26, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 27:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 27 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"27(1). This act, except section 3, subsections 2, 3 and 4 of section 6, subsection 2 of section 8, subsection 2 of section 10 and sections 19, 21 and 26, comes into force on the day it receives royal assent.

"(2). Section 3 comes into force on August 1, 1979.

"(3). Subsections 2, 3 and 4 of section 6, subsection 2 of section 8, subsection 2 of section 10 and sections 19, 21 and 26 come into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor."

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, on the last occasion we discussed this bill, my colleague the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) raised a matter pertaining to section 1 with respect to an amendment to the existing section 7(a) which pertains to the definition of a driver. [4:30]

At that time I joined in the debate and expressed concern about how the word "driver" could be interpreted. Since that time, I have had occasion to discuss this with the minister and review the jurisprudence on the point. There was a decision by Mr. Justice Robins of the Supreme Court of Ontario noting there was some confusion about the word "driver." An explanation was given by the minister as to when the word "driver" was inserted in the act—I think it was 1973—and the confusion that can arise from that.

With this explanation I am satisfied this amendment clarifies what a driver is. However, I still express concern—and I think our concerns are clearly on record from the last occasion we discussed this bill—that the definition is extremely wide. Thinking about the section, I have not seen any solution about how we could narrow it down and at the same time effect the purpose intended by the amendment. On that basis I have no further comments to make on that section.

I do have comments to make on section 2(1)(1) of the bill.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let the minister speak first. He may solve all your problems.

Mr. Roy: I hope he does.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm not happy with this amendment at all and I am going to put it forward with great reluctance. I really think what this amendment is doing is unnecessary and regressive as far as the meaning of this act is concerned.

Mr. J. Reed: Then why are you doing it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I recognize a legal point that the lawyers have been arguing about for some time, so perhaps with the mood of the House today I will propose the amendment and then, if it doesn't work, I will be able to say it was somebody else's fault.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 14(1) of the act as set out in section 2(1) of the bill be amended by inserting after "for" in the third line the word "reasonable."

Mr. J. Reed: You wouldn't use "reasonable."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does anybody wish to speak to this amendment?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to explain it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I assume you all understand it and have it before you.

Mr. Philip: We don't have the amendment before us.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm sorry, this amendment wasn't distributed. It was something we just concocted up here.

Mr. J. Reed: Typical Tory ad-hockery.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The meaning of all that is that the bill previously said a driver must produce his licence for inspection upon the demand of a constable or officer appointed for carrying out the provisions of the act. There has been a situation where an individual reached into his pocket, pulled out his licence, put it back into his pocket and said, "I produced it." Of course, the officer was not able to see it. I am not very happy with that kind of a thing being in this act.

The amendment in the act—not the amendment I submitted—says: "Every operator of a motor vehicle shall carry his licence with him at all times while he is in charge of a motor vehicle and shall surrender the licence for inspection upon the demand of a constable or officer appointed for carrying out the provisions of this act." That is the subsection my honourable friend from Ottawa East objects to. On a very narrow point of law here, he tells me an unreasonable constable could say he needed that licence for 24 hours, 48 hours or seven days to inspect it. I don't think the police forces of our province or our municipalities are going to take that attitude.

The amendment I have just given says the driver must surrender the licence for reasonable inspection. That still covers the point I want to cover in the act and I hope that will satisfy the honourable member.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, if I may make some brief comment about that I will say in passing I suspect the reluctance of the minister to make the amendment. He was fortunate I was here because I suspect this amendment may not otherwise have been made. I don't say this in a facetious fashion but I suspect it may not have been in there, seeing the minister's reluctance in proposing the amendment.

Let me explain, Mr. Chairman, what my concern was about that section. First of all, the act read before that an individual "shall produce his licence for inspection." Having read the act the way it was originally worded and looking at this amendment, it immediately dawned on me what must have happened, why the amendment was necessary. Not knowing the factual situation, I suspect some individual, possibly with some legal training, on some—

Hon. Mr. Snow: An inebriated lawyer.

Mr. Roy: Well, you put it on the record, but they do take liquor once in a while.

What happened was this individual was testing the limits of the law. Having been stopped on one evening he probably did exactly what the minister suggested—took his licence out and said, "I am producing it," but did not give the constable an opportunity to inspect it. Or he said, "You inspected it. I have produced it and you inspected it," but did not give him a chance to read the particulars on the licence. As it turned out, this is exactly what had happened.

Every time you enact laws, Mr. Chairman—you know this—the law has to be as reasonable as you can possibly make it and it has to apply to the widest range of people, but at both ends you have people who may take advantage of the law. At times there is just no way to enact a law involving all the people who will abuse it. We see it with our Criminal Code all the time; with as many amendments it has had and as encompassing as it is, it is still sometimes not adequate.

You know, Mr. Chairman, from your experience, not only as a member here but as a member of the executive branch, the Criminal Code is not sufficient, for instance, to deal with organized crime. There is a particular modus operandi there which cannot be covered by certain laws such as those in the Criminal Code.

This is what happened in this case; an individual abused the law and I can understand and appreciate the amendment.

Before the amendment proposed by the minister the act said the individual "shall surrender his licence for inspection." First of all, the word "surrender" has a connotation which is somewhat frightening to people who tended to value their driver's licence—that you take your driver's licence and you surrender it over—but having seen the interpretation by the courts that the word "produced" was not sufficient, I can understand that.

Then they went on to say "surrender their licence for inspection." My concern is, having blocked one end of the abuse, possibly you leave it open on the other side that an over-diligent police officer enforcing this section—and I want to make it clear again that the amendment deals with people and that the majority of police officers wouldn't even think of doing that. The majority of police officers, whom we have come to respect and support in this province, would basically understand that section permits them to have the licence, read the particulars on it, possibly use their car phone, check with the computer if everything is okay and give the licence back.

I felt the possibility existed there, Mr. Chairman, that if the word "reasonable" was not there, there was no one to interpret what the inspection involved. So you could have had a situation where a police officer who didn't like Joe Blow who kept rodding his car around the town or something could say, "Let's have your licence and give me the next 10 or 12 hours to inspect it." In other words, he could have used that section under the guise of inspecting it for suspending the licences of individuals for a limited period of time.

I just wanted to have a situation where it was clear that police enforcing such a law would be reasonable. The word "reasonable" is used all over the Criminal Code. It's used all over the place when we're talking about statutes which affect enforcement and punishment, that police use reasonable and probable grounds. That word is used repeatedly in law.

That was the reason I tried to convince the minister that while I was concerned about the word surrender, at the other end I was also concerned that the inspection by the police officer was reasonable. Therefore, if someone tried to abuse this section by taking a licence for a period of be it two or three hours, be it 10 hours—I'm not suggesting that he would have taken the licence for a week, because I think then the courts would have certainly said that that was not the inspection they had in mind—I felt that in having the word reasonable there, if a police officer was to take someone's licence for a period of 12 hours or 24 hours in these circumstances someone would be there to judge that maybe that was not reasonable in the circumstances.

So I hopefully, with this type of amendment—

Mr. Ashe: You're supporting the amendment.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I appreciate that, but the thing has got to be on the record—the member for Durham West, as usual, his contribution to the debate is limited to shouting and using his hands. I just want him to understand that those of us on this side involved in the legislative process, and sometimes involved even in the administration of the law itself, like to see that we draft the best laws possible. We feel there is some onus even for members like him to understand what the amendments are about.

On that basis I wanted to make my comments very clear and say to the minister that when he looks back in his old days at legislation he will not have to regret the day when he inserted the word "reasonable" in the statute. I don't think this is the type of amendment that is going to come back to haunt him, and it seems to me that that is the type of progressive and well balanced legislation which we should get out of this assembly.

Mr. Philip: The member for Ottawa East says the member for Durham West only interjects, or does not contribute much to the debate. I've heard more concrete, reasonable proposals from the member for Durham West and at least he is here constantly and does not just come in for an occasional interjection on a legal technicality.

I think that what is dealt with in law is a real response to a real problem. The member for Ottawa East does not in any way convince me that this is a potential problem. I recognize that the minister has compromised to the member as a way of getting the bill through quickly. I won't take any more time. I won't support but I won't object to the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Hon. Mr. Snow's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 3 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

[4:45]

On section 10:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 96(1)(a) of the act, as set out in section 10 of the bill, be amended by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (i) and by adding "or" at the end of subclause (ii) and by adding thereto the following subclause:

"(iii) an ambulance while responding to an emergency call or being used to transport a patient or injured person in an emergency situation."

He further moves that section 96(5a) be amended by striking out "located on the roof of the vehicle" in the third line and by inserting after "light" in the fourth line the words "visible from all directions."

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will explain it very briefly. I think on introduction of the bill, I told the House I was going to move this amendment, and this includes ambulances as well as the police vehicles and fire apparatus. The second amendment, I moved because some of the older fire engines don't have a roof on the cab where the light can be mounted. This means it doesn't necessarily have to be mounted on the roof.

Mr. Roy: I think this is a wise amendment. I have discussed with the minister a factual situation that happened recently in the city of Ottawa where a motor vehicle was involved in an accident with an ambulance. The question of liability for very extensive damages was an issue involving a long trial. It was a very unfortunate situation in that the driver of the motor vehicle was a paraplegic.

I think it was necessary to clarify the law. I was involved in that case before the Supreme Court and it was a real problem in determining the question of liability between the parties. There was no way of settling any action of this nature. I think with the law as it stands now, there would have been no question as to liability. It would have solved the problem without involving a lengthy and very costly trial. I think the amendment helps clarify the law in that regard.

Motion agreed to.

Section 10, as amended, agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12:

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I have a rather lengthy amendment here, but I guess it has to be read into the record at least once; is that right?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, I think perhaps it should be at least read once.

Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 12 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"12(1) Subsection 1 of section 120 of the said act, as re-enacted by the Statutes of Ontario, 1974, chapter 123, section 29, is amended by inserting after 'children' in the second line 'or mentally retarded adults' and by inserting after 'school' in the second line 'or a training centre.'

"(2) Subsection 3 of the said section 120, as re-enacted by the Statutes of Ontario, 1975, chapter 64, section 1, is amended by inserting after 'children' in the third line 'or mentally retarded adults' and by inserting after children in the eighth line 'or mentally retarded adults.'

"(3) Subsection 5 of the said section 120 is amended by inserting after 'children' in the fourth line 'or mentally retarded adults' and by adding at the end thereof 'or a training centre.'

"(4) Subsection 6 of the said section 120, as amended by the Statutes of Ontario, 1974, chapter 123, section 29, 1975, chapter 64, section 1, and 1977, chapter 54, section 14, is further amended by adding at the end of clause (a) 'or for transporting mentally retarded adults to and from a training centre' and by repealing clause (h) and (i) and substituting therefor the following clause:

"(h) requiring the retention of prescribed books within vehicles or any class or type thereof and prescribing the information to be contained and the entries to be recorded in the books."

Hon. Mr. Snow: I believe I explained during second reading of the bill that in that amendment the last paragraph refers to the log books. I think it is self-explanatory. The balance of it is to implement the contents of the private member's resolution put forward by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, which I believe was supported by all parties in the House. It provides for the use of school bus safety features when transporting mentally retarded adults.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 99, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any amendments to be put forward by the minister?

Hon. Mr. Snow: With a bill with a number like that, Mr. Chairman, I would almost like to move that we delete the whole bill.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that sections 1 and 11 of the bill be struck out.

Mr. Philip: I appreciate that the minister has responded to some of the concerns that were voiced by members of the New Democratic Party on section 1. I had circulated to the minister the fact that I was prepared to move an amendment to section 1 that after the word "route" would have added "as prescribed by regulation or specified in the traffic control manual for highway work operations, published by the Ontario Ministry of Transportation and Communications." The minister, in turn, said he would rather delete the section and continue to monitor and look at the problem. I can appreciate that he has done this and, therefore, I will not move my amendment, now that he is deleting it.

I would like the minister to give his opinions on one question for the record. I have met with some of his staff and I am still not certain as to the actual status of the traffic control manual for highway work operations. We know this is published by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. I was told in the meeting I had, following my concerns on section 1, that this is continuously updated and that new studies and various situations are dealt with.

In looking through the manual, it certainly seems fairly specific. One would think the ministry has been doing a considerable amount of work at developing rules for adequate signing to cover most situations. I guess my concern is what steps are being taken to ensure that the municipalities in particular—and I am a little less concerned about the Ministry of Transportation and Communications employees who, I am sure, probably use this as a Bible—but other groups also, such as private contractors and so forth, are following this manual, since one would assume that the situations dealt with in the manual involved a considerable amount of thought and make a considerable amount of sense. I would like the minister to address himself to that.

Why is it, that, instead of deleting section 1, he is not moving in the opposite direction, which would at least give additional weight to this manual?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, the document referred to by the honourable member, the highway work operations manual, is not a legal document; it does not have a legal status. It is a guideline put out by the ministry for use by ministry staff. It is accepted by most municipalities and, I think, by most contractors as a guide for proper signing and safety measures when work is being done on a highway.

The manual is under active review and expansion at the present time. The Municipal Engineers Association is involved in the review. It will be revised, and there will be wide distribution of the manual to many municipalities in the province.

The situation right now is not a difficult one. We were attempting to clarify and simplify procedures by the amendment in this bill. The honourable members have expressed some concern and, rather than make or accept any hasty amendment at this time—this act is amended on almost an annual basis—I would prefer just to delete the two sections involved, section 1 and section 11; then, on completion of the review of the manual and after giving some further thought to this matter, perhaps we can come back with a more complete reasoned amendment the next time the act is amended.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, is the minister's concern one of the need for flexibility, since the manual has not yet been completed to the fullness that he or his staff would like, or is it one of concern over possible litigation, that perhaps the ministry would be more subject to court action for specific violations where either the ministry staff, a contractor's staff or a municipality's staff have violated this? I wonder if he can give us some indication of how he would weigh those two possible objectives. Perhaps it's both reasons.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I must admit I am having a little trouble trying to understand what the honourable member wants. First of all, I have explained to him that the document he is referring to is a guideline put out by the ministry. It is something we update periodically. It is very difficult in a guideline manual that defines signing and safety barriers and precautions that must be taken during construction jobs—there has to be some degree of common sense used on a job, depending on the grade, the curves, or whatever the situation may be. It is not our intention to put that manual forward as part of an act or as a legal document.

[5:00]

There is the concern that there might be times when our staff would be called upon if there were litigation over whether a sign was properly installed on a construction job and an accident was caused. From the wording of that amendment, as I read it, my staff and engineers would be called into every court case to determine whether the sign was installed in accordance with the manual. As the manual is not a legal document but a guideline, I don't think this is the proper thing to do.

In dealing with this, the courts normally hold road authorities liable if they are negligent. The courts decide whether the construction site was properly signed and lit and whether it was safe or not.

The provision we were trying to bring in in this amendment was simply to eliminate the need for the actual signing, if the road was closed because there was a roadside detour. I guess the ministry has been living with that provision in the act for a number of years. The members have expressed concern about it. I propose to delete these sections and ask for a few more months' time to bring back an amendment after everything has been properly looked into.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The minister has moved that section 1 and section 11 be deleted from the bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That will result in renumbering. We will use the numbers as printed in the bill.

Sections 2 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that section 12 of the bill be struck out and the following be substituted therefor: "That this act comes into force on the day it receives royal assent."

Motion agreed to.

Section 12, as amended, agreed to.

Section 13, agreed to.

Bill 99, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported three bills with amendments.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act;

Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act;

Bill 99, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the next two orders are 17 and 19 dealing with municipal hydro restructuring. I would remind the members of the House we are sitting only until six this evening.

HALTON MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved second reading of Bill 119, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Halton.

Mr. Speaker: Does the parliamentary assistant have an opening comment?

Mr. Ashe: Yes, very briefly, Mr. Speaker. This is the first of two bills restructuring the hydro-electric services in the regional municipality of Halton and also in the regional municipality of Durham. This piece of legislation creates four utilities in the four local municipalities in the regional municipality of Halton. There has been some concern indicated by the municipality of Halton Hills that they would not have enough time to organize the transitions before January 1, 1980, so we will be proposing an amendment in committee that would give them a three-month extension on the option of coming together under the new utility.

Mr. J. Reed: In addressing this bill I should point out that this restructuring will take place on an expanded municipal basis. I say that because I know the original intent of the government when regional government came into existence was to create regional hydro utilities.

I think Ontario Hydro and the government both recognize that the expanded municipal concept is a very viable concept for hydro restructuring. I would serve notice on the government too that if, as is the fear expressed by a few, this might be one step towards a regional system I for one would be very much opposed to the implementation of any such regional eventuality.

I feel the big beneficiaries of this restructuring, or the immediate beneficiaries, are going to be the rural people, who traditionally pay a substantial premium for their electric power. With this restructuring, the rates will find themselves coming together, possibly over a period of time, but the decision as to how to accomplish those objectives will be made by the new utility.

I should also like to point out that in the Halton restructuring, we have a relatively simple situation in three of the four utilities where we have one commission which is simply expanding its boundaries. The difference that exists with Halton Hills is that there are two municipal commissions in existence, the Acton Hydro Commission and the Georgetown Hydro Commission, and the area of old Esquesing is the rural area. It stands to reason then there are certainly more difficulties in ensuring a smooth transition from the situation as it exists now into this new expanded municipal concept.

I want to go on record as being disturbed, if the information given me is correct, that the bill which brings this into effect was first presented to the commissioners only on May 25, 1979. We know this matter had been debated by a task force; it had been given consideration and so on, but the bill itself was only shown to them at that time. This has been one of the causes of the difficulty and the reason for the request to delay implementation. It is physically very, very difficult to do it in the kind of time originally scheduled. I think the commissions very rightly felt they were being herded in a direction they did not want to go without due, proper consideration and without the proper groundwork to provide for a smooth transition.

At this time, to all of those commissions whose faces will change as a result of this bill I would like to pay tribute for the work they have done, to their efficiency and effectiveness and to the role they have played in the Halton area in the past. They have been manned by people who have been dedicated and consistent in their work and certainly it is fitting to pay tribute to them at this time.

The task force that looked at this bill made recommendations that do not entirely agree with the contents of the bill. Three of the municipal systems agreed with the task force. The fourth one, Halton Hills, made recommendations which are not consistent with this bill. However, since that time the commissions themselves have got together and worked out this method, the method of simply delaying the implementation of the thing for three months which will allow them to do a proper restructuring job. I welcome, then, the amendment by the honourable member which will simply put back the date of implementation from January 1, 1980, to April 1, 1980.

I should also point out that between the two utilities in the Halton Hills area there has been a great deal of sacrifice on the part of both commissions and a very mature understanding of the direction in which this bill would take them. I would like at last to express my appreciation to the members of both those commissions who worked with me to give a very reasoned and understanding consideration, who were able to put by the personalities of the moment and so on to look forward to what we hope will be a step in the right direction.

I firmly hope and believe this kind of step, this enlarged municipal step, will save us from a regional concept as was once envisaged. I think it is very important to put that on the record. I sincerely trust the expansion will have the desired effect for the rural people.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, the bill we have before us, Bill 119, is very similar to a number of bills that have brought about restructuring in the various municipalities and regions in this province. We in this party have supported the other bills with some reservations and with the introduction of some amendments which didn't receive the approval of the House.

[5:15]

Bill 119 is perhaps less controversial than the bill for Niagara or the bill for Oxford or some of the other areas where there were two classes of local municipalities, one where the municipality was to supply all of the hydro within the municipalities and others where the rural hydro was still supplying part of the municipality. In those municipalities where there were two authorities supplying the hydro there were obviously some concerns, because the costs varied substantially between one and the other and there were parts of the urban areas left out of the urban commissions and, therefore, even though they were urban areas they had to pay a much higher rate. That doesn't exist in this bill, where we have the four municipalities and a commission for each supplying all of the consumers.

As has been stated by the member for Halton-Burlington this will primarily be of benefit to the people in the rural areas of these municipalities and, of course, those urban areas which formerly were supplied by the Ontario rural hydro. In those four municipalities, it is going to provide a substantial improvement over what they have at the present time.

The provisions in this bill have been worked out in a number of bills and are similar to a number of other bills; it seems to me they give adequate protection to the employees. This must be of concern to those who now work for the rural hydro and, for that matter, who work for the existing commissions who will be assured of job security in the bill which is before us.

I am not going to go into any details with regard to this bill or even with regard to the principle of the bill, because it has been debated at least half a dozen times in this House over the last two years. I will simply say our party is going to support Bill 199 without any amendments.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the bill? If not, the member for Durham West.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I want to start off saying I appreciate the expediency with which we have been handling second reading of this bill. I will just touch briefly on the points mentioned by the member for Halton-Burlington.

He talked about the timing. It is very true, the date of May 25 is about correct when they actually saw the bill per se. Of course, there had been ongoing involvement and discussion with the local study team with the knowledge of the existing commissions of what was happening. I wouldn't want to leave the impression that was really the first time they ever became aware that legislation was forthcoming.

There was every intention at that time and since that the legislation could be finalized in this sitting, but recognizing the possibility it would not and we would run out of time, finalization will be left over until the fall. But that was never the intent and I don't think it was ever indicated as being the intent per se. It was just recognizing a possibility.

The member for Halton-Burlington makes an excellent point, to which I would also add my remarks, relative to a regional utility versus the lower-tier utility we are now going forward with in this legislation and in bills passed in the not-too-distant past as well. It does make viable utilities within the local tier level and it will suit the purposes and serve the needs very well of those municipalities and the people they serve.

If there is ever any expansion of that, I suggest it will be on the impetus of the utilities themselves and not on behalf of this government. I would suggest that is not imminent and I would concur with that completely.

The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) touched upon the similarity of this bill to previous ones and there's no doubt it is similar. It also embodies the principles coming out of the Hogg report and it does, as was already mentioned, contain full protection to employees.

In closing, I would also like to acknowledge the assistance and co-operation of the honourable members and of the municipality and the local study team for the efforts they've put in, and the commissions now in existence and their staff. They have all been very co-operative with the staff of the Ministry of Energy and Ontario Hydro and myself personally and for that I thank them.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

DURHAM MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved second reading of Bill 123, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Durham.

Mr. Ashe: Very briefly again, the principles of this bill are very similar to the one we've just dealt with and previous ones. It in effect dissolves the 12 existing utilities, the commissions within the regional municipality of Durham, and creates eight new utilities, seven of them being hydro-electric commissions and one, the city of Oshawa, being a public utilities commission. Again the general principles contained therein are very similar to the bill which just passed second reading and other similar restructuring legislation.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I think most of the comments that were made about the previous bill can be applied to this one. There are a few mechanical differences in Bill 123 but the principle of the bill is the same. It provides for the same benefits and should have the same effect. If there's one thing I neglected to say in speaking to the last bill, one of the further hoped-for objectives of the enlarged municipal concept is that it will also have a longer term positive effect on the urban areas in terms of service and the ability to upgrade equipment as the years go on.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, we will support this bill but with somewhat less enthusiasm than we supported the previous bill. There are three differences in this bill, one of them—already mentioned—with which we find some disagreement. This bill provides that the public utilities commission will continue to operate the bus system in the city of Oshawa. I think—correct me if I am wrong—that's unique in Ontario. I think it is an excellent idea that rather than setting up a separate commission the public utilities commission there would operate the bus system as well as operating the hydro system and operating other public utilities as formerly. So we are in support of that.

I understand though that the city of Oshawa has some concern about the initial composition of the commission formed by this bill. I realize there is a need for uniformity in the various commissions which are established. However, Oshawa would like to have seen its five-member commission extended until the time of the election in the fall of 1980 and have had one member added from the rural area. This would have given a six-member commission. Because this was only going to last for a year and a half it seems to me the government could have accommodated that wish of the city of Oshawa.

I don't think it's of the magnitude that our party is going to be moving an amendment to it. However, they felt it would have provided for a smoother transition. It would have meant the members who are now serving are familiar with what is taking place and have been very active in the restructuring would be able to have carried through until 1980, until the whole new commission was set up and in operation. I think the government could have bent far enough to have permitted that for the city of Oshawa.

I must say I have some difference with the member for Halton-Burlington with regard to the principle of this bill. There is a substantially different principle in this bill to the previous bill we were discussing; that is, that half of the municipalities in this bill, four out of eight, will have two authorities supplying them with hydro. That was not true in the other bill. When one has the re-establishment of the old commission boundaries, this does create some problems. Where there are new subdivisions which have developed or are developing or are going to develop outside those boundaries, they will have to be connected up to the rural system.

I recognize this is not as serious as it was in the Niagara area for two reasons. One reason is that the freeze in Durham has only been in existence for five years. That is long enough, but compared to Niagara, where it was in effect for 10 years, it is only a short period of time. Therefore, there is not such a change within those municipalities. I guess one couldn't call the Newcastle area basically rural, since with the town of Bowmanville, which has some 12,000 people, Newcastle with a couple of thousand and a couple other urban municipalities it has a large urban population. There has been some growth in some of those municipalities outside of the existing commission boundaries. Those will be continued for a period of time and, in the other three more rural municipalities, almost indefinitely those urbanites will be connected to the rural system when they could be connected to the adjacent urban system.

The whole principle in this bill, which is not in the previous bill, of re-establishing hydro commission boundaries the same as they were five years ago or 10 years ago or 15 years ago, without giving any consideration whatsoever to the growth that has taken place and the areas that have urbanized, is a bad principle. I spoke at length on the Niagara bill, and I am not going to repeat all of it here at this time. I think it is worth pointing out over and over again that in these restructuring programs the government surely should permit the municipalities to look at their commission boundaries and have those boundaries conform with the urban service areas or with the actual urban areas that exist within those municipalities, instead of with the old arbitrary boundaries which cut right through the urban areas.

I realize that the amendments which were put in the Niagara bill were not approved by the Liberals on the right, who thought what took place 20 years ago should still stand now, or by the party across the floor. I am not going to introduce an amendment at this time because, as I have already said, the situation is not as serious as it was in Niagara, and it would stand little chance of success in this House.

Nevertheless, we are going to keep plugging away for this principle. I suggest that in the not-too-distant future the government is going to have to break down and adjust some of those boundaries which they have just recently set up under these bills because they simply do not conform to the situation as exists, namely, the urbanization in those municipalities.

This bill also contains those provisions with which we find favour for the security of employment for employees and a great many other measures which we support. Therefore, we will be supporting this bill and not putting any amendments to it.

Mr. Nixon: I wanted to speak briefly on both these bills. As we expand the areas which are going to come under the jurisdiction of public utilities commissions, it means that fewer and fewer of the residents in what are or were rural areas are going to be direct customers of Hydro.

[5:30]

I know the honourable parliamentary assistant must have read the article in the Globe a couple of days ago, indicating that as the number of direct customers of Hydro grows fewer and fewer, the costs of serving those customers escalates. The minister knows this means the cost of electricity purchased directly from Hydro, particularly in the rural areas, is going up faster than it is for residential service in urban areas. It is already higher than similar services elsewhere in Canada and it is a matter which must concern us as members of this House. I know the parliamentary assistant, with aspirations to the ministry, must really take this as a challenge because the time has probably long since come and gone when this House should have given attention to a containment of the increase in the costs of electrical service to the rural customers in the province. The question is whether as these customers decrease in number, the cost of servicing can be maintained. I feel, and I think many reasonable people would feel, the costs of this service should be shared across the whole of the province. I hope the minister, or the parliamentary assistant, perhaps soon to be minister, would agree.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I think I have to start off with the last speaker first, as he kept promoting me right along. I would just hope he would inform the Premier—

Mr. Nixon: The Premier is never in the House.

Mr. Ashe:—so it would be suitably recognized in the end-of-month paycheque. I thank the honourable member very much anyway.

Going back to the order, I would like to thank the members opposite generally for their support, and particularly the member for Halton-Burlington, who indicated his full support. The member for Welland-Thorold brought up a couple of points I would like to address very briefly.

I think the first one he mentioned of particular note was the uniqueness of the bill, if you will. I suppose it is rather unique in the restructuring process that the Oshawa Public Utilities Commission still has control over the bus system in the city of Oshawa. Of course, that in itself is not unique within Ontario. There are other PUCs that operate bus services in the province, although I do not think there have been any in previous restructuring legislation. It is not the only one. The reason it is carrying on is it was the request of the city. They have been providing that service, apparently reasonably well, I would understand. It is working well. Of course, it is never the intent of this government to upset something that does work well. We just like to compliment it and let it carry on.

Mr. J. Reed: You made a mess of our area.

Mr. Swart: If it's working well, it's something over which you don't have control, like the transport system in Oshawa.

Mr. Ashe: As far as the size of the commission is concerned, there is no doubt we gave great thought to the approaches made by the commission in Oshawa, and as a matter of fact, the municipality itself. I think it is fair to say we weighed them very carefully, but felt for the sake of uniformity that there did not seem to be any great case or any great shift in the experience loss in that commission. They were only going to lose one experienced person and would still have four fifths of that experience carrying on. There would be more than enough continuity into the new commission.

The honourable member also brought up the argument, as he has done previously, relative to equity for the rural hydro users. Of course, that ties in very well with the concerns expressed by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk in that if we did go along and adjust and expand and skim the cream from the urban areas adjacent to urban municipalities, that would just put further pressure upon the rural hydro system in the province of Ontario, regardless of the rate structure they were now under. That is why, under the present rules and guidelines, we are putting that onus on the municipal councils to ultimately make the decision as they see it fair and right and feasible financially. When they wish to expand the service area of their commission, they do it to their municipal boundaries. In the case of Durham, this is not feasible at this time so that is why it is not happening.

The member alluded to the fact that there were still two hydro authorities within some of the municipalities in Durham. That is basically correct, but this is not unique in that as was already identified in many of the other restructurings, including Niagara, this held true. It is not that there are two commissions within a municipal boundary. That is consistent. What it is saying is there is a commission serving all or part of a municipality, with the balance being served as at present by Ontario Hydro, and that is all. There is one commission for one municipality.

Just being more specific, in the present makeup in Durham there are two municipalities that have three commissions plus Ontario Hydro; there is one municipality that has two commissions plus Ontario Hydro; there are four municipalities that have one commission only, two of those serve their total area, two of them serve part, and two of them are partly served by Ontario Hydro. There is one municipality—namely my own, the town of Pickering—that does not have a commission at all at this time and is served exclusively by Ontario Hydro. So we, in effect, eliminate 12 and create eight, as there are eight lower-tier municipalities within the regional municipality of Durham.

In the case of the urban south municipalities, that is to say Pickering, Ajax, Whitby and Oshawa, they will serve to their respective boundaries, including the newly created commission in the town of Pickering. In the case of the other municipalities, again they are not serving their full boundaries because it is not economically feasible at this point in time.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, of course, brings up a very legitimate concern of many relative to the future for rural hydro rates. There is no doubt the trend has been up, it will continue to go up, and we are not attempting at this time to put any further pressure on those rates by removing more of the cream around existing service areas, but there is no doubt that the government, and of course the Ontario Energy Board, is looking at the feasibility and practicability and possible changes for the future that might equalize and rationalize the problem for the rural user.

There is no doubt that one can argue both sides of this issue, the first one being it costs a lot more to serve that area so why shouldn't they pay more, and yet the other side, in terms of equity and shouldn't everybody pay the same throughout the province, has an equally valid part to the argument.

This is being examined very closely and of course recommendations will be coming forward very shortly that may in the short or medium term solve the problem.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

HALTON MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Consideration of Bill 119, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Halton.

Sections 1 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that the bill be amended (a) by adding the following section after section 11: "12. With respect to the town of Halton Hills and the Halton Hills Hydro-Electric Commission established by section 2, each date mentioned in sections 3, 4, 6, 7, 10 and 11 shall be deemed to be a date three months after the mentioned date," (b) by renumbering the subsequent sections accordingly.

Mr. J. Reed: This amendment came about with respect to the fact that there are two commissions in the town of Halton Hills which need the time to properly reorganize their utility. I thank the parliamentary assistant for bringing this motion forward.

Mr. Ashe: May I just add one item for the record so there's no misunderstanding? This does extend the time by three months but, as in another part of the bill, it also leaves the option open that if the town of Halton Hills commission does overcome the organizational difficulties that it foresees, it can still organize on January 1, or even sooner if it suits its purpose.

Mr. Swart: I too support this amendment. It's my understanding that they want it; there would be nothing to be gained by any of us opposing it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 12, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 13 and 14 agreed to.

Bill 119, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 119, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Halton.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

SPECIAL EDUCATION

238. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry attempt to provide more precise detail than in its answer to question 186? When the ministry announced its special education program on December 15, 1978, what, if any, estimates did it have of the number of new special education teachers that would be required for the program? What, if any efforts have subsequently been made to determine the need for additional special education teachers? In its answer, could the ministry indicate what preliminary action it has taken to create new teacher re-training programs to satisfy the anticipated needs created by this new policy direction? [Tabled June 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Recognizing that at this time we are looking at legislation which is only at a proposal stage, the estimate of additional special education teachers required to implement the resulting programs for exceptional students is approximately 3,000.

As of April 1977 there were 6,190 teachers active in special education holding special education qualifications. 7,533 teachers held special education qualifications and were active outside special education. An additional 4,125 teachers held special education qualifications but were not active in the profession. A further 6,122 candidates completed courses in special education in 1977 and 1978, and almost 5,000 more candidates will have completed courses in special education as a result of this year's winter and summer courses.

These statistics amply demonstrate that a pool of teachers trained for special education duty is available. Considering only those teachers holding special education qualifications but teaching outside special education it is evident we have a large number of trained people to draw upon.

Apart from this, it may be necessary however, to provide training of a specialized nature to a limited number of teachers who will be needed to work with small numbers of severely handicapped pupils. Such opportunities will in part, be provided at the Trillium School and its francophone counterpart in Ottawa commencing in the 1979-80 school year. Teachers will be able to avail themselves of an in-depth teacher education program at these schools. These programs have been well received as innovative and needed developments in the field of teacher education.

In addition, the graduate programs in special education offered at OISE both at the masters and doctoral levels and individual courses in special education available at other universities across the province will help to meet this need. For teachers of pupils with learning disabilities who are seeking graduate training in the field of learning disabilities in particular, we have developed a proposal for a graduate degree. Several universities in the province have expressed interest in such a graduate program, some having already developed proposals of their own.

239. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry attempt to provide more precise detail in answer to question 186? When the minister announced its special education program on December 15, 1978, to what extent, if any, was it actually committing the province to the funding of the program? In the answer to the above-mentioned question, and in the general legislative grant announcement, the ministry omitted any direct reference to finance. Can the school boards of this province anticipate additional financial support from the province to help them meet the needs of children requiring special education? [Tabled June 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Ministry of Education officials are presently analysing the financial impact of the proposed special education initiatives. More precise detail with respect to the funding of these initiatives will be made available when the amendments to the Education Act, 1974, are introduced in the Legislature.

240. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry attempt to provide more precise detail in answer to question 186? When the ministry announced its special education program on December 15, 1978, what, if any, estimates did it have of the number of children requiring special education? What, if any, efforts have subsequently been made to determine more precisely the number of children likely to require special education? Will the ministry, if possible, break down its answer by area of exceptionality? [Tabled June 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Ministry of Education officials are compiling up-to-date statistics with respect to:

(i) waiting lists for special program placement by area of exceptionality and by school boards;

(ii) estimates of the additional number of children in schools who may require special programs; and

(iii) the number of severely handicapped children in government-approved residential facilities who are receiving little or no education at the present time.

This information is currently being analysed and will be made available to the members of the Legislature when the amendments to the Education Act, 1974, are introduced.

WEIGHTING FACTORS

242. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide the precise detail requested in question 190 and omitted in its reply tabled on May 31, 1979, as well as providing further information regarding staffing, not requested at that time? Will the ministry, for 1975, 1978 and 1979 estimated, provide the following table containing the following information on the special education weighting factor: Board name; number of full-time equivalent pupils; cash value of weighting factor; cash value for each full-time equivalent pupil enrolled in a special education class; number of full-time equivalent teachers; number of consultants or administrators directly involved in the program? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

243. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide the precise detail requested in question 189 and omitted in its reply tabled on May 31, 1979, as well as providing further information regarding staffing not requested at that time? Will the ministry, for 1975, 1978 and 1979 estimated, provide the following table containing the following information on the occupations weighting factor: Board name; number of full-time equivalent pupils; cash value of weighting factor; cash value for each full-time equivalent pupil enrolled in an occupations class; number of full-time equivalent teachers; number of consultants or administrators directly involved in the program? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

244. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide the precise detail requested in question 188 and omitted in its reply tabled on May 31, 1979, as well as providing further information regarding staffing, not requested at that time? Will the ministry, for 1975, 1978 and 1979 estimated, provide the following table containing the following information on the compensatory education weighting factor: Board name; number of full-time equivalent pupils; cash value of weighting factor; cash value for each full-time equivalent pupil enrolled in a compensatory education class; number of full-time equivalent teachers; number of consultants or administrators directly involved in the program? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to questions 242, 243 and 244.

The answers will be ready for tabling on or about July 5, 1979.

SCHOOL BOARD FUNDING

245. Mr. Grande: Would the ministry please calculate for 1979 the estimated financial impact on the six area boards (on both general legislative grants and mill rates) of the elimination of the Metro Toronto School Board, and provide the information in a format similar to tables 17.1 and 17.2 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Metropolitan Toronto, volume 2, pages 326 and 327? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to the above question.

The answer will be ready for tabling on or about August 13, 1979.

GROUP HOMES

248. Mr. Duksza: Would the Ministry of Community and Social Services table in the House figures for each of the years 1975-1979 inclusive pertaining to the Homes for Retarded Persons Act, the Charitable Institutions Act, and the Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act, for each separate piece of legislation as to the group homes operated under those acts for adults as to: 1. the number and location of these homes; 2. the number of residents; 3. the number of available beds; 4. the length of any waiting list for those beds; 5. the mean, mode and median length of stay in such homes; 6. the discharge rate to, (i) chronic care facilities, and (ii) home; 7. the mean number of staff per home; 8. the total number of staff involved in the actual operation of the homes; 9. the standards or regulations concerning the operation of these homes; 10. the penalties involved for breaching such standards or regulations; 11. the number of persons assigned to supervise and inspect these homes; 12. the amount of monies paid to cover, (i) capital, and (ii) operating costs? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In response to the above question I would advise that under the Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act there are satellite homes which are defined as residences to accommodate one to 24 people. While the group home concept of three to 10 residents would include some of the satellite homes, the information requested is not available as persons residing in these satellite homes are considered to be residents of the larger home for the aged and are included in the gross statistics of the home.

The information pertaining to the Homes for Retarded Persons Act and the Charitable Institutions Act are found in table I and table II respectively.

PHYSICIAN AVAILABILITY

214. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health inform the House of the number of "full-time practising physicians" there are in the province of Ontario as of March 31, 1979? Would the minister provide this data in terms of distribution by county and in total? Would the minister indicate what is the ministry's criterion for determining who is in full-time practice in terms of gross income received per year or in terms of volume of billings per year? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

215. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health undertake to inform the House on a monthly basis of the numbers of physicians who are no longer participating in the Ontario Health Insurance Program, and the number who have given three months' notice that they wish to bill their patients directly? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

NON-INSURED HEALTH CHARGES

216. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health table any studies which have been conducted by or for the Ministry of Health or the government of Ontario regarding the cost of including for OHIP coverage prosthetic devices, wheelchairs and any other non-insured services or equipment not presently covered by OHIP? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

PUBLIC HEALTH REVIEW

217. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health inform the House about who were the members of the Public Health Review Implementation Group, and how were they selected? How often did this group meet after its formation? What recommendations did this group make to the ministry, and would the minister table the full texts of any reports which were made by the group to him? What timetable has the minister adopted for the implementation of any recommendations with which he agrees? [Tabled June 1, 1979.]

APPROVED HOMES

250. Mr. Duksza: Would the Ministry of Health table in the House figures, for each of the years 1975-1979 inclusive, pertaining to the approved homes administered by the psychiatric hospitals branch of the Ministry of Health, by each of the three classes of home size as to: 1. the number and location of these homes; 2. the number of residents; 3. the number of available beds; 4. the length of any waiting list for those beds; 5. the mean, mode, and median length of resident stay in such homes; 6. the discharge rate to, (i) home, and (ii) chronic care facilities; 7. the mean number of staff per home; 8. the total number of staff involved in the actual operation of the homes; 9. the standards or regulations concerning the operation of these homes; 10. the penalties involved for breaching such standards or regulations; 11. the number of field workers inspecting for conformity to these regulations and/or standards; 12. the number of renewals; and 13. the amount of monies paid to approved home owners for, (i) capital, and (ii) operating costs? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

HOMES FOR SPECIAL CARE

251. Mr. Duksza: Would the Ministry of Health table in the House figures, for each of the years 1975-1979 inclusive, pertaining to the homes licensed under the Homes for Special Care Act for persons referred from psychiatric hospitals and mental retardation facilities as to: 1. the number and location of these homes; 2. the number of residents; 3. the number of available beds; 4. the length of any waiting list for those beds; 5. the mean, mode, and median length of resident stay in such homes; 6. the discharge rate to, (i) home, and (ii) chronic-care facilities; 7. the mean number of staff per home; 8. the total number of staff involved in the actual operation of the homes; 9. the standards or regulations concerning the operation of these homes; 10. the penalties involved for breaching such standards or regulations; 11. the number of field workers inspecting for conformity to these regulations and/or standards; and 12. the amount of monies paid out for the per diem rates to home owners? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

HEALTH CARE FOR THE AGED

254. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health indicate what recommendations he has accepted from the Ontario Health Council's report, Health Care of the Aged, presented to him on June 12, 1978? What schedule has the minister adopted for the implementation of those recommendations with which he agrees? Would the minister table any evaluations and studies further to this report which have been conducted by his ministry or for his ministry? Would the minister indicate what communications he has had with other ministries of the government of Ontario which were mentioned in the 46 recommendations? What action are these ministries prepared to take in light of the conclusions of the health council's report? [Tabled June 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to Order Paper questions 214, 215, 216, 217, 250, 251, and 254 reads as follows: More time is required to provide this information and answers will be tabled on approximately July 31, 1979.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

265. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Industry and Tourism table by ministry the number and value of microfiche readers purchased by the government in the last fiscal year? Would the minister identify the firms to which contracts were awarded and would he give the Canadian content percentage of the products purchased on each case? [Tabled June 14, 1979.]

266. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Industry and Tourism table by ministry the specifications for each of the microfiche reader contracts in the last fiscal year? [Tabled June 14, 1979.]

267. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Industry and Tourism table the "tenders' list" and "blanket order" list in each ministry for microfiche readers? [Tabled June 14, 1979.]

269. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Industry and Tourism table the number and percentage of Canadian-owned and/or multinational companies bidding on contracts for microfiche readers in the last fiscal year? Would the minister table these figures by ministry? [Tabled June 14, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The above noted questions asked of the Minister of Industry and Tourism have been referred to the Minister of Government Services as the appropriate minister to answer these questions.

The answers to these questions cannot be obtained within the 14 calendar day limit. This serves notice that the answers will be forthcoming as soon as the information has been obtained and compiled, which is expected to be approximately July 30, 1979.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

---

THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with business this morning, I wonder if I might indicate some sort of schedule for this morning, notwithstanding what may be on the sheet before us.

I thought perhaps it would be wise to proceed now to deal with government notice of motion 4 on the Order Paper, following which we would do the second readings which have to be attended to this morning; that is, Bills 135, 139, 140 and 133.

After the second readings have been completed we would then go into committee of the whole House to do what work we have to do in committee, ending up with Bills 96 and 163. We would then come out of committee just before the luncheon break.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. F. S. Miller moved that the authority of the Treasurer of Ontario granted on March 29, 1979, to pay the salaries of the civil servants and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the period commencing April 1, 1979, be extended to October 31, 1979, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriation following the voting of supply.

Mr. Nixon: I doubt that the Treasurer will have any particular statement on this. I understand he had a busy evening last night consulting with the interns and that my colleague from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), who is not in just at the moment, made an equal impact on those fine and outstanding young people. I am delighted the Treasurer is here to defend the motion.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that this motion is now a standard procedure and one which is very acceptable. It is a vehicle for considerable debate if time permits and if the opposition parties want to make use of it for that purpose. I am delighted myself that it is now established as custom and requirement in this Legislature that a single motion does not provide the funds to pay the day-to-day operating expenses through the whole year and that the Treasurer, on behalf of the administration, properly comes to the Legislature for interim supply of this type.

The only thing that I might say before I resume my seat is that our procedure for a careful scrutiny of the estimates of expenditure seems somehow to be degenerating. I think both sides take responsibility for this, since matters of public importance, perhaps more urgent than the immediate discussion of the estimates, seem to be coming forward and you, Mr. Speaker, and our colleagues in the Legislature know what a broad spectrum of matters this involves, employing the time and mental capacity of the committees and their membership.

I think perhaps this sort of motion may occupy more of our time in the future when we attempt to have a discussion of spending procedures and the efficacy of the policy behind them debated more in this chamber than in the individual committees, which in our evolving experience occupy more and more of their time on specific policy matters. We have no objection to the passing of the resolution at this time.

Mr. Laughren: In keeping with tradition, I understand that the government motion does provide for a fairly wide-ranging debate, if the members so desire. It is not my intention to do that this morning, but there is one thing that bothers me a great deal, and I think should be of concern to the Treasurer, and certainly the ability of this government to pay its bills is greatly affected by the issue which I want to speak about for a few moments. That is the impending increase in the price of oil by $1 a barrel, which the federal government has just announced, which would take effect on July 1, with an interim period of 60 days, I believe, for the existing stocks to get down.

Mr. Kerrio: Got to do something about those feds.

Mr. Laughren: I think the Treasurer has an obligation to tell us what his position is on the announcement and to tell us what he thinks the impact of that increase is going to be on the Ontario economy. We know that every time the price of oil goes up $1 a barrel it roughly causes the rate of inflation to go up by approximately one per cent. Certainly the ability of this government to pay the bills, which is implicit in the government motion, the Treasurer should be very concerned about that.

The competitiveness of the Ontario economy and the industries within it are at stake here, and it is very strange that the Treasurer would be silent on the announced increase in the price of oil, because of the enormous impact it is certainly going to have on the Ontario economy.

The former Treasurer had worked out figures which indicated what a $1 increase in the price of a barrel of oil costs Ontario in terms of jobs and I would assume that this Treasurer has done that computation as well. If he hasn't, he sure should have. We would like to know on this side of the House what studies the Treasurer has done to indicate what the effect of this $1 price increase is going to be, both in terms of the rate of inflation and in terms of the rate of employment, and unemployment in the province of Ontario, and in general what it does to Ontario's competitive position.

We know, in looking at the figures, that unemployment is still at an unacceptable level. I come from a community where the unemployment rate is almost 16 per cent and the Treasurer gets up in this House and thumps his chest and says the rate of unemployment has dropped specifically because of the policies of the federal government, or of his government.

If he wants to take credit for a 16 per cent unemployment rate in the district of Sudbury let him stand up and say so. I would like to hear him take credit for a 16 per cent unemployment rate in parts of northeastern Ontario—or St. Catharines, down in the Niagara Peninsula, with one of the highest unemployment rates in all of Ontario and yet it's one of the industrial and farming heartlands in this province. The Treasurer stands up in his place just a week ago and thumps his chest and says he's proud of the unemployment rate in the province of Ontario.

That's without the $1 increase in a barrel of oil which his federal counterparts have just announced. I'd be very interested in having a response from the Treasurer on what he sees is going to be the result. What's his position on this? Where are we heading in terms of the price and supply of oil and gas in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Peterson: I'd like to address a couple of remarks to this. Again, I don't want to prolong this debate, because I realize there are more pressing issues, but given the latitude one has, I just want to take this opportunity to mention a couple of things.

The Treasurer last week, as I recall, with as much flair and flourish as he could summon up, and that isn't a lot at best of times, came into the House and made a statement about paying off the treasury bill offering of this province and, in fact, he was proud of the fact that he is not going to use the treasury bill float of $325 million odd to finance the deficit in this province, at least in the short run.

You will recall the history of that, Mr. Speaker. That has been used at various times to finance deficits when the Treasurer has misforecast. He manipulates that amount of money, which is really a debt obligation of this province. In the original instance, they had $10 million or so a week. Just after this Treasurer was appointed, they snuck in an extra $15 million a week to increase the net amount of public debt by $15 million a week, which translates into something like $195 million a year. That was in the wake of some very strong commitments by the previous Treasurer that there would be no more public borrowing.

I want to make that very clear. This Treasurer snuck that extra treasury bill float in, that extra $195 million, and changed the wording when he did so, saying there would be no more public debenture borrowing. It was a clear violation of the budgetary statements of the previous Treasurer. It was done casually, it was done with the manipulation of a word here and a word there, but in fact a principle that had been brought to this House and laid before this House was violated. This Treasurer has now found sufficient cash through an accelerated cash flow, through, presumably, better than expected revenues.

We all hope that, Mr. Speaker, because we had record growth in the first quarter of this year, something the economists are finding very difficult to understand. It may be just a cyclical aberration. It may be a quarterly aberration. I hope it's true. I hope the over six per cent real growth figure that came about is a real one and will be sustained for the rest of the year. Most people feel that won't be sustained.

I'm not sure why the cash flow for the province turned out better than the Treasurer previously anticipated, although I have my suspicions and I think they can be confirmed in this budget.

What happened was that the Treasurer, in his first budget of this year, borrowed far more from long-term requirements, from debenture borrowing from the pension funds essentially, than his net cash requirements. As I recall the figures, even though his net cash requirements were forecast to be just over the billion dollar mark he borrowed from the internally generated pension funds, teachers' superannuation, Canada Pension Plan and various other funds, over $1.5 billion.

I just want to make this very clear: while we have not altered the deficit position of this province we have just again played the old shell game, the old transfer game, transferring short-term obligations to the long-term obligations and back to short-term obligations and now back to long-term obligations. In fact, as best as I can determine it—we have not seen the first quarter statements—there is no real improvement in the cash flow. There has been no real improvement in the deficit position, the net cash requirement position or anything else one wants to call it. I think that should be brought to the attention of this House.

Unless the Treasurer has a more worthwhile explanation, I think his statement of last week didn't really shed a lot of light on that aspect of the budget that concerns many members of this House; that is, the very significant debt that has been accumulated by this government over a period of time. Mr. Speaker, I won't take any more time. I realize the time pressures this morning. Thank you for the opportunity to make that brief contribution.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I thank the three speakers for being brief. I think they did touch on useful parts of the discussion. I feel no one was unnecessary.

Mr. Renwick: Thank you very much.

Mr. Laughren: We're so pleased that you are pleased.

Mr. Peterson: That's very condescending of you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is, absolutely. You say nice things about me most days too.

Mr. Peterson: Last night I did.

Mr. Martel: Do you want to make this wide open?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let's go back to the question of oil pricing, brought up by the member for Nickel Belt. The arrangements for the $1 a barrel price increase were made some while back. I believe it was February when they were confirmed. The arrangement, as the member knows, was between Alberta and the government of Canada. We are expecting that $1 a barrel increase on July 1 and expecting a second one on January 1.

I would say my major concern is whether those will be all that are demanded by Alberta now that world prices of oil have started to escalate at rates that were not expected when these two increases were agreed to. Ontario, as a province that imports almost all of its oil, almost all of its natural gas and almost all of its fossil fuels in total, has to take the position of opposing a rapid change to world price.

Mr. Makarchuk: Why the increase in natural gas prices?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm going to explain. Ontario does not negotiate; Ontario offers its advice. This is the key issue.

Mr. Mancini: I thought Joe Clark was going to change all that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ontario's advice will continue to be that, in the interests of Canada's economy, not just Ontario's, there is a real need to keep a differential between the price of oil in Canada and in the United States and world markets. That differential, as of July 1, will be in the range of $2.30 a barrel lower in Canada than it is in the States. That differential must be maintained if our industry is going to remain competitive in world markets and, therefore, if jobs are going to be protected in Ontario.

There are studies—the members asked about them—I recall seeing them. I'm afraid to regurgitate the cost of jobs per dollar-a-barrel increase, but I recall some figure in the range of 30,000 jobs every time the price goes up $1 a barrel. That's a rough guess, because in this kind of estimate that is all one can do. I think perhaps what is more important is the relative price of oil rather than the absolute price, when it comes to industrial use.

Ontario does have the highest per capita oil consumption in the world and therefore we are probably more vulnerable than any part of the world to outside pricing. We have to continue to stress to the federal government that the interests of the Canadian economy, not just the Ontario economy, are best served by such a differential.

Canada has to recognize that for many years when the shoe was on the other foot Ontario did worry about the other provinces and did involve itself in the arrangements for redistribution of wealth with the federal government, always on the principle that the wealth of this country needs to be shared among the have and the have-not provinces.

The member touched briefly on unemployment. I would think exceptional circumstances applied in the city of Sudbury in the last while. I hope those circumstances have passed. I hope we will see something closer to a normal rate.

Mr. Martel: Maybe you'll get some policy.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Any unemployment is excessive. I can only say our trends for the next year are encouraging and would indicate there will be a downward movement.

Mr. Laughren: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Martel: How about some policy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: When I get to the other member's comments on treasury bills, I would say that the member for London Centre, who is not listening to me, should recognize that the increase in treasury bills, because he was talking to his neighbour from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon)—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: And probably misunderstanding that as well.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If you can teach the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk anything about this House, I will take my hat off because I consider him one of the experts in this House, and I might say, one of those who respects this House.

Mr. J. Reed: If you had listened to him years ago this House would be a lot better.

Hon. F. S. Miller: See, I told you, Bob, if you were brief I would be nice.

An hon. member: Stand up and take a bow, Bob.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn't what we agreed on.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would say that last year's temporary reduction in the Ontario retail sales tax caused a drop in the originally budgeted revenues of the province and required us to have more cash and therefore we used the treasury bills for interim cash requirements. In the meantime, short-term rates on treasury bills, which historically had been a bit lower, tended to move above the long-term rates of interest available, so therefore there was no real saving to the province to be in the short-term market and our cash position improved. Therefore we used them as a balancing act.

One must remember that we have managed to increase our spending levels over many years to much higher levels than they used to be, through inflation, through new programs, while at the same time reducing the percentage of cash required to manage those by very carefully projecting cash requirements and investing in securities to counter-balance short-term surpluses. Almost always, if we had the money invested, we were earning more than we were paying on the treasury bills on a given day. However, that vehicle was no longer needed and we happily vacated it, knowing there always could be a future need to return to that kind of cash market and believing that it is available when needed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for the resolution standing in the name of the provincial Treasurer, government notice of motion number 4. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 133, An Act to repeal the Income Tax Discounters Act.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, the order has now been switched once more. I am having difficulty keeping up with the order. I just have a list that was sent in to me and that one's down. It certainly is not the next one. I thought the police bill was next. I will try to arrange to get my critic.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's why I called it. I saw the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Martel: I am without him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: We might be able to speak for a time without that member. In order to assist us in that, I just want to say that as far as our party is concerned we really have no choice but to support the bill and mostly because of the legal situation. I understand that the government of Canada has very properly moved into this area of regulation and under our constitution, when the area is occupied by the federal government, it simply means that we are dispossessed and we have no alternative but to withdraw our legislation.

I think that it's a good idea that only one jurisdiction has the legislation and an argument may be made—and I am sure the minister would be delighted to make it—that our legislation is better than theirs, but in this instance it doesn't make any difference, so we certainly support the bill in principle and in particular.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. The order of legislation seems to be different from the sheet I was handed just moments earlier. Excuse me if I appear a bit disjointed. The New Democratic Party was responsible for this legislation coming into place in the days before the federal government moved to protect consumers in this area and we think it is still a good piece of legislation. It is much superior to the legislation that is currently in place at the federal level.

The biggest difference is the amount of money these loan sharks in disguise can charge to the consumer when they are performing this service. In the days before the bill came into being they were charging 50 per cent and more of the income tax return to the consumer. Under this new bill we followed the lead of a number of other provinces and said it would be wrong by law for these income tax discounters to charge more than five per cent of the return, which works out to something like an annual interest rate in these cases of 20 per cent, which is about in line.

Under the federal legislation, unfortunately, the federal government not being pressured by as large a number of New Democrats I suppose, the legislation permits the loan sharks in disguise to charge up to 15 per cent of the tax return. That can well equal an annual interest rate of 60 per cent, and by anybody's standards that has to be gouging.

The minister, in the compendium he so thoughtfully supplied when the legislation was introduced, commented on the fact that the Ontario legislation was no longer needed because the federal government had moved in with legislation which was working. While I can't find the compendium to quote directly from it, there was an interesting sentence that said in this last income tax year the income tax discounters had not reappeared in the province of Ontario.

That is totally wrong. That was not read into the record of the House, as I recall, or I would certainly have challenged it. At any rate, it wasn't read in when I was around. I haven't had a chance to look over Hansard for the day the bill was introduced. I brought to this minister's attention two cases in the city of Toronto that came to my knowledge from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reporter Nancy Durham.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It came to me first, the two in Toronto, so keep the record straight.

An hon. member: The point is, they haven't disappeared.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If they came to the minister first and the minister didn't even move against them, that certainly gives room for censure. I don't think the minister should be proud of the fact that they came to him 24 hours before they came to me.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Since the word "censure" has been used—

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of privilege here. It doesn't constitute a point of privilege. It is a difference of opinion. We are getting too many erroneous points of privilege. The member for Hamilton Centre will continue.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I agree with you completely, Mr. Speaker. No matter how provocative the minister is when he stands up to speak, I promise not to rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Kerrio: What are you going to rise on, a stepladder?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The fact is that the government, through the minister, has said that in the 1978-79 tax year these discounters had folded up their tents and disappeared from the Ontario scene. That is wrong. It is just not factually true. The CBC found those two cases right here in Toronto. There have even been cases in other parts of the province.

One of the problems is that I don't believe the federal government is acting with utmost speed on these cases. It is certainly not acting with the kind of speed we have come to expect from this Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I would say to him, one, he has a better bill than the federal government has; he has a good bill. Two, this ministry has shown, at least in this particular area of consumer protection, and in some others, that it is more prepared to act with speed to defend consumers when they are being ripped off.

I would think, therefore, that we would be very wrong today in this House to repeal this act in the dying hours of our time here this spring. I know the government's position, as the minister will probably indicate, is that there is a constitutional problem involved, that because there is a provincial statute and a federal statute supposedly dealing or allegedly dealing with the same problem in the same sort of way, the provincial government feels unable to move against these income tax discounters, and indeed hasn't over the past little while.

That is unfortunate, because in a case like this it would seem to me it would be up to the courts to make the final decision as to the question of jurisdiction. If somebody doesn't like being forced to live up to the obligations and responsibilities of the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds Act, then let them take the ministry to court. Let's not make that decision here. We have a better piece of legislation and I would hope the minister is more prepared to move on it than the federal government is. Don't just throw it out the window because someone may take offence at the minister prosecuting under it. I think he should go ahead and do his job with it.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, I can recall that two former ministers ago, the Honourable Sidney Handleman—and the name of his riding slips me at the moment—said when we first urged him to bring in such consumer protection legislation that no, he wasn't going to do it because there was a constitutional problem, with the greatest of respect to the former minister. The problem was there was a lack of will to move to protect consumers, and if we hear again this phoney argument, this phoney constitutional jurisdictional argument, all it hides behind it is a lack of will to protect consumers.

I would say to the minister and his party, and I would say to the Liberals, let's look at this again. It is not the time to remove this consumer protection legislation. It is much better than any other protection the consumer has in this area, and I don't think we should sell them short by taking away this good piece of consumer protection legislation. Mr. Speaker, I and my party will oppose this move. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There is no question that the Income Tax Discounters Act 1977 could continue, in theory at least, to co-exist with the federal legislation. There is no argument about that whatsoever, in theory. I hope that the member votes against this today, I hope he votes not to support this, because when he does he is opening the door wide open to total return of the tax discounters across Ontario, and I would have thought that some of his legal advisers might have cautioned him.

Since he has challenged the constitutional matter, I have several citations here from various definitions of inconsistency. I want to go in at some length on the doctrine of paramountcy. In practice, what would happen is, these two things living in theory so beautifully, the moment that we laid a charge the person who was charged would immediately go into the courts to challenge our ability to charge, and we don't have much doubt that at that moment the courts would be left with no decision other than, in terms of the charge and the prosecution, that the federal government has very clearly occupied the field and that, therefore, the province of Ontario, with the Income Tax Discounters Act, 1977, was unable to proceed.

In practice that would mean, because there is a difference between the two pieces of legislation, that the tax discounter who wanted to operate would immediately violate our act so that he could be charged under our act but still be legal under the federal act and have the prosecution removed from the courts. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the first time that happened you'd have a tax discounter on every street corner from December through to March, which is the time period they operate in, and I'd be perfectly prepared to call that the Davison doctrine.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's taken the province a year and a half. If it's such a big problem why did it take so long?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Let's go through the history of these two acts. There is no question that my predecessor—and I was his parliamentary assistant at the time—the member for Carleton, did prod the federal government to introduce the very legislation it eventually did. In fairness to the federal government and the federal minister of the time, the sanctions that the federal government intended to take against loan sharking or this type of operation, were contained in draft legislation called the BDPA, the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act.

That was draft legislation. It was intended to operate on a national level, taking into account the differences between provinces in the way that loan sharks and other people offering funds at either extremely exorbitant or, indeed, usurious rates, function within the economic milieu of not only the 10 provinces but indeed bearing in mind the regional differences within those 10 provinces.

It would take too long to mention all the adventures of the BDPA, but it did not have any consensus in any of the provinces and eventually it died. Following that, the federal government did introduce the very legislation that the province of Ontario and other provinces wanted. At that point—and let's make this very clear—we have not commenced a prosecution or a charge under the Income Tax Discounters Act 1977, because we know what will happen. We have become a referral service. If we hear of these cases, or find them out through our own investigations, we go to the federal government and ask that the federal police, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, be brought in to investigate to see if charges will be laid.

This act is not only redundant and cannot be used by the province but is indeed very dangerous. If this House today does not support the efforts to remove this statute from the books, I caution that come this fall or the early winter, when income tax discounting as usual pops up its ugly head, it will be open season right across not only Metropolitan Toronto and southern Ontario but very much indeed in northern Ontario.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why didn't the minister do it a year ago?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact there was no uproar here some months ago when the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker), who was then a private member, tabled a resolution in the House to get rid of this bill.

An hon. member: We're tired of roaring up the gangplank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It never came because of the ballot procedure for private members' bills or resolutions. As long ago as that, thinking people in this Legislature were concerned about this strange co-existence between two acts, perfectly allowable, constitutionally magnificent, until you laid a charge and opened up in the court and then you were in a position where, in effect, there was no law.

I would urge the members of the House to consider the doctrine of paramountcy, to consider, secondly, the fact that the legislation was introduced in this Legislature with the express admonition that we wished we would not have had to introduce it, that the federal government would have. The federal government did, subsequently. We have to recognize the fact that they have occupied the field.

If there is a quarrel with the federal legislation, then I humbly suggest that it's not to keep a dual entity on the law books of Canada, one for a province and one for the federal government. The place to handle it is in the House of Commons. I don't think there is a single valid reason to oppose what is the purport of this bill. It is not only to remove a redundant piece of legislation. It is not only to show that there is provincial and federal co-operation in this country. When the federal government occupies a field, we willingly leave, as we should, not waiting to tie up the courts and so forth.

Finally, and I emphasize this, there's a very significant and potential danger of these two laws, when one charge is laid by us, just opening up the whole field. I certainly hope that no one in this House would say to me as minister, "Mr. Minister, keep the law on your books but don't charge anybody, because if you do you open up everything." That is repugnant to me, it is repugnant to this government and I am sure it is repugnant to the entire House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

POLICE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 135, An Act to amend the Police Act.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, we are going to support this amendment to the Police Act. It has been our policy of long standing that such an amendment should have been put forth, simply because the mandatory requirement of a county or district court judge to sit on such commissions has, in many jurisdictions, caused problems of finding such a person and making it convenient for the commission to do its job.

There's very little to say about it. It's a pretty straightforward amendment. It removes the requirement that one of the members of the board shall be a county or district court judge, and removing that particular requirement now leaves it open that the head of council and the other two people will formulate the commission, having been chosen by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That is acceptable to our party.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise in support of Bill 135. The content of this bill incorporates an item which was requested by my party a long time ago. I look back to June 9, 1976, Hansard, page S-1659, where my colleague at that time, the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), raised this concern about removing the judges from the Ontario Police Commission.

Bill 135 is going to comply with this particular request by us in the past. I think it is an important appointment. Now that judges are not allowed to sit on the Ontario Police Commission, I am particularly concerned about new appointments which are going to be made by the Solicitor General when a vacancy takes place.

From Hansard, I note the former Solicitor General, the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth), raised a particular concern about appointments of judges to the Ontario Police Commission. It was stated that representatives of ethnic communities, representative of community interests, various segments of the community, particularly in the lower income strata, are not represented on those commissions. I think that it is an important principle which should be taken into consideration when appointments are going to be made, if they would like to see commissions working and really representing the needs and the interests of various communities.

In the past, and recently, we had the opportunity to hear complaints made before the Ontario Police Commission, particularly in relation to problems affecting the minority groups in our society. If the Solicitor General is going to take into consideration that the kind of people who are supposed to sit on this commission are supposed to represent these various strata of lower incomes or different ethnic communities, then in my opinion when a complaint is going to be discussed before the Ontario Police Commission their concern is going to be very well taken into consideration.

Therefore, I welcome such a move coming from the government in relation to Bill 135. It is a positive move which has been expressed by the government, even though the New Democratic Party has expressed its concern in the past. Even though such change is going to be made in relation to the composition of the Ontario Police Commission and the people who are supposed to sit on this commission, I would urge that a civilian review board is necessary and should be established in Ontario.

I raised this particular issue during question period a few weeks ago, that the establishment of a civilian review board is necessary. It has been recommended by different reports which were pursued in the past, the Morand report and the Maloney report. The Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) has stated in the Legislature that the establishment of a civilian review board to hear complaints from citizens is not necessary at this point in time. I completely disagree.

While he might have good reasons to have faith in the police, this move in Bill 135 to replace judges sitting on the commission is as I stated before, a positive move, but I think that to make sure that justice is going to be done in relation to complaints from citizens in Ontario the Solicitor General has to move very quickly in the direction of establishing this citizens' complaint bureau.

If I may conclude my remarks about Bill 135, I would like to receive from the Solicitor General some explanation about section 1(4) of the bill in relation to a reasonable remuneration. Even though it is spelled out that remuneration shouldn't be less than the minimum prescribed by the regulations, I have some problems understanding what "reasonable remuneration" means when we have clear regulations drafted to deal with this particular item. I look forward to hearing the comments of the Solicitor General and his explanation of such wording as "reasonable remuneration."

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill 135. In doing so, I would like to make one or two comments and suggestions in this regard. I speak as a person who was a member of the police commission for eight years as the head of my municipality. I have found in the past that there are some judges who make very valuable members of the police commission and there are some who don't. The current judge of the county court is one of those who is a valuable member of the police commission. I would like to point out to the Solicitor General that with the very busy courts we have now, and the pressures under which the judges are working, I think it is right to relieve them of this added responsibility.

In supporting that principle of the bill, I would like to also put in a few remarks in regard to the appointment of not just another resident of the community but another member of the council when that opportunity arrives. The work of the police commissions now, as opposed to what it was some years ago, puts a great deal of stress and time on financial management. That is one of the greatest parts of the work of a member of the police commission. With the increased costs represented in policing, it is imperative that someone who has been elected by the people, in addition to the mayor, can put forth the views of the people.

Most of the things with which the police commission deals, manpower matters, equipment matters, staffing and so forth, have a very important monetary bearing and of course this is what is important to the people of the municipality as well as good policing. Good policing we will have, because all councils want it. We have the police chief present to advise. But I just want to point out it is important, when the time comes for making alternative appointments to the police commission, that we should bear in mind it is the local taxpayer who has to pay for policing in the community and it would be quite worthwhile to have an additional member of council in that place.

Mr. Roy: I have just a brief comment on this legislation. Having had discussions over the last seven or eight years about the role of judges on police commissions, I think, as my colleagues have said previously, this bill is worthy of support.

I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, as you no doubt are aware, at various times over the last 10 or 15 years certain of our colleagues in the Legislature have taken a pretty strong position pertaining to the role of judges on police commissions.

An hon. member: The former member for Armourdale comes to mind.

Mr. Roy: I suppose a number of commissions as well have commented on judges on police commissions. If one were to look at the question of possible conflict one could say technically that any time we have a judge on the police commission there is that possibility of conflict. As members can understand, if there is a judge—and in this case we are talking about a county court judge who sits on a police commission—who sits in judgement of an accused charged by the police force of whose commission the judge is a member, technically one could say that in such a situation there is a conflict of interest.

The problem is that we cannot work in a vacuum. If one were to look at ulterior motives, or conflict of interest, in a variety of situations one could not operate. My colleague the Solicitor General has two hats on; that could be considered a conflict of interest in some circumstances.

Mr. Conway: Two hats on one head is not an inconsiderable accomplishment.

Mr. Roy: There are circumstances, obviously, where one has to weigh the pros and cons and say, is the contribution made by these judges on police commissions of such a nature as to far outweigh any possibility of conflict? I think that is a decision most of us have arrived at, having thought this matter through over a number of years and discussed with various police commissions across the province the useful service contributed by a county court judge on a police commission.

The judges themselves have been a much-maligned group on this. I can recall there was some talk that judges were serving on police commissions because of the extra remuneration involved. That was taken away a number of years ago, and judges over recent years have served without additional remuneration on these police commissions.

One of my colleagues expressed interest earlier as to whether subsection 4 is a message sent to council that there be some remuneration over and above what a county court judge gets from the federal government. I would like the Attorney General to comment on whether this possibility is open under subsection 4.

I would like to say that the amendment is important in the sense that it takes away the obligation of having a county court judge on a police commission. That is important. In various areas there must be the flexibility to have that choice. My experience in the Ottawa area has been that we are dealing with three or four police commissions. From my discussions with them, people who sit on these commissions feel that it is a necessity to have someone with the kind of training, background and judgement that a county court judge has, but it may very well be that in another area they feel it is not necessary, that sort of expertise may come from somebody else—my colleague from Brant-

Oxford-Norfolk would say from one of the legal profession; that may be, I know he is always supportive of that group. That may be an alternative.

Mr. Nixon: I don't mind lawyers, I just don't like the profession.

Mr. Conway: We need a few more optometrists.

Mr. Roy: Or a few more chiropractors.

Mr. Nixon: Talk about going into the lion's den.

Mr. Roy: I support the amendment as proposed by the Attorney General and I would like briefly to take this opportunity to commend the useful service that has been given over the years by county court judges to police commissions. I think it has been a worthwhile service, an important community service, and their contribution should be recognized after so many years of being maligned by reference to conflict of interest.

Some of these people, and some are in the Ottawa-Carleton area, have continued to serve without remuneration, putting in long hours of useful service on these police commissions. Their contribution, from my discussions with various chiefs of police, mayors and so on, has been very worthwhile.

On balance, I think I am supportive of the amendment and I trust we will give individuals who have made such an important contribution an opportunity to continue to serve, but that we take away the obligation. I think it's a worthwhile compromise and deserving of support.

[11:00]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate in the debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Mr. Conway: Never has this Attorney General enjoyed such unanimity.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Briefly in response to questions in relation to remuneration, the member for Dovercourt asked what "reasonable remuneration" means. It is up to the local council. We provide for a minimum of $1,000 a year for communities over 500,000 people and a minimum of $500 if it's less than that, which I think is a reasonably modest minimum. It's really up to the local council, depending on the workload. We think this is a decision that should be made by the local council, in relation to the workload of the police commission. As far as the judge's remuneration is concerned, there is no change in that.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I wonder if I might be permitted to add one further remark in response to something that was asked of me a few moments ago?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All right.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member for Wellington South asked me a question and I forgot to answer him. I apologize.

My colleague, the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), expressed concern to me in relation to the size of police commissions. The member for London South (Mr. Walker) expressed some concern as well, in relation to the size of police commissions. Some of the larger communities would like to see them expanded from three to five. We are reviewing this. We regret that we were unable to come to a decision in relation to it this spring, but we will seriously entertain that suggestion to extend some of these police commissions to five members. We hope to be able to have a resolution of that matter in the fall.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved second reading of Bill 139, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Mr. Nixon: I want to say, sir, that this is the first occasion we have had before the House a bill of this type, based on a recommendation of an external board—in this instance, the election expenses commission. I know when it was first discussed, as to changing the terms of reference and thereby changing the statute establishing the election expenses commission, there was a feeling that not only this House but also, I believe, the citizens of the province have a great deal of confidence in the way that commission has carried out its responsibilities. The fact that this report has come at this time is certainly gratifying as far as we're concerned. I am very glad that the government has seen fit simply to accept the recommendations of the commission, rather than fiddle around with them. I think this is an appropriate approach by this House. We on this side are supporting the bill.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to make only a few comments with respect to the bill. As my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has said, this is the first opportunity we've had to dispose of this sort of problem.

I think it's going to serve the Legislature well. I think it's going to serve the province well, because one thing that's going to occur is that we will not see those gigantic raises in pay which have caused so much irritation and which were distorted to some degree because they came possibly only every three to five years. When we play the game of catchup, the amounts are so great that the public resents it, and we cannot blame them.

The thing I like about what is being done is that the increase has been in that portion which is taxable. I think the public is prepared to accept more readily that members in this Legislature are treated in the same fashion as they are. The commission, in its wisdom, this time increased one section very little, but the large portion of the section that was increased is taxable; I think that will be accepted in a good manner by the public. I only hope that some of the other things that are wrong, in terms of how they are paid out and so on, will be straightened out. I am looking forward to the next report of the commission.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the remuneration paid to the whips. This is a matter I have discussed with House leaders and other people in the past, and I am speaking from some degree of activity or knowledge in that field. The remuneration, the way it has been provided in this bill or the way it stood in the previous legislation, I still consider as grossly unfair. It's unfair on the basis that in this minority government the whips and the House leaders by and large carry out equal duties. They meet regularly together; their responsibilities, I think, are almost identical or are very similar to a great extent.

Perhaps some larger increase can be granted to the government whip or House leader in comparison to the other whips or House leaders but—

Mr. Kerrio: It has to be worth something to win the race.

Mr. Makarchuk: All right. We will give him $500 to win. But the amounts that are being granted in this bill are as follows: the government whip gets $6,500, the opposition whip gets $4,000 and the third-party whip gets $3,250. In my opinion, the remuneration is grossly unfair in relation to the responsibilities these people have and to the time and effort they spend in the whole government process. This is particularly true in the minority situation—and I don't foresee any great change in the next five to 10 years; whatever the government may think, conditions are not going to change.

I hope the commission will look at these figures in the future and bring the remuneration of the opposition whips and House leaders in line with what the government whips and House leaders get. They share the work and responsibility, as all members of the House do, and they should get paid in a fair and equivalent manner.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, there is a part of the bill that bothers me when we are talking about the compensation of members. The leader of the third party does not know I am going to say this, but the differential between his remuneration and that of the leader of the official opposition is outrageous. For the leader of the official opposition, the extra remuneration is $19,500, and for the leader of the third party it is $5,450.

Mr. Kerrio: Worth every penny.

Mr. Laughren: I am not questioning that; the responsibilities are enormous for the leader of the official opposition. I would suggest to my friend that in a situation as we have today, where there is a one-seat differential, to suggest that there is that kind of differential in the workload or the responsibilities of the leader of the third party and the Leader of the Opposition simply makes no sense at all. I suspect the leader of the official opposition would agree, if he were here, that there should not be that kind of differential. I don't know how one justifies it. Does one say that the leader of the third party does not travel the province as much? Does he not have as onerous a workload?

Mr. Nixon: I remember how concerned the New Democrats were about this when they were the official opposition.

Mr. Laughren: The former leader of the official opposition knows what it is like to be leader of the third party, and I suspect he worked as hard when he was leader of the third party as he did when he was leader of the official opposition.

Mr. Roy: He didn't cry about it, though.

Mr. Laughren: My leader is not crying about it either. I am saying that I think it is fundamentally wrong to have that kind of differential in remuneration between the leader of the official opposition and the leader of the third party in this House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be fair comment at this stage to indicate that a copy of the Hansard dealing with this debate will be sent to the members of the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses so that they will have the benefit of these views as they continue their review.

Consideration of Bill 140, An Act to amend the Executive Council Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Welch moves that subsection 1 of section 3(a) of the Act, as set out in section 2 of the bill, be amended by deleting "with portfolio" in the first line.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill 140, as amended, reported.

PLANNING AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

[11:15]

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that section 35(a)(4), as set out in section 1 of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(4) No person shall undertake any development in an area designated under subsection 2 unless the council of the municipality or, where a referral has been made under subsection 10, the municipal board has approved one or both, as the council may determine, of the following:

“(1) a plan showing the location of all buildings and structures to be erected and showing the location of all facilities and works to be provided in conjunction therewith and of all facilities and works required under clause (a) of subsection 7;

“(2) drawings showing plan, elevation and cross-section views for each industrial and commercial building to be erected and for each residential building containing 25 or more dwelling units to be erected which are sufficient to display:

“(a) the massing and conceptual design of the proposed building;

“(b) the relationship of the proposed buildings to adjacent buildings, streets and exterior areas to which the members of the public have access; and

“(c) the provision of interior walkways stairs and escalators to which members of the public have access from streets, open spaces and interior walkways in adjacent buildings, but which exclude the layout of interior areas other than the interior walkways, stairways and escalators referred to in clause (c), the colour, texture and type of materials, window details, construction details, architectural details and interior design.”

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not had the opportunity to see the amendment. I tried to follow along with our own proposed amendment to the same clause. I wonder if the minister could deal with subsection 4(1) in his amendment, since the wording seems to be quite different and I would like to understand the implications of it. I regret I am not the critic. He is here now and he can speak to it. Sorry.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the member for Waterloo North wish to speak to this amendment proposed by the minister? In the meantime, we will hear from the member for Riverdale and then we will come back to you.

Mr. Epp: I will let Mr. Renwick speak to it, and then I will. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think we welcome the proposed amendment put forward by the minister. Since the bill was introduced and the implications of the omission have been understood by the members of this House and all of the interested parties concerned with it, there have been significant and substantial negotiations going on, both openly and behind the scenes. I understand this amendment is now entirely acceptable to the city of Toronto, which is my major concern. I know there are many other municipalities throughout Ontario very much interested in it.

It is my understanding this particular amendment now meets the very serious deficiencies which were inherent in the original bill, and I am glad that after such hemming and hawing on the part of the ministry it has finally seen the light and is prepared to introduce this kind of an amendment.

I would suggest that when the time comes to make any other amendments to the Planning Act, the government, if not the minister, take seriously into consideration the proposition that a little discussion beforehand, with the members of the parties in this House and with the municipalities across Ontario, might save the government and that particular minister a lot of headaches.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we were most disturbed last week when the government decided to delete subsection 12 of section 35a of the Planning Act. As you know, this was a very important section and one that required a lot of effort in the first place to have it included.

Second, without sufficient notice the government decided to delete and without, I thought, sufficient clarification in the bill. It took some time before municipalities and the opposition were aware that it was being deleted and it was done without any real discussion as far as the various municipalities were concerned.

We know the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs on numerous occasions has set a very good example for his cabinet colleagues in trying to consult with municipalities. He hasn't always been consistent with that promise, but that has generally been the case. We only hope the Minister of Housing will take this to heart in the future before he brings in an important amendment of this nature and that he will go the consultative route, as is the case in many other areas.

As a result of this particular procedure we have had to do a lot of work, and the civil service has had to do a lot of work in the last days rushing about trying to get clarification on exactly what these various words mean, so municipalities would be protected by any changes that might ensue.

Mr. Chairman, we will support this amendment. We think it has the concurrence of the municipalities and of people who are developing, the architects and so forth who play a major role in drawing plans, present the drawings, et cetera. We think the government was originally in error in trying to omit the word "plan." It is now included in the amendment. This is obviously an important improvement and we will support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I just want to make a couple of observations in relation to the comments of the member for Riverdale and of the member for Waterloo North. In our discussions on second reading I indicated very clearly that we had taken the time to consult with the solicitors representing the city of Toronto. We had consulted with the Municipal Liaison Committee, which is the organization which is supposed to have some say in matters relating to municipal problems in their relationship with the province. It wasn't a matter of having cast aside all considerations for those people.

I also indicated to the member for Riverdale that at the time I had a letter from the mayor of Ottawa which drew my attention to only one section of the bill which was giving their council some concern. To put to rest any fears about consultation with communities, municipalities, regional governments, county governments, I trust members are aware of the fact that in the presentation of the white paper on the Planning Act we have been going on through rather extensive meetings with municipal heads of council and with chairmen of planning boards and others who are directly related to those problems.

We have indicated clearly that we are prepared to have some 25 to 30 workshops that will deal with the very specifics of the legislation with members of municipal councils, with members of municipal planning boards, and with staff of those planning operations throughout the province, and with the private sector as well.

Mr. Chairman, there is no indication that we were hemming and hawing or trying to delete something that would be of advantage to a municipality. Obviously, we have taken the advice and suggestions of members of the opposition parties on second reading of the bill, at which time I said we were prepared to move an amendment. I also put to rest any fears that we are not going through a very in-depth consultation program with municipalities relating to the Planning Act, whether it be this section or the entire new act we are bringing in, we hope, some time in 1980.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Waterloo North had an alternative amendment, which I gather he is content to waive.

Mr. Epp: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the amendment since the minister has put his motion for amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that section 35a(5) as set out in section 1 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(5) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer on the council of the municipality power to limit the heights or density of buildings to be erected on the land."

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The only change, Mr. Chairman, is that the word "bylaw" has been replaced with the word "section," strictly because the bylaw is not in force.

Mr. Epp: We will support the amendment the minister has put. It is essentially the same as in the present act and was not in the proposed bill. We think the amendment is a good one; the original wording in the act was good. We will support it.

Mr. Renwick: We're in agreement with the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 35(a)(6) of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be struck out, and that subsections 7, 8, 9 and 10 be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is new to the bill. This section was not in the former Planning Act of June 1976. It is our feeling that it is really not necessary because it provides a certain amount of flexibility to municipalities to have the kind of parking that may be necessary. In other words, now that we're getting into multi-functional buildings, if that is what you want to call them, where you might have commercial and residential uses combined in one building, the municipality needs some kind of flexibility to determine the kind of parking that is required for that building.

The other thing is that the municipality can, under a zoning by-law, declare what kind of parking they desire. So we feel that if a municipality had section 35(a)(6), to which they had to adhere, they might make that minimum requirement fairly high. Then they may not be able to go below that minimum. We feel that with the flexibility offered by the deletion of subsection 6 they will then be able to make that requirement fairly low, a very low minimum, knowing full well that at a later date, when the developer is in, they can apply section 35(a) and ask for a higher amount. In other words, they have that flexibility.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it's essential that municipalities be given a little leeway, a little leverage here, to be able to negotiate and deal with the developers as they come in and can ask for parking facilities, as well as parking allocations, or parking restrictions, et cetera, as with other conditions. Obviously, we will support this. We feel that it is a move in favour of local flexibility and local autonomy.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. I think the point is very clear. We're aware of the amendment that is going to be moved; if they had not moved it we were prepared to move an identical amendment providing for this deletion.

The significance of it is simply that in any form of the kind of sophisticated planning a municipality such as the city of Toronto is engaged in, the last thing one needs is to run into an inflexible method, with respect to any provision of off-street parking facilities. There is a certain sophistication involved in the work which is done on all of these planning developments.

I do think we must leave it to the authorities within the municipalities to work out, in conjunction with those interested in the development, the most appropriate method by which the purposes of the overall plans can be achieved. That is not furthered, in any way, when we have a provision such as subsection 6, which imposes an unnecessary rigidity on the whole of the planning process, as related to those facilities.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the remarks of the member for Waterloo North relating to subsection (6) as presented in the bill this morning as not being in the original section 35(a) of the Planning Act, but obviously the ministry recognized there was a weakness in the act which allowed section 35(a) virtually, as a site-plan control, to become a "zoning via site-plan" section—virtually everything else it wants to be within the field of planning.

When one finds there is a weakness, one should try to strengthen that particular area in the process of amending a section. I suppose it is also correct to say that two wrongs do not make a right; so that is the reason we brought it in.

The member for Waterloo North said there was flexibility; that it could be accommodated within a zoning bylaw of the municipality. That is exactly where it should be. Parking requirements, density requirements, side-yard requirements or open-space requirements are things that should obviously be within a zoning bylaw. We should not try to take section 35(a) and use it as a catch-all for everything that we might think a municipality would want. They should have a zoning bylaw that clearly indicates what the requirements are in the development of a particular piece of property in their community.

The honourable member said they go for minimal requirements in a zoning bylaw. I am not here to be hypercritical of municipalities, but they go for what they think are the requirements of the community, minimal or otherwise; it is what is essential to accommodate the type of traffic or parking or other things that are needed on that particular site.

We felt it was well that this act should have this section put in. If municipalities want to amend a zoning bylaw to request more parking, it should be done under the zoning. We looked at subsection 6 for some time to determine whether it was really essential. I suppose members of the opposition are saying this morning that municipalities should have a great deal more flexibility. I only want to make this one observation: at some point in time, the developer, whether it be an individual or a corporate structure, has to know exactly what he or she or they are being called upon to do under the section they are dealing with. To say that they can negotiate it every time through an agreement, I don't think is the fairest way in which to expect land to be developed.

I recognize there are complexities in the field of planning and development today that we did not entertain five or 10 years ago in this province or in any community of this province. We still think that section 6 could serve well. We think that municipalities have the competence and the capability to amend their zoning bylaws to accommodate the amount of parking they require in any given zone or block of zoning in their community. It is not a section that is going to stop up the Planning Act or the planning of this province, by any stretch of the imagination. However, we think that what is good for the municipality also to some degree has to be good for the individual who has invested his money in buying a piece of land that can be developed, and he should have some understanding from the day he buys it as to what the ground rules happen to be that he is going to be called upon to observe for servicing that piece of land.

We are not at the point where subsection 6 has to stay in the bill. If it means we are going to get bogged down for a period of time here this morning on this subsection 6, I am prepared to accept the amendment by the member for Waterloo North and to allow the subsection to stand aside, and in the process of developing our white paper we will look at it again.

I just make the point very clearly that I don't think we should try to get into two areas of trying to zone one piece of land. To have an agreement that says you will do a certain thing on a piece of property that you own—site-plan improvement—is one thing. But to try to have this section 35(a) virtually become the overall zoning bylaw of a municipality, I think is wrong. There are property owners who are entitled to some consideration as well as the elected people, remembering they both represent the same cause.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that subsection (6), as renumbered, of section 35(a) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by inserting after "plans" in the first line "and drawings" and by inserting after "plans" in the fourth line of clause (c) thereof the same words "and drawings."

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, this is essentially a clarification of some of the points here, and we will support it.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, we agree with the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that subsection (9), as renumbered, of section 35(a) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by inserting after "plans" in the first line, in the seventh line and in the 13th line, "or drawings."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:
 "(10) Where the council of a municipality has designated a site plan control area under this section the council may by bylaw

"(a) define any class or classes of development that may be undertaken without the approval of plans otherwise required under subsection 4; and

"(b) delegate to either a committee of the council or to an appointed officer of the municipality identified in the bylaw, either by name or position occupied, any of the council's powers or authority under this section except the authority to define any class or classes of development as mentioned in clause (a)."

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, does the minister not want to comment?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, this amendment came about as a result of some requests by, I would say, the city of Ottawa in particular. Where plans had been approved by a municipality or council, rather than waiting to go back to council if there had to be some small changes in it, they felt it would be more advantageous to have an individual officer or a committee of council designated as the authority to make those minor adjustments. That is basically why this amendment is being proposed this morning.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we agree with the amendment. I was speaking to a planning director just this morning and he was telling me he felt this amendment was very important from his standpoint and from the standpoint of all municipalities. As the minister has pointed out, if you had, for instance, a bylaw which said a development required 10 birch trees, and the developer later came along and wanted to put in white pine trees, he would then have to go back to the city council to have the bylaw amended in order to make that change. That is, to say the least, ludicrous. So, in concert with this particular amendment, the municipality can now pass a bylaw giving to a committee of council or to an individual that authority, either in whole or in part, as they see fit. We endorse the amendment for that reason.

Mr. Renwick: We are in agreement with the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"2. Notwithstanding section 1, section 35(a) of the Planning Act, as it exists on the day before this act comes into force, shall be deemed to continue in force in respect of any bylaw passed under that section prior to the day before this act comes into force."

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have a new section 3, Mr. Chairman. Do you wish me to deal with it separately?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, I would think that would probably be easier.

Are there any discussions on the proposed amendment for section 2?

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bennett moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"3. Every agreement entered into by a municipality after the 15th day of December, 1973, and before the day that section 35(a) of the Planning Act as re-enacted by section 1 of this act comes into force, to the extent that the agreement yields that the facilities and matters mentioned in subsection 2 of section 35(a) of the Planning Act as it exists on the day before this act comes into force, is hereby declared to be valid and binding."

He further moves that the present sections 2 and 3 be renumbered as sections 4 and 5 respectively.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Correct.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any discussion in regard to the proposed amendment for a new section 3?

Mr. Roy: I just want to thank the minister for the amendment.

You will recall that in committee the city of Ottawa had proposed what was called Bill Pr9 which would have done much of what is proposed by the minister in Bill 96. Yesterday in committee we deferred and agreed that section 8 of Bill Pr9 not be proceeded with on the basis that the minister would proceed with Bill 96. The one concern the city of Ottawa had, and I think it's recognized by the minister, is that there were existing agreements and, on the basis of these existing agreements, the city of Ottawa had inserted in their bill the subsection 9 which did basically what the minister is now proposing in the amendment of subsection 3. I think that will plug that loophole and will be appreciated by municipalities which had existing agreements.

Motion agreed to.

Section 3, as renumbered and amended, agreed to.

Section 4 and 5, as renumbered, agreed to.
Bill 96, as amended, reported.

RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES ACT

Consideration of Bill 163, An Act to reform the Law respecting Residential Tenancies.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I would like the consent of the House to change my seat and also for the accommodation of my advisers.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: In committee, that is granted, sir.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I need just a little bit of advice.

We have distributed, I hope, to all the members of both parties who need copies, our amendment. We hope they have them and we're hoping to be able to deal with them somewhat expeditiously. We are proposing a new section and a new part to deal with one of the amendments. Do you have the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't have the amendment put forward by the New Democratic Party. The Liberals just asked to withdraw their proposed amendment, which they have done.

Mr. Renwick: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, I thought they had been distributed to the table.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, this is an amendment proposed for section 1.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, you will note there are nine amendments before you. If you would be good enough to look towards the end of the package you'll see the last one is headed, "New section, new part to follow part VII."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, I have that.

[11:45]

Mr. Renwick: I assume, Mr. Chairman, subject to your guidance, that it would be appropriate for me to move that at the time we have completed section 69, which is the end of part VII. If the amendment were to carry there would be consequential redesignation of the various parts. Is that agreeable to you, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It is agreeable to me, unless the committee thinks otherwise. It would appear to have the consent of the committee.

Mr. Renwick: There is a further one which I have marked "section 111a, new section." I assume I would move that one just after 111, if that is agreeable.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You also have an amendment to section 119, haven't you?

Mr. Renwick: Yes. If it is in order, Mr. Chairman, I will move my amendment to section 1 of the bill.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection 4:

"(4) For the purpose of this act, the earliest reasonable date on which a tenant or sub-tenant may be evicted by order of the commission is a date at least 15 days after the date on which the commission's order was made."

Mr. Renwick: By way of explanation, we have been concerned that with the best will in the world, since an eviction is very much a Draconian result of a landlord-tenant dispute, regardless of the merit of the particular problem, there be something called a clear period of grace before an eviction order would take effect. That is not in any real sense inconsistent with the present provisions under which procedures are taken. It should be quite possible, I would think, for our colleagues in the House to recognize the reasonableness of continuing that particular provision.

We have selected 15 days as being a fair and reasonable period within which there should be, after an eviction order has been issued, a waiting period. Later on you will note we have tried to make a provision in one special instance, although that's not the only reason for this amendment, where if an order is issued in the absence of the tenant, and the tenant after service has made an ex parte application within seven days, it would be possible for the order to be quashed if it merited that treatment. This is only one example. I do believe it is essential for all of us and for the members of the commission in particular to be told by the statute that there is to be a 15-day period of grace because of the severity of the eviction procedure.

Mrs. Campbell: This particular amendment, somewhat differently framed, was before the committee. I believe, if memory serves me, the amendment was put for 30 days and that was subsequently withdrawn. Certainly on the face of it, and if one looks at the experience of the past, the 15-day grace period is very similar to what we have at the present time. The difficulty is, of course, that in dealing with this bill we are dealing with a whole new concept.

One of the provisions of the bill is that the commission shall have an absolute responsibility to attempt arbitration, for example, in the course of the proceedings. The matter that bothered me, and I think it bothered a good many, was the actual cry, I would suggest, of those small landlords on whose behalf the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba) spoke so eloquently in committee. That is the situation of the person who has someone in a shared accommodation in the sense that the landlord lives in the house and rents a flat, for example. In several instances they pointed out their problems with what they termed "the professional rent evader." They were able to adduce some reports—I must not call it evidence, because they were not under oath, but at least they spoke to the committee—about these problems. I would like to just put this into context.

First of all, we do have the arbitration process. Secondly, we have provision in the bill that no eviction order can be made or should be made where, notwithstanding the grounds are there, there would be unfairness to a tenant to make such an order. Having those two things in mind and then looking at the kinds of cases where a person would have an order made, whether it be for vandalism, whether it be for nonpayment of rent, it seems to me that with the provision for an appeal enough is done to cover those very serious cases.

While I normally do want to see some period of grace, I think these small landlords have certainly indicated that in the past it has taken them months to go through the court procedures. I must say that while that time may be circumscribed somewhat by this bill, nevertheless it could be a lengthy period of time.

For that reason, in committee we were not prepared to accept the amendment of 30 days and that amendment was withdrawn. I am afraid we cannot support this amendment at this time.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, just a word of comment: I can always rely on my colleague, the member for St. George, to raise the "bad apple" theory, that we spend all our time here going through all of these bills simply for the purpose of making certain the bad apple will not take advantage of the system. I don't happen to believe in that particular theory.

Mr. Mancini: That's not what she said.

Mr. Epp: She didn't even mention an orchard.

Mr. Renwick: I regret there are always those who cause immense difficulties regardless of the procedures followed at any time. This is a law of general application in the province—

Mr. Ruston: Talk to the member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr. Renwick:—under which there will be legitimate disputes and differing views which will go through a course of being heard before a commission which we expect—we will be surprised but we expect, on the assurance of the minister—will provide a speedy method for resolving disputes between landlords and tenants. We recognize—indeed, it was my colleague the member for High Park-Swansea who, as the member for St. George said, clearly brought them to our attention—the very real concerns of the small landlord, not only in his area but in the area I represent, the area the member for St. George represents and the area my colleague the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) represents, where these problems are very real.

We have attempted in the bill to deal with those questions. That doesn't alter the fact that where you repose in a commission, and, I may say, an inquisitorial commission, the right to order the eviction, and if in its discretion it decides to do so and terminate the tenancy that way, it seems to us to be eminently reasonable that whenever there is a provision in this bill for the termination of tenancies—for example, “Where on the application of the landlord the commission determines that a tenant has breached the obligation” and so on, “it may make an order terminating the tenancy and evicting the tenant on a date specified by the commission”—the commission has got to make that determination. All we are saying is there must be a 15-day delay because of all of the problems inherent in the relocation of any family living in rental accommodation, particularly in the kind of rental accommodation in the areas represented by my colleague from St. George and by myself.

I would urge the government, if the Liberal Party is not prepared to support us on this matter, to consider supporting this very reasonable request.

Mr. Mancini: I would like to speak to the amendment moved by the member for Riverdale, who, it appears, makes it seem as if a tenant can be evicted almost the next day just because the landlord seems to want that done. Having had a chance to sit through the committee hearings since January, and having a good knowledge of what the bill does, I can say that the tenant in no way is going to be evicted immediately, such as is the impression given by the member for Riverdale.

First of all, the landlord must have a good reason for evicting a tenant, either because the tenant is not paying his rent, or because he is causing vandalism or something of that sort of a serious nature. The bill itself says the tenant cannot be evicted unfairly, and that gives the commission any leeway it would need to make a good decision and ensure a tenant is treated fairly.

Secondly, a tenant has to be notified that the landlord does want to evict him. Then there is a mediation period in which the problem may or may not be resolved. This will take a certain number of days. Next, a hearing date is set up, which will take a further period of time. In addition, this new commission we are establishing will then either decide in favour of the tenant or of the landlord and give a specified date as to when the tenant must leave, if indeed that has been the decision of the commission.

I think we do have a certain period of time which will be ample. I believe tenants will be treated fairly. I think the extra 15 days requested by the member for Riverdale, and which was mentioned before when we were in committee, although at that time it was 30 days, are not necessary. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The members for St. George and Essex South have very accurately described the consensus in the committee. That is also the position of the minister.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say “aye.”

All those opposed will please say “nay.”

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 2 to 32, inclusive, agreed to.

[12:00]

On section 33:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 33(5) of the bill be deleted.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, a brief word of explanation. All that subsection 5 states is that subsection 3 does not apply to rental units that are exempt from rent review under part XI. Part XI are those units which will be exempt from the rent review procedures and those units are all of the units constructed and occupied after the end of 1976, all units where the rent is in excess of $750, together with some other exemptions which are provided.

What we have asked for throughout the hearings was a central registry. By central, we mean centralized on a regional basis, with a commission where any prospective tenant or a tenant in the province in that area could go and look for and obtain information about the rent being charged for comparable accommodation elsewhere in the area.

For reasons explained to us in the committee, which did not seem to have any rationale behind them, the minister has made a dichotomy between those units in the province which are exempt from rent review and those units in the province which are subject to rent review. For those units which are subject to rent review, not only do they post the information which we are speaking about in the residential complex, but they are required that “every landlord shall at least once in every 12-month period give to the commission a copy of the schedule maintained by him under subsection 1.”

We wish to have that made applicable to all units throughout the province. It seemed reasonable to us that over a period of time that kind of information should be generally available on a regionalized basis. It did appear at one point in the committee that we had perhaps reached an agreement, but as is so often the case, each of us heard what we wanted to hear and didn't hear the other part of it and it fell apart in this strange dichotomy.

I do want to emphasize that under the bill as before us, in section 33(1) there is provision for posting up in every residential complex the information which is required. Our concern has been to see there is elsewhere, on a regionalized basis under the aegis of the commission, the information for all of the units across the province, and not to perpetuate this strange dichotomy between those units which are subject and those units which are not subject to rent review. It again, Mr. Chairman, appeals to us as essentially reasonable and consistent with the position which we have taken. I commend it to my colleagues in the other parties and to the minister.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, being very reasonable and consistent, we obviously will not support this amendment, simply because it does something which is not in concert, which is not consistent with what this Legislature committed itself to back in 1975. That was to exempt those units built after December 31, 1975, or as of January 1, 1976. It is our feeling that to have those units which were built since that day participate in a central registry and then have to submit all the rents and everything to that central registry, is a subtle way of involving them in rent review, a move this Legislature said should not be done.

We think that having an in-house registry, giving the tenants who have a unit or the potential tenants who are going to obtain a unit, the opportunity to be able to go to the manager, administrator, supervisor or superintendent, whoever that person may be, to see the registry, and to see the rents within that unit, is proper and right. To suggest then that we should go that extra distance and have that registry filed with a central or regional office and, therefore, have someone go over it to see if all the rent increases are six per cent or five per cent or four per cent or whatever they may be is not something this Legislature committed itself to. In fact, it suggested they be exempt.

We on this side of the House obviously cannot, will not and must not, to be consistent, support the amendment.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I wasn't able to sit in committee to listen to many of the presentations.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Did you say "fortunately" or "unfortunately"?

Mr. Riddell: I would have liked to learn a little more about it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I wouldn't have wished that on anybody.

Mr. Riddell: I must admit that rent does not pose much of a problem in the riding I represent—not that I shouldn't be interested in rent review as it affects all people throughout Ontario.

I would like to know if the government housing at the Huron industrial park, which is owned by the Ontario Development Corporation, falls under rent review legislation? If not, I wonder if there aren't reasons for having it included. The reason I say this is that recently I received some complaints from the tenants at the park that there is a move under way to evict some of them. This is for no other reason than that there is an industry coming in there, and the industry has in some way negotiated with the administrator—again, this is some information I have been given and I haven't checked into it—to evict tenants to make room for those people who will be coming along with the industry to move in.

If that is the case, I simply do not think that type of thing should be permitted. This is the reason I am asking if the government housing at Huron industrial park is included in this rent review legislation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I am not altogether sure of the answer from the description of this particular property. It's not really a question of rent review the member is asking about; he is asking if it is covered under the existing Landlord and Tenant Act—

Mr. Riddell: Right.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—or, if this bill goes through, the Residential Tenancy Commission. I don't really think it would be, to the best of my knowledge, unless someone from the Ministry of Housing can tell me differently.

The question being raised by the honourable member is dealt with in this act, as it is in the present Landlord and Tenant Act, in that there would have to be an application made stating the unit—let's leave it at an individual unit rather than a group—the individual unit was required by the landlord for his own use or that of his spouse, a very direct use. Obviously that would not be the case. But, by the same token—and I am sure the honourable member would recognize the validity of this—there is a section that states where a unit is required for purposes of employment, agricultural or other, the tenant of the unit could be evicted if he ceased employment with the concern.

In the case you mentioned, granted it is hypothetical, it seems to me the landlord, which in this case is the Ontario Development Corporation since it is not subsidized public housing, would have the gravest of difficulty, either in the present act, the Landlord and Tenant Act, the courts, or in the future, if this bill goes through with the Residential Tenancy Commission. While there is an obvious benefit to an employer where he provides housing as a term and condition of employment in that when the person or the occupant ceases employment, obviously, he has to leave, there are also some provisions for students. It's a pretty rational position.

I would think the corporation would, indeed, have to get into considerable negotiations with the individual tenants before they even applied to the commission because what they would basically be applying to the commission for would be that these units that were heretofore entirely residential, had suddenly changed status and the particular number of units was directly tied to employment with the particular commercial concern coming in. So I would think, reasonably, if the Ontario Development Corporation had any ideas of entering into a situation like this, they would almost inevitably have to deal in some manner for an equitable resolution with the existing tenants.

I hope that would answer the concerns but it isn't tied to rent review. It's tied to the Landlord and Tenant Act, and so on and so forth, and it is basically their security of tenure which is being affected.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, I just wonder if the minister is straying from the amendment and if these questions should more properly be directed when we come to section 134.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would think section 33 covers a number of instances and is very broad.

Mr. Riddell: I thank the minister for the explanation. To familiarize him with the Huron industrial park, it used to be the old Centralia airbase.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, I know.

Mr. Riddell: It was taken over by the Ontario government when it was phased out and the houses belong to the ODC. The administrator, of course, rents the houses out on behalf of the ODC. I must say this came about at the time when Charles MacNaughton was the member representing the riding. By way of trying to attract industry into our part of the riding, which we dearly need—

Mr. Nixon: Those were the bad old days.

Mr. Riddell: —he decided maybe it was a good thing for the government to take it over, and they got it for a nominal fee from the federal government. The story I'm getting from the tenants is that the administrator is looking for very picayune ways of getting them out, such as, he's now saying there is no way they can park their trailer on the lawn in front of the house, or they can't park it in the laneway, or something of that nature. It looks as if he might be looking for very trivial ways of getting these people out to make room for the people who are coming along with this new industry coming in. The tenants are wondering what kind of protection they have if this is the case. That is simply the reason I asked if they would be covered under this bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I might suggest to the honourable member that he can afford them a great deal of protection by helping to expedite the passage of this bill, because until the Ontario Development Corporation, with the passage of this bill, certainly changes the status of those units from rental accommodation, they simply are not going to be able to do this. Furthermore, the items you mention about certain attitudinal changes on the project would be very difficult to prove in court under the existing Landlord and Tenant Act but, in terms of the investigatory powers of the Residential Tenancy Commission under this act, a very prompt passage would, indeed, assist the tenants there and ease many of their concerns.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Chairman, getting back to section 33 and the amendment made by the third party, I think all of us in this Legislature should remember that when rent review came into being on January 1, 1976, we made a commitment that all units built after that day would not come under the rent control legislation. We did that so we could encourage the building of more rental units. This province needs more rental units and we need newer rental units. I think any move on our part to renege on that promise would just show the industry that our promises are not even worth listening to and that the commitment we gave through legislation was not worth the paper it's written on.

As the member for Waterloo North stated, these buildings constructed after 1976 will have their own listing in their own building, so the tenants in those buildings would have access to that information. I think we should stick with the promise we made and try to encourage new rental accommodation to be constructed in this province.

Mr. Renwick: One very brief comment: I say in all anxiety to my colleague, the member for Huron-Middlesex, that if this government happens to be the landlord of any constituents of yours, you'd better be careful and they'd better get the best independent legal advice they can if they want to protect themselves from that landlord. I can well believe from the evidence presented before our committee that any kind of manipulation of the rules is available to that government if they happen to be landlords in the province. So I am glad you raised that point. Perhaps when we come to the appropriate place, the appropriate minister of the crown may stand in his place and relieve your anxiety. Otherwise take them home with you and consult with your constituents.

On the point raised by my colleague, the member for Essex South, about this commitment: first of all, let me lay this to rest. There is no such thing that I know of as a commitment of this assembly. I don't know of anything that can be done about that.

There was some talk in the committee about this commitment, and the minister gave a lot of credence to the thought that they'd shed part of their blood in order to seal that commitment somewhere, and it was talked about in some way as though it was a commitment of this assembly. I dissociated myself and the New Democratic Party from any such commitment at any time by this party with respect to those exemptions. What the Liberal Party may feel they have done and what the government may have felt they have done, they have done in the names of their own institutions and not in the name of this assembly. This assembly made no such commitment, never has made such commitment, and this party—this institution, if I may call it that—has made no such commitment.

Mr. Roy: You are exaggerating when you compare your party to an institution.

Mr. Renwick: We stand committed, not to some Draconian bureaucracy of a central registry, but for the convenience of the informed consumer public of Ontario. We believe there should be, on a regional basis, for any citizen in search of rental accommodation, a place with modern techniques for providing that kind of information. I refer to the type of information they require to be an informed consumer and to do some comparative shopping.

Mr. McCaffrey: The member for Riverdale I think is quite correct when he says he was not party to the commitment that has been suggested was undertaken by the Legislature. He need not feel, nor does his party have to feel they were part of any such undertaking. But what is very clear is that the government made such a commitment, had honoured it, and will continue to honour it.

Through the course of the committee all members of the committee had shared this desire to see the consumer as well-equipped as possible to make decisions before entering into a rental agreement. It's very clear in the bill that every landlord—not just those buildings occupied or built prior to 1976—shall maintain and keep a schedule. The difference is a simple one: those buildings built and occupied after January 1976, as per the government's undertaking made with the builders that they would not have to file that with the commission.

The member for Riverdale refers to it as a strange dichotomy. It is more than that. It reflects an earlier agreement which will continue to be honoured.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 34 to 39, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 40:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that the words in subsection 3 of section 40 "or in a breach of the tenancy agreement" be deleted from the bill.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, a brief word of explanation: The bill, as it was originally presented to this assembly for first reading, did not include those particular words in it. The marginal note with respect to this has "overcrowding" as the marginal annotation.

The bill, as originally introduced—and we ask that it be restored to its original pristine form—read: "A tenant shall not permit a number of persons to occupy the rental unit on a continuing basis that results in the contravention of health, safety or housing standards required by law."

I believe it was the member for St. David (Mrs. Scrivener) who introduced this particular amendment, and it was carried in a moment of forgetfulness by my colleagues in the Liberal Party voting with the Conservative members. I would hope on this occasion we could move to delete those provisions.

We here adhere to the proposition that, if there are housing, safety or health standards with respect to the number of persons who may occupy a given unit of living accommodation, those should be the governing standards; a landlord should not be in a position to dictate the number of persons who should occupy the particular residential area by having it as a provision in the tenancy agreement.

I might point out to the House the very real significance of permitting this to happen. There are so many landlords who have standard forms of leases who, if they insert the number of persons in a particular clause, are then in a very commanding position as against a tenant, because they can get an order from the commission requiring the tenant to comply with the obligation or not to breach the obligation again. If the tenant, through no fault of his own, is simply not in a position to comply—for example, if he has had an addition to his family which brings him over the particular number and he cannot farm out the baby or put it out for adoption some place, or something like that—the landlord can get an order from the commission requiring compliance. Under a later section of the bill, if he dares to disobey that, the commission, if it sees fit, may issue an eviction order. It seems to us to be quite inconsistent to provide that there should be that kind of imbalance in the relationship between landlord and tenant.

We firmly believe in the adequacy of and the enforcement of the laws passed by representative elected bodies for health, safety and housing standards. I would ask the government and the Liberal Party to support the deletion of those words and to return the subsection to its original wording.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we cannot support this amendment. I sympathize with the example that the member for Riverdale has given, that in the case where a couple might have an addition to the family the landlord could, if he wanted, try to evict that particular family.

This obviously would come under a situation where it would be unfair to try to enforce that section. The member for Riverdale has said "if they see fit." I doubt very much that the commission would see fit to evict someone because they happen to have an addition to the family.

I think what this particular phrase does is obligate a person to give truthful information from the beginning. I think that's very important. To omit a section where that obligation was not there would leave all kinds of loopholes where you could give false information and thereby get into a particular building and then try to be evicted, which might take some time. It would not be fair either to the tenant or to the landlord. We don't feel on this side of the House that this amendment is necessary. We think that as the particular section stands it will benefit both the landlord and the tenants.

Mr. Mancini: In my opinion, any commissioner who evicts a family that's had a new addition to that family needs to be fired—and I hope the minister has heard that loud and clear. The bill states under section 102(2) that "the commission may refuse to accept any application or continue any proceeding where, in its opinion, the matter is trivial, frivolous, vexatious or has not been initiated in good faith." I think that section certainly would give good coverage to the families which have had a new addition, and my earlier words stand.

Mr. Roy: I just want to make one comment about this section. I've been sitting here all morning listening to the member for Riverdale who's been making comments and proposing amendments on this bill—

Mr. Makarchuk: You've been listening to other members as well. There has been some agreement.

Mr. Roy: This may be, but I think I'm still entitled to make comments, especially when I see what's going on to my left. I think I shall not be curtailed on making certain comments.

Mr. Makarchuk: You want to extend this?

Mr. Roy: All I wanted to say was this: earlier, my colleague from St. George gave a reason why, on a particular amendment, it was going to cause undue hardship on a small landlord. The member for Riverdale said, "Oh, yes, you're looking for bad apples. You're trying to make the rule with the exception." I thought it a bit much that in the proposal of this amendment he reaches pretty far—he reaches pretty far indeed—to give an example of a situation where a tenant and a family having an addition might, because of this section, be in contravention of a lease and then a commissioner would say, "You're in contravention and therefore you're thrown out."

I thought that was just a bit much. Even on the widest interpretation or reading of section 40(3) I couldn't quite understand how that would be considered to be in violation of health, safety or housing standards required by law.

I just thought I should get on the record that when a member is standing here posturing he can't have it both ways. He can't, on the one hand, when one of my colleagues brings forward an example, or there's difficulty with a bill, say that is the exception and then, on the other hand, reach as far as he does trying to say that a particular subsection will wreak undue hardship on a tenant.

Mr. Renwick: I accept the admonishment of my colleague, the member for Ottawa East.

What one does is not necessarily what one says that others do in this House. I referred, of course, in most loving terms to my colleague, the member for St. George. Each of us on occasion uses the bad apple theory as it may serve our purpose and I, perhaps, even recall the member for Ottawa East having used it on occasion.

Mr. Roy: Oh yes. I try not to pontificate about its use by others.

Mr. Renwick: I see. I will tuck that away in my memory. I'll watch closely.

Mr. Roy: I will be silent from here on in.

Mr. Renwick: My only point on the amendment is very clear: where there are actual laws related to health and safety and occupancy of residential accommodations, that's quite fine. But considering the history of the vexatious nature of the problem created by placing in a tenancy agreement a covenant—and I draw this to the attention of my friend from Essex South—a covenant by the tenant that they will not have more than such and such number of persons in order to get in the accommodation, it's very difficult for anyone to treat a breach of that kind of condition or covenant in the agreement as simply a matter of vexatious proceedings.

Those matters can be enforced and it wouldn't be the first time a person sitting in a judicial position would say, "I sympathize immensely with what the tenant has said but the clear words of the agreement are this and we must, for consistency's purpose, allow the order to issue in the particular case." I would ask for the support for this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I just want to read a sentence into the record so that no one will be confused. First of all, the member for Essex South is absolutely correct in the section which does prohibit vexatious application, among others. In addition, there is also section 6(1). I just want to read in the last part of that subsection, and I think this will make it abundantly clear. "The obligation cannot be enforced unless it is reasonable in all the circumstances." I think that covers the matter raised by the member for Riverdale and his example about someone giving birth and losing their tenancy as a result.

Mr. Renwick: I am constrained for a brief comment. The problem between accommodation in Metropolitan Toronto where children are permitted and children not permitted is the kind of controversy which is extremely difficult for the commission to rule on in the absence of some kind of public pronouncement on it from an elected body. It's not that kind of circumstance. Certainly there are instances where it would not be reasonable and

I agree with that. There are instances where it would be vexatious. I agree with that. But there are also issues of substance involved in this amendment and the amendment should carry.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Section 41 agreed to.

On section 42:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 42 be deleted from the bill.

I might suggest that the way this amendment is placed just negates the section. Therefore, the proper way to handle this would be to vote against the section when it's put.

Mr. Renwick: This particular provision is simply inserted for practical purposes, although the minister responsible for the bill may have agreed to put it forward and continue it in the bill. It's been placed in there because the Minister of Housing of Ontario requested that it be in the bill. It relates to what is known in the confines of our committee as subsidized public housing, which simply means that it's people who are tenants in publicly owned accommodation. The largest of those landlords, of course, is the Ontario Housing Corporation. I understand they have upwards of 90,000 units now in the province; they are the largest landlord, let alone the largest one covered by this.

This is the only place in the bill where the members of the committee, because of the refusal to take this out, have provided an invidious distinction between people who live in publicly owned accommodation and those who do not live in it, and have inserted in the bill provisions which are in their nature—if I could use that often-used term—quasi-criminal in the allegations that are made.

One will find in this section such words as "false statements," "knowingly misrepresented" and all of the words that are related to some form of criminal charge related to fraud and misrepresentation, with provisions for very significant penalties against any such tenant, culminating, of course, in the termination of the tenancy and an order for eviction of a tenant.

We have taken the position throughout that the tenants in public housing in Ontario are not required to comply with obligations different from the obligations imposed on any other tenant in Ontario except for the purpose of determining whether they are in the economically straitened circumstances, whatever the reason, that require them to have that housing accommodation.

Once the people are admitted to Ontario Housing, the question, and the only germane question, is one relating to need. In the committee, we have effectively dealt with that question under section 55. It had been the position of the New Democratic Party that an adequate way to deal with the one and only distinction that should be made between public housing tenants and other tenants in the province of Ontario was on the basis of what is now contained in section 55 of the bill. To have added these other punitive provisions is, in our view, a very bad example for the government to have admitted into the bill because of the kind of distinction it makes.

I am not going to go over them again, but the number of examples that were presented to the committee of the kind of information required from public housing tenants in order to be admitted to tenancy is picayune, detailed and exhaustive to the extent that it is offensive, and was offensive, to all the members of the committee. The same kind of basic intrusive information in very detailed particulars is required also with respect to the renewal of their occupancy in Ontario Housing. All of those kinds of things are still permitted, will be permitted and will exist.

It is not of help or assistance to us to have had the wording of this particular section amended in such a way as to add "knowingly and significantly," "significantly makes," or those kinds of words. That just adds an additional burden on those who have to make a decision whether or not this kind of offensive measure is going to be applied.

On the basis of the evidence that was given before the committee, either by the officials of Ontario Housing in support of their present procedures, by members of the public who are tenants in Ontario Housing, or by those who have represented tenants in Ontario Housing before the courts on these very issues, there is no justification that should allow this assembly to make this kind of distinction, in this kind of bill, against the tenants in public housing.

I cannot do other than to urge that the section be voted against and defeated and not form part of this bill.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, this section is one that has given me a great deal of concern. There is no question that I think every member of the committee present, when the board members of Ontario Housing Corporation came before the committee, was filled with dismay at the attitude of those persons. I say that so as to distinguish between them and the staff person who sat so diligently throughout the committee hearings and who, I believe, tried to be helpful to the committee. I know each and every one of us would have liked to have found a way, right then and there, to deal with the policies, whatever they are and whatever they may be, of that organization.

Of course, when you are filled with that kind of concern, you do want to delete this section and you do want to place those persons who are not able to meet the economic market in rents and deal with them as tenants, as is anyone else.

Then I come to the other side of the coin. Because of the failure of this government to provide sufficient housing for people who need it, I am disturbed with the practical issues which are implied in this section.

We heard there was great dismay by both the ministry and Ontario Housing with the one tiny little step forward the committee made by an amendment to try to protect those, particularly women because they are in the larger number, who are automatically evicted from Ontario Housing, the only reason being their families have grown up. That was one provision to which we were able to address ourselves.

It was agreed in the committee that we could not in this bill deal with the policy issues of Ontario Housing much as we wanted to do. I hope somewhere there will be some recommendation that a committee be struck to deal with the whole of Ontario Housing and its policies because they certainly need to be addressed.

I know of the people who come to me for housing and I suppose I have to think of those people as well, people who have legitimately put forward their needs. Because they happen to be under 60 years of age and working at a minimally paying job, they are not entitled to be dealt with as people.

I guess coming down to it, what I have to say is if there are people in housing who ought not to be there because they do not have the need and they have piggybacked over people by producing the necessary evidence in the point structure of Ontario Housing, then in my view it is not equity for all those who are waiting. I did not bring the figures with me that I think were given by the Ministry of Housing, the deputy minister who appeared before us, but the numbers were in the thousands of people in need who can't get into housing.

I suppose then I say that I don't believe basically that this should be in this type of bill and if by deleting it I could somehow be assured that this government would meet the needs of all the people in this province so that this need not be a part of it, then I would in fact of course support the deletion. But at this time it seems to me that it is wrong to support those who get into housing perhaps by trickery or perhaps by inadvertence. Those who get in by inadvertence are protected under this bill.

This is one case where I really am torn. I would love to delete it but, coming down on the side of those whom I deal with daily, those who are seeking some place to live, I guess this has to be here at this time.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand from the comments made by the member for Riverdale that if this section was left in the bill it would tend to reinforce the stigma that seems to be attached to public housing or to tenants who live in public housing? Do I understand the member to indicate that this is the case, because I know, going back to the Huron Industrial Park, it has taken us a long time to get rid of that word that has been used time and time again in reference to that place. They call it the ghetto.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's not public housing within the meaning of the act.

Mr. Riddell: I don't know, it's still housing that is owned by the government, and the ODC has a—

Hon. Mr. Drea: My house is owned by the government—CMHC has the mortgage.

Mr. Renwick: Your house is not owned by the government and you know it.

Mr. Riddell: The ODC hires an administrator to rent these houses out. All I'm saying is that if there is any possible chance that this section would bring that term back into the Huron Industrial Park, known as the ghetto, then I'm going to have to take a pretty serious look at it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member is perfectly entitled to take a very serious look at it, but I doubt if he wants to go back to his constituents and say that by removing this section of the act there became a reward for a word and a practice that it not dared to be even mentioned in this House; to wit, lying on an official document.

Mr. Renwick: I am glad of the minister's intervention. There is nothing official about an application to be a tenant in tenant accommodation in Ontario. That's the particular point I want to make. Is it an official document when you apply for an apartment in Cadillac Development Corporation? No.

Does it become an official document when you apply for tenancy in Ontario Housing? Apparently yes.

It's the bureaucratic mind at work. It has even got through to the minister. It has become official. It's top sacred. You should have a special filing cabinet with a top drawer, top sacred, with official documents in it and put the application forms for Ontario Housing into it. My colleague, the member for St. George is torn; I wish I could clear up in her mind the invalidity of the argument she used to convince herself.

Section 55 clearly provides if there is any tenant in Ontario Housing who does not have need—and that is the key word—then on application by the landlord, in this case Ontario Housing Corporation or any other public authority, the determination can be made: does that tenant have need of this accommodation? If the decision is no, then there is provision of eviction; if the decision is yes, the tenant stays.

That's fine. That is the one and only distinction we should have to make. We are happy to have made it and we are happy to have that kind of clearcut provision in section 55. But the members seem to indicate that somehow or other, if there is a falsity in the original document, Ontario Housing should have the privilege of exercising the continuous form of subterranean tyranny they now exercise against tenants because of some kind of a statement which may have been false, inadvertently or otherwise, in the original document.

An hon. member: Knowingly.

Mr. Renwick: Yes. But the question is that you can get that tenant before a commission affecting the tenant's right to stay in that accommodation for determination of that question. The harassment is bringing the tenant before the commission on that basis.

Let's not make any mistake. We have clear distinctions in this province between fraud and misrepresentation and doing people out of money and all of those things. All of those rights are available to Ontario Housing as landlord in the same way they are available to any other citizen in the province.

If someone has gotten into Ontario Housing and he wins the lottery, or he has failed to disclose his real assets and he has been getting cheap accommodation and it is discovered by Ontario Housing, they have every right—and we would support that right—to go to the courts and to claim that money, both in the criminal courts and in the civil courts. Money paid is one thing; bilking of people through fraud or misrepresentation is another thing entirely. I am saying this provision should place Ontario Housing in an advantageous position, rather than in the kind of position every other person in the province is in who has been defrauded.

I have not heard the member for St. George say that regardless of need, if there is a tenant in Ontario Housing who has need of that accommodation, that tenant should be evicted because there is some type of false statement in the original application. That has never been said by members of the Liberal Party, but that's what they are saying.

We had examples of all kinds of statements; if you were to fill out that application form, you could make any number of statements. The landlord could say, "I happen to believe this statement of yours is significant; you had better come to the commission." That very threat to those tenants, by having this provision in this act, is the kind of harassment which takes place in Ontario Housing and which we are trying to eliminate.

It is absolutely essential, in our view, that any remedies the landlord, Ontario Housing Corporation, has are the same remedies anybody else has. It doesn't need any kind of a leg up here, by some specious argument with respect to the method by which people can be evicted from Ontario Housing.

I reiterate: the test is need. If the tenant, in his accommodation in Ontario Housing, can be shown not to have need, he shouldn't be there. If the tenant has need, he should be there. There is no middle ground for us.

It seems to me we should leave the other remedies we want to have to the operation of the ordinary criminal and civil law, for which there is ample recourse, and not add this additional provision, making again the kind of invidious distinction that we disagree with between tenants of public housing in Ontario and other tenants.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Chairman, in the absence of my colleague from St. George, I feel compelled to clarify a distinction which I understood her to make but which, it would appear, the member for Riverdale did not perceive in the same way.

Like my colleague from St. George, I have a large number of my constituents who live in Ontario Housing. I know the pressures of daily living they come under, and there is no way that I, like she, would add to those pressures. Also like the member for St. George, I have a large number of people, almost on a daily basis, appealing for some assistance to get into Ontario Housing.

The point that the member for St. George was clearly making was the point of equity, because there are two factors that are taken into consideration with respect to those who live in Ontario Housing. First and foremost is need. The second one is that the rent paid for that accommodation, once the need is established, is based on income. That's where the point of equity has to have the second edge. The ability to pay, and the amount that one has the ability to pay, are also parts of the need formula.

My colleague from St. George is clearly expressing her personal anguish—and I simply want to echo it—that there are more people in this province who need assistance with respect to subsidized, public housing. That is not the quarrel; that is not the issue. The point is, when there simply isn't enough—and that is the situation—to meet the entire need, then there are two questions and two other issues that have to be included in our own perception of the problem. One is, who has the greater need? The second is, what is the issue of equity at stake here? That's the point my colleague was making. That is still a valid point, and it's through her concern and her anguish that she stresses that point, and not whether or not there is need.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee and having heard the arguments, I must say I have been moved both by the member for Riverdale and by his eloquent, very reasoned and legal arguments about taking this section out.

Coming from a riding that has very little public housing and not being involved in it myself, I tried to approach this from the standpoint of more or less a third person listening to the arguments. I can appreciate many of the things the member has said about various serious hardships that are imposed upon occupants of public housing who no longer meet the requirements and are called upon to leave. But I think the remedy for that is in public housing.

We were told by the deputy minister responsible for public housing that his ministry's mandate is to give such housing to three categories: families with children, senior citizens (those persons 60 years of age and over) and the disabled. If those people are being denied housing by virtue of the fact that someone is in the dwelling who should not be, then we have to weigh the relative merits. I think I have to come down on the side of the law and the mandate of the Ontario Housing Corporation. We may not agree with everything Ontario Housing does, I think all of us agree we need more units, but as long as we live within those constrictions I believe the law must be upheld.

[1:00]

The member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) in his very legal way—and I certainly won't challenge him in legal arguments—has mentioned there should be a difference between a tenancy agreement with a private person or a private corporation, and government.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I wonder if we might hear from the House leader for a moment. In view of the fact the original understanding was the committee would rise at 1 p.m., would the member for Kent-Elgin yield for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I think we have to regularize some procedures from this point on. It's my understanding we need a little more time to complete the consideration of filed amendments in connection with this legislation. If we could continue to sit between now and 2 p.m. we could complete this bill, save and except for the voting on the amendments, which we could arrange to call for 10 minutes to six this afternoon following private members' business. I suppose what I have to do now is ask the committee to rise and report so we can get the unanimous consent of the House to proceed on the basis of that understanding.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported three bills with amendments.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent of the House to enable us to go back into committee of the whole to complete the consideration of Bill 163 sometime between now and 2 p.m. because we're going into routine proceedings promptly at 2 p.m. It's our understanding that once Bill 163 is completed in committee of the whole we will then start the routine proceedings at 2 p.m. This afternoon, following the private members' business, somewhere around 10 minutes to six, we will have the bell to vote on the matters still before the committee of the whole. May we have unanimous consent to proceed now to complete that work?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the request of the government House leader that the House continue sitting from one until two o'clock. Does the House give unanimous consent?

Agreed.

House in committee of the whole.

RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 163, An Act to reform the Law respecting Residential Tenancies.

Mr. McGuigan: I just wanted to complete my remarks by saying I believe there is a distinction between a rental agreement with a private person or a private corporation and a rental agreement with governments, because when governments are using public money in all of their activities they have to make certain the public interest is served in the way intended by the Legislature. Whether the Legislature was right or wrong might be another matter, but I think there is a distinction between those two types of business arrangements. That was all I wanted to say.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on section 42?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I just want to draw to the attention of the House that without this section if two people were in need, the unit would either remain in the hands of the one who had it or be given to whoever was the best liar. The intent of this section is to provide that the only real basis upon which a decision is made in most cases for subsidized public housing is either by a points system or something of the equivalent. It is designed to be fair but it depends, quite frankly, upon the honesty of the applicants. Were we to delete this section, when you have two people who are in need one may deliberately exaggerate need; the other may be entirely honest about the need. The deletion of this section would mean, quite frankly, that the one who set out to deceive in order to attain a goal—

Mr. Makarchuk: You automatically assume there are thousands of people out there who want to deceive you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —for the first time, because of that conduct would receive the prize, which is the accommodation. I don't think anybody in this House wants that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: So that we're clear on this matter, Mr. Renwick's motion was that section 42 be deleted. The chair ruled that the proper way to handle that was to simply vote against the section.

Shall section 42 stand as part of the bill?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Vote stacked.

Mr. Renwick: The next amendment I have is the one to which I referred at the beginning when I asked for your assistance Mr. Chairman. It would come in following section 69, which is the last section in part VII. If passed by the House it would become a new part, presumably part VIII, with the other parts being renumbered. If it's in order I would move that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is after section 69, which is the final section in part VII.

Sections 43 to 69, inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Renwick: This amendment is somewhat lengthy but I think the very statement of it will commend itself to the House and require little, if any, elaboration by way of explanation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following:

"(1) No landlord directly or indirectly, alone or with another, shall:

(a) deny to any person or class of persons occupancy of any residential unit;

(b) discriminate against any person or class of persons with respect to any term or condition of occupancy of any residential unit because of the race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry, place of origin, age, sex, marital or family relationship, or physical disability of such person or class of persons, or of any other person or class of persons with whom such person is associated.

(2) The prohibition in subsection 1 in respect of sex and age does not apply to a rental unit in a residential complex where the occupancy of the residential complex, other than that of the landlord, his family or employees, is restricted to individuals who are of the same sex or who are more than 65 years of age.

(3) Any person who has reasonable grounds to believe that a person has contravened subsection 1 may file a complaint with the residential tenancies commission.

(4) Where the commission determines that there has been a breach of subsection 1 the commission may make an order entitling occupancy.

(5) Where an owner is found guilty of contravening subsection 1 the maximum penalty that can be imposed is $1,000."

Mr. Renwick: We gave consideration to such a motion as this with respect to continuing this crusade that's been going on for so long in the province, which has been very successful in some areas, of eliminating discrimination in housing accommodation.

We gave consideration to the existence of the report of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, Living Together, which has been available for some considerable period of time now but which has not been implemented by the government. We do not know what the government's intentions are with respect to that bill—not so much with respect to the timing of an introduction by the government of a bill dealing with the discrimination matters, we know that because the first minister, the Premier, has committed himself by indicating that bill will be presented to the assembly in the fall of this year—we do not, however, know anything about the content of that bill. We do not know what its substance is and we felt it wise, with this act, to make certain the act itself contains provisions with respect to anti-discrimination legislation.

The second reason that constrained us to put this amendment forward was that in the evolution of anti-discrimination legislation as part of the fabric of the province and the need for the Ontario Human Rights Commission to have been the focal point for that kind of legislation to become effective in this province—certainly with respect to housing accommodation—there is every reason to believe that kind of problem, given the intimate information and knowledge which the commission will gain over a period of time, is precisely the kind of information the commission itself, under this new act the Residential Tenancies Act, can deal with, rather than having it dealt with by the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

It did seem to us if we were attempting in one single bill to provide a uniform law related to landlord and tenant matters, there was on balance at least some justification, if not a compelling argument, that the anti-discrimination provisions be incorporated as part and parcel of the bill.

It was with that in mind that my colleague the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), placed this amendment in the committee. It failed to pass in the committee. I would commend it to the detached view of those persons in the House who were not with us in the committee, for their consideration in the hope that this essential part of the kind of quality of society we want to maintain in Ontario in housing matters should be a permanent part of this bill, so that anyone looking at a bill in Ontario related to landlord and tenant matters can say, "Here it is; it's all here. It's all in the one place, a fundamental part of my rights as a citizen to gain access to accommodation is not to be found somewhere else but is to be found here before a commission." A commission which, with its accumulated knowledge, and we hope wisdom over the years, will be peculiarly adapted towards making certain that discrimination does not play any particular part in our world.

It is for those reasons my colleague the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere originally moved the amendment and I have the honour of moving it in his place today.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, in the interests of time I am going to be very brief, because we have heard all the arguments before over 15 months. I would just say that we will not support the amendment, although we obviously agree in spirit with what is being done here. I want to emphasize that we agree with the intention, but we do not think it should be included in this bill.

I think that in essence it would undercut what the Ontario Human Rights Commission is doing; if you're going to include it in every bill you might as well disband the commission. We do not agree with disbanding the commission; we do not agree with including this in this bill. We think it should be dealt with in a separate bill.

The Premier has indicated that bill will be coming forth this fall; we have to accept his word for it. If we want to make amendments to the new bill at that time that is the proper time to do it.

[1:15]

Mr. McGuigan: I think anyone who has been a member of this House or listened to debates in this House over the last two years, at least in the time that I have been here, would realize that our leader, the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) has pursued a very vigorous campaign pushing for the adoption of a revised human rights code. It is very much a part of this party's policy and we can agree with every item that the honourable member has included in his amendment.

As the member for Waterloo North has said, our only quarrel with it is that we then create a situation where people who are aggrieved will not know which direction to go to have the grievance corrected; or they may choose between the sources of correction, deciding that one would better suit them than the other.

We think in the interim, between now and next fall, when surely we will have a revised human rights code, that people will be adequately protected by the officials appointed under this organization and that they will be protected under the terms in fairness.

Certainly the members of all parties, I'm sure, will be heard from if fairness is not made the number one rule of the commissioners. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I would just comment that the resolution was put forward by the member for Scarborough-

Ellesmere and was defeated in the committee on June 12. There has been no change in it except for the mover.

I want to associate myself with the remarks of the member for Waterloo North. I don't think there is anyone in this House who doesn't subscribe to what is put forward here. By the same token you have the very practical consideration that we have a human rights code, a human rights commission. It should be amended: there's no question about that. There are commitments that it soon will be, and that is the proper place to deal with this matter.

My concern of June 12 is still my concern today, that by the passage of this amendment there would be a fragmentation and an erosion of the work that has been so successfully done for so many years. Hopefully it will be done even more successfully in the future by the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Chairman: As you know, this would add a new section, a new part, to follow part VII. Is it the wish of the committee that the amendment be adopted?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 70 to 106, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 107:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, as the substance of the amendment is related to four sections I assume it is in order for me to place it this way, although I recognize that our alternative was to vote against these particular sections.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that sections 107, 108, 109 and section 110(2) be deleted from the bill.

That's fine, and it is on the record, I think when the vote comes it probably will be handled in the same way, that is whether these sections should stand as part of the bill or not. But certainly the intent is clear from your amendment.

We are now speaking of 107, 108, 109 and 110; I gather they are similar in content.

Mr. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Deputy Chairman. The elimination of 108, 109 and section 110(2) really are consequential upon our desire to remove section 107 from the bill. I suppose in one sense this is a matter which can be seen in a legal context, but there is immense substance to it because it strikes at the very heart and nature of the kind of commission we are providing in this bill.

This party has been on the record for a long time as wanting a commission to see if we couldn't somehow marry the needs of justice in landlord and tenant matters with economy of time and cost. We had proposed a commission that would accomplish that kind of purpose. To our surprise, we find for the first time in the province of Ontario we are enshrining in a statute a commission which may be an instrument of inquisition; it is a commission with inquisitorial powers.

I specifically advised the minister and his advisers at the time this was before the House that no other such commission established by the House has the provision that at the hearing the commission shall question the parties who are in attendance at the hearing, as well as any witnesses, with a view to determining the truth concerning the matters in dispute. We are, of course, interested in determining the truth of the matters in dispute; what we are not interested in is a commission which can conduct an inquisition and which will relegate to itself, under any form of inquisitorial proceedings, command over the whole of the proceedings which will be carried out.

Again, in questioning in the committee, we endeavoured to get some sense of the nature of the commission. We were able to get some sort of structural changes, which may or may not do something to alleviate another concern which we had about the commission. Let me say that the course to be followed by this commission is first of all to inquire into any matter in dispute between a landlord and a tenant and assist the parties to the proceedings in an attempt to settle the matter by agreement, the so-called mediation provision. We are not particularly concerned about that initial process.

It then goes on to say that when an application is made to the commission, where the commission has inquired into the matter and is of the opinion it is unlikely it can be resolved, the commission shall notify the parties and hold a hearing. It is the nature of the hearing, and the inquiry leading up to the hearing, that causes us immense concern. It should cause every member of this House immense concern, because there was no clear statement by the minister, or in the committee, with respect to their understanding of the nature of the provisions which will govern this commission in its procedural form.

I may say without harking back too far that in the history of the law as we understand it, in the struggle which took place in England between the supremacy of the common law and the supremacy of other forms of executive versions of law, such as the Star Chamber and others, the common law won. We eliminated, for practical purposes in the province of Ontario, by inheritance from England, we eliminated the inquisition as a method of determining the truth. There are some relics of it, of course, in the coroner's inquest, which is for a different purpose; but no one is going to be threatened in their personal capacities with respect to that, that's for the determination of the cause of death and many people have differing views as to whether the inquest is still the best way to do that. But in the fundamental nature of the kinds of decisions which we make in our civil courts or in our criminal courts, we adhere very clearly to the kinds of hearings which are our version of judicial in form, in substance and in content.

The rules are designed to allow parties to come before the judicial body to make their presentations in their own way and with their own convictions before the person sitting in judicial capacity. The judge on that occasion takes into account the evidence brought forward on each side by the two contending parties, draws whatever inferences of fact that should be drawn from that evidence, applies the law to it, then exercises the decision which is going to be made. It is known in most circles as being governed by the rule of law.

We think that is the kind of commission we should have in Ontario. It's the only kind we know. It seems odd that we should, at this point in the history of the province, introduce a form of commission which is unknown to us, for which we have seen no draft rules of procedure, for which we have seen no flesh on the skeleton which is introduced by section 107 adduced by the ministry, there is not even an inkling that they understand the problems which are raised by the introduction of such a section. It seems to me this House should very cautiously consider this before they ever adopt a provision such as section 107.

I have a couple of very brief quotations—I happen to have been an admirer of The History of English Law by W. S. Holdsworth for a long time. In volume five he deals with the problems which arose with respect to the Star Chamber and the way it conducted its proceedings, and the way in which over the course of time it was in battle with the common law courts, with the common law courts winning the ascendancy.

There are in particular two or three sentences which I think reflect, in language we can all understand, the very concern which we have about this kind of commission: "Then, as now, the official mind cared more for the working of the system which it had established and for the production of the results which it thought it ought to produce, than for any consideration of justice to the particular individual. Then, as now, the procedure of judicial courts designed to do justice to individuals produced results disconcerting to the official mind."

I am going to repeat it so the minister perhaps will pick it up this time, if he can avoid his usual luncheon-time chitchat. I repeat for the benefit of the minister and his advisers, whose attention we had a great deal of difficulty getting on occasion in committee, what I have now said. I quote again: "Then, as now, the official mind cared more for the working of the system which it had established, and for the production of the results which it thought that it ought to produce, than for any consideration of justice to the particular individual. Then, as now, the procedure of judicial courts designed to do justice to individuals produced results disconcerting to the official mind."

I have a funny feeling that a good deal of the educational process of the members of the committee in listening to the debate in the presentations on this bill was to indicate there still remains in the tenancy of this province a very real concern that in some kind of way this commission will become an adjunct of the very structure of the landlord-tenant relationship which has caused such difficulties in the province over so many times. I say if we are going to move to a new form of commission, I think we should have first of all tried the traditional form.

Perhaps so that the distinction may be somewhat more clear, I would like to quote very briefly from a justice report going to law, a critique of English civil procedure in which there were some comparisons made between the procedure in England and very substantially similar procedures in Ontario, with observations about the differences in these matters. Of course this kind of inquisitorial system which the minister is introducing is part of the French system, it is pretty much their form. I want to draw attention to the distinctions which are made, because they apply to the way in which this commission is going to operate.

In France the procedure of fact-finding and pleading culminates in a hearing or an audience. While that is very similar to ours in general terms, there is a fundamental difference. It is very rare for any findings of fact to be made at the hearing. Investigation and proof of facts takes place under the guiding hand of the juge de mises, the principal judge in the particular case, by means of examinations of witnesses before the judge and reports based on investigations by experts appointed by the court. The record of all these processes, that is the fact-finding, is not normally verbatim. Together with the pleadings or conclusions which continue to be exchanged prior to the hearing, it is compiled into a dossier along with a summary by the judge, and normally forms the whole of the evidence before the court at the hearing upon which the advocates for both sides will base their argument.

The fact-finding devices already mentioned serve the purpose of investigation as well as final proof. One or more witnesses will be called for oral examination by the judge who will have been informed of the issues for which clarification is sought.

The parties' lawyers will normally be present and may suggest questions, but the questions may only actually be put by the judge. Even though a party has called for an inquiry and specified the questions with which the inquiry is to be concerned, this does not prevent the judge from interrogating the witnesses on other matters which he thinks important. He may also call a witness not asked for by either party.

All this points out very clearly that when we introduce into our law a provision which says that at the hearing the commission shall question the parties who are in attendance at the hearing, and any witnesses, with a view to determining the truth concerning the matters in dispute, it is quite clear the commissioner sitting on that commission is the one who will control the whole of those proceedings. He will be able to adopt, if he wishes to so adopt, that dichotomy between the investigation and the fact-finding on which he will hold his hearing, and the hearing will become very short because the facts will have been found by this method, which is not a customary one and indeed is inimical to our system of law.

The minister always squirms a little bit and chatters sotto voce with those at the table when he is really worried about a matter which is of immense concern to the members of the opposition. The whole question before the assembly is whether or not in this bill, for the first time in the history of this province, we are going to depart from the traditional method of ascertaining the truth and institute a new method known as the inquisition method of inquiry. Perhaps in some traditions it has been honed and fashioned in such a way that it meets the sense of those societies for justice and right, but it is inimical to our proceedings and reinforces the very concerns which were expressed before the committee by the tenants, that somehow or other this institution of government is going to become part of the official bureaucracy, and because of a very lengthy tradition in the province with respect to the imbalance in favour of landlords and against tenants will become part of the very system which requires a constant fight. That has been expressed by many people.

I am really surprised at my own profession—not surprised, because it doesn't usually happen in any event; or if it does happen it's very late in the day—that they didn't at least make some kind of a submission to us with respect to it.

I am very surprised that we were unable to extract from the minister anything related to the kind of process which was involved—nothing to indicate that the commissioner will not take such a hold on the proceedings that he can say to such and such a tenant or such and such a landlord and their representatives, "You just sit down here; I'll conduct the questioning. If you have some questions you want answered, submit them to me and I will ask them if I see fit. In addition to that, I may call some other witnesses of my own in order to question them. And, of course, I will also have the benefit of speaking by telephone and using other means to gain other information which I can use for my particular purpose in controlling the whole of this operation."

With those very brief comments, expressing a very deep concern on my part, which one can discount as the bias of a person brought up in our particular tradition of law to the extent that one wishes to—and I don't mind disclosing my prejudices; it very seldom affects the validity of the arguments I put forward—I just want to say to the minister and to his advisers, and the minister had very good advisers, that this is an area where there has been a total vacuum in the understanding by the members of the committee of what is intended in the nature and the kind of commission we have in front of us.

For those reasons, we are going to vote against section 107 and, consequentially, against sections 108, 109 and section 110(2).

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I shall make it very short and very sweet. After all the smart remarks, I want a fair amount of attention on this one, because it is going to cause some great delight in the caucus some time later this afternoon.

This bill evolved from a committee that studied a green paper and made, if I recall correctly, 37 recommendations. Some of those recommendations were dissented from. Number 15 was not dissented from. I want to read number 15: "To assure fairness to unrepresented parties, the proceedings should be directed by officials of the tribunal who can conduct their own examination of witnesses."

I would humbly suggest, before the next harangue about the inquisition, that the honourable member consult with his own caucus as to their thinking about powers and procedures. As is the case with every tribunal bill in this province, the Statutory Powers Procedure Act applies. That is hardly the inquisition, unless the honourable member finds fault with that as well. Sections 10(a), (b) and (c) of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, which basically involves the rights of parties to counsel, to examine witnesses and so forth at hearings, is quite explicit in this matter.

I want also to draw attention to the fact that, at least as I understood it, one of the overriding concerns of the committee, which heard this bill very exhaustively, was what was to be the protection of either a landlord or a tenant who appeared before the commission and did not have counsel. That is another reason these particular sections are in there.

Finally, I would like to read into the record that all of these things were said by the honourable member on May 29, when he moved this amendment and the series of amendments in committee, and when it was defeated in committee on May 30. The only thing that hasn't been said today was his great eloquence, at great length in any event, on the question of truth or fact or what have you, a very philosophical dissertation. It's exactly the same as occurred on those two days, Mr. Chairman, and I think the result today will be exactly as it was on May 30.

Mr. Renwick: I have only one comment and I guess this is the only place that it would be appropriate to say it. One of the things that has bedevilled the bill is that because of the constitutional nature of the division with respect to the appointment of judges the bill has had to be fashioned in such a way as to meet the constitutional requirements and has to that extent been of necessity to disregard some of the protections which ordinary citizens have. I expect and anticipate that there will be a constitutional challenge to this bill at some point in the not too distant future.

Mr. McGuigan: If, as the member for Riverdale fears, we're returning to the days of the Star Chamber—and my history isn't that good to tell me how long ago it is, but it must be 300 to 400 years since we had the Star Chamber—I think in the interval we have adopted a system of democratic government which is, at least in the views of most people, quite responsive to such bad apple situations as the one he outlined.

It seems to me if his worst fears are realized—and I appreciate the history that he's told us about—people will be standing in this chamber and screaming about it and the government just could not live with such a situation. I feel that our times are different and that the remedy, if these fears are realized, lies right here in this Legislature with the opposition parties and with the government party to immediately correct the worst situation that might develop.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? If the committee is agreeable, to maintain a continuity in the manner in which amendments are placed, I would like to first place the question, shall sections 107, 108 and 109 stand as part of the bill, and then after that the amendment that subsection (2) of section 110 be deleted.

Shall sections 107, 108 and 109 stand as part of the bill?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Sections 107 to 109, inclusive, stacked.

On section 110:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 110(2) be deleted from the bill.

All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

On section 111:

Mr. Renwick: My next amendment is in arrangements made with the member who was in the chair earlier, a section following section 111.

Mr. Chairman: That's adding a new section, 111(a).

Mr. Renwick: Do you want to deal with the other intervening sections? Or are there any?

Mr. Chairman: There are none.

Mr. Renwick: There aren't any. We have to deal with 111, I guess.

Section 111 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"111(a). (1) No landlord shall evict or attempt to evict a tenant where:

(a) the landlord is in breach of his obligations under the tenancy agreement of this act;

(b) a reason for the eviction is that the tenant has attempted to secure or enforce his legal rights;

(c) a reason for the eviction is that the tenant is a member of an association the primary purpose of which is to secure or enforce legal rights of tenants or that the tenant is attempting to organize such an organization;

(d) a reason for the eviction is that the rental unit is occupied by children, unless the occupation by the children constitutes overcrowding or unless the residential complex is not suitable for children;

(e) in the case of a tenant of subsidized public housing the tenant has ceased to meet the qualifications required for occupancy of the rental unit but continues to be in need of subsidized public housing.

"(2) Where on an application by a landlord for an eviction order or by a tenant for rescission of an eviction order, the commission determines that the landlord has evicted or is attempting to evict the tenant for any of the reasons set out in subsection (1) the commission shall refuse to make or shall rescind the eviction order."

Mr. Renwick: In the original bill which was before the assembly these clauses—items (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e)—appeared in the bill as subsection (2) of what is now section 111. In the original bill it was section 108(1), which was one section, and then the five itemized headings appeared in section 108(2).

The present section is now section 111, and the new section which I wanted to add as a separate and distinct section is 111a, which I have just moved. We obtained a significant improvement in the operative part of section 108, which was subsection (1), by removing certain restrictive clauses. We now have a clause in section 111, which was just passed, which provides that the commission shall refuse to make an eviction order where the commission is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that it would be unfair to evict the tenant.

The unfortunate part of the problem was that these very essential protections of the tenant in his accommodation were related to a question of whether there was a determination of whether it was fair or unfair. So far as basic rights are concerned, of course, we always consider that they should be entrenched in such a way as to make certain that they're not subject to that kind of nebulous distinction about fairness or unfairness in all circumstances. We therefore moved the deletion of section 108(2) and proposed a new section. Unfortunately, the deletion was not accepted; the new section did not pass.

The new section is important in two respects. One is that all of these matters are designed to give a sense of assurance to people living in rented accommodation in the province of Ontario that they can collectively act together. It seems quite a far cry from trade union times, but there was an immense problem about people ever acting together or in concert for any purpose which could be considered to be unlawful or illegal. We've got a kind of a remnant of that still within the philosophy of the province of Ontario. It is absolutely essential that this bill contain provisions which clearly point out to the tenants of this province they cannot be evicted if they're attempting to enforce their rights under the Landlord and Tenant Act, that they cannot be evicted if they are members of an association whose primary purpose is to enforce their rights or that they're attempting to organize such an organization. Those are two very fundamental provisions so far as we are concerned.

We also do not think the tenant should be evicted if, in fact, there is a correlative reason, whatever the reason may be, if the landlord is in breach of his obligation under the tenancy agreement or under the act. We do not think that kind of last-step punishment, that can be meted out under this statute, should take effect when one of the sides, or the opposing side asking for the eviction, comes before the commission with something less than clean hands.

The other item that we believe must be entrenched, is this next question of adult-only buildings, and the problems involved in it—that whole question. We therefore wanted to leave in it the fourth item, which was in the old section 108(2). We also wanted, of course, to put in the fifth item, which relates to the tenants of subsidized public housing to get away from this subtle distinction about the qualifications to get in as distinct for the need to remain once you are in. We fought that battle in committee, and of course we alluded to it when we were dealing with section 55 of the bill.

But the operative provision doesn't rely on anybody's view about what is fair or unfair, and all the circumstances. It simply says that "where on an application by a landlord for an eviction order, or by a tenant for rescission of an eviction order, the commission determines that the landlord has evicted or is attempting to evict the tenant for any of the reasons set out in subsection (1), the commission shall refuse to make or shall rescind the eviction order."

What could be clearer, Mr. Chairman? What could be so eminently fair? What could be so necessary in our law, as it progresses toward a point in time where this sense of apprehension and concern amongst the people who are tenants in the province needs this kind of assurance from this assembly? Not to have it, in our view, is such a fundamental default in principle by the assembly that we have moved this amendment in the hope that we can get it back into the bill in the proper form again.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Chairman, we have had extensive discussion on Bill 163 in committee. We all know how pressed for time we are today. I am sure all of us, maybe even the member for Riverdale, would like to have the bill passed. But sometimes he goes to such extremes, Mr. Chairman, to prove just how learned he is in the law, that he not only bores all members of the House. He talks about having a bill that is one of common law that everyone in the province of Ontario can understand. Then he drags up all of these historical cases from Europe and England, and every other place imaginable. Anyone who is interested in knowing the position the member for Riverdale took will find it's already in Hansard from the committee that sat since January.

Mr. Chairman, our position is in that Hansard as well and I will say no further.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any members wishing to speak further?

The question before the House is the amendment placed by the member for Riverdale, adding a new section 111(a).

Shall the motion carry?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Shall this be stacked?

Amendment stacked.

Sections 112 to 116, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 117:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that the following subsections be added to section 117:

"(11) Where the commission makes an order terminating a tenancy in the absence of the tenant, the tenant may within seven days after service apply, ex parte, to the commission who set aside the order.

"(12) The commission may hear an application under subsection (11), notwithstanding the issuance or execution of the writ of possession pursuant to the order terminating the tenancy."

Mr. Renwick: It's not often I'm harassed by members of my own caucus. The reasoning behind the first additional subsection is obvious. If there's an order terminating a tenancy made in the absence of a tenant we simply want the tenant to have the right to come back within seven days and make an application to have the order set aside. What could be more reasonable?

Mr. Martel: I agree with you.

Mr. Renwick: Item 12 would not have been necessary if the particular shady practice of Ontario Housing had not taken place which led to the editorial in the Star and that is—

Mr. Nixon: I thought you weren't dealing with rotten apples.

Mr. Renwick: —that the application under subsection 11 be available notwithstanding the issuance or execution of the writ of possession pursuant to the order terminating the tenancy. I ask for your support.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Section 118 agreed to.

On section 119:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 119 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection 1, where the commission makes an order terminating a tenancy and evicting a tenant, an appeal from that order shall stay that order pending the hearing of the appeal."

Mr. Renwick: This is simply to reverse an odious provision in the bill, which says that in order to have a stay of an eviction order, even though you're going to appeal, you must make an application to a commissioner to get permission to do so. In the dredging case the other day, for example, you found that all you had to do in those cases was to file the appeal and you were released from jail. All we are saying in this particular case is that if there's an eviction order then before that order can be executed there is an automatic stay of it if an appeal is filed by the tenant. We think it is a reversal which should take place.

Again I commend it to my colleagues in the House.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on any other sections? On what section?

Mr. Warner: The tenants have lost today.

Mr. Renwick: The last section.

Sections 120 to 140, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 141:

Mr. Renwick: Just before section 141 passes I would like to do two things. I would like to first of all commend the members of the minister's staff who sat with us and advised us during the course of the hearings. There were a number of them there, but the famous law firm of Kumer, Fram and Beecroft, whose names should not go unrecorded in legislative history, were in all ways patient, informed and skilled in what they tried to do to deflect the obvious amendments that we wanted to place before the committee.

The other point I want to emphasize is that in the learning process all of us are indebted to a number of organizations. I'm going to risk omitting one or two, because I don't necessarily have them all, particularly the legal services which were involved. I refer specifically to the Federation of Metro Tenants' Associations, Metro Tenants' Legal Services, Parkdale Community Legal Services, Neighbourhood Legal Services, the Federation of Ontario Tenants' Associations, Osgoode Hall, Community Learning Awareness Service Program, the Law Union of Ontario and the University of Toronto law professor who is an association in himself, Professor Richard Gathercole.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I gladly join with the member for Riverdale in commending the officials of not only the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations but also the Ministry of Housing and the other ministries that gave legal advice and service during the 15 months or so this bill has been out in the open, including the previous white paper—which in actual fact was in a red cover as you probably remember.

[2:00]

Without limiting my comments to a few groups who made their presentations, I think it should be remembered there were many tenants' organizations, landlords and interested individuals who made presentations. I think we must have heard about 300 or 400 presentations in the last 15 months on this particular bill. We are grateful for their contribution and the assistance they have given. I think I can speak on everyone's behalf and say we are glad this thing is finished.

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Chairman, I just want, in a public way on behalf of all the members of the committee, to pay a much-deserved compliment to the chairman of the standing general government committee.

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Section 141 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: A number of votes have been deferred. It is my understanding the vote will take place at approximately 5:50 p.m.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to commend all honourable members for the very excellent spirit of co-operation that has prevailed over the last few days. I hope it will continue for the balance of this session.

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE

Mr. M. Davidson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: In today's Toronto Sun a column written by Claire Hoy indicates that we in the New Democratic Party are in favour of assault and threats against workers of the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board. He goes so far as to say, "intimidation and assault may be justifiable to the NDP, but it certainly shouldn't be to normal people."

Mr. Speaker, I would refer both yourself and Mr. Hoy to the March 27 Hansard of this year, page 357, during the committee hearings for the Workmen's Compensation Board, when the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) said: "I would certainly agree, Mr. Chairman, that the employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board should not have to face threats and abusive, profane language."

Mr. Speaker, as usual, Claire Hoy is wrong again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I recognize the Minister of Health, I would like to draw to the attention of all members the fact we do have a very distinguished guest, Sir Billy Snedden, who is the Speaker of the Parliament of Australia. He joined us for lunch and we learned he is a very knowledgeable parliamentarian. We are so pleased to have him, accompanied by Lady Snedden, in our gallery. Will you welcome them please.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to table today a copy of a new agreement signed this morning between the government of Ontario and the Ontario Medical Association.

Mr. Martel: Beautiful timing. I want to congratulate you on that one.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As members will see, this new agreement provides a unique arrangement for determining future benefits provided under OHIP for medical services in Ontario. Under this agreement, the ministry and the OMA will each appoint three members of a committee to negotiate the overall increase in future agreements between the government and the medical profession. The unique feature I referred to is in the appointment of a chairman who will have power to act as a fact finder.

Now that this agreement has been signed, I expect to announce the name of the chairman within a few days. The committee can begin negotiations immediately afterwards, working towards a new agreement for the coming year.

[While the chairman will not have a vote on the committee, he or she will be able to assist and guide the committee in areas of disagreement during negotiations. In the event of an impasse, the chairman can be asked by either party to take on the fact finder role to help the two parties to a mutually acceptable level of compensation. His or her report, which must be completed within three weeks, becomes the basis for resumed negotiations. Thus there is no prolonged delay and the report can be made public on reasonable notice by either the government or the OMA. I am optimistic, sir, that this process will go a long way to ameliorating the concerns of the profession in Ontario.

This agreement is a reflection of the high level of trust and co-operation between the government and the medical profession in Ontario, who share a common goal of maintaining the high level of health care we all enjoy in this province.

PUBLIC SERVICE DENTAL PLAN

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, on April 20 members were advised that a settlement had been reached in negotiations between the government and Ontario Public Service Employees Union. The settlement included a dental plan which provides for basic dental health care, as well as some additional services. The plan will pay for 50 per cent of services covered and the employee will pay the remaining 50 per cent. The same benefits were negotiated with the OPP bargaining group and have been made available to em-employees in management positions and employees excluded from the bargaining unit.

In accordance with standard government practice, public tenders were called for the underwriting and administration of the plan based on specifications drawn up with the assistance of private sector consultants specializing in this field. Quotations received from nine companies were analysed by the joint insurance benefits review committee composed of representatives from the government and OPSEU with the assistance of the consultants. Two companies with the best bids were interviewed by the committee, which unanimously agreed that the Great West Life Assurance Company could provide the required coverage at the lowest long-term net cost, and accordingly recommended to the government that this company be selected as the carrier.

The government has approved the recommendation made by the committee and the contract has been awarded to Great West Life Assurance Company. The dental plan will come into effect on July 1, 1979.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Mr. McCague: Later this afternoon I will be tabling the report of the Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year 1978-79. I would like to take this opportunity to note that our latest figures of total staff strength reflect this government's continuing efforts to reduce the growth of the public sector.

During the fiscal year there has been virtually no growth in the classified staff. In terms of the total public service, the figures show an actual reduction of 668 staff between March 1978 and March 1979.

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would like to take this opportunity to bring honourable members up to date on the Vietnamese refugee situation and my ministry's part in it.

As honourable members know, one of the most infamous acts of racism in contemporary times is being prepared in Vietnam at this moment.

Vietnamese authorities are forcing some of their countrymen, mostly ethnic Chinese, to leave Vietnam. The ethnic Chinese, of course, are people whose genetic roots lie in China but who are Vietnamese nationals. Some ethnic Chinese families have been settled in Vietnam for three generations.

It has been estimated during the last year 500,000 refugees have either fled Vietnam or been expelled from the country. To this day it is estimated that 3,000 are leaving every 24 hours. We believe that more than half of them are dying in the process.

As members know, the government of Canada, in consultation with us and the other provinces, has undertaken to accept up to 7,000 refugees from southeast Asia during this year. We estimate that half of these men, women and children will settle here in Ontario. Once they get here my ministry, along with local school boards and the federal immigration department, is responsible for helping them get settled.

The job, of course, started last November when the first refugees from the freighter Hai Hong, "the boat people," started arriving in Ontario. Since the Hai Hong incident, the federal immigration department estimates 3,600 Vietnamese refugees have come to Canada. More than 1,500 have settled here in Ontario, and more than half of them—842—have settled here in Metropolitan Toronto. We are encouraging communities all over the province to help, and they are helping.

My ministry helps these refugees in two ways. First, our own excellent staff at the Toronto International Airport and at such facilities as Ontario Welcome House helps them directly. Second, and more important, we provide financial and professional help to such community organizations as the Vietnamese Fraternal Association and the Ottawa-Carleton Immigrant Services Organization. I say this help to community organizations is more important than our direct help, because the initial settlement of the refugees is their first step on the road to becoming full and equal citizens. They are settling in communities—Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, London, Windsor; if the people of those communities help them settle in the first place, they will know each other as neighbours and their communities will be the better for it.

Everybody who is helping the refugees to settle is aiming to help them in very basic, practical ways. At Welcome House in Toronto, for instance, they find warm human contact with people who speak their own language, people ready to meet whatever their immediate needs might be: we teach them how to use public transit; we show them how to shop; we show them how to use a stove; we have a clothing depot; we have English classes and a pre-school nursery.

Mr. McClellan: Bully for you.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The people of Ontario, through their own voluntary efforts, through community organizations, and through their Ministry of Culture and Recreation, have been helping the Vietnamese refugees since last November. I am happy to report that our efforts seem to be bearing fruit. There are all kinds of encouraging stories.

One of the most encouraging is the way employable men and women have been finding work. We estimate, for example, that more than 200 refugees from the Hai Hong have settled in Metropolitan Toronto. My officials tell me that two out of every three employable men and women in this group have jobs. The other one third are immersed in training programs that we feel confident will lead them to jobs too. Overall, though, I would say the one thing that encourages me the most is the way all sectors of the community at large are welcoming and accepting these refugees.

It is all too easy for us to get caught up in our own modest efforts and lose sight of the frustrating reality that we can offer only a tiny portion of the help that these refugees need worldwide. Nevertheless, we are confident we have the people and the experience to do our part, today and tomorrow.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Minister of Energy concerning the agreement which was apparently reached between the federal and Alberta governments yesterday on natural gas prices whereby the natural gas prices to Ontario consumers are apparently to go up about 15 cents per 1,000 cubic feet after August 1.

Can the minister explain why he or his representative was not present at that meeting in Ottawa, in view of his statement to this House on December 1, 1978, in discussing the matter of natural gas, when he said: "I have made it very clear to both the federal and Alberta ministers of energy that Ontario expects to be involved in any discussions on matters which might impinge on the interests of the consumers in this province"?

Does the government continue to take the position, which I feel they should take, that natural gas prices do not have to go up with oil prices; that they should be unhinged; and that, given the so-called surplus of natural gas that exists, there is no particular reason for consumers in Ontario to go unprotected in this way?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the House on Tuesday, I think I said I had been talking to the Minister of Energy for Alberta, who indicated that there was no proposal on the part of Alberta to alter the agreement which Alberta had made with the government of Canada earlier this year and which called for a $1 per-barrel increase effective July 1 and another $1 per-barrel increase on January 1, 1980.

Mr. S. Smith: That's oil. What about natural gas?

[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Gas was included in that as 85 per cent of the price of oil. Natural gas would rise by the same proportion since the price of natural gas is pegged at 85 per cent of the equivalent price in oil. I had been talking with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of Canada earlier that day, Tuesday, on the telephone, and he had indicated they had no plan to attempt to renegotiate the agreement; in other words, both governments considered the agreement negotiated some time ago to still be in effect.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition it's rather interesting to see where we stand as far as oil and gas prices are concerned in Canada compared to the United States and to the world price.

Mr. Bradley: You didn't say that two months ago.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As of July 1, after this additional $1 per barrel, the price in Canada will still be about $2.50 below the Chicago price. Depending on what price one takes these days, the world price in some places is, somewhere between $20 and $30 per barrel.

The province has consistently taken the position that the price in Canada of oil and natural gas should not be the world price, it should be a price related to the needs of Canada in Canada, and the need for a sufficient incentive to the companies to continue exploration. In fact we felt this is the only way we would reach self-sufficiency, the target which Ontario has consistently said could be reached in 1995.

We did not agree or disagree with the agreement made by Alberta and Canada, although we said we did not think the increase they were proposing at that time was warranted.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the question pertains to natural gas, would the minister not agree that given the large amounts of natural gas apparently available within this country, there is no reason for natural gas prices to go up just because oil prices have been raised on the international scene? Almost one year ago to the day, when I expressed the very same opinion, the Minister of Energy at the time (Mr. Baetz), said: "We have on a number of occasions, in as forceful a way as we can, proposed to the federal government and the government of Alberta the price of natural gas and oil should no longer continue in lock-step, but so far with no success whatsoever." Deaf ears, he said, just stonewalling.

He referred to our friends in Ottawa; now that they're the minister's friends in Ottawa, would he say whether they are likely to dislodge the two prices and allow natural gas to remain—

Mr. Havrot: You have no friends, anywhere.

Mr. S. Smith: —at an advantageous price for the consumers of Ontario, despite what is happening to the price of oil?

Mr. Breithaupt: The way you wanted it before.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I am so delighted with the change that has taken place in Ottawa that I'm almost speechless. I'm almost unable to answer that question.

Mr. Kerrio: And you have a man with a brain in opposition.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I expect to be meeting the Minister of Mines, Energy and Resources in a very short time. One of the matters we will be discussing, no doubt, is the pricing of gas. We will be discussing that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the government of this province find what the present Conservative government of Canada is doing with regards to the oil and gas prices acceptable now, given it found it was deplorable carried out by the Liberal government that was in office up until a few weeks ago?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I said again on Tuesday, in answer to a different question, that I believed an agreement was an agreement. I think the Liberal government of Canada made an agreement, and the present Conservative government has decided to honour it.

Mr. Kerrio: They haven't honoured anything else.

Mr. Bradley: It's the first thing they've honoured so far.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I mentioned a moment ago, I'm not any more excited about the agreement now than I was when it was negotiated. But I do believe they should be consistent.

Mr. J. Reed: Does the minister have a position on the unhinging of the natural gas price as it relates to oil prices?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm sorry, I missed the beginning of that.

Mr. Kerrio: He's got two or three.

Mr. S. Smith: "Do you have a position," he asked, "on the unhinging of oil and gas prices?"

Ms. Gigantes: He's unhinged.

Hon. Mr. Auld: My position is very little different from that of my immediate predecessor.

Mr. Roy: Yes? What is that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The Leader of the Opposition just read it.

Mr. S. Smith: What is the very little difference?

Mr. Breithaupt: And which predecessor?

DEATH OF ANDREW STUPARICK

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is with very great regret that I inform the members of the House I have just learned that Andrew Stuparick, who is well known to all of us in this House, has in a very recent few moments passed on, I believe from a heart attack. I would like to express the sympathies of members of the House to his family. I was just informed of this a moment or two ago and thought other members would like to know of this very tragic event.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course, that kind of information tends to stun one, and I can appreciate the Premier's feeling on having conveyed this unfortunate news to the House. I want only to express our regret and our sympathy to members of the Stuparick family and to say that Mr. Stuparick has served both media and the Legislature for many years; it is with sorrow that we learn of these very tragic circumstances.

Mr. Cassidy: I would simply like to add, on behalf of my party, an expression of our sympathy and our condolences with the family on the very sudden death of Mr. Stuparick, a man who had worked for a long time in the public service of Ontario and in this Legislature, and I trust that message will be conveyed to his family.

WINTARIO

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the minister's predecessor in his present position—

Mr. Breithaupt: Re-incarnation.

Mr. S. Smith: —as Minister of Culture and Recreation.

Mr. Conway: Oh, that predecessor.

Mr. S. Smith: Can he explain why he has found it necessary to mount a campaign across the province of Ontario against his fellow cabinet ministers, who it would appear from this document are in search of his Wintario money?

Let me read to you, Mr. Speaker, a memo to the council of the township of Kingston from their parks and recreation director, who speaks of the keynote speech given to recreation people from the various municipalities of Ontario:

"Mr. Baetz expressed serious concerns to the delegates relative to the future of Wintario. These were in direct response to some pressures that had been applied by several other ministries in the provincial government requesting accessibility to Wintario funds."

Mr. Martel: Why aren't other people allowed that privilege, why can't we all do it like that?

Mr. S. Smith: "Mr. Baetz asked the delegates to assist him in obtaining municipal support for retaining their Wintario lottery within the structure of his ministry."

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. S. Smith: One more sentence, please. "He said the Ministry of Health is one of the provincial ministries that have requested access to the Wintario funds."

May I ask the minister if he recalls making that speech? What other ministries are after his funds, and why has it come to the point where the cabinet take their battles across Ontario?

Mr. Martel: The rest of us get cut off.

Mr. Nixon: Who would do a thing like that?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall that speech in detail.

Mr. Nixon: When are you taking over Correctional Services?

Interjections.

Mr. Breaugh: Playing games; name him, Reuben.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do members want to hear my answer? All I can say is that every minister on this side is out there working for his ministry. We are convinced that what we are doing is the best thing.

Interjections.

Mrs. Campbell: Where are the other ministers?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are very active and very much aware of what is going on. I make no apologies for going out and preaching on the highways and byways to anybody who will listen that we need funds for health—

Mr. M. Davidson: Talk about backing off.

Interjections.

Mr. Breaugh: Come on, be a man; don't back off.

Mr. Warner: Tell us about Wiseman.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, health too. For recreation, culture, sport, and for everything else. I don't make any apologies for that.

Mr. Breithaupt: You had better preach to them, not to this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have no apologies whatever.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, since the minister may not be aware of a quaint tradition called cabinet solidarity, is he telling us there is now a new style in which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) calls for one date for Reed Paper, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) for another, and the Treasurer has yet other advice with regard to the matter? The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) seeks money for more policemen and goes to the public forum. What is happening at cabinet meetings? Did you ask the Premier (Mr. Davis) for permission to go on this province-wide campaign on behalf of your ministry?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I was simply exhorting the recreation and culture workers in communities, who I know are convinced of the value of their work, to tell the whole world about it. People who work in the culture and recreation fields are very often very self-effacing, very modest people and are afraid to tell the whole world what they are doing and what their needs are.

Mr. Bradley: Including your cabinet friends.

Mr. Peterson: If I were you I would be modest too.

Mr. Havrot: Tell us about your solidarity in your party.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I simply told them to get on with the job, be articulate; tell everybody what they are doing and what their needs are. I don't think I need to apologize as a minister for that kind of stance at all.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: What other ministries are benefiting?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That has nothing to do with cabinet solidarity whatsoever. I'm all for the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Roy: I have a supplementary to my leader's question: I ask the honourable minister if in his continuing crusade and battle against his cabinet colleagues, is it part of his strategy to try to enlist the support of all the members of the Legislature in the fight against them, and is this the reason he is sending out questionnaires about whether or not he has the support of members about various activities—

Mr. Havrot: Yes, we are very dedicated.

Mr. Roy: —and that in fact, as I understand it, some of his local people are approaching local members of the Legislature about support for some of his programs? Is that part of the overall strategy to counter the pressure he is getting from cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First of all, let me reiterate there is no fight against, I am fighting for. I am fighting for more funds for the field of recreation and sports and culture. But to go to the member's immediate question, the only reason we sent out the questionnaire, which deals with the new priorities and new guidelines for Wintario, is because his party asked us to do that. They wanted to be involved in this thing.

Mr. Roy: We will help you get them.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: So come next fall, if they turn their backs on that questionnaire and don't want it being reviewed and don't want to be involved in setting up these new guidelines and priorities, they can be my guests; but I don't want to hear them complain next fall when we come back here and say here are the new guidelines, I don't want them to sit there like bumps on a log saying, "Why weren't we a part of the whole decision?"

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Health arising out of the announcement of the agreement with the OMA that there would be negotiation of fees. Since the future revisions of the OHIP fee schedule are to be made with the consent of the OMA, and since the OMA is to be made the sole negotiator on behalf of the physicians of Ontario with regard to that fee schedule, can the minister say whether all doctors in the province will be required to adhere to the fee schedule which is negotiated with the OMA, or does the government intend to continue to let doctors who opt out charge substantial extra fees to people who have already paid for the health care through their OHIP premiums?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We intend to retain the system which has served this province very well for the last number of years, including this year. The schedule of benefits that will result from the negotiations, and which I am optimistic, as I said in the statement, will go a long way to ameliorating the concerns of the profession that have been evidenced in the last year or so, will apply to the claims coming from the 82.2 per cent of physicians who opt in all of their claims and to those claims coming from opted-out physicians which are opted in through billing groups, and will apply to the reimbursement of patients who are directly billed.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister explain why it is that when a trade union acts as the sole negotiator for a group of employees in this province, including some employees who may not even be members of that particular trade union, every person in that bargaining unit is expected to adhere to the agreement which has been reached between that union and its employer? Why is it that is the case under the Labour Relations Act of Ontario, but here, where the OMA is acting as the sole negotiator for the doctors of Ontario, the loophole is left in the agreement in order to allow doctors who opt out to double-bill patients, including some patients who simply can't afford it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member, in phrasing his question, has answered it. The key thing is they are not employees. We're talking about a health insurance plan, we're not talking about a master-servant or employer-employee relationship. The doctors do not work for the government of Ontario, they work for the people of Ontario as professionals.

Mr. Conway: I understood the honourable Minister of Health to indicate to the member for Ottawa Centre that this is not a binding negotiation; and indeed the parties, the OMA in particular, will not be bound to the negotiations that are concluded. If that is what he said to the leader of the New Democratic Party, can he indicate what he thinks so unique about having a fact finder? Of what possible import are the facts that are likely to be found if, indeed, they are not to weigh in a binding way upon the parties involved?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, and it's no surprise to the members of the House, there is a great deal of concern among members of the profession that the way the previous system worked was in some way stacked against the profession. We can recognize the fact that for three years we were bound by the terms of the Anti-Inflation Board, and in fact could negotiate nothing more than the distribution of an average maximum increase. Prior to the introduction of the AIB, there was one year when there was no increase in the schedule.

To take account of the fact there is concern about the process, a concern that the process be a fair one, and be seen to be fair in exploring all of the arguments advanced by organized medicine on behalf of their members, we have developed that aspect of the agreement to provide that the chairman, at the request of either party, may during a three-week period assume the function of a fact finder and present to the negotiating committee his or her conclusions based on that in-depth investigation, which report can, at the initiation of either of the parties, eventually be made public.

I think that is rather unique, not only unique to Ontario, but as far as I know it's unique in Canada.

Mr. Warner: Since the government now appears to be relenting on its attack on the health-care system, does the minister intend, through this new procedure, to seriously put forward the suggestion, which was unanimously agreed to by the select committee on health-care costs in its procedure, to negotiate with the doctors?

Since the minister didn't actively take part in the debate, perhaps I could refresh his memory. That commitment agreed to by the select committee was a multi-year contract based on a fee consistent with the utilization rate in the province of Ontario. Will he now seriously put forward that proposal which had been agreed to by the Conservative members, as well as ourselves and the Liberals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't recall the multi-year aspect to it, I could be wrong, of course, but I don't recall that was in that recommendation.

Mr. Warner: It was for more than one year.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I do recall the concern being expressed by the committee about the question of utilization. In fact, when I appeared at the committee on September 15, 1978, we discussed this question of utilization, not just about physicians' services but any number of extraneous services pertaining to medicine. I expect the whole question of utilization is one which will continue to occupy a great deal of our time in the discussions between organized medicine and the government.

As the member knows, I have expressed some concerns about that particular system as to whether it does provide an incentive to remove unnecessary utilization. The whole question of utilization is one which is occupying a great deal of our time and will continue to do so, I'm sure.

Mr. Conway: Could the minister tell us what we are to do about the implication which would leave us with the impression there really are two parties involved, the government and the Ontario Medical Association, which we know to be inaccurate inasmuch as there are really three groups? There is the opted-in physician and the opted-out physician. What can be done? What does the minister suggest might be done to deal with this anomalous condition which has people coming to a negotiating table who have, from the very beginning, repudiated the very thing he's trying to negotiate? Has he given any consideration to treating those physicians who have in significant majority numbers accepted OHIP at the negotiating table, in a different way from those who have from the very beginning repudiated this system for all the things they have alleged?

Mr. Nixon: Like the Minister of Education.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, and I might ask the honourable member to tell me what is the position of his party? I have before me a speech given yesterday by the honourable Leader of the Opposition and a press clipping from today that suggests one position, and I have a press release from around one o'clock that suggests another position. I don't know where his party stands.

Mr. Warner: That's normal.

Mr. Martel: What else is new?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The three documents leave one wondering just what is going on.

Mr. Breithaupt: You can ask us questions.

Mr. Martel: There will be a third position this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It bears repeating: I really don't anticipate that is going to happen, I really don't; not in my lifetime.

Mr. Martel: There will be a third position in an hour.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It bears pointing out that in the last four months we have had a stabilization in the question of opting out. As I indicated many months ago, I anticipated that with the expiration of the Anti-Inflation Board we would see evidence of an increase in the numbers and the percentage of physicians opted-out as the fiscal year ends came up after the effective date of April 14, 1978.

Mr. S. Smith: There was a 40 per cent difference between OHIP and OMA.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am pleased to say that has stabilized over the last four months. In fact, at the end of April the percentage and the number of physicians opted-out declined for the first time in a year and a half. I am optimistic, as I have said, that this process and the result of this process will have a very positive effect on that question.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, can the minister explain why, when the Ministry of Health sat down with the doctors in order to establish this bargaining framework, it was not the number one priority of this government to ensure that before this negotiating agreement was set up the doctors would agree that every doctor in Ontario in fact would adhere to the fee schedule decided by this new negotiating framework? In other words, why wasn't it the minister's priority to ensure that no one in this province should pay extra to get insured medical services in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is my objective to preserve the rights of the people and the rights of the profession.

Mr. Martel: The right to pay.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Ontario Medical Association has no more right than I have under the present law to force every doctor to opt into the plan.

Mr. Martel: You're so weak-kneed.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have another question to the Minister of Health, arising out of the report of the standing committee on social development, which was prepared yesterday after the committee's 12 days of inquiry into hospital cutbacks across the province. Is the minister prepared to accept the recommendation of that standing committee that there should be no further cutbacks in active-treatment hospital beds across the province until alternative facilities are available in the community, and is the minister prepared to accept that committee's recommendation there should be an appeal process to which hospitals can go in order to have a means of establishing the facts about cutbacks being imposed by the ministry?

Mr. Pope: It hasn't been filed yet.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am looking forward to the time—I had hoped it would be in this session but I am told it won't be until the fall session now—when we will have a chance to discuss the whole of the report. I understand my colleagues from this side of the House are going to file a dissenting report with respect to several items when the main body of the report is filed today.

Let me deal first of all with the question of the beds. I have said to the member on a number of occasions, and I believe this very strongly, that we in Ontario today, looking at the total range of beds, all the types of beds available to us, approximately 80,000, have approximately the right number of beds necessary to serve our needs in this province. However, one has to recognize the health needs of the province have changed. I am thinking particularly of the vastly lower birth rate in the province and the tremendous increase in the numbers and the percentage of the population who are aged.

Mr. McClellan: Just keep saying that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Therefore, the health needs of the province have changed.

Mr. Peterson: You are neither young nor fertile.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It was accepted time and time again by people appearing before the committee from hospitals, as well as from professional groups and from private sector consulting groups, that the resources have to be reordered from time to time to take account of those changes.

Mr. S. Smith: We need more hospitals, not fewer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In fact from time to time there will be more hospitals. If the Leader of the Opposition would like me to read into the record the list of new hospitals and additions to hospitals—

Mr. S. Smith: I said the elderly need more hospitals, not fewer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —replacements, new units, new services, that have been approved just in my time as minister, I would be glad to do it, but the Speaker would rule me out of order because it would take about half an hour.

Mr. S. Smith: You're making an argument for more beds.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll read it just as quickly as I used to before I took lessons.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Stuart, look at the information.

An hon. member: Twenty more beds in York North.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question of appeals.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll drive you to distraction.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Oh, no.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You would drive anyone, including me, to distraction.

Mr. Van Horne: I hope it is not a long trip, Bette.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is a much longer trip, Van Horne, for you.

Mr. Speaker: Ignore the interjections please.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: An appeal mechanism is now in place within the Ministry of Health which has worked very well this year and last. We have found throughout the years we are able, where needs are identified, justified and documented, to sort out problems. I have expressed concern to the committee and to certain of the media, and I will express concern here; I don't think this Legislature and this executive branch of this government can turn over, in effect, responsibility for $6 million a day in public expenditures to somebody external to the government. I think that would be an abrogation of the responsibilities of an elected parliament and an executive council.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the difficulties communities have had, such as Timmins and Wingham and Goderich, will the minister not agree to the creation of an independent and accessible appeal process to which communities and community hospitals can go and get a public review of the cutbacks being imposed by the ministry, rather than simply retaining an in-house, behind closed doors appeal process within the ministry, which is all that's available right now? Why won't the minister bring that appeal process out into the open where the findings can be made public and people can then judge whether or not the ministry is prepared to act accordingly?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have found that the findings are made public faster than you would expect any regulatory body to make them public. Every time we meet with these hospitals to work out their problems we do convey in writing the conclusion of our meetings and—

Mr. Warner: Then the public has to take you to court.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —those things are sometimes made public before the letter is even received.

Mr. Warner: It is the only way to get decent health care; they have to take you to court.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If members really want to pursue that line of reasoning, what they are talking about, to be fair to the public who are paying that $6 million bill per day, is that they want to set up a rate-setting commission such as they have in many of the United States, that could also cut budgets.

Mr. McClellan: There you go, you are being silly again.

Mr. Cassidy: We want your decisions to be subject to review.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: They are, right here.

Mr. Conway: My supplementary concerns recommendation 7 of that report. The evidence left with the committee seemed to indicate the small hospital sector in this province was being more particularly and more negatively affected by the restraint program. Can the minister give this House an assurance at this time that that recommendation, calling as it does for an indefinite extension of the 10-bed cushion, will in fact obtain? Can the minister assume that the small hospitals, so seriously and so negatively affected, can and will see that as at least one small ray of hope against a budget-cut program which in many cases threatens their very existence?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is being given very serious consideration. The work has already begun with such groups as the hospitals on the north shore. The member was good enough to organize a meeting four or five weeks ago with groups from the hospital at Palmerston and various other places around the province. It is my goal to ensure we develop a mechanism to agree with each hospital on the minimum size necessary for them to be financially viable and to meet the acute and chronic health-care needs in their communities.

Mr. Breagh: In particular reference to the recommendation for an appeals body, why is the ministry so afraid the public of Ontario will find out what actually is the situation with any given hospital board? Are you endorsing the course of action taken by Windsor Metropolitan General Hospital that a hospital board's only means of preparing their case publicly is to go before a court? Is that what the minister wants?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the matter of the court proceedings will be dealt with, I hope, within a matter of days. We will get back into that forum and argue it where it should be argued, namely before the supreme court.

Mr. Breagh: That's what you want, you want it there.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, we didn't bring the application. We didn't bring the application.

Ms. Gigantes: You're afraid.

Mr. Warner: You forced it because of your cruel cutbacks.

Mr. McClellan: Set up an appeal process.

Mr. Breagh: You like that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, but I can tell you do; you are almost salivating over it.

Mr. Warner: I will drool my way out of here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Regarding the matter of public information I would point out to you again that unlike the system embodied in your paper of last July, the board of every public hospital in this province is elected by the membership and accountable to the community in that area. What is more, through that board and through this minister and the ministry, any information on hospital budgets, the total amount and the distribution, can be obtained.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has the answer to two questions asked previously.

FLUORIDE POISONING

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, as requested on June 14, I am today tabling a report on fluoride levels in the Cornwall area. The report gives detailed information on levels of fluoride recorded at our monitoring stations in the area and describes our interaction with the federal government on this issue. It will be noted in the report that to date there are no indications of human health problems as a result of fluoride emissions. The government will continue to monitor the situation.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Since the methodology of the Department of Health and Welfare study is certainly suspect, since the International Joint Commission report emphasizes the study was only preliminary and since the reports from the chief of dental services of the US Branch of Indian Health Services says, "A definite problem exists with fluorosis among children from Cornwall Island," doesn't the minister think he should be ordering a further health study at once, since there is clear evidence there is a problem and previous Canadian studies were totally inadequate? Also, can the minister tell us why he has not yet got the American health report which the National Indian Brotherhood has had for some time?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would like to comment very briefly on fluorosis. I noticed that one portion of that report indicated that the officer of health suggested there was no evidence. The reason I think that is important is that normally excessive fluoride intake in the human body is early evidenced in the dental enamel of teeth. That he had not seen any such evidence is a strong indication the intake to the human body is well within normal limits.

As for receiving the other reports, we will continue to do as we have in the past, namely, try to obtain those reports. Since they are from the other side of the US-Ontario boundary we are having some difficulties, but in due course I am sure they will be here.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Has the ministry done any testing on either crop or livestock products to see if there are any signs of the fluoride substance in milk or any of the crops we consume?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The honourable member will notice when he reads all the information contained therein that we are asking the Ministry of Agriculture and Food to give us more expert advice on that particular aspect of it. However, I think the honourable member will also note there has been no indication to date of an excessive number—let me rephrase that: I think they are saying there is no evidence of an increased number of deaths due to fluorosis or the conditions of fluorosis in animals. In other words they feel that the animal health is okay. I am referring that to the Ministry of Agriculture and Food to get some more expert advice on that subject. That is covered in the report.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In response to questions raised earlier this month concerning a tender submitted to the Ministry of the Environment by Canadian Applied Technology, I am tabling today a detailed response which outlines fully the reasons the firm in question was unsuccessful in obtaining the Nanticoke contract.

Honourable members will note that the information is 20 pages long and contains the information requested by the company itself in a form of a letter addressed to it. The original letter was delivered to Canadian Applied Technology earlier today, and I have its written permission to table it in the House.

SALES TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Peterson: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. Why is the minister not prepared to grant an exemption under section 7 of the Retail Sales Tax Act to the Parent Participation Pre-school Association in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That is a matter that has been brought to my attention on several occasions. Power to grant that particular exemption is not in the act; it would require ministerial exemption.

Mr. Laughren: That's you.

Mr. S. Smith: That is who you are.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: At this point in time, I am not prepared to grant that. We have looked into the situation and we see no necessity for granting an exemption to the schools.

Mr. Peterson: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Simply because we do not see the need for it.

Mr. Peterson: In view of the fact a number of these schools involve a cross-section of people in the community who are volunteers, people working with their children who want to give them some kind of pre-school education; in view of the fact also that the total sum in lost revenue, last year for example would be about $14,000 or $15,000—a mere drop in the bucket for the minister, not even coffee money for some ministers, not even cigar money for the Premier, but of very great importance to the great number of volunteers working with the young people.

Mr. Roy: Cheapskate.

Mr. Laughren: Liberal restraint package.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I haven't had a cigar for a year and a half.

Mr. Peterson: Why won't the minister, out of the goodness of his heart, now consider that, because it is important to so many people and yet insignificant to him? I hope the minister will please consider that.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am not unsympathetic to the member's request, but he must remember there are many schools in the province. If we are going to go in that—

Mr. Peterson: You don't help any of these schools.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Would the member mind if I answer the question?

There are quite a few. If we are going to go in that direction, I would prefer it to be an amendment to the act rather than a ministerial exemption, because it would require a lot of bureaucracy to handle them all if we are going to go the other route.

Mr. S. Smith: First you said they didn't need it. Now you say we need an amendment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I didn't say we didn't need it.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would much prefer, if we are going to go in that direction, that it be an amendment to the act rather than by ministerial exemption; and I am prepared to consider that.

POLLUTION COMPLAINT

Mr. Isaacs: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment.

Does the minister recall a letter which he received from a Mr. Gerry Turner, which I am sending over to him, about industrial pollution being emitted from Sylco Wire Limited in Tillsonburg; and would the minister explain why he asked his special assistant, Mr. Blair Taylor, to find out whether Mr. Turner, the complainant, is "a Grit or an NDP"? Mr. Speaker, what has the complainant's politics got to do with cleaning up industrial pollution?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We are talking about somebody in my riding, aren't we? I think that is important to know. I may want to see him on occasion and I would want to deal with him. I want to know everything I can about every member of my constituency. I am always interested in my own constituency, of course.

I think the member will agree that matter was properly referred and had nothing to do with politics.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, the honourable member for Waterloo North.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Why don't you come to order? I distinctly looked at the honourable member for Wentworth. He didn't have a supplementary until I recognized the honourable member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether or not this new position, whether someone is a Liberal or a Grit, reflects another split in the cabinet; and whether the minister's colleagues agree with him that he should ask these questions in correspondence?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is not factually correct. I think it is great to have some fun, but there was absolutely no question whatsoever about the referral of that particular thing to the appropriate sources. It is my riding. Let me tell the member I don't have any problems looking after that riding to the very best of my ability. I won't backtrack one bit on that.

Mr. Isaacs: Is the minister pleased to learn I have spoken to his constituent, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Turner has informed me he voted for the minister in the last provincial election? Will the minister now assure us that instead of writing memoranda which talk about strident letters, trying to put down very valid comments about industrial pollution made by a resident of Tillsonburg, he will now deal properly with the complaint being raised and ensure Sylco Wire Limited is prevented from emitting industrial pollutants?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am really not surprised the gentleman voted for me, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Swart: I'll be surprised if he does next time.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: A little over 51 per cent also voted for me.

Mr. S. Smith: Talk about arrogance.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think there were some pretty strident remarks in that letter that weren't necessarily factually correct. We must assess it in that light and we are prepared to do so. The honourable member will find out, if I can say this to him—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It never ceases to amaze me how groups will insist that I recognize an honourable member so he can ask a supplementary question and then they act in such a way that they can't even put the question, let alone hear the answer. It boggles the mind.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can only agree with you, Mr. Speaker, particularly when it's a question of such great importance to consume the time of this House.

Mr. Martel: It depends on who is answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There were some very strident statements in that letter. I think the honourable member will find when he is here a little longer that he will receive a lot of letters and that he will not necessarily accept that all of the facts are as presented; he will learn it behooves a person to look at both sides of every issue. That's what I try to do on every occasion.

There were some misleading statements in that particular letter. I think therefore, I have a real need to find out as much about that particular concern—I'm not now talking about the person's politics—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I want to find out as much related to his concern as I possibly can, because the honourable member forgets that that industry is located in my riding. I did have discussions with the industry and I have taken action on it.

NEWMARKET COURTHOUSE

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Government Services. There are a lot of conflicting rumors going around about the opening date and the finishing date of the new courthouse and registry office in the region of York, particularly in the riding of York North and the great town of Newmarket. Could the minister enlighten us and the members of the House about the expected finishing date of the courthouse and when it will be ready for occupancy?

Mr. Foulds: I hope it is not like the Thundey Bay courthouse.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There is one difference. We really don't need a courthouse up in that area. The people are all the types of people who don't require a courthouse.

Mr. Foulds: Why are you building it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In Thunder Bay, the member suggests, they do.

Mr. Foulds: Are you slandering the people of Thunder Bay? Let that be on the record.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No; the member is suggesting that.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In responding to this question, the contract for this building was let about the middle of 1977.

Mr. S. Smith: It will be finished by 1990.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is an $11.6-million contract.

Mr. Makarchuk: In time for the next election.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The plan at the time the contract was let was that it should be opened in mid-winter, starting next January, approximately at that time. We have recently had some problems with some of the sub-contractors working on the mechanical trades in the building, this has held us up for a few weeks. The present plans are that the building will be completed in about 10-months' time, approximately at the end of April or May 1, 1980. We plan on accepting it at that time.

I would add that at this moment the building is almost 75 per cent completed.

MANAGEMENT STUDIES

Mr. J. Reed: I have a question of the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister know of, and/or has the minister seen two management studies that have recently been done on his ministry, one by Management Board and the other by management consultant, Peter Barnard Associates? Will he confirm that these reports indicate there is a "severe morale problem" in the ministry? The study sets out a number of reasons for the problem, which has resulted in the resignation of four senior members of his ministry last year?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen those, but obviously I will get my hands on them very shortly.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Upon seeing these reports, will the minister then agree to table them in the House?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, Mr. Speaker, not until I've seen them; and then maybe never.

WCB USE OF PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), could I ask the Premier a question? It is related to this business of private eyes following WCB claimants around.

Will the Premier comment on an event which happened at an adjudication hearing this Monday at which time Ellis Don Construction, of London, entered into evidence a document which indicated that two Pinkerton agents had followed a claimant in Sudbury for eight days? Does the minister not feel this is an infringement on privacy? What is he going to do to curtail these private eyes?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury knows just how cautious I am in offering opinions on matters where all the information isn't available to me.

Mr. Makarchuk: He was referring to the facts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member is quite right.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm doing my best to ignore the interjections.

Mr. Riddell: The Premier is familiar with the Ellis Don Company I trust?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not as familiar as the member is.

Mr. Speaker: Ignore all interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not as familiar as the member and some of his colleagues are, and the member knows full well what I mean.

I would say to the member for Sudbury I would be delighted to discuss this with the Minister of Labour, and he may have some observations for the member tomorrow morning.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, could the Premier comment on a boast by Mr. Piper, the personnel director at Ellis Don, wherein he said he himself acts as a private eye on occasion? Is it not illegal for him to be a private eye without a licence?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I've noticed some members of this Legislature operate as private eyes without licences.

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier.

Mr. Speaker: If I could get the Premier's attention, I would be happy.

Mr. Williams: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: In light of the statement made earlier this afternoon by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) with respect to the Vietnamese refugee situation, could the Premier indicate if it is his intention to convey to the federal government Ontario's willingness to accept its responsibilities with respect to the admission into Canada of the so-called boat-people?

Would the Premier agree that under these circumstances Canada's position should be to do the very most it can in so far as the level of immigration is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the member for Oriole that I believe I answered this question in part. My recollection was that I said the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), after some discussion, had communicated in reply to a telex from the new Minister of Immigration, that Ontario would be prepared to accept and support any increase of boat-people, as they have been described.

I think the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in his reply said we would be more than prepared to co-operate to provide what services we could. This was communicated, I believe, about six or seven days ago.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware of the report that the $10 million treatment system at the Love Canal site is not functioning properly and that there is grave danger that the chemicals therein contained are now leaching towards the Niagara River?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm not sure whether my staff is aware of that or not. I will certainly find out and let the member know. I haven't had that report, but that certainly doesn't mean staff hasn't. We will check and tell the member.

Mr. Kerrio: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Because there was some question about my source the last time I raised this issue, I would like to relate to the minister that this source is state documents from the Department of the Environment of the United States. I wonder if the minister would ask the people in the environment department of New York State to have closer liaison with his people in his ministry so we are immediately aware of these situations which seem to have existed since April?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have already asked for closer liaison with that department. I can repeat that request, if the member wishes, but I can tell him it has already been done. I am pleased that the member's source now is not Maclean's but a more official document.

Mr. Kerrio: Well, I found out Maclean's was one source too.

SPEECH PATHOLOGY SERVICES

Mr. Laughren: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware that when students in the Sudbury Board of Education require the services of a pathologist and apply to the Sudbury-Algomaa sanatorium for that service they are denied service because of budgetary restraints? If I could quote very briefly: "We will no longer be providing speech pathology services to school-age children. Referrals of school-age children who are presently on our waiting list will have to be removed."

When parents are then referred to the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, they are told by that hospital, "We have experienced substantial budgetary restriction in this hospital as well, and our waiting list is also several months long. It seems to me that we are looking at the consequence of continued budgetary restraints in the Ministry of Health, and unfortunately youngsters such as Deni have to bear the delay in the availability of professional services."

Is the minister aware that his continued budgetary restraints are not simply a political stance or an attempt to balance the budget, but that they are hurting people who are in desperate need of these kinds of services?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Obviously, that is not the intent at all. I will be glad to look into that situation. But I should say that in most areas of the province, of course, such services are provided by the boards of education, not by the children's centres or by sanatoriums.

Mr. Laughren: No, that's not true.

Mr. Swart: You don't know what you're talking about, Dennis.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Now I know where the "jerk" came from in the expression "knee-jerk."

Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge neither the board of education nor the sanatorium has written to the ministry to draw that situation to our attention. I will be glad to look into it and see if something can be done to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Laughren: By way of supplementary, is the minister aware that in this particular case—I will send the minister a copy of the correspondence involved—the person involved is six years old, in kindergarten and will not even be promoted to grade one because he is almost incomprehensible when he attempts to talk. There are no speech pathology services available in Sudbury, and he is being refused service in Toronto? What is the minister's advice to the Fraulin family for their six-year-old son Deni?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Unlike the honourable member, I don't draw the names of children or anybody else into the debate.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to have the information. Certainly, the intention is to maintain services that have been provided. I am not aware of what the range of alternatives is in that area. I do recall that last year we provided a grant to the sanatorium for a travelling psychiatrist to pick up some of their additional costs. Where a need is identified we will work with them.

SUGAR HAZARDS

Mr. McGuigan: My question is to the Minister of Health. I'm sorry that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is not here, but I would also ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) to note.

On June 13 a story in the Toronto Sun pointed out that some children's ready-to-eat breakfast cereals contain up to 48 per cent sugar. This was a situation I pointed out to the House on May 1, 1978. Does the minister agree that excess sugar consumption contributes to tooth decay and obesity, and, according to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), to cancer? Would he press the federal government to bring in legislation—

Mr. Bradley: Your friends.

Mr. McGuigan: —that would mandate the labelling of processed foods so we may know what ingredients we are feeding to our children and to ourselves?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That doesn't seem to be an unreasonable suggestion. I would point out to the member, as I did in the note I sent him the other day in the House, that he can't entirely protect people from themselves. I have never eaten these sugar-sweetened cereals, but I sure as heck put a lot of sugar on myself, and one can't protect people from that. But the reasonable suggestions about labelling are things we should draw to the attention of the Department of National Health and Welfare and I would be glad to do so.

Mr. McGuigan: I am surprised that the minister engages in such unhealthy eating habits after the series of television ads he presented to the public some months ago. But doesn't the minister recognize the difference between self-induced problems and problems induced by the fact that people do not know?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There is no question that reasonable standards for labelling and certainly for content, are quite necessary and we have very strict standards in Canada. All I am saying is that there is also the health promotional, the educational side of it, and one can't try to protect people entirely from themselves. That is an impossibility.

ARAB ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Samis: A question for the Premier: In view of the possible very serious effects on Ontario's economy by the recent actions of the Arab Monetary Fund and possible other actions, and in light of the widespread concern and dismay expressed this week by key spokesmen in the banking, financial, communications, housing and exporting communities, not to mention the Canadian Council of Churches, could the Premier inform the House what representation he has made to the Prime Minister on their behalf regarding his ill-timed and reckless announcement about moving Canada's embassy to Jerusalem, and could he tell us whether or not he believes such action at this time is in the best interests of the people of Ontario and their economy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I could ask the honourable member to read the question again. I didn't get it all.

Mr. Laughren: He can do it.

Mr. Samis: I will repeat the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I got the last part of it. This government and I have made no personal representations related to this rather sensitive matter. I recognize the difficulties inherent in this, and certainly I have had some communications, as have ministers, with respect to certain industries. I think it is something that has to be assessed very carefully. It is, without question, something of an emotional issue.

I would remind the honourable member, and I do this, I hope, with the understanding of what I am going to say next, that we passed legislation in this House that perhaps in some respects, but perhaps different in scale, was establishing a certain principle as well. I would say to the honourable member that at that time I received representations, not on the same scale or with the same, shall we say, perception in terms of the public or the international area, but in terms of our own industrial sector here. I am surprised that the New Democratic Party didn't receive the same representations. I happen to know that members of the Liberal Party in this Legislature did, as well.

Mr. Laughren: Are you saying you support the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And yet I want to remind members that as a matter of principle, we enacted that particular piece of legislation. If the New Democratic Party in this province is saying it is as a matter of principle they are debating this particular posture, not the practicalities of the problems we face at present, then they should have the intestinal fortitude to get up and say so.

Mr. McClellan: That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you have some intestinal fortitude? You demonstrate your lack of fortitude in that answer—chintzy.

Mr. Laughren: You're waffling.

FANSHAWE COLLEGE

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I seek your direction on this, but I do believe I have a point of privilege in that on Tuesday I asked a question of the Minister of Education about the settlement made between Fanshawe College and its president. I understood her reply to indicate rather clearly that if she got the information she would make it public, or at least make it available to me.

I understand that on the channel 10 television in London last night she is quoted as saying she was not sure this would happen now. I would, therefore, submit that if she is responsible for that statement on channel 10 last night, I was misled on Tuesday.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: If I might respond to that, I do not know what was said on channel 10 but I said very clearly to the newspaper reporter from London that I had communicated my concern about this already to the executive of the board of governors of that institution. I told them I would be following it up with a letter if I found, after perusal of my legislative capabilities, that I was permitted to do so. I have found that out. The letter is written and has gone to the board of governors asking specifically for the information which was requested by the honourable member. I committed myself to the publication of that information, or at least to the sharing of that information with the members of the House, when it's received.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the record. On Tuesday last I asked a question of the Minister of Health concerning the practice of what is known as "dormatizing beds," that is, not having in service hospital beds with might be covered under their allocations. I was not quite pleased with the minister's answer.

I'd like to read into the record testimony given by Dr. Paul Clarke out of an Ontario Medical Association brief before the social development committee: "If you hear a hospital is allocated for 400 beds, they sure are not running 400 beds. They can't afford 400 beds. It would be more like 360 or 375 or something like that." In a telephone conversation as late as this morning, the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto acknowledged that is a rather widespread practice in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I certainly wouldn't deny that. But the fact was that the member's question suggested the people won't talk to us about it, and that is ridiculous.

WRITTEN QUESTION

Mr. Speaker: I would like to seek the co-operation of one honourable member who filed an inquiry of the Ministry of the Environment without benefit of having signed it. It would help the table officers if the member would assist us in that regard.

MEMBERS' EXPENDITURES

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that today I have laid upon the table the individual members' expenditures for the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Peterson: Cassidy wins again. The only thing he's ever won.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) has given notice that he is dissatisfied with the answer to his question by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) on spraying for spruce budworms. This matter will be taken care of at 10:30 tonight.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

Mr. Speaker: I would beg the indulgence of all honourable members to bear with me while we carry on the time-honoured ritual of reading into the record the names and the readings of the pages who have served us with such distinction over the past few weeks.

Mr. Nixon: Let's turn the TV lights on them.

Mr. Speaker: They are as follows: Michael Braby of Frontenac-Addington; James Darling of Peterborough; Ian Dickison of Quinte; Claudine Duras of St. David; Roderick Flynn of Renfrew North; Marcel Forget of Welland-Thorold; Sean Gabbidon of Yorkview; Janis Gibson of Perth; Caryn Hallam of Don Mills; Georgina Jani of St. George; Stephen Johnson of York West; Sylvie Lamoureux of Oriole; Lynne McIntyre of Elgin; Lynda Simpson of Humber; Allison Smith of Brampton; Craig Stubbs of Dufferin-Simcoe; Luba Szkambara of High Park-Swansae; Sharon Tenbergen of Oxford; Dawn Tunnicliffe of Leeds; Geoffrey Turner of Frontenac-Addington; Robert Watson of Grey, and David Wighton of Scarborough North.

Will you thank them for their services?

Applause.

REPORTS

FUNERAL SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell presented the annual report for the calendar year 1978 of the Board of Funeral Services and of the Funeral Services Review Board.

ONTARIO NORTHLAND TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

Hon. Mr. Bernier presented the 78th annual report of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission for the year ending December 31, 1978.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee presented a report and moved its adoption.

Mr. Breagh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, included in the report of the standing committee on social development is an Appendix I containing dissenting opinions. I have no objection to preparing, typing and circulating this kind of unmitigated pap, but I wish the members of the committee who wish to say this would have the intestinal fortitude to sign the thing.

Mr. Peterson: Take out his appendix and charge him.

Mr. Speaker: According to the standing order, the report itself is the majority opinion of the committee. It is within the discretion of the committee to allow members to append a dissension from that report, but it is not to be construed as a portion of the report.

Mr. Breaugh: Just speaking to the point of order, I have no objection to its being there. I am simply requesting that members who wish to put in a dissenting opinion and exercise their rights under the standing order have the intestinal fortitude to sign that opinion.

Mr. Speaker: That is a question for the committee.

On motion by Mr. Gaunt, the debate was adjourned.

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. McCaffrey from the standing general government committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa.

Report adopted.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Villeneuve from the standing resources development committee presented an interim report and moved its adoption.

On motion by Mr. Villeneuve, the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: I wish chairmen would give some indication of how they want these reports disposed of, rather than leaving it to the discretion of the chair. It does cause a great deal of difficulty.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

Report adopted.

STANDING STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Williams from the standing statutory instruments committee presented the committee's first report.

Mr. Williams: Before moving adoption of the report, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief comments with regard thereto.

It has been my privilege to act as chairman of the standing statutory instruments committee for several sessions. As you may recall, sir, the first substantive report of the statutory instruments committee was presented in June 1968 and at that time the committee established a set of guidelines for the making of regulations as a major consideration and recommendation. As a result of that first report in 1968, these guidelines were established and the role of the committee and the matter of regulations and exemptions thereunder was considerably clarified. The report at that time was able to point out what some of the difficulties were with regard to the secondary legislation, commonly known as regulations. That initial substantive report did single out at the same time a number of specific statutes that were particularly noted for offending some of the guidelines established at that time.

The initial report indicated also that the committee was, in its ongoing work, studying the means by which other jurisdictions handled regulations. Subsequently, a second report was tabled by the committee in December 1968, and in so doing it was reported that the committee had investigated and consulted with representatives from the province of Manitoba as well as with our federal counterparts, the statutory regulations committee equivalent in Ottawa. It was from those two sources that we learned a great deal about how regulations are handled in other provincial jurisdictions as well as at the federal level.

We pointed out in the first report, as well as in that second report, that one of the major considerations of the statutory instruments committee was to undertake a thorough vetting of the existing regulations, a matter which had not been given serious attention for a number of years. Through the good offices of Lachlan MacTavish, QC, who acts as counsel to the committee, I am happy to report today that the vetting of regulations has now been made current as indicated by the report I am tabling today.

The other feature of the report that is being tabled today is that the number of statutes that has been specifically singled out in earlier reports were dealt with and have been dealt with specifically in this first report of this session. I think it is important that members of the House avail themselves of the opportunity of considering the current report, which deals specifically with a number of statutes. I will simply cite the statutes to you, Mr. Speaker, namely, the Planning Act, which was found to be—

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the honourable member that this is the day for private members' balloted items.

Mr. Williams: Yes; another two minutes, Mr. Speaker, and I will have concluded my remarks.

The Planning Act is the major piece of legislation to which the committee addressed itself in trying to find a more appropriate means of handling regulations. It has been pointed out too that the Parkway Belt Planning and Development Act, the Registry Act, the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act and the Highway Traffic Act, as well as the Environmental Assessment Act, all could be improved upon as far as the means by which regulations are handled under those particular statutes is concerned. It is these statutes that are cited in the report tabled today. I hope that remedial action will be taken with regard thereto as suggested by the committee.

[3:30]

The major problem that must be addressed is an immediate one. It is pointed out in the report. The dicennial amendment of the regulations is in process and if significant changes are to be made in the regulatory process as it relates to any specific bill it must be attended to in the very immediate future.

Mr. Speaker, I again wish to thank counsel, Mr. MacTavish, and the clerk of the committee, Mr. Forsyth, for their dedicated efforts in assisting the committee in its work.

On motion by Mr. Williams, the debate was adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

RESIDENTIAL PREMISES RENT REVIEW AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Drea, moved first reading of Bill 142, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975 (Second Session).

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, the bill postpones the repeal of the act for two months, from September 30, 1979, to November 30, 1979. The continuation of the act for certain specified purposes is correspondingly extended.

ELECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. R. F. Johnston moved first reading of Bill 143, An Act to amend the Election Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to standardize the hours of polling for elections to the Legislature. Section 1 of this bill amends the Election Act to ensure that the general hours of polling extend between 9 a.m. and 8 p.m. of the same day. When Daylight Saving Time is in effect at the time the election is held, the bill requires that any time reference in the Election Act be interpreted as referring to Daylight Saving Time.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the interim answers to questions 249 and 257 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

Mr. Ramsay moved resolution 20:

That in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the reduction of the writ period for provincial general elections and by-elections to a length of 30 days.

Mr. Ramsay: I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, to have the opportunity to explain my rationale in presenting this motion, as well as arguments I think pertinent to its support.

At present, if an election is called in the months from May to October inclusive, the election period is between 74 and 37 days long. If an election is called in the months from November to April, the election period is between 77 and 44 days long. I recently contested a by-election in the months from November to April; the time between the issuing of the writ and the election covered 44 days.

The recent federal election also illustrated to us all what came to be in most eyes a long drawn-out ordeal for anyone remotely involved, as well as those who are not only merely observers but potential voters. In fact, between the time the federal election was called and the actual day of balloting, the province of British Columbia, as well as the British Isles, called and completed their elections. Another recent example of a very short election period, actually less than 30 days, would be Newfoundland.

Gone are the days when leaders had to stomp the province or the country in railroad cars or other conveyances making whistle stops. We are in an age of jet travel and the electronic media and I submit it is time we changed our election practices to bring them into the 20th century as well.

Let me briefly outline some of the advantages of a shorter writ period. Number one; it would broaden the democratic base by allowing less expensive elections. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, it can become a drain on the candidates and many spend years attempting to write off their expenses. Despite the more progressive legislation of later years, which has put needed restraints on spending and has provided a measure of financial assistance to candidates, there is the overall expense to the taxpayer to be considered. Isn't this an excellent opportunity to practise the restraints we seem to be constantly advocating these days in government?

Number two; a shorter writ period would tend to compress and crystallize the issues, thus enhancing public appreciation of the party platform. If a candidate cannot decide on a platform and have a clear appreciation of the issues by nomination day, then I suggest he will be a poor candidate.

The public is bombarded by rhetoric and printed material and usually by election day is more confused than when the election is called. A shorter time period would obviously assist in this respect.

These items are not necessarily in order of importance, but number three is one I consider extremely important. How can we justify the absence of elected representatives in the seat of government for a period ranging from 37 days provincially to up to 60 days federally? The shorter writ period of 30 days would facilitate an early return to the business of government which would be a most positive move.

Number four, a shorter writ period would reduce to a minimum the counterproductive aspect of campaigns wherein voters have become saturated by campaign news and are turned off by election day. As one who has worked in the media for some 25 years, I have been deeply involved with elections at the municipal, provincial and federal levels and can speak with authority when I state voters do become turned off by a seemingly never-ending avalanche of campaign material on their doorsteps, workers knocking at their doors, candidates accosting them in shopping centres, television and radio announcements blaring at them all day, and newspaper supplements crammed with election ads.

To those members who represent large urban ridings, this perhaps is not a factor, but in the smaller communities the use of television and radio and newspaper advertising is quite popular because of the lower cost and less possibility of fragmentation of audience. Campaigns may be a bonanza in revenue for newspapers, radio, television and the local printer, but I submit it becomes an irritant to the viewer, listener and reader.

This brings me to my point that we should recognize the essential change in campaign practices and performances that has occurred with the advent of electronic media. The leaders of the respective parties can't even discuss the weather without their comments being reported or recorded during an election campaign. Again, in smaller markets, the information media, usually quite responsibly but diligently, probe for every possible tidbit of legitimate election news and it, in turn, finds its way into the newspapers or on television and radio.

Potential voters, and that includes the lukewarm ones, cannot suggest that they have had no opportunity to make themselves completely familiar with the candidates, the parties and the issues because of the scope and strength of information media in general and, in particular, the outstanding growth of the electronic media.

I would anticipate one particular criticism of this resolution and that is the ability properly to conduct the enumeration process in a shorter writ period of 30 days. I would advise that I have consulted with Mr. Roderick Lewis, the chief election officer who, with his staff, has been conducting intensive meetings to see if a shorter writ period can be accommodated. His findings would indicate that with a new approach to printing lists and other fine tuning of the enumeration process, a shorter writ period may be possible.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the light of everything I have said, I have no hesitation both in submitting this resolution to the House and asking the honourable members for its support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable member wish to reserve any of the remaining time?

Mr. Ramsay: Yes, I would, Mr. Speaker. I won't require much time but I would like the opportunity at the end for one or two remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Five minutes?

Mr. Ramsay: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Bradley: The member for Sault Ste. Marie is to be congratulated for bringing this matter before the Legislature since it is one that has been discussed in public for some time. We commend him on that particular initiative. He finished somewhat earlier than I anticipated so I'll have to collect my notes together on my desk here, Mr. Speaker, and deal with some of the problems that I see with the resolution.

I think the idea really originated from the last federal campaign which seemed to go on almost endlessly. If we take the federal campaign into consideration we would recognize that there was a good deal of question over whether or not an election would be held last year, this year, the fall or the spring, the summer or the winter. This seemed to make the campaign go on much longer than indeed it did.

However, I think most of us in this House would agree that the 57-day minimum—I believe it's 57 days federally—is a very long period and is probably not essential in that jurisdiction. I would like to look at some of the problems that would come about if this resolution resulted in legislation relating to the provincial government.

The first aspect we have to look at is the election machinery itself. I think we recognize that a basic problem would result from the idea of a permanent voters list for an election and things of that nature. Yet, a permanent voters list is the only way of getting around this problem as I see it to bring forth legislation for what the member for Sault Ste. Marie is advocating.

What we have in the province of Ontario under the British parliamentary system, particularly with minority government, is a situation where an election can be called on very short notice. For instance, if the government were to be defeated tomorrow on a major bill in the House, the government would then be in a position of probably regarding that as a question of confidence and we would have an election rather quickly. This would certainly leave those who are involved with the election machinery process in very dire straits if only 30 days were available for the entire process. It would also leave political parties in a very difficult situation in terms of rounding up candidates, particularly those who were new to the political process, and putting their machinery into effect.

Those who have been involved in elections, both in the back room and the front room, so to speak, know that the returning officers, first of all, have to find accommodation when the writ is issued. They have to be able to rent some kind of accommodation, be it an office or a house of some kind. They have to arrange for such things as telephones, furniture and supplies and so on, just as the political parties have to do, although not with the same degree of urgency.

We recognize that people who belong to political parties are contacted by the returning officer in a particular constituency and told to arrange for enumerators. It is often difficult to get these enumerators lined up ahead of time, particularly when an election is precipitated by a defeat in the House or on the initiative of the Premier, if he somehow feels that an election is justified in circumstances other than what we would probably consider to be the normal four years.

We also know that the enumerators must be trained to do their job properly, that this takes some period of time and that they have to be out on the streets within a few days doing their job. We recognize that they must call on all households within a particular community; that they must call back twice to ensure that every voter has the opportunity to be on the list; that there must be a revision of the voters list; that the lists must be printed; that polling places in the constituency must be arranged—and this is often not as easy as would meet the eye, I would think, from those of us who know, having to rent campaign headquarters. We also have to have them arranging and instructing the poll clerks and DROs. So we are in a situation where it can be very difficult for those who carry out the actual process of the election to be able to do so in such a short period of time.

Looking at it from the point of view of political parties and political candidates, it certainly places the government in a very favourable position, because the government ordinarily knows when it is going to call an election, except, of course, upon defeat in a House. The government would naturally have the most incumbents in the Legislature, and we know that incumbents ordinarily have the advantage of being better known in their constituencies than the individual candidates who would be put forth by the opposition parties or those who would allow themselves to be candidates on an independent ticket. It really places those who are not incumbents in a very difficult position of attempting to compete with a government which usually has its propaganda machine oiled up and in order at all times, because it can use certain of its departments to put forth the policies of the party through the ministers. Even though we recognize that is not part of the election process, we know it does happen.

We also know that the parties have to get together to be able to print their materials. Those of us who think that door-knocking is important have to try to reach as many of our constituents as possible by knocking on doors. It is virtually impossible, within the 30-day period, for the candidate himself or herself to be able to do that. The other workers could be of great assistance, but the candidate himself could not get to every door. We see a real problem and a real advantage being given to the government if this resolution were to be implemented.

A study of this was done by the Manitoba Law Reform Commission some time ago; June 24, 1977, is when the Legislative Library received it. What many people say is that a permanent voters list is obviously the answer to this; that we could really speed up the machinery by doing that, even if we saw it as being desirable in terms of the political process, of the parties themselves and of the candidates themselves.

I quote from page three of their report: "The basic problem with the presentation of voters lists in a parliamentary democracy is that the timing of elections is not a regular and foreseeable process." This deals with the matter I brought to the House's attention in terms of the fact that we have elections in our parliamentary democracies sometimes when we do not even expect them.

There are other problems with the permanent voting list. One is the cost of a permanent voters list. On page seven of the report, it mentions: "Any method of permanent or continuous electoral rolls would be considerably more expensive. The rolls would also be less accurate, meaning thousands and probably hundreds of thousands of voting-age Canadians would be disenfranchised in every federal election." We can also, I think, apply that to provincial elections.

"Finally, there is an intangible: the element of compulsion. Do Canadians want to be required by law—as Britons and Australians are—to register as voters?" Do they want compulsory voting, as the Australians have? Some of that is implicit in moving to a permanent voters list.

Mr. Hamel, who is the chief electoral officer, estimates that between 97 and 98 per cent of eligible voters were enumerated in the 1972 election. This still left a huge number, between 250,000 and 300,000, off the list, but in comparison with other countries the omissions were minor. The United States, with 10 times the population, leaves more than 100 times as many voters unregistered—32 million of them in the 1972 presidential election. The Canadian system is much admired by electoral experts south of the border.

The British process continues until February 15 when the list is closed. The list is in force for any election occurring between February 16 and the following February 15. There is provision for deleting the names of those who die and for adding the names of those who come of age. But changes cannot be made for voters who move, marry or divorce. So a problem exists in that respect.

The British Columbia permanent or continuous voters list, I must note, was not even used in the 1972 provincial election, which suggests there were some problems with it.

Looking at the permanent voters list and the costs we are talking about, the Manitoba Law Reform Commission goes into this in some detail on page 13 of their report: "Before rushing into a new electoral system, it would be wise to consider the costs, financial and other. The financial costs would be staggering. At present it costs a little less than $11 million every four years in times of majority government for enumeration and courts of revision." I am talking federally there.

Mr. Hamel has a permanent staff of just 41 people, plus an army of temporary help at election time. To maintain a continuous voters list he would have to have at least one registration office with two permanent staff in each of the then 264 ridings and more staff in Ottawa—between 700 and 900 people all told. Based on the Australian experience, he put the cost of a continuous list at $1.50 per registered voter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Bradley: In conclusion, it would mean $80 million per election, instead of $20 million. For these reasons, I can oppose this resolution in conscience.

Mr. MacDonald: I am rather intrigued at the thrust behind this resolution. In the halls around Queen's Park in the last few days, as this was going to come up, I have heard it said—I don't know whether accurately or not—this was a kite-flying effort. I heard the government had really made up its mind and was just testing the waters with this private member's bill.

When I discover honourable members had the benefit of the chief electoral officer's examination of it and he has concluded that it can be done, and as soon as the debate begins the lights come on, the camera takes a shot of him, for what purpose time alone will tell. Maybe the member will be trying to drum up support across the whole province on Provincial Affairs.

An hon. member: A television personality.

Mr. MacDonald: I repeat, I am a little intrigued at the thrust back of this whole thing. But let me get down to the substance of it, since time is limited.

During the recent federal election campaign there was widespread comment about the undue length of the campaign. I don't know anybody—repeat anybody—who didn't share in that criticism. The campaign was too long. It was set up 100 years ago when it took a week to go from Halifax to Vancouver, and the proposition that you should have a campaign of that length today, with modern means of travel, when the Prime Minister or a party leader can be on both sides of the country in the same day, is obviously a bit of nonsense.

However, to extrapolate the unanimous feeling with regard to the undue length of the federal election campaign into the provincial scene, and to conclude we should reduce an election campaign of 37 days to 30, I suggest is a mistake. We are going to oppose this resolution. I am not going to repeat all the reasons the honourable member who has just spoken has laid out for the House. The problems involved in the returning officer being able to get an office, to get staffed up; the problem for each one of the committee rooms, of printing—all those matters take a measure of time. I suggest that 37 days is not too long to do all of that efficiently.

One thing that surprises me about the motion particularly is that it should come from northern Ontario. We may have difficulties in urban seats in the south, but in the northern ridings where there are great distances to cope with, the difficulties are even greater. To reduce the time of an election to 30 days will make it difficult, if not impossible, to carry on a campaign effectively. One wonders whether the honourable member living in the Sault is so isolated in an urban area, so isolated from the rest of the north, that he is not aware of these difficulties. I certainly have been hearing for quite some time about the difficulties of campaigning in the vast distances of the north and I shall leave further elaboration to my colleague from Thunder Bay, who can speak more knowledgeably and more familiarly on it.

The paramount objective of any election campaign should be to give every eligible voter an opportunity to vote. I am not going to go into all the details of the Election Act, but I suggest that the main criticism, as the sponsor of this resolution conceded in anticipating criticism, is going to be with regard to enumeration. I suggest that the whole House should be given an opportunity to have input in terms of revisions, not just what appears to have been some behind-the-scenes effort within the Conservative Party working with the chief electoral officer. If we are going to have revision, let the whole House pool information, pool their knowledge and pool their experience through an appropriate committee of the House.

Enumeration in this province has to be seriously re-examined. I don't accept what appears to be the thrust of the argument of the last speaker from the Liberal Party that a permanent voters list is the answer. Years ago, I took a look at the permanent voters list and, quite apart from the cost, which is very, very much greater in many jurisdictions where a permanent voters list is being used, if it is being updated every six months or every year and the election happens to be called in the fifth month or in the 11th month, that permanent voters list will be significantly out of date.

Mr. Bradley: That is why I spent five minutes panning the permanent voters list.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the member attacked it. Well, okay. If he were panning it for reasons apart from cost, we share that common ground. I do not think the permanent voters list is an answer. The answer lies in handling the procedure that we now have efficiently, which means that the returning officer, in accordance with the Election Act, has to get each party's nominations as to who is going to do the enumeration. I suggest in this jurisdiction, the government has a special obligation to see that the job is done well.

In most jurisdictions, enumeration is done under the direction of the returning officer, by the two top candidates in the last election. For years this government and this jurisdiction have given a special advantage to government members. Even if a Tory runs third or fourth or fifth, Tory supporters will be engaged in enumeration in the next election and whoever won the election or came in second is the second party brought into the picture.

That is not the case federally. It is not the case in most jurisdictions. It is the top two parties. But here, the Tories have a favoured position; they are in there no matter where they stood in the last election. Therefore, they have a special obligation, in addition to their responsibility for handling the whole setting up of the machinery, of making sure that enumeration is well done.

Without wanting to go into the details of it, if anybody is interested, I have a letter as to the kind of experience we had in my own riding, which I sent to the chief electoral officer after telephone calls last time and to which I have yet to receive a reply or clarification. I repeat, the thrust of my remarks is simply this: rather than trying to reduce the period from 37 days to 30 when we can't handle it as efficiently as we should so that every eligible voter has a chance to vote, I think we should concentrate on perfecting the system we have. It is potentially by far the best system, certainly superior to any alternative like a permanent voters list.

Let me cite just one other example, Mr. Speaker. It stipulates in the act, for example, that the advanced poll should be on the Saturday and Monday prior to election day. That surprised many people who happened to be going on holidays at election time. The Election Act gives an opportunity for advance polls for people who are in the armed forces; who are in transportation and, therefore, away from home; who have a medical certificate; or who are students away from home. But it doesn't give any right to a person who happens to be away on holidays.

Once again, if your objective is to give a right to vote to everybody who is entitled to a vote, there are changes which can be handled best, I suggest, within the time framework we have now. You're going to have added difficulties in doing it efficiently, and doing it well, if you reduce that time.

In the remaining moment or so that remains to me, Mr. Speaker, I just want to deal with one or two points raised in terms of argument on behalf of this reduction.

The honourable member who sponsored the resolution said, for example, it would cut down on costs. Cutting down on costs and so restricting an efficient handling otherwise is missing the point. If you want to cut down on costs, put some limitations on spending at election time. Don't leave the sky as the limit. This is what exists now and what this government has insisted on as we attempted to have amendments to the act in the last instance.

An argument I found particularly strange, if not specious, was that we wanted the election to be shorter so we could get back to business. I don't know whether he means the government to get back to business. The government goes on anyway while the election is on. As for members, sometimes there are literally three or four months before the government deigns to call the House back into session. So the business of getting back at the business of the province—namely, that we should be working more frequently here—is an interesting argument coming from the other side of the House. We've had difficulty getting them, quite apart from elections, to schedule the business of this House in an orderly fashion—for example, in keeping with the recommendations of the Camp commission—so we can handle the business of this House and not have to go through the madness, the war of attrition that characterizes the last week of the session before adjournment in summertime or particularly the fall.

I think this is, to put it bluntly, a rather ill thought through proposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. MacDonald: In the light of Ontario's experience, we shall oppose this resolution.

Mr. Kennedy: I'm somewhat disappointed that the NDP would oppose the resolution, which, of course, is something in principle and gives an indication as to whether we could reduce the election period. Certainly, no one wants it to be to the detriment of the voters or of the bringing forth of issues.

Perhaps, under certain conditions, if a bill were brought forward at some time they would take it into consideration to see if we could put through some accommodation of such legislation or an amendment to the Election Act, which would reduce the period of time for which everybody, especially the electors and the populace, would be grateful.

I can't see that there would be dire consequences, as expressed by the member for York South, were we to do this. We're speaking of seven days in the summer and I can't recollect when there has been a winter election, but then I'm not that old.

Mr. MacDonald: There was one in 1951.

Mr. Kennedy: I would say to the member for York South that I'm not that old. My memory doesn't go back to 1951.

Mr. MacDonald: You don't have to be that old, you just have to know your history.

Mr. Kennedy: Okay.

Mr. Foulds: You can read if you're literate.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague for bringing this forward. As the House perhaps knows, I had a similar resolution on the order paper but my ballot time is gone and I appreciate that he did bring forward what I think is a very timely measure.

From time to time, following elections, we discuss measures that could improve the electoral system and there have been resolutions now and then, but there has not, recently, been a change to the Election Act.

The resolution today is aimed directly at the issue of the writ period itself.

Mr. Foulds: It doesn't say that.

Mr. Kennedy: It's a timely issue because the federal election, as we all know, is just over and it seemed to go on for an interminable length of time.

I would have hoped we could have agreed to a mutually shortened campaign time. We have the 21-day advertising restriction now, but this does not restrict the election fervour which we seem to tire of eventually. Real relief can only occur if we shorten the writ period itself. Other jurisdictions seem to be able to do this and achieve it. I know some have permanent voters lists; others don't, or they have modifications of them. I, too, discussed this with the Clerk of the Legislature and the chief electoral officer and asked him, "What about this? Can it be achieved? Is it feasible? Is it reasonable under certain conditions and modifications?" Certainly, you can't just come down, wham, and say it will be 30 days without giving it some consideration.

The provinces perhaps could take a lead in reducing, removing unnecessary—and I emphasize unnecessary—time spent in the electoral processes.

Mr. Breugh: Yes, it's such an awkward inconvenience.

Mr. Kennedy: The key thing is that this should not and would not impede the democratic process.

Mr. Breugh: We understand why.

Mr. Kennedy: As my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie said, with modern communications, modern technology, better education—if you go back to 1867 and before—

Mr. Breugh: I thought you weren't that old.

Mr. Kennedy: —there were minimum numbers who achieved more than grade school education, let alone the ability to communicate, to reach government, to reach would-be parliamentarians, but now anything that comes out is immediately right across the country and into practically every home. We have to come into the 20th century and I think we can adapt.

Mr. Breugh: When did you come into it?

Mr. Kennedy: Great Britain has and that great socialist province of—

Mr. Breugh: Ontario?

Mr. Kennedy: —Saskatchewan. Ontario? It will be a long, long time before he is able to say that, I say to the member for Oshawa.

Mr. Breugh: Maybe. Maybe in November.

Mr. Kennedy: There wouldn't be an impediment to the electorate learning the issues, being able to consider and ponder and understand what is being placed before it and then decide on issues and vote as an informed electorate.

On the technical side, I am not all that familiar with this. I presume there would be economies. If you were into a permanent voters list, one may cancel the other. I don't know, it could very well be. It seems to me if you were running an office, the rent wouldn't be as much for 30 days as it would be for 37 days, but I don't know.

Mr. Breugh: More unemployment.

Mr. Kennedy: That is not the key to the whole issue though. The key is we can do it, and do it well, in a lesser period of time, so let's get on with it.

Mr. Breugh: You haven't been able to do it in a longer period of time.

Mr. Kennedy: There were some experiments done with respect to allowing to vote people who weren't on the electoral list. I see our new member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs). In that riding and in the other by-election in Scarborough West, the voters had opportunities—and I understand this was an experiment—to go to the returning officer and be sworn in, or whatever they did, to enable them to vote. I certainly support that.

Mr. Mancini: Well, you're the government. Change the law.

Mr. Kennedy: If we could incorporate, along with the other changes, the possibility of revision of the voters list right up to election day, I think the people eligible to vote would give us a big salute for that. Sometimes it seems 18-year-olds who are just coming on, and should be able to vote, find they are left off. There are some who are here on election day but were away for enumeration and during the revision periods.

The member for York South again mentioned the advance polls, the polling dates and so on; maybe this could be and should be incorporated. We should do everything possible to ensure that those who wish to vote and should vote have access to the polls. I do not see any great impediment to amending the legislation so that this can come to fruition.

In closing, we have before us a resolution which means reducing the time spent on elections and the interminable boredom on the part of voters. If legislators here do not like it, I am sure the voters out there will be very grateful. There will be no detriment to the communication of issues because of technology.

An editorial in the Star endorsed this on May 24, saying: "Shorter, sharper election campaigns would benefit Canadian democracy by concentrating debate and focusing public attention on the issues and policies involved." It goes on, but I will not quote further other than to say that it could be very appropriate reading for members.

The concept has a great deal of public and popular support, and it has been expressed here in the Legislature in the past. It is a concept that is practical and workable; therefore, I hope it will receive the support of this House. Again, I commend my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie for bringing forward a very timely issue. I only wish we were debating an amendment to the actual legislation so we could get this little piece of work done and out of the way to the benefit of the electorate of Ontario.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, we are now debating ballot item 23, brought in by the new member for—where's he from?

Mr. Blundy: Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Mancini: From Sault Ste. Marie; I am sorry.

I believe we have missed the fundamental point of what this ballot item would do to the election process. I, for one, cannot support the member for Sault Ste. Marie. I do not believe that 37 days is an excessive election campaign.

I represent a riding that is almost 42 miles long and approximately 20 miles wide. We have many large communities, with anywhere from 2,000 to 10,000 people, scattered about the riding. In no way could I, as the candidate for the Liberal Party or, I am sure, the candidates for the Conservative Party or the New Democratic Party do those people justice in a 30-day campaign. We can barely get around to see them in a 37-day campaign.

What some of the honourable members from the Conservative Party have forgotten to mention, and one of the most important philosophical points we should address ourselves to, is not the synthetic communication we have today. People can see us on television and hear us on the radio, but that is not what the people of Ontario want to see or hear; they want to see the candidates in person and they want to talk to the candidates.

Mr. Pope: Tell that to your leader.

Mr. Mancini: I will just ignore the crummy interjection.

The people want to see the person who wants to be their elected official. Usually, the only time in a four-year period the people of this province can really confront a candidate and have his undivided attention is in an election campaign. If all of us do not agree to that, I do not think we are being totally honest. At that time we, whether we want to or not, must give our undivided attention to that constituent who has confronted us about a concern or about a policy that any of our parties might endorse. The member for Sault Ste. Marie wants to take away seven days from these constituents who should have that right.

It is said we are being inundated by campaign advertising. All of us know we cannot advertise more than 21 days before polling day. That is not very long. In my riding we have five weekly newspapers. That means I get three ads in the whole election campaign. I do not think that is inundating my constituents and I do not think they consider it that way.

They say the leaders are on TV and the radio every night. What is wrong with that? What is wrong with the leaders of the three political parties who might in the Premier's chair after the election taking the time to explain explicitly to the people who will have to live under their policies what these policies are and what they mean to the future of Ontario? Why are we so afraid to confront the public? Why do we want to limit the time we have to explain what we stand for? This is a fundamental thing. I cannot understand limiting it.

We have dealt with these other frivolous issues as far as expenditure is concerned. As the member for York South said, if we are concerned about expenditure let's limit our expenditure. Then the Attorney General of this province (Mr. McMurtry) won't be able to spend as much as he did in the last election—or the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey), who spent piles of money.

We also expressed concern about the voters list. What the voters list had to do with this resolution, I will never be able to understand. Very clearly in front of us is the discussion of a ballot item which shortens the number of days we have in an election, and the member for Mississauga South spends half of his time speaking about the voters list, and whether we should have—

Mr. Kennedy: It wasn't half.

Mr. Mancini: A third of his time then—about whether we should have a permanent voters list. I want to remind the member for Mississauga South we had a debate in this Legislature about a permanent voters list some time ago. All members at that time had an opportunity to talk about a permanent voters list. As I recall, that resolution was voted down. So the House has already given its opinion on a permanent voters list.

I want to quote the Manitoba Law Reform Commission in May 1977. It had addressed itself to this concern, which some members opposite seem to be overly concerned about.

Just one more point, before I quote the Manitoba Law Reform Commission. In this parliamentary type system, the incumbents of this Legislature have an enormous advantage over people who want to unseat them. As a member I acknowledge that. Maybe some time in the future the election expenses commission or some other body might have to do some type of study on this.

I think we as incumbents have an enormous advantage over the people who want to get elected when they are running against us. All of us know all of the benefits we have as incumbents. This shortening of the election period I believe is just another way of making it more difficult for an incumbent to be defeated.

I personally am not concerned. If we want to give the people running against us all the advantages we have, it doesn't concern me a bit. I think they need those seven days and the people in all the ridings need those extra seven days to get to know them as best they can.

Going on to the law reform commission of Manitoba, in their report in 1977—Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have, sir?

Mr. Acting Speaker: About two minutes.

Mr. Mancini: I will quote sparingly, then. It says here—and this has been prepared by an august group—"By most accounts, some of which are noted in this paper, it is our politicians, elected professionals and active amateurs, who regard election periods as being too long. It is their thought that the electorate resent being involved in elections and the briefer and more infrequent elections the better." That is what they summarize as the thoughts of some of the elected people.

I am glad to say, Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those persons. I believe we have to give the electorate the benefit of the doubt, that they do want to meet political candidates, they do want to have time to speak with them and they do want to have time to hear what their policies are and what they will do for their constituents after they are sent to the House.

Mr. Bradley: You're not afraid of democracy.

Mr. Mancini: I am not afraid of democracy, no.

Mr. Foulds: I rise to oppose the resolution. I hope the member will understand, because I don't question his sincerity; however, I believe the resolution is misguided.

First of all, no one denies—none of the speakers today and I don't think anyone the member has talked to denies—that the federal election is too long, but let us not confuse the federal and provincial elections. We could fit two provincial elections into the time frame of a federal election, except for seven days.

The honourable member mentioned that BC has a short election period. BC has a 35-day election period; that is only two days shorter than Ontario's. So I think the argument vis-à-vis the federal election does not wash.

I would like to point out to members of the House the province of Ontario is as diverse regionally as is Canada itself and that 37 days is the minimum we should have to speak to the concerns of the various regions of Ontario, because the issues frankly do vary from region to region. The concerns and the issues in southwestern Ontario are substantially different from the concerns in eastern Ontario or northern Ontario or Metropolitan Toronto.

You need time to enunciate the issues about northern development and about urban growth in a metropolitan centre like Toronto. You need time for the leaders of the major parties and the minor parties to enunciate those across the province, so we know what northern development has to do with relation to growth in Metro Toronto and vice versa. We need to know the three leaders of the current major political parties are speaking consistently across the province.

The member who proposed the resolution suggested that with the advance of the electronic media we don't need to have as much personal campaigning, as much face-to-face campaigning, as we have had in the past. I have some very grave reservations about the direction of the electoral process in the western countries as a whole because in the electoral process we are beginning to use the electronic media, naturally enough, in the way every other person who wants to sell a product uses the electronic media. Whether you are selling a can of tomatoes or you are selling Bill Davis in the 1971 campaign, one of his key workers as quoted in Jonathan Manthorpe's book The Power and the Tories said it was the same thing.

Frankly, I think it is a mistake to reduce the complex issues that face a society, issues which should be the life and breath of an electoral campaign, to the 30-second or one-minute television clip or even to the 10-minute political talk clips. Let me remind the honourable member that the electronic media are one-way media. The electorate can't talk back to the box or the radio and the electorate should be able to talk back to the leaders of the parties and to the candidates during an election campaign.

I resent the implication that MASH is more important than electoral politics. I resent the implication that the American sitcom is more important than a serious discussion of politics and that people shouldn't hear William Davis because they might miss Archie Bunker.

Mr. Breough: Same thing.

Mr. Foulds: I'm not going to touch that one. I didn't say the same thing.

Two speakers have already said if the objective of this resolution is to limit campaign expenditure and limit the cost of elections to the public, then let's do that. Let's put a limit on how much can be spent in each riding. Let's put a limit on how much can be spent on the media. We can live with that on this side of the House, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker. That would make the rules a lot more equal and would save the taxpayers and the contributors to the political parties a fair amount of money.

People have already mentioned that this resolution and the shortening of the campaign would favour the incumbents. It would favour the incumbents of all parties, but especially the government incumbents.

I want to deal with one last point at some length. How much time do I have, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Four minutes.

Mr. Foulds: Four minutes. I want to deal for four minutes with what is my major concern.

I believe the honourable member has been suckered by his colleagues to present this resolution and he has betrayed the north.

Mr. Breough: The real reason comes out.

Mr. Foulds: Because, Mr. Speaker, the member comes from a northern riding. Using the electoral map here in front of me as my audio-visual aid, it could be seen that Sault Ste. Marie is probably the smallest riding in the north, closely followed in size by Sudbury.

It may be that one can cover Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury in a 30-day campaign, aside from the problems of enumeration and so on. But I ask the honourable member to consider how one covers a riding such as Lake Nipigon, which the map doesn't even complete, and how one can cover Kenora and even Algoma, which is next door to the honourable member's riding, adequately in 30 days.

I suggest one can't. I suggest that not only the incumbent, but people in opposition to the incumbent, would have terrible difficulty making contact with a bare majority of voters and the media simply doesn't reach them. They don't have television in Winisk; they don't have television in those northern communities. In the ridings of Kenora and Rainy River the major part of their television, radio and newspapers come from the western provinces. One simply can't communicate with them.

As candidates in an election, we should be willing to face the electorate. We should be willing to face them for 37 days and when we have a riding of 114,000 square miles like Lake Nipigon, we should allow those people the contact they deserve with their candidates. We should not try to circumscribe that and cut it short. We should not say to them that their candidates don't have the time to get up to those small, important northern communities because they are a part of Ontario too. They really are part of Ontario and may very well be the lifeblood of this province, not the urban centre here in Metropolitan Toronto.

I have a relatively small northern riding. My riding is as large as that of the member who just spoke—20 miles by 40 miles. That's a small northern riding, and I can barely cover it in 30 days because most of it is in a large urban centre, but I have small communities I would like time to visit and I would like my political opponents to have time to visit.

Interjection.

Mr. Foulds: No, Mr. Speaker, now the member mentions that, this resolution favours the wealthy party; it favours the wealthy candidate, because my Conservative opponent managed to spend $42,000 in a losing campaign. They spent three times as much on the media and everywhere else than our party spent in the campaign.

That comment by the member for Algoma-Manitoulin really shows—and the interjections of the government House leader—what the government is up to with their kite-flying expeditions. Remember the government House leader actually seconded it, even though he wasn't aware he was going to.

Mr. Gregory: On a point of privilege: The honourable member well knows I am not the government House leader. I would ask he withdraw that remark.

Mr. Foulds: I certainly withdraw the remark about the government House leader. I attribute it to the chief government whip. Have I got it right now?

Mr. Kennedy: No.

Mr. Foulds: I think the government is deliberately trying to curtail the rights of the electorate to contact their candidates and of the candidate to contact the electorate. For that reason, I oppose it; I oppose it in principle. I oppose it particularly as a northerner because the resolution discriminates particularly against northern ridings.

Mr. Cureatz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Might I say I'm very pleased to participate in this debate.

I have a few opening remarks. The first is I found the comments made by the member for Port Arthur very interesting and actually I'm a little sympathetic with him. I think he is right when he made reference to the news media and to the aims of the western societies in using television. I don't think we really fully appreciate yet the kinds of contact made in using that kind of advertising in, for instance, the political field. I think we're only becoming aware of the kinds of problems we're having in advertising in general, be it radio or television. I think that's a very important point. That's an issue that would have to be studied to a further degree before we think of reducing the time frame to the 30-day period.

I'm also sympathetic in regard to visiting areas. I have a very unusual riding. I'm involved with the city of Oshawa and a large rural area, and I'm continually on the road meeting people, but as a politician I feel that's what our job is all about. We've got to meet the people.

It's one thing to express our views and concerns in the press or on television, but it's another thing to get out and meet people. Quite often, people are not overly concerned about issues, but they want to know who their representative is, who their man at Queen's Park is, so they can relate to him and feel confident they have a representative who attempts to try to reflect their concerns.

Let me touch base on a few other of my concerns. I think it would be appropriate in rising to participate in this debate to centre my remarks on possible changes to the system by which we enumerate the electorate in this province. This is because the largest factor contributing to the evolution of our present writ period is the time required to collect and process a list of voters' names. No doubt the means by which voters lists are prepared has changed through the course of time, and as a result the current writ period could be reviewed on that basis.

However, there are one or two difficulties that might become apparent in the proposal of the 30-day period which I should like to mention. I don't necessarily think there are insurmountable difficulties, but since our present system of running elections is a smooth one and by and large quite a successful one, I think any changes we make must be carefully considered indeed. Firstly, under a 30-day writ period, enumeration as at present practised would of necessity have to be carried out almost immediately. The names of enumerators would have to be submitted almost on the day of the writ issue and training promptly begun. As I said, this would not be an impossible task, provided everyone was well organized in advance.

Mr. Bradley: Are you for or against, Sam?

Mr. Cureatz: Secondly, I wonder how this shortened period will affect revision of the voters list. I understand from recent trials in provincial by-elections that revision can, with a certain amount of ease, be carried on right up to the day prior to polling day. Presently the revision period extends from the 17th day to the 12th day prior to polling day. If revision were going to be successful under the 30-day proposal, I think a suitable period of time would have to be set aside as breathing space between the printing of the voters list and the beginning of the advertised revision days.

There is a possibility that under a condensed election calendar, lists would be distributed but not circulated among the electorate fast enough to take advantage of revision days. Mr. Speaker, I am attempting merely to illustrate that a 30-day writ period is likely the shortest space of time Ontario could have in order to run an operational, effective election. A 30-day election calendar would be very tightly scheduled.

Other provinces do have shorter than 30-day unit periods. Newfoundland has a 21-day election, and in Prince Edward Island an election can be as short as 26 days. Alberta and Quebec each have 28-day periods. It is interesting, however, none of these provinces has a discontinuous voters list. Each practises either some form of continuing electoral roll or discretionary electoral revision during election year.

Saskatchewan has a writ period which runs anywhere from 28 to 34 days. Like Ontario, they have enumeration and revision at each election time. But unlike us, Saskatchewan's population is largely rural and considerably less dense. Enumeration is not nearly as complex an affair in that province.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cureatz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I merely conclude that on balance I will support this resolution proposed by my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Bradley: You are a good party man, Sam. They'll remember you.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Sault Ste. Marie for five minutes.

Mr. Ramsay: I will just make a few comments to sum up. Referring first to the remarks made by the member for St. Catharines, I agree completely with him in respect to voters lists. I am not advocating the use of a voters list at all. I believe in the enumeration system.

Mr. Foulds: The Tories don't want a list at all.

Mr. Ramsay: A permanent voters list is what I am referring to. I am a little disappointed to see that the member for York South isn't in the House. I wanted to respond to one of his comments. I think he implied this was a trial balloon and that the motivation had come from the government to test it in this respect.

Mr. Bradley: Who would ever believe that?

Mr. Ramsay: I appreciate that the member doesn't know me too well, but I certainly have no hesitation in indicating that there was no conversation with any of the party leaders in drafting this proposal and coming up with the resolution. In fact, once I indicated what the resolution was going to be about, several members of this caucus indicated they could not support it.

Mr. Bradley: Are they going to block it?

Mr. Breaugh: Is the pope Polish?

Mr. Ramsay: I just wanted to make that point.

Mr. Kerrio: We don't do things like that.

Mr. Ramsay: I don't agree too often with the member for Port Arthur, but he does make two excellent points. One of them caused me a fair amount of soul-searching before I prepared my remarks, and that was the size of some of the ridings in the province. I realize that is a problem in a few of them.

I also agree with another point he made. I thought I had made the same point, but he indicated that I did not. I am concerned about the fact that television is used too much. I say that as a person associated with the media. I wholeheartedly agree that we should have as much face-to-face campaigning as possible. I would be horrified if I thought we were at the stage where we were running campaigns through television to try to reach people. I have always been frightened about the power of television, particularly so when it comes to election time.

Mr. Bradley: Keep on growing the way you've been going.

Mr. Ramsay: The only other point I would make is that it was suggested that it takes a while to gear-up campaigns, that if a snap election is called it is not always possible to get things going and that the advantage is to the government. I would suggest that the New Democratic Party have given us all an excellent example over the years of being prepared during elections. I feel they have made great strides in this respect and I just can't understand their logic in suggesting that this would be a deterrent. I would think if anything they might have an advantage when it comes to a snap election because usually they are better prepared than the Conservative and Liberal Parties.

With those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I would again ask for the support of the House in this resolution that reads that, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the reduction of the writ period for provincial general elections and by-elections to a length of 30 days.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Ruston moved resolution 21:

That in the opinion of this House the government of Ontario should initiate serious negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association to ensure that Ontario doctors, in particular general practitioners, are compensated fairly in comparison with doctors in other North American jurisdictions, and that once such a compensation scheme is decided upon, those doctors who feel it is inadequate and who opt out of OHIP be obligated to opt out completely. And furthermore, that the government of Ontario review the whole field of institutional health care to ensure that adequate personnel and adequate beds—active treatment, chronic care and nursing home—are available to care for the needs of all the patients of Ontario.

Mr. Ruston: I recall the first resolution I presented to this Legislature back in June 1970, concerning tax rebates on agricultural land. At that time, although resolutions or bills were debated for one hour, there was no vote taken on them. I was pleased then to have my resolution adopted by the government and within six months the farm tax rebate system was borne. I am not expecting quite as good a result from this one, but, however, one always has hope in politics. Of course, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) today has sent over to me some new system he has in negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association, so we see some hope already.

I suppose there has been some confusion over the last few years with regard to how the medicare system works and to the medical profession. Perhaps first I could put on the record certain interpretations of coverage and so forth:

An opted-in doctor bills OHIP and accepts the OHIP benefits as payment in full.

An opted-out doctor bills his patients, who are reimbursed by OHIP to the amount of the OHIP benefit. The patient is responsible for anything above this. However, the doctor must depend on the patient to pay for all of the services rendered to him by the doctor, which in some cases could mean outstanding accounts at the doctors' offices. I have heard of opted-out doctors who find that up to 15 per cent of their accounts are very difficult to collect, if they can be collected at all.

I recall my family doctor of many years ago telling me he had had enough money outstanding in his accounts that he could have retired at the age of 50, but he could not collect the money. He was very pleased when Windsor Medical Services was formed and guaranteed payment up to 90 per cent of the medical association fee schedule. Windsor Medical Services payments varied for each year, depending on funds available. At one time I believe the payments did go as low as 60 per cent of the medical association fee schedule, but this was increased when new monthly rates were set.

I believe very strongly that medicare, which includes doctors, hospitals and nursing home beds, should be available to all citizens of Ontario regardless of their ability to pay.

I feel the worry our parents had about their ability to pay doctors and hospital bills should not be thrust upon the residents of Ontario today. I believe if the government of Ontario has a sincere desire to see that medicare works, it can sit down with the medical profession and surely between them a fair and equitable fee schedule can be worked out which would prevent our doctors from opting out.

I realize that in all probability we cannot pay what the doctors in Texas would make, knowing what Texas is like, but when I refer to the North American jurisdiction in my resolution, I mean similarities such as those which are outlined in the union agreements we already have with the auto makers where wages in Canada and the United States are similar.

My main concern is to point out that the present government here has not, in my opinion, been completely committed to a true health-care plan accessible to everyone in this province. I believe that if the Minister of Health and the rest of the government put their minds to solving this problem, they could come up with an understanding with the medical profession that would put to rest the many concerns people in Ontario have about doctors' services.

If this was accomplished, I feel we could put into effect a plan similar to that in Quebec. That is, if a doctor opted out, he would be completely out and could not bill OHIP for any part of his services rendered. Of course, neither would the patient be able to collect from OHIP since the doctor opted out and would not be recognized.

I realize this would not be acceptable to some of the medical profession, but I want to reiterate that if we put together the collective minds of government and the profession, surely we can have a plan that would be acceptable to all and second to none.

Since I have worked as a secretary-treasurer of a prepaid medical co-operative, I suppose I feel a little closer to this problem than some of my colleagues in this House. In running our co-operative, I made a point to honour all bills submitted by the doctors and to have them processed as soon as possible. I find that the present payment system in OHIP is far from adequate and does not offer prompt payment of claims.

With the computer systems available today, it seems to me we should be able to process claims in a matter of days. I understand that in Saskatchewan claims are paid as quickly as a week. So why can't we keep doctors' claims processed even twice monthly instead of the present system where doctors sometimes wait for four to 10 weeks?

I want to stress that I do not favour any system that would put doctors on the payroll as public servants. I still feel the fee-for-service system is the best available for good medical care.

The resolution we're discussing today states that the government of Ontario should review the whole field of institutional health care to ensure adequate personnel and beds—active treatment, chronic care and nursing home—are available to care for the needs of all patients requiring such service.

The matter of available beds is probably of more concern to the general public than the problem of doctors opting out, when one sees the number of letters and telephone calls that are received about the difficulty in obtaining a bed at many hospitals. It is appalling, particularly when we are supposed to be living in a land of affluence. I have personally dealt with a number of these cases and I've had to ask the minister's staff to intercede on our behalf.

I would like to read parts of a letter I have received from a hospital patient. I will leave out the names as requested by the sender to avoid any embarrassment, as has happened in the past. In most cases, I must say the news media has a tendency to editorialize and this can cause some embarrassment to the patient in complaints of this nature. I only accept these letters from people who are willing to sign them, but I always check with them and respect their wish to remain anonymous.

The letter is addressed to myself: "I am writing to you to let you know I give my full support to your acts in the Ontario provincial government. As I write this letter, I am in hospital recovering from a heart attack. There is always a long line of people waiting for a bed in this hospital. Some could be life or death.

"For example, my friend, who is on a disability pension because he had a heart attack, had been waiting three or four days to be admitted to this hospital with his life slowly ebbing away. His poor wife had to sit by watching him slowly die. She was helpless. Many times she called her doctor but was told there was 'no room in the inn.' As soon as the hospital had room, he would put him in for hospital care.

"Finally, my friend's wife got so nervous and upset when she saw her husband slowly deteriorating she called an ambulance and had him taken to the emergency of the hospital where he had to be kept for two and a half days before they could give him a room. Thank God for small mercies. She had enough sense to send him this way because probably he would have just lain in bed at home until he died.

"The Bible asks us, what is the price of a soul? Then it says you can gain the whole world and lose your soul and you have gained nothing. I ask those members of the Ontario provincial government what price they would put on their life if they were the poor peasant that needed a bed in the hospital to have his own life.

"Mr. Ruston, I am glad to see someone who has the nerve to bring this need before the Ontario cabinet and government. Just a little support for your fight to retain the much-needed beds in our hospitals."

I would also like to quote from an article in the Windsor Star of June 14, 1979, reporting on the subcommittee meeting of the social development committee held in Windsor on June 13: "Mrs. Carter, a retired school-teacher, told the committee she fell during a wind storm April 5 and was taken to hospital but not admitted. She said hospital officials told her there were no beds. Mrs. Carter said hospital staff knew she lived alone and was unable to walk. 'I was in intense pain and no way could I walk,' Mrs. Carter said. She lay on a friend's chesterfield for a week in intense pain before her daughter came to visit and insisted that something be done. She said her doctor told her to go to hospital by ambulance where she was admitted and placed in traction for three weeks. She said she was placed in the cardiac unit because it had the only bed available. Mrs. Carter said she has 'all kinds of health insurance' but 'none of it of much good to me at this time.'"

I would also like to say that the matter of allocating chronic-care beds in hospitals prior to making arrangements for active-treatment beds is also of great concern to me. I was reading an article in the Windsor Star of June 14, 1979, about a public meeting on health care with a panel of four doctors who were taking questions from the audience. A Dr. Heckadon gave statistics showing that on Tuesday night Hotel Dieu Hospital kept 13 people waiting.

"He gave statistics showing that on Tuesday night, Hotel Dieu kept 13 people waiting in the emergency department for a bed, five waited at Metropolitan and two each at Grace and Windsor Western-IODE unit.

"But the same hospitals showed that they would not have had to make patients wait for beds if some of their beds had not been taken up by people who did not need them.

"He said the number of people taking up active beds at Hotel Dieu who really only needed to be in a nursing-home or chronic-care bed was 54 on Tuesday, at Met it was 36, at Grace 33, and the IODE had 15 such patients.

"But there is a waiting list for nursing-home beds in Essex county, and the province will not allow any new ones to be built.

"If we could unclog that system, if we had nursing-home beds and chronic-care beds, if we could unload this backup, we could help solve this problem of shortages of active beds,' Dr. Heckadon said."

I have sympathy for the doctor with this dilemma facing him, when he is told that there are no beds available and he must decide whether his patient is a real emergency or whether it can wait for a day or two or even a week or to put the patient into an overcrowded hospital.

I am also concerned about the workload of the nurses and their assistants. I have been advised about the low morale of the staff with regard to the cut in complement.

The backlog in nursing beds in the county and the city of Windsor is about 100, and yet the minister will not permit an additional nursing home to be built or beds added to the existing homes. I can assure that nursing homes would be built immediately if the okay was given to go ahead.

I would like to go over the Ontario Medical Association rates of 1969, which I have here in the OMA book I used when I was secretary-manager of the Essex County Medical Co-operative. A general assessment by a general practitioner in 1969 was $15. In the 1979 OMA schedule, it is $28; in 1979, OHIP pays $19.50 of that amount. Partial assessment: 1969 OMA schedule $5.50; 1979 OMA schedule $11; OHIP pays $7.70.

Specialist: consultation, internist, $35 in 1969; 1979 schedule, $73; OHIP pays $50.90. General assessment, office, $25; OMA schedule, $46; OHIP, $32.05. Obstetrical care, specialist, $165 in 1969; 1979 OMA schedule $330; OHIP pays $230. Obstetrical care, general practitioner, $69 in 1969; OMA schedule, $125; 1979 schedule, $300; OHIP pays $209. In most cases in 1969 Windsor Medical and Co-op paid at least 90 per cent of the OMA schedule and you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that in most cases OHIP pays from 60 to 70 per cent of the OMA schedule.

To compare, here are some examples of wage earnings. In 1969 at General Motors, in Windsor the auto workers' wage per hour in 1969 was $3.23; in 1979, $7.30; cost of living allowance in 1969, 12 cents, for a total of $3.35; cost of living allowance in 1979, $1.02, for a total of $8.32. I realize that the leader of the third party, the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) says, in reply to an article in the Globe about my resolution, that comparing wages at General Motors and doctors' income was irrelevant. I know that he studied economics but if you ask 10 economists how to solve our fiscal problems, you will get 10 solutions, probably all different.

It should be the responsibility of the medical profession and the government to see that fair compensation is made to those people who care for the sick. It would certainly seem to me that we should not ask a doctor to see a patient in the doctor's office for less than $10 with today's inflation rate, when the doctor must supply a nurse and/or office staff and all the facilities. I would like to see any of the members here who are lawyers, chartered accountants or in any other profession who would give their services for less than $10 and have the equipment, at no small cost, that a doctor must have to carry on his practice.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that doctors resumed the place they had in society many years ago as the backbone of the community with the rightful loyalty and esteem of the people they serve. They should be allowed to carry out their duties in such a way as to have the respect of the citizens of Ontario and we, as legislators, must give them the opportunity to serve the needs of the community proudly.

I would like to reserve any available time until the windup.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be four minutes reserved.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have changed my mind about this resolution. A few days ago, when I saw it on the order paper, I thought the member for Essex North does not have a reputation of being an obnoxious person, he's quite friendly, and, as soon as I read the resolution I thought it's mother's milk to the hilt and one can't be opposed to that.

I have changed my mind because of certain actions on the part of the minister himself and certain things that have happened in the social development committee over the last little while. It's now clear to me that enough pap has been said.

We are all in favour of doctors. None of us are against the medical profession. We love them. That should not mean, however, that we are not allowed to have some serious and straightforward discussion about what's right and wrong about OHIP. Surely in a free society, we at least should have that opportunity to speak one's mind, to offer an opinion without being castigated as someone who is totally evil and opposed, almost in principle, to the notion of doctors.

I am not going to support this resolution because I think the time has come to lay it out much straighter that does this one and it touches bases on almost everything you can name in the provision of medical services.

Let me provide my reasons for that. I listened this afternoon to the minister saying once again there's a new kind of negotiation under way between the OMA and his ministry to arrive at the fee schedule. This resolution calls for a similar thing, a serious set of negotiations which I think clearly implies that up until now there has never been any serious negotiation. That much I happen to agree with. But there is no sense in seriously negotiating anything unless both parties at that bargaining table are prepared to abide by the decisions. In other words, there is no negotiation unless both parties agree that what they decide upon at that bargaining table applies to both sides and to everyone. [5:00]

To use the trade union analogy used in many places, what would happen if a trade union went to a bargaining table, the negotiators accepted the agreement, and some of the membership said, "We don't like that," or another part of the membership said, "That is fine for starters, but in addition to that here is the extra fee we want"? It wouldn't fly. It wouldn't be allowed. It wouldn't be seen to be fair. It wouldn't even be seen to be reasonable.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the time has come to negotiate that fee schedule in a very serious way and to have it binding on both parties, so afterwards neither the minister nor his officials in OHIP can downgrade that fee schedule which they have done and medical practitioners could not expect more money than what has been agreed upon at the bargaining table.

I think it is clear now that we need to deal with those negotiations much more seriously than ever before. But there is no sense in doing that unless we agree that that is where we will decide what doctors will get paid for what in Ontario. That seems to me to be a step that must happen and which is overdue in fact.

I am not opposed to anyone getting a fair wage. That part I can certainly support in here. In fact I do agree that general practitioners are coming out on the short end of the stick in the negotiating under the current fee schedule. It strikes me that they are the backbone of the medical profession and have not been adequately compensated. That is not to say that there is an easy mechanism to sort that out, but it is to say, as a matter of priority, I do not feel they have adequately been represented by their own negotiators at the bargaining table and that there is some redress needed in the system.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things one could say about letting doctors opt out and what one does with them at that point. I guess for me it comes down to this point of view.

I do not think that the Ontario Health Insurance Plan operates for the convenience of the medical profession. That isn't the purpose of the exercise. That plan and all of the hospitals we build and all the people we train and the machinery we provide and the expertise the people of Ontario pay for is not there for the convenience of any one group. It is there to serve the public of Ontario.

My prime concern is not whether or not, if a doctor opts out, the hospital doors are locked on that doctor. My concern is not that patients are billed directly on their own or that they are not allowed to bill OHIP if they use an opted-out physician. My prime concern is the patient per se; the people of Ontario who fund the system. I believe that for that kind of money they have a right to expect medical services at an agreed-upon rate. That is clearly the case now in Ontario.

So I do believe there are things that need to be done. I am not prepared to accept that this answer is the ultimate answer. I am not at all convinced that by taking opted-out physicians and saying, "You are blacklisted. You will not be allowed to use the hospitals. You will not be allowed to use any of our medical services," would do the patients much good. If my purpose was to nail the doctors, to somehow provide them with some form of penalty, perhaps that would do it. It wouldn't do it for the rich in Ontario but it certainly would do it for the poor of Ontario.

If my prime concern is patient care, then I think I cannot accept that part of the resolution as being a workable answer. It may well be and perhaps that could be fleshed out in some words not contained in this particular resolution, but I do think we need to be mindful of that.

Mr. Speaker, there is that remaining nagging question: What does one do with doctors who opt out? And should doctors be allowed to opt out? Some have brought into question here the matter that in the province of Quebec they have a somewhat different formula for doing that. I make no bones about it. From my personal point of view, doctors are part of the society in this province. Like me and every other member of this House, every other member of our society, we sometimes learn to live with restrictions on our freedom. In some cases, it's not for our own personal good but for the good of the public at large.

I don't like to pay taxes, I don't like to have to have a driver's licence, I don't like a number of restrictions that are on me. I accept them because I am part of this society. For the good of everybody, including myself, in the long run, I accept some restrictions on what I can and can't do. I think frankly the time has come for the medical profession and the government of Ontario to face that issue. They have never faced it in this province.

In my own personal perspective I can see some cases where doctors, for whatever legitimate reason, may want to opt out and may have to opt out and where the practical answer is to allow them to do so. I can think of some isolated incidents which cover that contingency, but, in the main I believe doctors are part of this society and should be funded through that public system. They use the public facilities we have. They accept the subsidization of their own education and the education of those who work around them. I am in favour of that totally and I am in favour of expenditures of a rather large scale in the medical field.

In looking at government priorities of this current day, while I might say there is a need to practise some restraint, I cannot believe in my own mind that a government has got money to hand out to the private sector with no strings attached but no money to fund hospital systems. I think that is a wrong set of priorities. I am prepared to do that kind of funding. I am not prepared to hand out unlimited amounts of money. I am prepared to have a calm and rational discussion of that, which we have had in several quarters around this House in the last little while.

I want to conclude by saying that my basic premise is simply that the time has come for the medical profession, for the ministry, for the members of the government, for members of this House and for the public at large to sit down and have it out nice and straight without any of us feeling recriminations that the other side is holier than us or that they have possession of all the facts or that there aren't any problems.

There are serious problems in the provision of medical care in the province of Ontario. It does none of us any good to try to hide that or sweep it under the rug or to look for a simplistic answer. The time has come for doctors to stop being so sensitive so that other people might dare to discuss what kind of money they make or how they practise medicine. That is an unreasonable request on their part. The time has come to look at it straightforwardly, to decide our priorities, to put them in place, to ask a large number of people to participate in the process and, most important of all, to remember that we don't pay this kind of money for any particular interest group. We pay it to see that the people of this province who pay that money, and pay it gladly in most instances, get proper medical care. That should be the crux of the problem. This kind of resolution doesn't even address itself to that and that is why I am not prepared to support it.

Mr. Turner: I rise to oppose this resolution for a number of reasons. I must confess when I first saw the ballot item on the Order Paper I suspected it was a bit of a hoax. I couldn't really believe any member of this House could propose this resolution seriously because it reflects such a total lack of understanding of what this government has been doing to reach a new working agreement with the Ontario Medical Association and because it reveals a total lack of awareness of the measures the government has been taking to reshape health care in this province.

At the very least the member should consider withdrawing the portion of his resolution calling for the government to initiate "serious negotiations" with the OMA. By employing such a phrase, I would suggest the author of this resolution reveals one or two things about his own thought process. Either he has managed somehow to remain unaware of the negotiations that have been going on between the government and the OMA or he knows about the negotiations and he does not regard them as being serious. Perhaps at the time he wrote his resolution he may have considered them trivial. Whichever the case, he must surely feel obliged to revise his thinking, in the light of the announcement made in the House earlier today by the Minister of Health.

For the benefit of the member, who may not have understood or appreciated the import of the minister's statement, let me recap its highlights briefly. The government and the OMA have reached an agreement as to the process that will be used to arrive at a level of fees acceptable to the people of Ontario and to the medical profession. A committee will be established to negotiate a written agreement on a global revision to the OHIP schedule of benefits now in force. The committee will consist of three representatives appointed by the government, three representatives appointed by the OMA and a jointly appointed chairman.

I will not take the time it would require to detail the new process, but I will summarize the arrangements simply by saying there is a provision for action in the event of a majority agreement on the part of the committee. There is provision as well in the event of an impasse for the chairman to serve as a fact-finder, who will then recommend a compromise. As the Minister of Health remarked earlier, this new arrangement will assure equity in the eyes of the medical profession, the members of this House and the people of Ontario.

In the light of this new development, I believe the first portion of the member's resolution advocating negotiations that would lead to a fair scheme of compensation for physicians is not merely out of date, I would suggest it is frivolous.

The second point in this resolution calls for a measure completely out of keeping with the spirit in which our health-care system operates. It suggests that physicians who choose to opt out of OHIP should be obligated to opt out completely. In other words a doctor who chose to opt out of OHIP would be allowed to accept only those patients who were willing to pay for his services entirely out of their own pocket. The doctor would not be allowed to hand a bill to his patient and have the patient claim even a portion of this charge from OHIP.

This arrangement would place doctors and their patients completely outside the pale, as it were. If it were to introduce such an arrangement, the government would be saying to all doctors in effect, "Either you do things our way, or operate like outcasts. You can't have a cent of OHIP money unless you knuckle under and observe the fee schedule we have endorsed."

I suggest this is no way to maintain the partnership on which our health-care system is based.

Mr. Warner: It is called bargaining in good faith. You wouldn't understand that.

Mr. Turner: The relationship between the government and the medical profession is not based on a master and servant relationship.

Mr. Warner: You would rather let the doctors have their cake and eat it too.

Mr. Turner: It is an arrangement based on co-operation, not coercion. A partnership relies on the willingness of each partner to hear and respect the needs and the wishes of the other partners. This is the basis on which we have reached the agreement I referred to earlier. It is the basis on which any arrangement should be made in regard to physicians who will remain in or choose to opt out of OHIP.

I believe it is important for all of us to remember as well that even these doctors who opt out are still partners with the government in the operation and delivery of the health-care system. As such, they deserve our respect and consideration.

I would move on now to the portion of the resolution in which the author calls upon the government to "review the whole field of institutional care," to ensure the availability of adequate personnel and adequate number of hospital beds. That is a first-rate suggestion and I would suggest it has only one thing wrong with it. It's about six years out of date.

Mr. Warner: Where have you been?

An hon. member: You're really off base.

Mr. Turner: Anyone who makes a proposal like that can also be expected to suggest any day now that the Pope will visit Poland. I didn't think it possible for any member of this House to be so out of touch with reality that he would consider a review of our health institutions to be a fresh idea.

Mr. Warner: You should by visiting a hospital.

Mr. Turner: How does he suppose the government has reached the decision to de-emphasize acute hospital care? Does he imagine this was done without any assessment of existing resources?

Mr. M. Davidson: One would think so.

Mr. Van Horne: I'm surprised at you, John.

Mr. Turner: Does he have no appreciation of the work that has been done to weigh the costs and benefits of institutional care and compare them with those of the other less-costly forms of care such as chronic, extended health care, day surgery and home care?

Does the author of this resolution realize that many of the so-called closures of hospital beds are in fact conversions from acute care to chronic care, or that many of these conversions have been carried out—

Mr. Warner: They are hospital cuts.

Mr. Turner: —to save money because chronic patients were occupying the more expensive acute-care beds? Does the member appreciate the new emphasis the government is placing on disease prevention and community health programs?

He should also understand that while this new emphasis involves a shift in financial and other resources, it is not by any means a disparagement of our hospitals or other medical institutions. They will always be a vital part of our health-care system.

The fact is, however, that our society has reached a point that while new life-saving devices will continue to be invented and used, we cannot expect them to provide a significant improvement in the general health of the public. For that improvement we must look to the public health sector and that's why this sector has lately been allotted higher increases in funding than the institutional sector. As part of this same trend we also have introduced reforms in the financing of local health units to rationalize and improve their effectiveness.

Frankly, I'm not at all certain that these increased allocations are adequate for the job we expect to see done. I believe we must keep monitoring the situation closely before we can be sure. But I have no doubt that this new shift in emphasis is sound in principle and in tune with the needs of the people of Ontario at this time.

I believe it's imperative for us not only to develop non-institutional forms of care, but also to reduce the incidence of illness and injury among the public at large. Part of this latter objective can be met by public health programs such as immunization, but part relies on our ability to persuade people to assume greater responsibility for their own health.

These two trends together should make us less reliant than we have been on hospitals and other institutions. The end result should be a healthier population and lower health costs.

Finally, let me mention one additional factor that is ignored in the resolution now at hand. I refer to the decentralization of the planning of health-care resources, notably the establishment of district health councils. The government is bringing about a gradual shift in the responsibility for this function from the provincial to the local level, recognizing once again our commitment to local autonomy.

This measure has two significant advantages: first, it recognizes the public's growing desire to make decisions affecting their communities and their lives; second, it means that local health-care resources can be developed to suit local needs.

These are the major reasons I oppose this resolution and I call on other members of the House to support me in this opposition.

Mr. Mancini: You didn't give one good reason; not one.

Mr. Turner: I believe the facts I have mentioned and the trends I have described make it quite evident that every provision in ballot item 24 is either out of date, out of tune with the times, or, worst of all, out of keeping with the spirit in which the government—

Mr. Warner: You do a disservice to Peterborough.

Mr. Turner:—the medical profession, the hospitals and the people of Ontario have created one of the finest health-care systems to be found anywhere in the world.

Mr. Warner: You must be hiding at the Sutton Place these days.

Mr. Riddell: Such condemnation is not part of your nature. I didn't think you were like that. You're becoming very critical.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous speaker I feel that this House is indebted to my colleague for bringing forward a resolution for debate in this House at this time. I am truly concerned about the general practitioner in our society. I do not think the general practitioner has been adequately represented in the discussions with reference to schedules and I concur with what my colleague has expressed, that the backbone of the system is the one which ought to have the concern of the people of this House, of the ministry, of the profession and of the province.

There is no question either that there has to be a greater degree of enforceability of the agreements arrived at between the ministry and the Ontario Medical Association. It's all very well to talk about master and servant and to talk about all these other legal definitions, but we all have to recognize that the medical profession in this province has indeed a glorious history of achievement. No one will deny that.

We also have to recognize that in attending the university, medical students are subsidized, as are all students. I was subsidized when I went to the University of Toronto, although I must confess I didn't think so at the time.

But more than that, the doctors in our hospitals have very fine, very sophisticated equipment with which to function. All of that is purchased by the taxpayers of this province. And it should be so, I don't deny that. But I think we have to recognize there is a responsibility on the medical profession and they ought to be prepared to look at their fee schedule and then to remain within the OHIP system. Without that they may well be denying people the care they need and want.

Like the member for Oshawa, I am of the opinion that our function here is to protect the health care of the people of this province. I am not here to represent one interest group or another; I am here to do everything I can to ensure there is equal health care, as far as it can be achieved, across this province—hopefully without even that proviso shortly—but so that the people of this province have health care which they can afford under the OHIP system.

I really don't think it is so much a matter of the dotting of the i's and the crossing of the t's in a resolution of this kind, but rather the opportunity for each member in this House—who can get on the list—to express a concern in that area. I have a great regard, personally, for the member for Peterborough, as I think he knows. But for him to suggest in this House, after what we have been through in health services, hospital care, chronic care, nursing homes, that somehow we are out of date because we are all in the garden of Eden, is ridiculous and dangerous.

Mr. Turner: That's not what I said.

Mr. Mancini: You should be embarrassed, John.

Mrs. Campbell: I have to look at what is said in this House about community care. I have to look at the community care that has been provided in downtown Toronto; and it has been cut off. The Minister of Health has graciously consented—and the member is right when he talks about local autonomy—to permit the local board of health for the city of Toronto to continue these programs, although he says he doesn't see them as health issues. This is the government's health care in the community in downtown Toronto and its commitment to it.

As far as nursing-home care is concerned, we know the story of the inspections of nursing homes and the fact that they appear to be thrown into the discard; they don't appear to be acted upon.

Mr. Turner: You know better than that.

Mr. Warner: She's right, absolutely right. This government won't do anything properly.

Mrs. Campbell: As a result, in my riding I have seen clearly that the inspectors have adequately reported the problem and there has been no correction at all. And the member talks to me today about this kind of health care and that this kind of resolution isn't needed? I cannot understand it.

Mr. Turner: That's not what I said.

Mrs. Campbell: We know the problems. Perhaps Peterborough is in the garden of Eden. It is a beautiful spot. There may be a certain unreality about living there. The situation in the city of Toronto is not as he indicates. All one has to do to know that there has been no real look at health care is to see the kind of so-called plan which was produced to the committee ex post facto to try to justify the closing of Lakeshore. There has been no overview, no adequate assessment and no planning at all.

Mr. Turner: That is not true. How can you stand in this House and say that?

Mr. Van Horne: Any planning that was done was lousy.

Mrs. Campbell: We do need to look at our hospital care and our chronic care. People are in active-treatment beds because there is no other place for them. Believe me, we agree that people should not continue in active-treatment beds when they no longer need them. What we say to the government is that before it destroys active-treatment beds it should put in place the kind of care that is necessary as an alternative.

In closing, I would like to refer to a letter I received just recently from a constituent of mine who had moved into a Metro home for the aged. That is local autonomy. She moved in complaining that if only she had service she could have stayed in her own home. That is saving money, I don't think.

Mr. Warner: Among other things, it is a pleasure to follow on the remarks of the member for St. George. She speaks with truth and knowledge on the subject.

Mr. Roy: If you keep on that way, you will get our support too.

Mr. Warner: This government continues to try to ignore the problem of the health-care system, and that is evident again today. The Minister of Health isn't here. He doesn't consider this matter important. The member for Peterborough talks in terms that reveal to us a dream world, where there are a lot of people living in a world of nightmares as far as the health-care system is concerned.

I don't know where he has been, but I have been into the hospitals in Scarborough, I have been into the Northwestern Hospital in Toronto and I have seen the cruel cuts. I have seen what they have effected upon the people. All one has to do is to talk to the people who work there, the doctors, the nurses, the other health-care workers and the patients, to find that this system cannot take any more pressure.

The government cannot continue to cut and cut and cut. What is going to give? It is quite obvious. One of the chief doctors from the Toronto Western Hospital spoke out in the media the other day. He told us what is going to happen. People will die because of the lack of adequate health-care facilities in the hospitals. That is what he was saying. And he is right. The quality of health is deteriorating, and there is no reason for it to happen. That is the sad part.

When we were on the select committee on health-care costs, the committee unanimously agreed that our health-care costs are not out of line. We understood we've been able to control the costs for health care in this province because we've had a public health-care system and not a private one. Our costs are measurably less than in the United States because we have a public health-care system and not a private one. The Conservative members on the committee agreed to that, as did the Liberal members and New Democratic members. All of that seems to be forgotten as the government pursues its relentless attack on the hospitals and on the people in Ontario.

The doctors have a problem. They've got a lot of problems. Who wouldn't have a problem negotiating with this government? The problems need to be resolved. There is no question about the general practitioners. More than that, actually, the opted-in psychiatrists are not well recompensed either. They have problems, unique ones. The government hasn't solved those problems. Practitioners feel frustrated. I don't understand why the minister can't sit down and negotiate a settlement and then everyone can abide by the settlement.

Would the member expect anything like this from the teachers in the province of Ontario? Would he expect a teacher in a public school to send a note home to the children's parents saying, "I've decided to opt out and you're going to have to send me $5 for every child in the class, on top of the salary I'm getting"? That's ludicrous. Of course, he wouldn't accept it, but he will with the doctors. He's quite willing to allow a doctor to opt out of the system but use the public hospitals, use all of the facilities in the hospital provided for by public funds, after he or she was educated in a public facility. He's quite willing to do that. They can have their cake and eat it too.

I'm telling you, Mr. Speaker, this government should recognize the doctors have legitimate concerns. There should be a negotiation but when the resolution is reached, both parties should sign on the dotted line, and that's it.

I was dismayed again today, as I asked a question of the Minister of Health. He indicated once more that as usual, in his cavalier fashion, he will dismiss the very good recommendation put forward by that select committee following on the Quebec model, where they can negotiate more than a one-year contract and tie it into the utilization rate. It works in Quebec. Their doctors aren't unhappy with the arrangement and they haven't got the turmoil we have here in the province of Ontario. Why can't he simply put that forward? I don't understand that.

I took that proposal and I talked to one of the chief executive officers of the Ontario Medical Association. He said it sounded like a very negotiable item. He'd like to discuss it further but, no, the government hadn't presented him with that idea. I don't understand why not. Has this government no imagination in trying to solve the problems? Or are they, as I suspect, trying to allow this system to deteriorate to the point which we had prior to medicare? That's what's behind it. This party fought hard to bring in medicare. We're responsible for it and we're proud of it and we'll not back down an inch.

Mr. Gregory: I don't recall you being in power.

Mr. Warner: The people of this province deserve a good medicare program and we'll fight this government every inch of the way to make sure we maintain a good medical care program in Ontario. We'll not let up an inch.

Mr. Pope: Do you want a violin?

Mr. Warner: The member for Peterborough can live in his dream world about there being no problems.

Mr. Turner: I didn't say that, with all respect.

Mr. Warner: This government must face the reality that there are not sufficient home-care programs in the community and that there are not adequate nursing-home beds and that there are problems in the nursing homes where the inspection reports are not followed up.

Where the problems exist, they are not solved. It took a coroner's inquest in the city of Toronto into St. Raphael's home before the government would pay any attention to that home. Sixty-two violations of the Nursing Homes Act over a period of months and none of them were complied with. The government did nothing. Then, unfortunately, a woman died and there was a coroner's inquest. Dr. Cass, the coroner, said there should be an investigation of every nursing home in the province—Dr. Cass; not the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, Dr. Cass. The government sits immobilized, unwilling to act.

Mr. Turner: What happened when that was brought to the select committee?

Mr. Warner: The member for Essex North, with deep feeling for the problem, has brought forward a resolution. I appreciate the depth of his feeling about it. At least the members from two parties in this House are concerned about protecting the health-care system in the province.

I must say, with respect, I don't believe his resolution is the answer to the problem because it lacks the one ingredient that is essential. When you reach the resolution of the problem through negotiation, both parties adhere to the agreement, not just some members on one side. That has to be understood by both the doctors and the government. But the government is not ready to do that. I submit that it won't and this problem will fester; fester to the point where conditions in Ontario will be as they were prior to the inception of the medicare program, and, of course, with the obvious invitation to the old inequitable system.

We will fight it, every inch of the way.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I think to begin with I have to say that the government obviously has to agree with the sentiment in the last part of the resolution in the light of the fact that most of its recommendations are being undertaken at the present time.

Mr. Warner: Baloney.

Mr. Watson: The member for Peterborough adequately expressed—

Mr. Warner: The member for Peterborough lives in a dream world. He belongs in a lift-lock.

Mr. Watson: —the current state of the working agreement, and we had a statement in the House today from the minister, so I won't repeat that particular aspect.

I really feel the second half of this resolution calling for a review of health services is a continuation of the debate we have been engaged in over the past few weeks. I don't want to imply this debate is not meaningful, because health-care practices in Ontario and the resources we have available to meet the community health-care needs are extremely important.

Perhaps I might just briefly outline my view or personal perspective of the question of the supply of active-treatment hospital beds in Ontario. All of us, I think, realize the demand for health services has experienced a dramatic increase in the past few years. In 1972, according to the estimates of the Ministry of Health, we spent just over $200 for the average resident in this province. This year the same average figure stands at $488. The reason for the escalation in the cost of health care is pretty obvious.

During the period since the Second World War and through the 1960s, our society steadily placed more and more emphasis on hospital services as a means to deal with health-care needs. Patients, as well as those working within the health-care system, perhaps partially due to the post-war prosperity, began to rely heavily on institutional solutions to their health problems. Not always were the institutional answers the best means to deal with these problems. Certainly they are not the most cost efficient, considering the complex physical plants, the expensive technologies we have that are required in hospitals.

If there was a problem in the past in finding truly cost-effective methods of health treatment, then today that problem has increased. The role of the hospital as the provider of short-term treatment and treatment for acute illnesses and injuries is an essential one and one for which only hospitals are adequately suited.

In recent years, however, with increasing inflation and economic difficulties, we have been awakened to the fact that while hospital care is enormously expensive, it is often somewhat wasteful in terms of coping with health problems such as the chronic degenerative diseases. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the general pattern of health care in our society is shifting. Our population is aging and consequently the unfortunate fact of life is that we are going to be subject to more and more of the degenerative diseases which are usually not curable.

Currently, however, more chronic degenerative cases are being cared for in a hospital setting. It has to sound a little bit cold blooded but nevertheless it is senseless for us to expect that we will experience overall improvement in the state of public health merely by spending continuously more and more on increasingly expensive technology and manpower geared to the short-term, acute-care needs.

In 1972, the Ministry of Health, recognizing this problem, began establishing a policy of de-emphasizing active-treatment, inpatient hospital care. Instead it increased the provision of alternative forms of health care, such as comprehensive chronic-hospital programs and home-care programs. These, in addition to being less costly, were, I believe, to offer patients the psychological advantage of maintaining some form of family and community contact.

Recently a great deal of criticism has been expressed in this House regarding hospital-bed cutbacks. Hospital-bed guidelines have indeed dropped from planning of five active-treatment beds for each 1,000 in our referral population in southern Ontario to a 3.5 figure. While the opposition are quick to point this out, I think there has been consistent failure to mention that Ontario's chronic and extended-care bed ratios have risen dramatically. I understand also that the Ministry of Health is continuing to add more chronic beds in communities where there is a demonstrated need.

We can all play with figures, Mr. Speaker, and we are aware of the ease with which they can be manipulated and therefore no figures are conclusive by themselves, but to be fair, in addition to the 3.5-for-1,000 planning guideline, Ontario does have almost 12 chronic-care beds for each of our 1,000 senior citizens. Furthermore, there are 3.5 extended-care beds planned for each 1,000 residents in this province. Surely this is not representative of a systematic cutback of health-care beds. Rather it is part of the overall process of conversion to a more economical, practical and sensitive health system.

Mr. Kerrio: Ah, you Tories are heartless.

Mr. Watson: As a private member, I have little to do with the health-care services directly. I am not qualified to say whether Ontario has precisely the right number of health-care beds overall. But I do believe in what the ministry is attempting to achieve and this is, if I understand it, a redistribution of beds within the system to provide a mix or balance that will meet our present needs and our future needs.

For the present, however, I think we are going to live with the fact that some kind of system of priorities will have to be worked out in our hospitals in Ontario and, because of our economy, our planning will have to be far more careful than perhaps it has been in the past. This doesn't mean that hospitals shouldn't have strict limitations imposed upon them, but it does mean that the form of review called on for resolution must be done independently on an institution by institution basis.

I believe that we are in the process now, and for the short-term future, of a state of transition which regrettably will not always be comfortable and the wrinkles will not be as easily ironed out as we might wish.

As far as the obligatory opting out in a complete fashion as it is practised in Quebec is concerned, once again I think the member for Peterborough expressed our situation. Not only does this recommendation violate the spirit of the way we operate health care in this province, but it imposes ridiculous barriers on the practices of opted-out physicians. I presume that if the recommendation contained in this resolution were adopted, as in Quebec, doctors here who opted out of OHIP would be barred from using hospital facilities. Consequently, no doctor would really be free to practise privately. It would almost be suicide to do so. In other words, we wouldn't actually be giving physicians the option of staying in the health insurance plan.

[5:45]

The resolution calls for fairer compensation for all doctors and then turns around and tosses fairness to the wind in its requirement that they either submit to the government fee schedule or virtually give up practising medicine. I fail to see any justification for this.

For this and other reasons, I believe that all of the patients and residents of this province deserve the same coverage for health services regardless of their choice of physician, and I would oppose this resolution as it is stated by the member for Essex North.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, in rising to wind up, I am a little disappointed that I did not receive a little more support from the government and members of the third party.

Mr. Nixon: They are thinking about your arguments.

Mr. Ruston: I really am a little surprised. I am surprised at the member for Oshawa, who I always felt was a fairly reasonable person.

Mr. Breaugh: Take that back. I won't stand for that.

Mr. Ruston: I will have to reconsider my thought of him, I guess, but I thought he would be supportive of proper health care in Ontario. I think that is one of the fundamental rights that everybody in Ontario should be entitled to, and I am surprised he is not in favour of that.

The member for Peterborough, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health, made some rather outrageous remarks. I think the member for St. George covered that very well in her remarks.

When the present Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) was the Minister of Health, he came to Windsor and had a meeting at the University of Windsor with about 300 people from the community representing different organizations, all the municipalities and so forth. The then Minister of Health got up and started speaking, and he was kind of joking every second line or every second or third sentence, trying to laugh something off. A person who was sitting near me, my late brother, reeve of one of the townships, said, "I don't know how a Minister of Health can come down here and try to laugh his way through the idea of closing a hospital."

That was Riverview Hospital, one of the best chronic-care hospitals and a place where they give the best of care. The minister was going to close it. Well, he did not close it, and it so happens that hospital is still operating and giving good care to our senior citizens. Of course, the minister did not stay in that position very long because of other problems he had with different hospitals that he was going to close challenging him in the courts. So he went by the way.

The present Minister of Health also has been fighting hospitals as well as doctors and so on. It seems to me the adversary system of government has been working around here in the last few years. They seem to think confrontation is the way to bash the hospitals and the doctors down if they can. They are letting on to the people that they are saving the people's money, "We are just going to bash the hospitals down and save you money."

Most people feel that is not the place to save all the money; there are other places to save it. Looking across the way, I can think of a number of other places where they could save quite a bit. A lot of them are pretty useless over there.

Anyway, looking at the Minister of Health's statement today with regard to a new negotiation system with the medical profession, I think my resolution on the Order Paper for 16 days certainly speeded that up. At least if I didn't accomplish anything else I got that accomplished; so I feel a little better over that. They are piling in—they are bringing them in through the back door to block my resolution. However, I am happy that I had some success in that they are starting some serious negotiations.

I rest my case.

POLLUTION COMPLAINT

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I rise on a point of privilege. I'll try to be as brief as possible. I know we're all anxious for supper.

This afternoon some questions were asked about some activity in the great riding of Oxford by the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs). he questioned whether or not it would interfere with my duties. I want to put on the record exactly what did happen. It's a letter dated June 13—

Mr. Cooke: What about the memo?

An hon. member: Read the memo into the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Every member has a right to be heard.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The matter of order has been discussed—by the way, this is on Ministry of the Environment stationery—with officials of my ministry and the town of Tillsonburg.

"I understand from my staff that subsequent to your letter"—and this is addressed to Mr. Jerry Turner, the person in question—"of May 14, the ministry official again visited this industry on May 23. As a result, a violation notice has been issued to Sylco concerning the orders you mentioned in your letter."

I put it on the record for you, sir, that not only did I act long in advance of knowing the answer to the question asked—

Mr. Cooke: Why did you put it on the memo?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —but that we took a very significant action and I think very successfully so.

One of the things I didn't say earlier, and which I probably should have, was trying to determine the number of New Democrats in Oxford county. I have to look very carefully because there are so few of them.

Mr. Martel: What's the privilege?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But that really isn't a point of privilege. The point of privilege is that I take some exception to the point made that I was not prepared to act. In this instance, not only did I act for my constituents—which I'm always glad to do—I did so even when it put me in conflict as a minister with another person in my riding.

Mr. McClellan: Read the memo into the record.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's the strongest possible test of how strongly one feels about working for one's constituents. I am glad to say that we Tories take that very significantly.

Mr. Breugh: Read the memo.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I have to point out one more thing. I am not sure how that communication arrived on that desk. But I do know that last year in committee an envelope addressed to the solicitor of the Ministry of the Environment was delivered inadvertently to the New Democratic Party offices. It was opened. The contents were photographed and forwarded. You know the reference whereof I speak. It was a very significant thing.

On the point of privilege, I think it is more serious. When mail is opened that is clearly addressed to the solicitor for my ministry, I have to say to the NDP, where are their scruples?

Interjections.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to respond, that letter came into my possession this last weekend. It was not addressed to the solicitor for the ministry or to anyone else. It was addressed to the minister's special assistant. In that letter he was asking his special assistant to determine the political affiliation of a person who had written to him as Minister of the Environment to deal with a pollution problem.

Mr. Eaton: It was mailed to him. How come you opened other people's mail?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is shameful.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Isaacs: The original letter was addressed to Dr. Harry Parrott, Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Was that you?

Mr. Isaacs: The letter was attached to a memorandum which the minister sent to his special assistant, which was not marked "confidential." It arrived in my hands without adequate covering and certainly not in a sealed envelope.

The allegation that the minister has made about our opening of his mail is completely without foundation and is not relevant to the matter before us. I would ask that the minister withdraw it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should probably have the benefit of the remarks the honourable minister made by referring directly to Hansard. I think I heard the minister saying or accusing another member of misusing Her Majesty's mail or of opening somebody else's mail. If that was what the minister said, if that is what he intended to say, I think that is a very serious allegation against another member and it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Cooke: The minister should be embarrassed.

Mr. Laughren: That's pretty sleazy.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think the member for Ottawa-Carleton—I am not sure, but I do not think there is any doubt that back in the committee sessions when we were discussing that most important topic, acid rain, that indeed did occur. I think that was well recorded in Hansard at that time. With the greatest of respect, sir, I brought that to the attention of the members at that time. I think it is recorded in Hansard that mail addressed to our solicitor was opened. I don't think there is any doubt at all of where it was opened and how. I have no way of retracting that because it was recorded then.

Mr. Renwick: Withdraw or resign.

Mr. Martel: There is the door. Do you want me to show you the way out?

Mr. Kennedy: You know the route.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can't be expected to rule upon something that happened elsewhere. All I can do as the Speaker is to address myself to something that happened here and that was said here. If the honourable minister has made the allegation against a member of this House, then I must repeat, all honourable members are honourable members; if he has made the allegation that someone has opened someone's mail illegally, that is an improper statement and the honourable minister should withdraw that allegation.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, do I have the privilege of going to the Hansard of committee hearings?

Mr. Martel: No.

Mr. Laughren: Withdraw.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I believe there are members opposite—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: No. Order. Order. It has absolutely nothing to do with what happened in committee. They are statements made in the House as a result of your alleged point of privilege. That is the only thing I can deal with.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I did not name anyone.

Mr. Speaker: That is even worse. It is even worse if you refuse to name someone and cast aspersions on every member of the House. You said "a member of this House," and I think I know who it was, but by refusing to name him you have cast aspersions on all members of this House. In the interest of harmony—we have only a day to go—perhaps the honourable member would withdraw the allegation.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, it really pains me to do so, for the purpose of staying a member of this House in good standing. I would like to have the privilege of going to the record, and I think there are members opposite who would substantiate what I have said here this evening.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you respect this House or not?

Mr. MacDonald: You are arguing with the Speaker, now.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But if you, sir, in your wisdom—

Mr. Speaker: I have to insist.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If you, sir, in your wisdom, tell me I do not have that opportunity, then I will withdraw. I do it with great regret, but I will withdraw that remark. I am sorry that I do not have the opportunity to make the case.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the honourable member for that.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's a hollow victory, you guys.

Mr. Makarchuk: You know how to dish it out, but you can't take it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

[6:15]

House in committee of the whole.

RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of adjourned consideration of Bill 163, An Act to reform the Law respecting Residential Tenancies.

Mr. Chairman: There are a number of deferred amendments to Bill 163.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendment to section 1 of the bill, which was negated on the following vote:

Ayes 29; nays 74.

Section 1 agreed to.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendments to sections 33 and 40, which were negated on the same vote.

Sections 33 and 40 agreed to.

The committee divided on section 42, which was agreed to on the same vote reversed.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendment adding a new section following part VII, which was negated on the same vote as the first vote.

The committee divided on sections 107, 108 and 109, which were agreed to on the first vote reversed.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendment to section 110, which was negated on the same vote as the first vote.

Section 110 agreed to.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendment adding a new section 111a, which was negated on the same vote.

The committee divided on Mr. Renwick's amendments to sections 117 and 119, which were negated on the same vote.

Sections 117 and 119 agreed to.

Bill 163 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the House and that we do the third readings of the four bills which the committee has done, just to tidy this up before the supper break.

Agreed to.

POLLUTION COMPLAINT

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. In the confusion that occurred earlier, I did not quite understand a reference that had been made to me by the Minister of the Environment. Apparently he thinks I sit for the seat of Ottawa-Carleton, and he should know I sit for the seat of Carleton East.

He made reference earlier to the opening of mail by me during the course of the inquiry into acid rain. I request that he withdraw that remark because it is without foundation.

A memo arrived on my desk inadvertently; it had a transmittal slip on it with the name of a person whom I did not know, and I passed the document to a researcher on our caucus staff.

Mr. Eaton: Who opened it?

Ms. Gigantes: I asked our researcher if he knew the name of the person. He did. There was no envelope. That document had not been folded. It was put on my desk with a transmittal slip.

Mr. Eaton: Did you make any copies of it?

Ms. Gigantes: For the minister to imply that I opened mail is something that he cannot give any evidence for. In fact, it is without foundation, and I request that he be asked to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Renwick: Withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I said the member for Ottawa East knew whereof I spoke. I did not name her as the person who opened the mail. I had to withdraw the accusation that a brown envelope, properly addressed to Mr. Neil Mulvaney, solicitor for my ministry, entered into that caucus office and came out of that caucus office without the envelope, and it was then delivered to Mr. Mulvaney. I am saying that an envelope properly, adequately, fully addressed, hand-delivered, was opened.

Mr. Martel: How did you know it was in an envelope?

Mr. Cassidy: It's not true.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I believe that was put on the record when we were in committee. If that's what I'm being asked to withdraw, I will not. That is fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think there are two separate items here. One of them was as a result of a point of privilege raised by the Minister of the Environment in response to a series of questions and answers placed by the member for Wentworth. That seems to have been dealt with.

The other question, by way of a point of privilege raised by the member for Carleton East, is that in the opinion of that member it cast aspersions upon her—or a member from the Ottawa area—about being in receipt of a sealed document that was opened and circulated.

I am not in a position to know what actually took place. The member for Carleton East said, if that is the document you're referring to, that it came, not in an envelope, but with a transmittal slip attached to it. There's clearly a difference of opinion as to what transpired.

Mr. Rotenberg: No. It came to her that way.

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister has muddied the waters in trying to bring the two incidents together. On the basis of what I've heard I see no connection between the two incidents. Frankly, it was something that happened outside of this House, and I'm at a loss to know what went on at all. I'm really not in a position to determine whether certain communications arrived in sealed envelopes or whether they came open.

The minister made reference to a member from the Ottawa region having received a communication in an envelope. The member for Carleton East clearly says before this House that it was not contained in an envelope; it was a letter that was open and unfolded. Perhaps the minister would care to amend or retract the reference to the honourable member who feels aggrieved.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: At no time did I make an accusation that the member for Ottawa East did so.

An hon. member: Carleton East.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Carleton East; I'm sorry. At no time did I accuse that member of it. I am very certain, Mr. Speaker, that a sealed envelope did go and was returned to Mr. Mulvaney opened—in fact, without the envelope. Of that I am positive. I have nothing that I can withdraw. There was no accusation made.

The simple statement was that when I talked about the incident, obviously, by facial recognition, the member was well aware of the incident. We recall the incident, and I think there are many from the Liberal caucus who recall the incident as it referred to acid rain. I think the member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall) was there. I am not sure about the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt). I think any of those members would be glad to give you the information that that was discussed then in that committee. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot rule on that. That is why I withdrew before. This is another principle. I have not made the accusation.

Ms. Gigantes: The minister, in his earlier statement in response to my colleague's point of privilege, referred to a member for Ottawa-Carleton in spite of the fact that I have just reminded him that I am the member for Carleton East and that there is no member for Ottawa-Carleton. He has now referred to me repeatedly as the member for Ottawa East, which I am sure would make the real member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) very annoyed.

However, Mr. Speaker, pointing at our benches, he talked about a document of which I have knowledge which came to me on my desk with nothing on it but a note of transmittal to a person I did not know. There was no enveloped document. There was no envelope. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he implied very strongly with his previous statement—and I think you will find that, looking at Hansard—that I, or the member for Ottawa-Carleton, had opened sealed mail which belonged to him and his ministry. That is simply unacceptable to me because it is without foundation. I request that you ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you have something substantial to contribute?

Mr. Charlton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just by way of adding some clarification on my colleague's point of personal privilege: The document in question was in fact delivered to my office and not to hers.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Charlton: It was delivered by a taxi driver—not by ministry staff or anyone else, but by a taxi driver. It was delivered unsealed with a pink slip attached to the front with a name on it which my assistant did not recognize. My assistant, on perusing the document, realized it was about acid rain and felt that the document must be for the member for Carleton East and put it on her desk. There was no envelope. It was not delivered by ministry staff. It was delivered by a cab driver who didn't even know where he was supposed to go. Nobody knew who that document was for until the clerk's office phoned my office after having contacted the cab company and tracked down where he had delivered it. That was the first inkling anybody had who the document was even for.

Mr. Speaker: Order. All I can deal with is the point of privilege raised by the member for Carleton East. In response to that point of privilege, the Minister of the Environment said quite clearly and unequivocally that there was no direct reference to the member for Carleton East or anything that she has done.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I clearly heard the Minister of the Environment saying he cast no aspersions, or no doubt, on the integrity or the actions of the member for Carleton East. I think that should suffice.

With regard to a sealed envelope that is supposed to have arrived in the offices of that party, it has been substantiated by the member for Hamilton Mountain that he was the one who received the communication without benefit of an envelope, an open letter.

Mr. Villeneuve: Boy, that was a pretty busy taxi driver, opening mail.

Mr. Peterson: Who is moonlighting as a taxi driver?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The problem the chair has now is there is an allegation on this side of the House that mail has been tampered with. On the other side, there is an unequivocal statement by a member who admits to having received the communication without benefit of an envelope.

If that is the case, when honourable members get up by way of clarifying what is alleged to have happened, I have to accept their word. I hope all honourable members will accept the word that what is being said here is in keeping with the facts.

I wish the Minister of the Environment would withdraw that allegation, because we have only the word of somebody over there against the word of somebody over there. I am not in a position, other than to say, if you are going to cast aspersions upon another member without proof positive—and, as far as I am concerned, you can't provide me with proof—I think the honourable thing to do would be to remove the allegation that some member or some group of members in this House have tampered with Her Majesty's mail.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to this point? I find the matter quite upsetting, to say nothing of its being confusing. I must say if mail comes addressed to someone else, be it in an envelope or not in an envelope, sometimes these things are inadvertently delivered, sometimes they are inadvertently opened, but I do believe once a person realizes the matter is not addressed to oneself, but to someone else, even if it is a name that is not recognizable, the obligation is immediately to put the matter aside and to take upon oneself, or to give one's assistant, the job of trying to locate the person to whom the matter is clearly addressed and clearly intended. It should not become then the subject for either photocopy or research or anything else. I am particularly concerned about this matter.

My own recommendation, sir, and it may be of some value or of no value, would be that the government House leader should very seriously consider sending this entire matter to the committee on procedural affairs where the matter could be looked at and the various allegations unravelled and solved. That would be my recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to all of this with great interest. I heard certain observations made by my colleague the Minister of the Environment, relating to two particular situations. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, you ruled on the one; it is out of the way.

The second situation relates to a brown envelope which arrived by taxi.

Mr. MacDonald: There was no brown envelope.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right; there was no envelope. Whatever it is, it arrived in a taxi, which does not constitute Her Majesty's mail, although I understood the honourable member to say it was in an envelope.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. You have not been listening.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully, and I understand the concern expressed.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are speaking on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am really not referring to the member for Carleton East. I am referring to the gentleman behind her who got up and acknowledged that whatever it was arrived in his office and, through the efficiency of the NDP caucus office, arrived on the desk of the member for Carleton East. So the member for Carleton East won't jump up and down, I am not even referring to her. I know she is disappointed, but I am not referring to her; I am referring to the member for Hamilton Mountain, who got up and said he got whatever he got. In the efficiency of the NDP caucus office, it went from him to her. That's what I understand—or it went to her researcher.

Mr. Renwick: They are next door, for God's sake.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think this matter has been escalated beyond, shall we say, reasonable proportions.

Mr. MacDonald: Who started it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think the minister—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let me finish. I don't think the Minister of the Environment has cast aspersions on anyone other than to recite what he believed to be a factual situation.

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, he has.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Queen's mails were not interfered with.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are skating all over the place.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They came by taxi. I don't think he needs to withdraw, with great respect. I don't think it is something that should go to the committee or whatever. I think really it does not benefit any members of the House to prolong this debate.

It's the first time I have offered you any advice, Mr. Speaker, but I would say to you, with great respect, that you should say the whole matter is over with, done, and let's get on with the orders of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I suggest it might be advisable for you to look at the record of what was said by the minister in the first instance—

Ms. Gigantes: That's right.

Mr. MacDonald: —before you render a final judgement on this. Very clearly the minister said the mail was opened over here, and he pointed in a sweeping way to the whole party here.

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: The whole party was accused of having done that. If the Speaker examines the record, he will find that is the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will examine the record to see if there's anything in there that would be helpful to the chair. That's all I have to say about the thing for the moment.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, while you are examining—

Mr. Speaker: No. If it has reference to this, no.

An hon. member: Sit down.

Mr. Roy: There has been reference to the member for Ottawa East. If the Speaker won't correct the record—my God, I don't get involved in anything at all.

Mr. Speaker: I know what the member is referring to. Go ahead.

Mr. Roy: The minister referred on two or three different occasions to the member for Ottawa East. I think he meant to refer to the member for Carleton East. When he referred to the member for Ottawa-Carleton, I think he meant the member for Carleton East as well. The record should be corrected.

THIRD READING

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act;

Bill 139, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved third reading of Bill 163, An Act to reform the Law respecting Residential Tenancies.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words. I understand the time is short but—

Mr. S. Smith: You filibustered that for more than a year.

Mr. Cassidy: —when this bill came forward on second reading we supported the bill in the hope that it would be possible to make improvements to it and to put into the laws of Ontario a bill that would continue to protect tenants as well as deal fairly with landlords across the province.

I am afraid our hopes have been disappointed because of the combined action of the Liberal Party and of the Conservative Party which was exemplified in the vote we had here a few minutes ago on a number of the key amendments affecting whether this bill would be effective.

An hon. member: You wouldn't have any legislation at all.

Mr. Cassidy: I am very disappointed in what's happened, but I am afraid it is part of a systematic pattern of working against tenants which we have seen both in the Conservative government and from their friends in the Liberal Party.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

[6:45]

Mr. Cassidy: In 1975, tenants won some very vital protection in the Landlord and Tenant Act. Our objection to the bill we have before us now is not on the question of rent review. Our objection is to the way in which those protections for tenants have been undermined in this particular bill.

There is a list as long as one's arm now of reasons under which tenants may be evicted according to this new bill. Our efforts to go back to the situation that has prevailed for the past four years have been frustrated by the government party and by the Liberal Party.

The fact that a tenant can be evicted even for something as simple as having a member of his family who is in trouble and coming to stay with that tenant for a few weeks or for a month or two is a sign of how this bill has been weakened. The fact that a tenant can be evicted because the tenant's wife becomes pregnant and is going to have a child is a sign of the weakness of this particular bill.

The fact that there is no protection in the bill against eviction where a tenant was part of a tenants' association and no protection against eviction for a tenant who was seeking to enforce his rights is a sign of the weaknesses that are in this bill. The fact that a tenant can be evicted even over a matter as simple as personal differences with the landlord, or the fact that a tenant can be evicted over house rules which have been determined by the landlord and not in consultation with the tenant, is a sign of the weakness of this particular bill.

We are also concerned about the way in which the Residential Tenancy Commission has been set up under this particular bill. The idea that rent review and landlord and tenant matters should come together under one roof is basically a good one, but when it is enforced by only one residential tenancies officer, when the Residential Tenancy Commission performs the functions of investigation, mediation, hearings and appeals, all under a roof, when in fact it's a commission that threatens to have all the same weaknesses of the rent review board and the rent review officers that have been appointed by this government over the last four years, when there is not even a guarantee that there will be equal representation of people coming from the tenants' side and from the landlords' side, we cannot have confidence in the proposed commission as it has been established by this government with the support of the Liberal Party.

In fact, it's a bad bill right now. It's a weak bill right now. The tenants in the province would be better off if they had the present landlord and tenant legislation and an extension of the existing rent review bill. That is why we cannot bring ourselves to support this bill on third reading. That is why we are opposing this bill on third reading. It would be better to stay with the existing law. I say that in the name of all of the tenants across this province.

Finally, I say to the government that the green paper on tenant protection was an effort to take away protection from tenants. This government has consistently tried to put a termination date on rent review. This government has consistently tried to back away from a decent framework of landlord and tenant law that would be fair both to tenants and to landlords. The way this bill is finally going through this House today is simply another step in a long line of actions where the government refused to stand firm with the tenants of Ontario. We stand with those tenants. I wish the rest of the House did too.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, after hearing the brilliant contribution of the leader of the third party, a person who never attended a single moment in some 16 or so months of that committee, except once to bum a cup of coffee—

Mr. Cassidy: How many cups of coffee did you buy?

Ms. Gigantes: This is the man who gave us rent review, for heaven's sake.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Carrying on with that sentence, I am reminded of the similarity between his latest performance and Custer's last stand. They will both produce the same result, except at least Custer did it with dignity.

This bill—and I want to give credit to my predecessor, because certainly he—

Mr. Cooke: Where is he?

Hon. Mr. Drea: He's on government business. The member knows where he is.

Mr. Breaugh: You were talking about a cup of coffee a minute ago. Where is he?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do not want to delay the dinner hour for everybody, but I would appreciate it if the same courtesies were extended to me as minister as were extended during that bit of prattle by the member's leader.

Mr. McClellan: That's what we're giving—exactly the same courtesy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to give credit to my predecessor, who is now the Minister of Industry and Tourism, because he started the very long process that will reach its culmination in a few moments.

I want to point out two things that I said last October 30, when this bill was introduced. I said: "The prime object of the bill is to create a balance in the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants. To do this, the bill sets out plainly what both parties may expect and what they must offer in return in language that the average tenant and average landlord can fully understand."

I also pointed out that "the Residential Tenancy Commission's overall objective is to provide straightforward, uncomplicated and informal methods for landlords and tenants to resolve their difficulties. It provides one-stop shopping for all tenants' and landlords' concerns. Most disputes between the two parties which are now resolved by the courts will be under the jurisdiction of the commission." That was at the time this bill was introduced. The events that are soon going to unfold, I think, will vindicate that position.

At this time I would like point out and have it in the record—and I concede that it's probably unusual for a minister to do this—that the bill is a better bill for the amendments made by the Liberal Party, particularly the amendments put forward by the member for St. George and the member for Waterloo North.

Mr. McClellan: I don't see them thanking you for that compliment.

Mr. MacDonald: If it's a better bill, where is the member for St. George?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is a fair bill. It is one, quite frankly, that was filibustered throughout by the third party. It was filibustered even until two o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Warner: We fought for the tenants.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I tell you, out of committee of the whole today, I am very angry at the accusation that was made about this minister, that this minister had deliberately set out to introduce a new type of inquisitorial proceeding in this province. The accusation was made that I was attempting, under the guise of this bill, to bring in the system of justice and the jurisprudence used in the republic of France—which is entirely different from common law and the justice system in this country.

Those accusations were so patently untrue that the person who made them had to read from relatively obscure tomes. I never did make up my mind as to whether it was a final get-even with me or it was an attempt to stretch the clock beyond two o'clock, which would have effectively killed the bill for this session. I still don't know.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you save your paranoia for some other place?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In summary, this is a good bill. This is a very good bill. It will have a balance in the marketplace in probably the most personal relationship there ever is between people on opposite sides—the landlord and the tenant.

In this government—and I think I am speaking for other people not of my party or not of the government who voted for sections of this bill—we wanted to take out the adversarial relationship between landlord and tenant. We set out to do it, and we will do it. We wanted to end the relationship between landlord and tenant being constantly hoisted up as something that must be controversial. We cannot have a decent type of accommodation for people who choose to rent in this province, if we are going to insist in an arrogant and rather Draconian manner—that's one of the member's favourite words—that everything must always be adversarial or brought forward into some kind of controversy or demonstration.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on for some time—

Mr. Martel: Go ahead. Take a long time.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I may very well. But I keep my word; so I won't.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: That is the third time the minister has indicated we attempted to filibuster beyond one o'clock. He also said we almost took it past two o'clock. I ask the government House leader to rise in his place and indicate to his colleagues that there was no agreement which indicated we would get done at one o'clock. I told the government House leader we would have only one speaker and we would try to get done by one o'clock. The bill didn't come in until 11:50 a.m. I indicated to the government House leader that we would be done in less than three hours. It took two hours and 10 minutes. For that minister to get up and make charges that we could not keep our word in an agreement arrived at with the government House leader is not factual, and I would ask the government House leader to correct the record.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, just to set the matter straight: I made no accusation. If you will read the record, I talked about filibustering all the way through the committee, even up to one o'clock today. Then I went on and spoke about my feelings—my feelings, not about the House leader of the party. If you look at the record, I have been exceedingly careful about any accusations.

To conclude, I find it very interesting at this late moment that the New Democratic Party is going to vote against this bill. Mr. Speaker, do you know what voting against this bill means? It means they don't believe that a tenant who can't have his accommodation fixed or maintained up to standards should have the right and benefit of this commission to seize the rents and to force the landlord to do it. That's what voting against it means.

I look now directly at the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba), who delivered a very impassioned, eloquent and, mind you, very accurate brief before the committee. It surely means to him that the very remedies he asked for small landlords, for the little people, so they could have quick justice and not be in the position where they were virtually bankrupted by delay after delay, will never come about.

I find it extremely disconcerting that, after all this time, nothing has changed. In the whole debate this morning in committee of the whole, there was not one new idea, new word, new verb, new anything.

I am very proud to be the minister who will be on record as having taken this bill through the House. I played only a very minor role. As I mentioned before, my predecessor should receive the lion's share of the credit; also the legal staff, particularly Mr. Fram and Mr. Beecroft of the Ministry of the Attorney General and our own solicitor, Mr. Kumer.

I would like to pay tribute to each and every member of the social development committee and of the general government committee, and to all those who substituted, to all those who showed up, who gave up so many Tuesdays and Wednesdays, and Mondays, and weeks on end, who sat there and were polite when the public came in to make presentations; no matter how frustrated or tired they were, they kept coming back for more. I really think the proceedings of that committee demonstrate the ability of each member of this House to take on a very arduous duty and, no matter what the obstacles, to overcome in the end.

An hon. member: That's the system you call filibustering.

[7:00]

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Drea's motion for third reading of Bill 163, which was agreed to on the following vote:

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

COMMUNITY RESOURCE CENTRES

249. Mr. Duksza: Would the Ministry of Correctional Services table in the House figures, for each of the years 1975 to 1979 inclusive, pertaining to the community resources centres operated under the Ministry of Correctional Services as to (1) the number and location of these centres, (2) the number of residents, (3) the number of available beds, (4) the length of any waiting list for those beds, (5) the mean, mode, and median length of resident stay in such centres, (6) the discharge rate to (i) correctional facilities and (ii) home care, (7) the mean number of staff per centre, (8) the total number of staff involved in the actual operation of the centres, (9) the standards or regulations concerning the operation of these centres, (10) the penalties in-involved for breaching such standards and/or regulations, (11) the number of persons assigned to inspect for conformity to these regulations or standards? (Tabled June 8, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Walker: More time is required to compile a complete answer to this question. An answer will be filed on or about July 18, 1979.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

257. Mr. Philip: Will the Attorney General table a detailed breakdown of the cost of the program he announced in the House on May 24, 1979, designed to deal with the increased number of deaths and injuries which occurred on Ontario roads in the first three months of this year? (Tabled June 11, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We expect to have the information to answer this question by July 1.

---

THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1979

The House resumed at 8:30 p.m.

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the report of the standing members' services committee, dated June 18, 1979, re legislative library.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I believe the member for Lakeshore had adjourned the debate.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It was the member for St. George.

Mr. Acting Speaker: It is the member for St. George on the 27th order. Is that correct?

Mr. Lawlor: It's not the Ombudsman?

Mr. Nixon: We'll just be a minute; got to fix up the library.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, in introducing the original motion I referred to the problems of the library in obtaining material from commissions of inquiry, and as you are aware, we placed an amendment motion since our first motion created some problems with the archivist.

The motion before you is that simplified procedures be established by the government to ensure the legislative library receive automatically and as soon as possible after publication, two copies of all published research, public briefs and submissions, published back-up documentation and published reports from commissions of inquiry related to the government of Ontario.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mrs. Campbell moved the adoption of the recommendations contained in the report of the standing members' services committee dated June 18, 1979, re legislative library.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I wonder, now that we have carried the 27th order, if we could have agreement to discharge the 25th order from the Order Paper.

Agreed to.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the recommendations contained in the sixth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Now I think I am where I thought we were some time before.

Mr. Lawlor: That is where I thought I was too.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think we all know where the member for Lakeshore is.

Mr. Lawlor: I see the two basic ministers are here and that is appealing.

Mr. Nixon: I don't find it appealing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This happens at the end of a long session.

Mr. Lawlor: A former nominee for the presidency of the United States thought that St. Paul was appealing but Norman Vincent Peale was appalling. It is appealing to have the minister here.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the honourable member will permit—

Mr. Lawlor: Are you here again?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Always here. If the member for Lakeshore came more frequently he would know.

Mr. McClellan: I think you should go out and address the crowd.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the particular report to which the honourable member for Lakeshore wants to address himself as chairman contains a number of recommendations and of course the report itself calls for a detailed discussion of each recommendation and some vote on each recommendation. It was felt that perhaps it would be more convenient to deal with this report if the House resolved itself into committee of the whole. Then the chairman of the committee could call each recommendation, members could feel free to discuss them and they wouldn't be restricted to that one-time-only rule with respect to debate in the House itself.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Hon. Mr. Welch moves the recommendations of the sixth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman be referred to committee of the whole House for consideration.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee of the whole.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Consideration of the recommendations contained in the sixth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mr. Chairman: I believe the orderly fashion in which to deal with this report would be to take it section by section now that we are in committee.

Mr. Lawlor: Now that we are in committee I do not intend to be truncated. I have an initial statement, whether it was one way or another didn't matter. I wish to proceed briefly, with your indulgence, in order to set up a basic outline as the chairman of that committee, which is not unknown in committee of the whole House, particularly with respect to estimates. So if you would permit me to proceed—

Mr. Chairman: I would certainly ask if the committee would be agreeable to the member for Lakeshore making a few general comments.

Agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: Others may wish to make succinct general comments too.

The Ombudsman's office itself and the committee in tandem have until this time in our history been groping their way, trying to find the right dimension, trying to get the right response. By "right" I mean right. There is a certain tenor, there is a certain centrality to the office of the Ombudsman which is not as yet recognized in this province.

Members of the committee are privileged in many ways. They have travelled abroad to see how other Ombudsmen work, what the condition of that office very well might be, and, if it is to be efficacious, must be. We have been frustrated in the past. I would say even bitterly disappointed with respect to the response. On the part of the ministry, there has not been a proper assessment and weighing and giving cognizance to the office of the Ombudsman. Members of the House haven't responded.

Let's put it simply and do this quickly. If an Ombudsman in Europe, particularly in Sweden where it all started well over 100 years ago, was rejected by a minister of the crown and he was adamant in his purpose, either one or the other would have to give way. If this persisted on the part of the government, the Ombudsman would resign; he would simply say no. It is a unique, different, sensitive and hyperbolic office, if you will. It is totally different from anything else. When it begins to get through to the members of this assembly what this thing is all about, then we will begin to make an iota of progress in this particular field.

As members of the committee, we have been clued in, we think, in no arrogant way, but simply to try to inform. We have been subjected to a certain education at public expense and we would like to communicate that position. So we have been groping our way, session after session since 1975, when these reports began to be handed down. Last year, as you all know, the minister's didn't show up at all. That was the last word. If that happened tonight, you wouldn't have a committee, let's be frank about it. We are not prepared to be patsies, to serve purposes in a minatory way from hour to hour. We have a job to do. If you don't like it, we don't have to do it. I like reading books and would prefer to take the summer off for that particular purpose. I even like to write on the odd occasion too.

Tonight the real issue before us is, do we want to leave things as they are or do we want the office of the Ombudsman for the province of Ontario to work? It is as simple as that. It is what it has come to as things are at present set up. In order to underline that, we wrote in obituary columns, etched in black. I won't read it. You have all seen it. It has been read already in the House. It is how we feel. It is our side of it.

We aren't putting on airs. Members of this House are busy. They haven't time to read all the reports. None of us can pretend to be able to survey a great deal of stuff that comes across our desk, so we can't make exorbitant demands upon our fellows in this regard. Nevertheless, the office exists. It is fairly expensive and it serves the fundamental purpose. If you haven't a fundamental belief in it, let's get rid of it. That is what it has come to, as far as the committee is concerned.

I won't take a great deal of time. I would like to inform you a bit as to how we regard our role vis-à-vis the Ombudsman for the purposes of setting this debate in place. As we come up against the seven recommendations, we insist upon a vote on every one to get the feel, the empathy of this House with respect to this. What in blazes we are supposed to be doing is under some scrutiny and some circumspection by numerous members of this House who are ignorant of most purposes. They won't even take the time, as I see among those members who are not here, thank heaven, to read the report or to give very much attention to what it is that this committee is all about.

The report tonight is the sixth report. In the fifth report we submitted to the House, we said:

"There are some who would urge the committee of the Legislature, when all things are equal in a case, to support the recommendation of the Ombudsman, notwithstanding the appropriateness or adequacy of the government organization's position. The committee cannot agree with this view. It envisions many occasions where, notwithstanding that the governmental organizations decide not to implement the Ombudsman's recommendations, that decision is nevertheless adequate and appropriate. It is open for this committee to agree with the decision of the governmental organization, just as it is for the committee to support the Ombudsman's recommendation in any given case.

"The Ombudsman in this province must recognize that his recommendations will not always win the day. Likewise, government organizations must realize they cannot consistently deny Ombudsman recommendations and not endure appropriate consequences through this committee and the Legislature."

That is the vein. We do try to stand back objectively. We do not consider ourselves a court of appeal. We will not constitute ourselves as such. Nevertheless, when both parties appear before us, the ministry on one side, and the Ombudsman opposite, and engage in colloquy in order to bring out and make salient the facts in the situation, then we have a certain role to weigh the two. The previous Ombudsman expected to make us an imprimatur. We're independent human beings. We think we have some competence with respect to the roles people and these offices play and we're not rubber stamps for anybody. Otherwise, we would lose our dignity.

We try to be impartial and objective. There are many times, I want the members to know, we have said to the Ombudsman, "No, we can't go along with you." We've set forth the reasons in a fair and objective way and trust he accedes to that. When we do side with him, we side with him purposively. We've always sided with him unanimously. We expect the government in that context and condition, unless they can produce very coercive reasoning on the contrary, to stand to go along even if it runs a little bit against the grain, because the Ombudsman's office is the only office in the whole of this province which is totally unique as being the child of this body. It is not the child of the government qua, but the child of this Legislature, beholding to this Legislature. It is the only body of that particular kind. We want this taken seriously. It hasn't been up to this date and it's high time it was.

There were nine complaints of the Ombudsman not implemented by the government organization in the third and fourth reports, of which only three are coming to us tonight. There are not even three, because this morning, Lord bless us, and quite miraculously, one of them got solved.

Mr. McClellan: By emergency mail.

Mr. Grande: All of a sudden, miracles.

Mr. Lawlor: The incredible case of Aladdin's lamp which made nothing magic. There was a lamp the Workmen's Compensation Board wasn't willing to supply which we felt it should supply to an injured workman at a cost of two hundred and some-odd dollars. They were only willing to pay $25. We say: "What nonsense is this?" It was solved this morning, so I won't dwell upon it.

I got a communication, I'm sure all the members on the committee did, saying the Workmen's Compensation Board had finally caved in, if you will, or had given credence to what was being said. That lamp has cost $10,000 in terms of our time, in terms of Workmen's Compensation Board time and ministries' time. It's the most expensive lamp, as I say, since the Arabian nights.

We are dealing with two cases tonight under that first series of cases. The second one is in our sixth report referring to the fourth and fifth reports of the Ombudsman. There are seven cases in the New Democratic Party, and we've distributed them among ourselves. We want to finish this debate tonight. We want a vote before 10:30. We want to know where we stand in this committee going into the summer and our meetings at that time, because there is another report coming from the Ombudsman's office, nearing fruition at the present moment. We're delighted to get ahead with it provided that we have some sense that it'll be of some value.

I had hoped the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) would be here tonight to say a word with respect to his intervention. The Workmen's Compensation Board asked for his opinion as to why we were interfering in the way we were and what suzerainty we had in this particular regard. The Attorney General replied in a way that was adverse to the work of the committee. We reinterpreted his judgement by saying he didn't mean what he said; namely, that the way in which the last recommendations were brought into this House last fall didn't call for adoption. We have changed the wording and say we call for adoption, which obviates it. If this House approves tonight these various things, we think the ministry and the agency over which he has dispositive powers, ought to accede.

I would be the last to push another iota. Where does it go beyond that if you don't? I would ask you to be gracious enough to think that we had the intelligence to be able to arrive unanimously at these decisions and that the Ombudsman himself has the integrity and sense of office that he will have set forth the basic premise which we have affirmed, even if the ministry finds it a little unpalatable to go along gently with these things. Otherwise, there's no sanction for the office of the Ombudsman as such and that's what he lacks fundamentally. This House is the area where the final reckoning comes, and it's through the instrumentality.

One word about the committee before I sit down. I've said it before. It's like Voltaire—if the committee didn't exist you'd have to invent it. If this committee feels that it's ignored, demeaned, abnegated, goes off in a fit of paranoia, which we're quite likely to do over the whole situation, you'll have to set up another committee within a few months; because this House, as such, cannot take the reports of the Ombudsman directly and stand and argue the premises.

The government has seen fit to ignore, reject the position that the Ombudsman has taken, having gone through the office of the Premier—and may I stop there. The Premier of this province (Mr. Davis), in the dozens, literally dozens of cases in which various agencies have rejected the Ombudsman's position, hasn't in a single instance acceded to the Ombudsman over and against the agency or the minister. I think he has some kind of responsibility to look at these matters, to set up perhaps a little committee in his own office which may advise him. Carte blanche—blindly, blankly, mindlessly—he sends out the same form letter every time: "I don't give credence to what it is you're doing and I don't intend to do a damned thing about it." If you think that's giving any weight to the position of the Ombudsman or enhancing the prestige—which is the central, critical and necessary thing to that office, that form of recognition—if you think he's making any contribution in this regard, be befuddled. He ain't.

That doesn't help a bit either, does it? I've spoken enough. We're trying to get this debate over with.

Mr. Chairman: I thank the member for Lakeshore for his general comments. As we are in committee I will now call for the nine recommendations in order.

On recommendation 1:

Mr. Lawlor: The first recommendation has to do with what we will call the Macdonald case, Dr. Macdonald. I don't know if he's here tonight. I know he had an engagement. In any case, it has a certain notoriety. I would like to give, right off the bat, some credit to Dr. Macdonald. He is one of those few people who, demanding a lever, wants to move the world, just a little bit, almost imperceptibly. And he sticks to it.

In 1968 he was refused permission by a hospital in Toronto to enter that hospital as a physician—he's a surgeon—and to have access for his patients to that hospital. This is a widespread phenomenon. Most of them are too timorous to attempt to meet the powers-that-be, the Frankenstein establishment that stares with baleful glances at you and can place your professional career in some jeopardy. Macdonald doesn't back down. He sticks to it. One has to give great credit to the odd individual in this society who is not prepared to back up, and who fights it. He has been through the divisional court, courts of appeal, everything he has to in order to get to the Ombudsman.

Just one other point on this: We don't mention names—the Macdonald name will be the only name we will hear tonight. We're very careful to suppress names of institutions—the hospital in this instance—but the names of the complainants—the people who have been to the Ombudsman's office, it's neither here nor there. There are principles involved here and human beings who have been bitterly hurt, one way or another. The whole purpose of the office is to rectify these human hurts, and a single hurt brings a whole society into question, or could very easily do so. That is why the office exists.

I think the best thing to do in this case, without spending too much time on it, is simply to read what the recommendation is, what it is we will be voting on.

"Accordingly, the committee recommends that the Minister of Health consider what changes should be made to the Public Hospitals Act, and section 47 in particular, including changes in the quorum provisions and the length of membership respecting the hospital appeal board, to give better effect to the principle of a widely distributed membership of the hospital appeal board.

"Further, that the Ministry of Health cause an inquiry to be made into the provisions of the Public Hospitals Act to identify and correct any acts flowing from sections 44 to 50 of the act which may be improperly discriminatory."

I think that is worded in a moderate, almost overtly rational, fashion. The Ombudsman is not asking for the moon. He is saying that on the hearing in question all members of the board were involved with hospital boards as members thereof at one time or another. None of them was neutral with respect to having a pre-empted interest in it. They claim there is a certain prejudice involved with all that. The Ombudsman agrees.

By the time the hearing was finished, very much like this House, there were only three people left. The claim is the quorum of three was not representative of the thing. The fear is that in these public hospital boards a certain clique, a certain little cabal, will form, with their preconceived notion, serving the interests of their own friends and cousins, mothers, brothers and aunts—which is exactly what happened in that hospital. The chief surgeon hired all his friends to fill the positions.

Here numerous doctors are excluded. There is no question of their competency—nothing like that. They are excluded from serving on that hospital staff in any capacity, or bringing their patients in. Ipso facto, it excludes them from the same rates—in other words, they're second-class doctors. Those beggars, those doctors, who are on the inside, can charge greater fees because of the prestige attached to their being within the narrow establishment. They can mulct, by the way, your whole hospital scheme by being able to do so. You should take that into account when you are trying to save money instead of closing Lakeshore.

This discrimination between the two classes of doctors in this province is a great drain on the Treasury. What is being asked for is a simple change in legislation. You have seen what Grange says of the law society. I won't read it into the record, it would take too much time. But it should be broader, less discriminatory. It is not even being said that, in fact, —well maybe it is—this particular board, or the boards generally are questionable in this particular regard. It's just that they lay themselves open to that charge. In terms of the justice of the province, that must not be allowed to prevail. So you are being asked to alter or amend your legislation; probably to expand the boards somewhat and to see that people, who have not the in-built, pre-empted interest, sit on those boards at a fair hearing.

That's all we are asking you to do. I'd be most interested to hear what you have to say about it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Chairman, just briefly, I'd like to comment on the matter.

This question interestingly enough is one that has, in one way or another, been before me as long as I have been in public life, having been an alderman on North York council. The physician in question came to visit members of council some years ago. I took part, as was pointed out in the House one day a few months ago, in a vote on a motion put to council. In its own way, it contributed to the appointment of the Grange commission and the investigation carried out by that learned gentleman.

I want to offer two proposals tonight with regard to the concerns outlined by the committee. I don't intend to read into the record some of the contrary arguments to those heard by the committee. Clearly there is a matter of concern here on the part of some, particularly the members of the committee.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I will speak to the two matters related to Health at once rather than the one. Each of the two recommendations stems from the Ombudsman's perception that certain provisions of the Public Hospitals Act can or may result in situations which may be characterized as being improperly discriminatory. Those provisions relate to the composition and the quorum of the hospital board and to the system for appointment of physicians to hospital medical staff. I realize that the adjective "improperly" in the term "improperly discriminatory" is the operative word here. Virtually every power of decision obviously carries with it an element of discrimination when you make one choice as opposed to another or others.

It is important I think to note that the Ombudsman did not allege that any member of the hospital appeal board has ever acted improperly, and I have frankly—

Mr. Eakins: It just says maybe.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well, that's the thing. I think it is important for the people who serve under the chairmanship of Mr. Tobias that there should be no doubt at all about their credentials and honour. The Ombudsman has not alleged that any member of that board has, at any time, ever acted improperly. As the minister responsible for the board, I have no reason to believe that such a case has ever occurred.

In spite of this, and acknowledging the concerns of the Ombudsman and the board, I am looking at the legislation which prescribes the composition of the board, and their appointments at the present time are at pleasure, to ensure that all interests, including hospitals, physicians and the general public, are and will be fully represented both on the board itself and in any quorum of the board.

I am also considering the related issue of whether it is appropriate that a minimum number of the hospital appeal board members should not have past experience as a member of a hospital board and, pending final decision as to what legislative changes are appropriate, if any—and we may be able to do it in the next rearranging of the membership of the board—I have sought and I have obtained the assurance of the chairman of the hospital appeal board that the full board from now on will sit on all cases, except where the parties otherwise agree, or where a member must disqualify himself by reason of a conflict of interest.

In addition I want to point out as well that the Ombudsman did not allege that there had been improper discrimination on the part of a hospital in connection with an application for appointment to its medical staff. Again, I won't take the time of committee tonight to read into the record the divisional court decision that looks at—

Mr. Lawlor: They can only follow the law.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and comments on the structure as it exists in this province and exists in most jurisdictions throughout the world. But he did not allege that there had been improper discrimination on the part of a hospital in connection with an application for appointment to its medical staff. Rather, what the Ombudsman indicated was that the system creates, in his opinion, an opportunity for improper discrimination.

As I see it, the difficulty is that, as was recognized by the Supreme Court—I'm quoting from the court—"The selection of a medical staff is an art, the development of which arises out of long study and continuous involvement with the practice of medicine in a hospital." The practice of an art does not often lend itself to external regulation.

Nevertheless, what I propose to do is to obtain a comprehensive review or information as to what systems of medical staff appointments prevail in other jurisdictions. I intend to get this from the Ontario Council of Health; I will ask them to do the review. I believe that such information will be of great assistance in formulating an appropriate approach to resolving this problem identified by the Ombudsman. It's a matter which then perhaps in the fall, when we get to my estimates—I'm not sure whether the material can be pulled together by that time—we could properly use some of my estimates time in the fall of this year in further discussion.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the participation of the Minister of Health in this debate. I think it is important that while we have referred to a specific case we realize we are speaking about a practice which exists at present. The case itself is really there in order to explain the recommendation rather than to take a position vis-à-vis that particular case. The committee has taken some pains to clarify that position, if one looks at page 11 of the report.

I am a little sad to hear that the minister is now going to look further at this matter and that he has not at this point undertaken any real study of specific changes, which is what we have asked, but rather that he is indeed going to be consulting to see what might result by reason of this recommendation.

I suppose the Minister of Health has had a considerable number of other matters before him, and one can understand that this may not have had top priority. But I do express some concern that there isn't something more forthcoming from the minister with reference to this recommendation at this time.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Aside from the individual case here, the question of privileges is a perplexing one and the Supreme Court has gone into it in ruling on a particular case. We have to bear in mind not just the question of the individual physician and the individual hospital, but also the total health needs of an area. It seems to me the board of a hospital carries an onerous weight in ensuring they meet the health needs of the community and at the same time do not overtax—and this can certainly happen in the privilege-granting procedure—the facilities they have available to meet those needs.

I gave an example and in essence what I was saying is I want to ask the council of health to canvass the issue and come back to us with some indication of how it is done in other jurisdictions and whether there is perhaps a better way. My physician lives in Don Mills, as I do.

Mr. McClellan: Is that the one who opted out?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, this is the one who opted in.

Mrs. Campbell: Opted in. That is not the same one you talked about the other day.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Who did I talk about the other day?

Mr. Chairman: Order. The honourable minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is a problem I had with some person up in the gallery. He lives in Don Mills, I live in Don Mills, and yet he has privileges at Scarborough Centenary Hospital, nine or 10 miles away, I stay with that physician knowing if at any point he has to admit me for elective surgical procedures, I am going to be admitted to Scarborough Centenary, eight, nine or 10 miles away from my home.

There are really two points here. First, I don't think one can dismiss the fact that the individual has to make some choices; the physician has to make some choices and the patient does as well. Second, the hospital board, on the advice of its medical advisory committee and taking into account the best interests of the community, must balance their resources and the skills available to meet the health needs.

Mr. Lawlor: As I stand here and as I heard the minister, he has under very serious consideration necessary amendments to give some kind of direction and meaning to what the Ombudsman of this province stipulates, and we can anticipate seeing some changes in the legislation in the fall.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With regard to the first matter, the full board will sit on all cases.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister has already promised that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The full board will sit on all cases unless there is some reason for a member to declare a conflict of interest. In the meantime, we are looking at the makeup of the board. The members are all appointed at pleasure at the present time, and we will consider whether we need some legislative changes or perhaps a reordering of appointments to give it a broader background.

Mr. Lawlor: This is a typical case. It has damn well gone long enough and far enough. This is not an ordinary debate. The minister can take his stance. He was elected and he is the government. He may exercise quasi-dictatorial powers over all ranges of things and suffer the bloody consequences and I trust he does. But in this instance this is neutral ground. This is where we come together. If he does not want to come together, that is fine.

The Ombudsman's office is something we find accord with not something we quarrel over. The minister should come here tonight knowing where he stands. This is one of the oldest cases in the books. It is in the fourth report of the Ombudsman where he sets the whole thing. The minister has sent before us his legal representative full of his cavils and hair-splittings, we have had our conversations, et cetera, and the minister comes here tonight saying he is not willing—as I understand him—even to go so far as to say tentatively that this legislation will be changed in the fall.

[9:15]

What I think we should hear from the minister, in full responsibility, is that he is prepared to alter that legislation and to bring in something in line with and in accord with what the Ombudsman's office of this province has requested of him and which the committee unanimously, including his own members, has said is just and fair in the circumstances.

To posture to an inbuilt little group—the minister quotes the divisional court. Courts are bound by the law; their hands are tied. But the Globe and Mail ain't; it calls it cronyism. Take a look at the editorial. Please be a little more forthcoming on this particular issue.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Do you want to govern by editorial? Is that how you would govern? By editorial?

Mr. McClellan: Don't be so stupid.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, I feel this recommendation should be supported, and I am willing to support its adoption. We are not asking for a finding as to which interpretation is correct. The committee is of the opinion, as stated in the report, that an examination of the issues of staffing procedures of public hospitals and the composition of the hospital appeal board is necessary. I think it is a good recommendation, and I hope it is supported.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in favour of the acceptance of the recommendation as well. If you have your report before you, on pages eight, nine and 10 there is a fairly extensive reference to the evidence taken by the committee, based on the complaints brought forward by Dr. Claude Macdonald. Many of us have listened to Dr. Macdonald in the past and know of the problem he has experienced over a good many years in getting the right to perform his professional services in a public hospital in Metropolitan Toronto.

We are not here to argue about the merits of his specific case, but part of it was closely associated with the recommendation that is before us. As was pointed out in the report on page 10, the reference there says: "We can only conclude that the new minister and his advisers either did not like the recommendations or missed the point entirely." That is a quote taken from information based on the Grange commission report.

It is sort of a nice point as to the composition of the review committee, but the very idea that the people sitting on that committee had almost—at least it appeared a possibility—preformed concepts as to what kinds of doctors as well as what numbers of doctors should be admitted, really has brought forward the feeling that an inequity, or an injustice, has been perpetrated for these many years.

It is difficult to know whether anything this Legislature can do would make up for what has happened in the past, not only to Dr. Macdonald, but also to other doctors who have been the subject of questions and debate here for, I would say, seven years and perhaps longer.

The recommendation is a clear one. I do not think it is going to fully answer the problem that has been experienced. The minister this afternoon was talking about our public hospitals being subject to the ruling of boards elected from their membership. He knows, and we all know, just how tenuous that concept of democracy is.

When we look at the people who form the membership of the hospital boards—perhaps this has changed in some hospitals but, in the ones I am aware of, probably most of them are the wives of doctors or the people who have some very special interest in quality medical and hospital care, but from a very specific point of view.

It is almost like the debate here tonight; you cannot expect all the members of the Legislature to share with many of the other members what they consider to be the great importance of this debate. The same thing happens when we are electing the boards of public hospitals based in a very narrow constituency. It concerns me that we have gone these many years flooding public dollars into what we all understand to be outstanding world-class facilities but still governed in a way that in my view is anything but democratic.

Mr. Roy: I want to make some brief comments on this. I have been sitting here listening to the debate and, of course, the name Dr. Claude Macdonald is one that I am personally familiar with from the days when I was Health critic for our party. I just want to say this: Dr. Macdonald's case is not the only one. I can recall another doctor who fought it all the way—

Mr. Nixon: He went to the States.

Mr. Roy: He's gone to the States now; he really laboured on this and I had all the sympathy in the world with him. The message I want to give to the minister in this is that there are not many professions today that have the respect of the public like the medical profession. More and more public pressure is coming on all professional bodies for accountability to the public—that they don't live in a vacuum, in a world of their own where they govern their own affairs; there's some accountability to the public. But the doctors are in a special situation as compared to all other professions. I compare theirs, for instance, to the profession of law.

If you graduated as a lawyer and then you were told for example, that a limited number of lawyers would have the privilege of practising out of a courthouse, I can imagine how the lawyers would tolerate a situation like that. There's some similarity. Here we have a situation, an anomaly where a situation where you have a public hospital, publicly funded, taxpayers are paying for it and yet a part of the profession can dictate which doctors can have privileges out of that particular hospital.

I see the minister shaking his head, but that's what it boils down to.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is why you have the appeal boards.

Mr. Roy: Yes, but I'll get to that. What I am saying to the minister is that it is an anomaly—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: An appeal means you might win or you might lose.

Mr. Roy: —that I have difficulty understanding myself, that a public institution such as a hospital, paid for by taxpayers' money, should be limited to a limited number of doctors—

Mr. Nixon: Most of them opted out.

Mr. Roy: —and that limitation, of course, clearly affects their capacity to earn income.

If there is a situation like that, surely the minister must understand that those who decide who shall have privileges and who shall not must not only act, but must be seen to be acting, with the greatest justice and equity possible. This is the basis of these recommendations here. I fail to see how a succession of Health ministers have failed to act on this.

I can recall when Dr. Potter was the Minister of Health. He couldn't see conflict. I can recall one time in another area in the dealing with the opticians in this province how there was a terrible conflict on a particular board.

The point I want to make to the minister is that surely after the Ombudsman has looked at this and made the recommendation; after an all-party committee has looked at it, based on some of the recommendations of the Grange report; if it's not clearly obvious to the minister as an elected official in this province in 1979 when he is dealing with public hospitals that those who decide who will have privileges and those who will not must not only act with justice and equity but must be seen to be doing so. That is not now the case and that is the basis of these recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think in my earlier comments I acknowledged that and in looking at the membership of the board I made the comment that—or let me put it this way. I certainly don't believe and I don't think the Ombudsman alleged that improper discrimination has been applied by the board.

Mr. Roy: You don't even have to go that far.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I acknowledge fully the concern expressed about whether there is a possibility of this occurring and I have indicated that the board's composition will be reviewed, particularly since the membership of the board is at pleasure, and perhaps we can restructure it.

I want to point out that the physician to whom you refer who has gone to the United States won his appeal at the board.

Mr. Lane: I really hadn't intended to speak at this particular time, but being a newer member of the committee I probably haven't experienced the frustrations that some of the other committee members have experienced in having had no response to former reports from this committee. I personally sat and listened to the testimony provided on this particular recommendation and I thought the recommendation was good. I also think the minister is making a commitment in saying it is a concern of his and he's prepared to see what can be done about it.

I doubt very much if either one of the other parties were in power—Heaven forbid—that they would be prepared to make an immediate judgement on something as long-ranging as this particular recommendation is and with the load that the present minister has on his plate. I'm happy that the minister was here to respond to it and to say that he would look at it further and that we could talk about it this fall when he debates his estimates. Personally, the minister has satisfied me.

Recommendation 1 concurred in.

On recommendation 2:

Mr. Lawlor: We're jumping the next one, which is 76, which has to do with heat lamps.

That's been settled as I indicated earlier. The next one is number 79 which has to do with a Workmen's Compensation Board case.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I understand that number 2 was resolved, so you're looking at recommendation 3.

Recommendation 2 concurred in.

On recommendation 3:

Mr. Grande: I would like to read the recommendation in the sixth report of the select committee of the Ombudsman. It states: "The committee recommends that the Legislature require the Workmen's Compensation Board to implement the recommendation of the Ombudsman made to the Workmen's Compensation Board, pursuant to section 22(3) of the Ombudsman Act, in complaint 79 of this fourth report, by reconsidering its appeal board decision of March 4, 1976, and granting entitlement to the complainant, on the basis of an aggravation of a pre-existing back disability, to temporary total benefits from September 4, 1974, until such time as it is established that the complainant was medically fit to return to employment within the complainant's capabilities."

I really don't think that we need to go into a tremendous amount of detail regarding these cases. The painstaking detail with which we look at each one of these cases on the Ombudsman's select committee perhaps should be enough to satisfy those members of the government, the members of the Liberal Party, and the members of this party that are on the committee that we don't make a decision lightly.

As the member for Lakeshore has pointed out, we go through pains to make sure that the Ombudsman and the governmental organization produce as much evidence as we deem fit to have on the table in order for us to come to a particular determination on each one of these cases that will be presented. What has happened is that the committee feels that on this particular decision the Workmen's Compensation Board happens to be wrong. To put it the other way, the Ombudsman is correct. The Ombudsman has carried out the investigation according to the Ombudsman Act. He has followed all the steps and all the procedures and has found all the evidence and presented it before us. The Workmen's Compensation Board did the very same thing. However, its presentation was certainly not the one that we decided to adopt because its presentation was frankly not convincing.

I want to point out the reasons I and the members of the select committee on the Ombudsman support the Ombudsman in this case. Let me put it very simply: The workwoman injured herself on the job. She slipped and fell on her hand, wrist, elbows, buttocks and back. She went to a chiropractor and the chiropractor definitely stated she should not go back to work. This woman was in continuous treatment under the chiropractor.

We have evidence on record from a surgeon who has said this woman indeed suffers as a result of the accident she had. In other words, we have evidence from a chiropractor. I know the Workmen's Compensation Board somehow just does not accept evidence from a chiropractor. I could never understand it, but somehow the chiropractor is at the bottom of the totem pole.

The evidence from the surgeon ought to tell the Workmen's Compensation Board that this is serious; that somehow it had made a mistake in not granting this person the benefits she ought to receive for the time she was out of work and that she was attempting to rehabilitate herself to return to the work force.

What has happened consistently, though, through the different levels of appeal, is that the Workmen's Compensation Board went to its surgical consultant, and the surgical consultant said she should not receive any benefits. "The decision you made before is fine."

I hope the minister does see some of the surgical consultants' reports and what they say. I was astonished—as an aside to this case—to read a paragraph in one of those reports which said, "I have reviewed the evidence on file. This is the position—"

Can you give us any reason why you arrived at that decision, or at least can you give us any reasons why the evidence the surgeon brings to you, the evidence that you have from the chiropractor before this board, is not good enough? No, the surgical consultant somehow acts as if he is a god within the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Let me assure you if you haven't found that out yet—and I think you're finding out pretty quickly what is going on there—the surgical consultant seems to be the appeal board; and the people on the appeal board don't seem to be questioning at all what their surgical consultant says to them. They just accept it, and that's that.

This is the problem in this case. The surgical consultant of the Workmen's Compensation Board reigned supreme, and any other kind of evidence brought before the board was rejected. Why? Because the board continuously attempted to say that this person because the wrist is okay, is now recovered. They didn't talk about the low back at all, and the pain the person has in the low back. But because the wrist somehow is okay, is normal, she should have recovered and should have been back on the work force. "So therefore we are not going to give you any benefits since we decided that you should be in the work force."

If the Workmen's Compensation Board, for the sake of consistency, is not giving this worker the rights and the benefits she rightfully deserves, I think it is your job, at this particular level, to intervene and to say to the Workmen's Compensation Board, "Look at the evidence again, take a look at it and make a decision." The decision has obviously to be a positive one, because this committee, the Ombudsman committee, and the Ombudsman are on the same side on this issue.

Mr. Nixon: I just want to speak very briefly, because I am concerned about these recommendations.

I intend to support them, but with some hesitation because I do so entirely on the basis of the recommendation of the committee. The Minister of Labour knows it's an all-party committee so I am sure his colleagues will support them as well.

I don't know whether the minister considers the decision of this House binding on the board. I think under the law it is not binding, and one of the documents in this report is a letter from the board saying they have considered the recommendation of the select committee and have rejected it.

It concerns me that the matter of a heat lamp should go to the Ombudsman, the Ombudsman's committee and the Legislature of the province of Ontario. With some levity it has been indicated that this heat lamp the gentleman has now is probably a $10,000 heat lamp, and I would suggest to you it is probably more like an $80,000 heat lamp. So I feel that the process is a little bit wacky, to say the least.

It concerns me also, and we are talking here of very specific recommendations, that the category for payment be changed from temporary partial disability for a period from March 2, 1968, to May 22, 1968. That change might mean 10 per cent, perhaps it's a bit more than that, in the actual payment for that period of time. I am sure the committee must consider that a matter of principle and on that basis it appears in this report. Yet it is only on that basis that we could imagine why a recommendation, now being dealt with by the whole of the Legislature, for a change in status to increase temporary partial disability for really just a few weeks should be subject of debate here. It's the final lever, the final crunch in the whole Ombudsman's system to force the ministry to do what the Ombudsman says is right.

What I am saying is I think we as a House are going to have to not only support these recommendations, but then go on to give further consideration as to how the procedure, coming from the Ombudsman's decision, is going to be dealt with by the committee and by the House, and then by the ministry in the future.

How are we supposed to make a judgement on a recommendation like that, except with the confidence that we have in our committee members—

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: —which of course is unlimited and unending.

I am not sure what my point is, other than that in fact I resent having to even think about whether person A, most worthy, should get a heat lamp or not; person B, most worthy, should be upgraded a matter of 10 per cent from March 2 to May 22. Why was that such a matter of high principle that should use this fantastic and powerful, I suggest to the minister, machinery for its implementation?

I intend to support all these recommendations on the basis that I put to you; my confidence in the members of the committee, no other.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The honourable member was speaking in part, I know, just by way of example, to recommendation 4. We are still looking at recommendation 3, as I understand it. Any further discussion on recommendation 3? The Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking tonight as the minister through whom the board reports. The very issue that the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has raised is really the crux of why we are here. I remember when I was a member of the Ombudsman's select committee myself; the dilemma we faced then was just what is the exact and ultimate authority of that committee. We wrestled with it, we tried to determine exactly what 22(4) did mean and what power it gave to the Premier or to the committee. I think tonight is simply the final outcome of all those discussions and resolutions we've had, when we've been members of that most interesting, most productive and most important committee.

If I could turn to part III of your report, it's clear in the third paragraph that part of the role of the committee has been agreed upon. That is, it has served as a liaison and catalyst in the establishment, maintenance and improvement of the relationships between the Ombudsman and the many government organizations within its jurisdiction.

It then goes on to outline other relationships which had been clarified for the committee. The one relationship which still remains unclarified is the ultimate authority of that committee. It may vary from ministry to ministry. In this particular ministry, we have the Workmen's Compensation Board established by legislation which under section 74(1) says: "The board has exclusive jurisdiction to examine into . . ." et cetera, as you all know.

The Attorney General has given the board an opinion that it does have ultimate authority. I don't need to elaborate on his letter because it's in the report itself, and I won't do so. The Attorney General may wish to comment further upon that.

Therefore, the issue before us is what is the final effect and outcome of the recommendations made tonight. I share many of the views the member for Haldimand spoke about.

Mr. Nixon: Brant.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Brant, Haldimand, Oxford.

Mr. Nixon: Haldimand isn't in it. Haldimand is somewhere else. Just call it Brant.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. Got it.

I'm in a bit of a dilemma myself, Mr. Chairman, to know what to do in response to the recommendation tonight. True, the board has responded to the first two recommendations. It accepted the first and it rejected the second—

Mr. Martel: For a heat lamp.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: —over the other six recommendations. The board has rejected the Ombudsman's recommendation, but I am advised they have not yet, as a corporate board, reviewed the next six recommendations and have not come to determinations on those six. I find myself in an impossible position in terms of voting for or against it. Frankly, I intend to listen to the will of the Legislature.

Members of the board are here tonight to hear this very important debate. I will take great interest in the debate because it's clear the committee is under great stress and concern about the ultimate authority and power of that committee. Therefore, tonight is a very important occasion and I look forward to the debate, but I do want to stress the problems I personally have about the recommendations.

I don't think there's any point in my reviewing case by case. The case the honourable member has raised, recommendation 37, is a matter of the board feeling there's a conflict in the medical opinions. Which one should it accept? What should be the result of the recommendation of this committee? Those are matters that will all have to be resolved as a result of tonight's debate, and I look forward to hearing your further comments.

Mr. Eakins: I just want to say briefly that sitting on that committee as I have for some time, I know, and the minister knows, a great deal of thought and time has been spent in arriving at the recommendations that appear in our report. I know they are not arrived at very lightly. We've gone through the process of meeting with the Ombudsman's staff, and the Workmen's Compensation Board's staff. The one thing that impressed me when I was visiting other jurisdictions in other countries was the respect and the profile the Ombudsman's office is given by the people in those countries.

I think the Ombudsman does not arrive lightly at his decisions, and I think if the Ombudsman's office and the Office of the Ombudsman is going to work and be effective, we're going to have to support the Ombudsman in his decisions. I fully support these recommendations. Surely, we are a liaison with the assembly, and that is why we've brought these forward at this time.

I am a strong supporter of the Office of the Ombudsman and I fully feel he has arrived at his decisions, as has this committee, only after a long deliberation. What is the Office of the Ombudsman going to mean if we're going to each one think that they are correct? We've got to give some full support to the Office of the Ombudsman, and I intend to do that tonight.

Mr. Lawlor: If the minister's position tonight is that he is fobbing us off, and that is what I hear, that coming here tonight he is not prepared to say categorically yes or no, or that he is prepared to do this or that, that the matter is on the Attorney General's opinion which we have scouted and questioned as to its interpretation, that the board has autonomy and final determining powers for itself and that all these cases—and the rest of them are all workmen's compensation cases—are under determination by the board but they haven't placed the final decision before the minister as to which way they are prepared to go and he is left in some kind of limbo with respect to the very reason we are calling this meeting, then I can only say that they are very dilatory indeed in their responsibilities.

They know from direct conversation with us last winter what we want, what we talked about and what we thought was fair. Here, in June, they are saying with a little twiddling of the thumb to the nose, "You can do whatever you please, we will do whatever we want. We are an autonomous board and we are relying upon a particular section." If that is the way it is to be, then there won't be any committee, at least as far as I am concerned; I won't want to sit on one. We have been eviscerated; we have no role to play. If that is what the minister wants, so be it, God bless him.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I don't think the member for Lakeshore is really suggesting that I am trying to fob him off. I have tried to do many things to him but not that. But I do ask in all fairness that we recall that the board, when it was talking to that committee earlier in the winter, did mention that it was awaiting an opinion from the Attorney General. Whether there has been undue delay since then in reviewing these six cases is a matter that we can all speculate about. But, in all fairness, they have not yet as a corporate board reviewed those six cases. Who knows what their response will be?

Mr. Lawlor: March 30, they heard from the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The important issue here tonight is the one that has been raised already and that is, what ultimate authority does this committee's report have, having been talked about and voted upon in this Legislature tonight? I think it is an important decision and I share the member for Lakeshore's view that this committee has to be looked upon as a serious committee. I think that is why this evening and this debate are important. So, the honourable member should not suggest that I am trying to fob anything off.

Mr. Lawlor: Then participate in the important debate.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I don't want to speak at length. I do want to see us get to a vote tonight and at least get on the record what the Legislature feels about the recommendations. But, I think the minister ought to be very much aware that really it isn't the matter of what this committee feels about itself in so far as the committee is concerned. I think he has to be aware that our concern is simply this: That if this committee's recommendations are to be ignored, then what we have done is to eliminate the final sanction of the Ombudsman himself. That is what we are fighting for tonight, not our particular committee per se.

We are not zealous of having to work long hours over this; we can find plenty of other things to do. But what is at stake now, tonight, is whether or not the Ombudsman of this province is to have any sanction or whether, in fact, he may well be relegated to the role of recording complaints. That is what is at stake, not the matter of the committee per se but only the committee report as it reflects the final attempt to give to the Ombudsman of this province the kind of respect, the kind of jurisdiction if you like, that is absolutely essential if that office is to work. I think that has to be understood.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Bellwoods, if he wishes to speak.

Mr. McClellan: I will forgo in the interest of time and speak on the next case.

Mr. Nixon: I would suggest, in furthering what the member for St. George has said, that in reading the letter from the Attorney General it says that the board doesn't have to pay any attention to these recommendations. Even if they are passed by the Legislature, they can be implemented only by the board's decision or by legislation. It may very well be that we are going to have to make an amendment to the workmen's compensation legislation, indicating that a resolution passed by the House has the force of legislation in directing them in these matters. I don't see any alternative to that myself, unless the minister in his position—and the board is to some extent independent of him when it wants to be—

Mr. Lawlor: Is it?

Mr. Nixon: This has been an argument forever. It is like the independence of Ontario Hydro. They are independent when the Premier wants them to be and they bow whenever he wants them to bow. It is quite possible for the minister simply to indicate to the board what his wishes are. If the board is so independent that it will simply ignore those, then the Legislature has the recourse to pass a piece of legislation which will make a law such that a heat lamp is provided. Surely there is some other way to do that. Alternatively, perhaps we could have some other piece of legislation which simply changes the responsibility of the board in some way.

It would seem that we are going to listen to the details of the next nine cases.

Mr. Lawlor: No, you are not.

Mr. Nixon: You were going to say that you were saving your remarks. I don't want to spend a lot of time on it and, frankly, I don't even want to hear the details. The committee has spent many long hours reviewing the details. The recommendation of an all-party committee to this House is really tantamount to its acceptance. However, if the minister, who is the person really under the gun here, since the Minister of Health has gone and we have dealt with the matters for him, has formed another opinion and feels the Ombudsman is wrong, the applicant is wrong, and the committee is wrong, before the House makes what the minister might think is a mistake, he has every right and responsibility to get up and speak against the recommendation and reject it.

It seems to me that once the recommendation is accepted here, there is no question that it has to be turned into some sort of bill. Surely that is the end of it and the Workmen's Compensation Board, automatically, accepts the recommendation and may have a minute indicating it is against its own judgement but the Legislature has spoken and that is game over. I don't think there should be any question about that.

Mr. Lawlor: That's right. That's the way it has to be.

Recommendation 3 concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Lane, did you want to speak to this specifically? If we can do it on the next one, will your remarks be the same on the next one?

Mr. Lane: Not necessarily so. I was on my feet, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am sorry I missed you, but I would like to go on with the member for Bellwoods. I have actually put the concurrence on this one. Then I will come to you, Mr. Lane, on recommendation 4.

On recommendation 4:

Mr. McClellan: I am sure the member for Algoma-Manitoulin's remarks will be as relevant on this section as they were on the previous one.

Mr. Lane: Don't be too damned sure of that.

Mr. McClellan: I mean that kindly.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You are a snide, nasty person. That is not called for.

Mr. McClellan: I didn't mean it in a snide way. I am particularly sorry the member took it in a snide way.

Ms. Gigantes: That should be withdrawn.

Mr. McClellan: This is an important debate. It does not have to do with the particular recommendations in front of us with respect to those individual cases. It has to do with the future of the institution of the Ombudsman in this province. If the government wants an institution of the Ombudsman in this province, then it is going to have to understand that in Ontario, as in every other jurisdiction in the world where there is an effective Ombudsman, the Ombudsman is going to have to be accorded an especial respect. The Ombudsman is going to have to have a kind of aura about it that no other institution is granted. If the government cannot accept that, then it cannot accept an Ombudsman.

Those of us who had the opportunity to look at the institution in some other jurisdictions were really amazed at the respect granted the institution. We gave some hypothetical examples to the Ombudsmen in Denmark, Sweden and Israel. We said: "What would you do if, having made a recommendation on a case to your Parliament, it was turned down?" We were greeted with a kind of shocked silence. I am not exaggerating; those who were with us will verify this. We were greeted with a kind of incomprehension. They would have to resign, they said, each and every one of them. But they could not understand that. Why set up the institution in the first place if no attention is going to be paid to it? That is the question.

This is not a partisan committee. This is the one place in this Legislature which is nonpartisan; it really is. Everybody who has served on the Ombudsman committee—the Minister of Labour has served on it with me; he is nodding his head, and he shares the view that I have—agrees that this is one place in this Legislature that is nonpolitical and nonpartisan. We are looking at cases on their merits that have been examined and investigated and have been given a recommendation by the Office of the Ombudsman.

It is incumbent on the Legislature and the government to recognize the special status of the Ombudsman. It is incumbent on ministers of the government to instruct and educate their bureaucracies about the special status of the Ombudsman. If they are not prepared to do that, let them tell us and we will stop the charade. Unless the Ombudsman's recommendations are accorded an unusual and extraordinary respect, there is no point in having it.

There is a particular difficulty for us as legislators in an assembly that is part of the British parliamentary tradition that does not obtain in the European system. European legislators do not do constituency work; they are not mini-Ombudsmen. But those of us who are elected members in a British parliamentary system have as part of our responsibility the redress of grievances. That is part of our job.

I took a little time and consulted some archaic statutes and traced it back to the Act of Settlement of 1688; that is where it originated. The British Parliament in 1688 established the two functions of Parliament. Let me read one of them: "For the redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently." That is the origin of our tradition; it is part of our job. The media do not seem always to understand that, but it is part of our job that we are available to our constituents for the redress of all grievances, and not just for the passing of laws.

We have a jealousy about our prerogatives. Each and every one of us as a member of the assembly is jealous of that prerogative as a mini-Ombudsman. I think it is fair to say that in both parties on this side of the House we have made that adjustment. Let me say it has been a difficult adjustment, a genuinely difficult adjustment, for those of us who are used to the sacred preserve of constituency office work, to share that with the Office of the Ombudsman.

I say to you that we have made that adjustment and we're prepared to do it, those of us in the New Democratic Party and those of us in the Liberal Party, we are prepared to do that. We're prepared to give up a piece of our role that is 300 years old; we're prepared to share that with the Ombudsman. I say to this minister, and to all the ministers, they too have to give something up.

Mr. Grande: When are they going to do that?

Mr. McClellan: They have to give something up too if the office is to work. If they are not prepared to do that, tell us; tell us and we'll stop the charade, we'll stop the pretence, we'll stop playing the game. I'll stop sending my constituents to the Ombudsman. I'll tell my constituents: "Don't bother to go there because if he makes a recommendation on your behalf it doesn't mean a goddam thing, it doesn't mean a thing."

Mr. di Santo: It's a waste of money.

Mr. McClellan: The government can ignore it with impunity. I don't think that's what we were about when we set up the office in this province. I think all of us wanted an Ombudsman in a genuine way. I've read the debates when the institution was set up; I think all members on all sides wanted an Ombudsman, and they wanted an Ombudsman that worked.

We've started to understand what the implications of that are, and I tell you—and I speak specifically to the Minister of Labour—that the Office of the Ombudsman and the select committee of this Legislature which was set up to support that office, cannot tolerate the kind of deliberate flouting of the institution that has been characteristic of the Workmen's Compensation Board, period.

We cannot tolerate it. The institution cannot survive that kind of systematic flouting of the Ombudsman's authority. There is no other ministry or organization or Crown corporation or branch of government in the province of Ontario that is systematically thumbing its nose at the Office of the Ombudsman except for the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Look at the cases in front of us: nine cases, one dealing with a very complex matter of policy with the Ministry of Health, and the other eight are recommendations denied from the Workmen's Compensation Board. This morning the compensation board delivered to us a hand-delivered letter with respect to the heat lamp issue, which was so grotesque and bizarre that I doubt they wanted it debated here tonight, but the other cases stand; they stand, as I said, as a thumbing of the nose at the institution.

You're going to have to deal with it; not just you as the Minister of Labour, but the government as a whole. How? By accepting the recommendations of the select committee; by accepting the notion that the Ombudsman in Ontario does have an ultimate sanction; that if he is systematically denied recommendations by officials or bureaucrats or branches of government that he has a recourse, and the recourse is here to the Legislature; and that recourse is consequential in terms of a vote of the assembly.

I want to put on the record the position of the committee with respect to an Ombudsman's recommendation. We are not a rubber stamp. The committee has not been a rubber stamp in the course of the two and a half years I have sat on it. We have been very tough on the Ombudsman. We have insisted that we be satisfied that the Ombudsman has followed the procedures that are set out in the Ombudsman Act and that his investigations have been thorough and impartial, and have followed not just the spirit but the letter of the act. Once we have satisfied ourselves that he has conducted a legitimate investigation under the terms of the act, then we are prepared to support his recommendation.

Let me read from our fifth report: "The committee will review with the Office of the Ombudsman all phases of the Ombudsman's functions which were exercised in the particular complaint. It will also examine with the governmental organization in question the adequacy and appropriateness of the response. If that response has been less than complete, and if the exchange between the Ombudsman and the governmental organization contemplated by section 22 of the Ombudsman Act has been less than thorough, the committee will inquire into as much detail as it considers necessary in the circumstance. When it appears to the committee that the Ombudsman has complied with the provisions of the legislation, and where the governmental organization's response is not adequate, appropriate or reasonable to the committee, it will prima facie support the Ombudsman's recommendation."

That is what we have done in the cases in front of you. We have satisfied ourselves that the Ombudsman has satisfied the conditions of the Ombudsman Act with respect to each of those complaints, that his recommendations are legitimate, and that they deserve to be upheld by the assembly.

I want to say in conclusion a word about the Workmen's Compensation Board, which is represented on our little potpourri of cases, eight out of nine. I ask through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister of Labour, what does the benefit of the doubt mean in Ontario? What does the benefit of doubt mean as far as the compensation board is concerned? If the Office of the Ombudsman, with his marvellously competent staff, and with an eminent jurist as the present incumbent is, can look at a compensation case, look at all of the evidence and decide on the basis of that evidence that the benefit of the doubt supports the injured worker, but the compensation board continues to deny entitlement, where then is benefit of the doubt? What does it mean?

I suggest to you, sir, through the chair, that it doesn't mean a damned thing—that it means whatever the compensation board chooses it to mean. But it certainly does not mean that when reasonable men or women examine the evidence with a degree of impartiality and the balance of probability weighs in favour of the injured worker, that means anything unless it is the compensation board itself which is making the verdict. There is no room for any other reasonable judgement to be exercised.

Others wish to speak on this debate, I am advised, and I am not going to deal with the merits of the case because, as the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has previously stated, the committee has examined each of the cases, and has satisfied itself the Ombudsman's investigation was legitimate with reference to the act and that his recommendations were in the main valid.

So I hope the assembly will pass the balance of the compensation recommendations. It is vitally important that these cases get passed. It is important for the compensation board; it's fundamentally important for the Office of the Ombudsman. If there is not an effective resolution of this problem of the ultimate sanction, if the government is unwilling to accept the notion of ultimate sanction, if the government is unwilling to accept a special status with respect to the Ombudsman, then you might as well just tell us that. Tell us that tonight so that we don't waste any more time playing the game.

Mr. Lupusella: Show some leadership.

Mr. McClellan: Give us your views precisely and with detail, because I'm not prepared to waste any more time on it. I'm simply not prepared to waste any more time and neither are my colleagues in this party. I know from conversation in the Liberal Party that if you want the institution in the province you have a clear choice. The crunch is here tonight. After all the debate and discussion leading up to the establishment of the office and its implementation in the initial stages, the crunch is here tonight. So either bite the bullet or tell us you don't want it, but let's not continue this charade.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, two things bother me. About two weeks ago, as the result of a vote in this Legislature I raised in this Legislature the action the government undertakes. Sometimes, even though this Legislature passes a motion or resolution, the government deems it doesn't have to act on that resolution.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that we passed a resolution, moved by the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot), with respect to crown land and the lease of crown land. Even though this Legislature voted in its entirety to support that resolution, the government, in its lack of wisdom, deemed that it would not follow the instructions of this Legislature. It chose to go on to remove the lease policy for recreational land, despite a vote of the Legislature, and then started to sell crown land.

My fear tonight, as we debate this and as the government accedes to one motion after another, is what are their intentions? They can sit here tonight and nod their heads affirmatively that they are going to do something about it, but once this debate is done are they going to take the same sort of action they did on the private member's resolution of the member for Timiskaming? And that was to ignore it in totality. It's unfortunate that my colleagues, and I have talked to a number of them, indicate they would probably resign because this government fails to respond.

The other thing I want to speak to the minister about briefly is the Workmen's Compensation Board. These cases, Mr. Minister—and I am not going to speak about cases—I see day in and day out. We in this party have been complaining about the conduct of the Workmen's Compensation Board for years. You have colleagues, Mr. Minister, on your own side of the House who are speaking to you privately because of the frustrations they experience dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board. Some of the decisions that come out of that board and how they affect people's lives are absolutely ludicrous. I fought a case this week—

Mr. Haggerty: They call that functional overlay.

Mr. Martel: Yes—where a man, 22 years in industry, was exposed to noise and suffers industrial deafness. His exposure was 89 decibels; at 90 decibels you start to lose your hearing. They did one test in 22 years and said the man had no entitlement—on one test. Is that the benefit of the doubt?

I have just reached the point with the Workmen's Compensation Board, Mr. Minister, that you have to do something. You have got to shake it up badly, because while many workers are served well in the province, for those who are in the bind, there is no way out except months, in fact years, of battling with the board to try and get some assistance for workers. While they read you the nice statistics about 90 per cent of the claims being handled right away, you wouldn't have this if the other four per cent were adequately handled.

I just say, in the limited time, that something has to be done to shake up that organization, to deal with those difficult cases. I won't mention names or areas in the board that need to be shaken up a bit. But I watched your colleague from Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) come in—and he and I have discussed this many times. There is something wrong up there; there is something wrong that would see a decision over a lamp come in today.

Mr. Mackenzie: The problem is the bottom line.

Mr. Martel: Yes, but that is the absolute in stupidity—that they would concede a lamp, heaven forbid! But the other case where it's several years of compensation, no.

[10:15]

You know, Mr. Chairman, that is just so much immaturity on their part. It's like holding out a sucker. They give you a sucker and they take the other one back after you've had one out of the whole package. They give you the easy ones. Hooray! But the ones where there's probably a function that will overlay the whole business and all of the problems that go with this—and those of us who represent the types of communities where there's heavy industry have seen the back problems, and nearly everyone in here, as I read it over quickly, is involved in that—for those they've had no solution.

We've been raising it for years. It's time there was some action taken by the Minister of Labour to clean up that place so that those problems can be handled.

Finally, I want to repeat I don't know what the government's position is going to be, but if they act on this vote the way they did on the member for Timiskaming's resolution, which was endorsed unanimously in this House, and then go in the opposite direction, I suggest by tomorrow afternoon they won't have a select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address myself to the committee's report dealing with the Ombudsman's fifth report, which particularly deals with the Workmen's Compensation Board.

In the directory each member gets—and I guess a number of personnel here working for the government get it—it says under the Workmen's Compensation Board: "Ombudsman's administration, J. F. O'Brien." Often I wonder why that is put in there. To me it looks like a cosmetic approach by the Workmen's Compensation Board or even by the Minister of Labour to say that we do have an avenue open here for those persons who are making appeals to the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I know that that hasn't been very successful. I suppose the function the Ombudsman could provide to the injured workers in Ontario is under section 75 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1975: "The board may at any time, if it considers it advisable to do so, reconsider any decision or order, declaration or ruling made by it and vary, amend or revoke such a decision, order or declaration of ruling." There are not too many persons who are aware of that particular section, unless you're dealing with the act day by day or week by week. I suggest to the Minister of Labour that perhaps the only body that can use this particular section to the greatest advantage for the injured worker is the Ombudsman because that's the last resort.

With the sufficient staff that they have there, they can do the research and make proper representation to the board for the reconsideration of a previous decision.

I, like the members for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) and Sudbury East, spend a great amount of time down at the Workmen's Compensation Board and I can tell you this much, I'm not too happy with the present functions of the board. I'm not too happy with some of the decisions of the appeals that are handed down, in particular where, in the past, the benefit of the doubt has always been given on behalf of the claimant.

The normal procedure now is that for persons writing to the board, they come up with a new phrase, "pre-existing condition" to the accident—whether or not it aggravated the injury. I'm sure the minister, being in the medical profession, knows of studies carried out in the United States—and I think it's worthwhile putting it on the record.

This is from one of the studies that was carried out in the United States as it relates to injured workers. "Medical information needed may be as much in the realm of opinion as fact. Medical evidence is often conflicting in the issue over the cause of the disability and the degree of physical impairment. There is no medical method which can measure precisely the degree or the present physical disability or even predict the future course of the events."

I suggest that is an area that the board should be looking at more seriously than anything. They have to take that into consideration. I think the recommendations of this report—there are five or six of them—suggest that some direction and consideration be given to specific cases here in the report. I suggest that all members should support this particular report tonight. It is time the board showed some heart in matters relating to injured workers in Ontario because it is definitely not making that effort at the present time.

Mr. Chairman: Before recognizing the next speaker, I must remind the committee that when the committee first met this evening it was agreed that the chairman of the select committee could speak generally and then the committee would deal with each recommendation. I would remind the honourable members that we are on recommendation 4. I would hope that any further speakers would contain their remarks within that recommendation.

Mrs. Campbell: Put the question.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If I may have a quick 30 seconds, Mr. Chairman, as the former chairman of the committee, I would like to say a few words. If I stray in my 30 seconds, please forgive me. The issue before the House tonight is not these particular recommendations and it is not whether or not we accept the report of this select committee. The issue before the House tonight is whether we continue to have an Ombudsman institution in this province, an institution that many members of the assembly have fought long and hard to obtain and have tried to develop in the most appropriate fashion.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The honourable member is straying. Would he contain his remarks to recommendation 4?

Mr. Warner: He is at the heart of the matter.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If I may put it in the context of this particular recommendation, the important matter is not how the members of the assembly vote this evening on this recommendation concerning the Workmen's Compensation Board, but whether or not the Minister of Labour and the government he represents act on that recommendation in the way in which the committee votes.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, on this recommendation and on the others before us tonight, if the government fails to act we will no longer have a select committee on the Ombudsman. If we no longer have a select committee on the Ombudsman, the Ombudsman will no longer have access to this assembly and the Ombudsman institution in this province will have become irrelevant and not at all what the people of this province deserve. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, to the government and to the members of the assembly, that would be a tragedy.

Recommendation 4 concurred in.

Recommendations 5 to 9, inclusive, concurred in.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported concurrence in recommendations 1 to 9, inclusive, of the report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Report adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order 28, a motion to adjourn is deemed to have been made and I will listen to the member for Port Arthur for up to five minutes.

USE OF MATACIL

Mr. Foulds: Government members may not consider this an important matter, but we on this side of the House, do.

First of all, I want to thank Ted Schrecker of the research department of the NDP for doing as much work as he has with me, on the issue of Matacil spraying in northern Ontario.

The stonewalling by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) can no longer be tolerated. He has deliberately tried to keep himself, the Legislature and the public of Ontario, ignorant of the scope and the impact of the Matacil spraying program for the spruce budworm in northern Ontario. It is a policy of deliberate secrecy and controlling and limiting information made available to the public by this government. If not, it is a case of sheer incompetence.

It is obvious two portfolios are too much for him and he should resign one, if not the other.

Mr. Warner: One is too much. He's not even here. He doesn't care.

Mr. Foulds: The matter of spraying for spruce budworm should be a policy decision made by the minister in the cabinet, not a decision made by a low-level civil servant with automatic approval by the minister. The consequences are too serious to do otherwise.

Mr. Bolan: Is this the NDP horror movie?

Mr. Foulds: Why am I dissatisfied with the minister's answers? He has given no comprehensive statement to this House on the scope and extent and, more importantly, on the reasons for spraying with Matacil for spruce budworm. He has given us no economic reasons, no ecological reasons and no social reasons.

He has not indicated whether or not the ministry plans to extend the spraying until next year. He has been secretive about what spraying has taken place in past years, although he has told the press such spraying has indeed occurred. Nor has the minister clearly said whether the ministry is going to spray parks and tree nurseries, areas in which there are high concentrations of human activity.

He has failed to table the documents he said he would on June 12. According to the minister, they outline the results of testing done by the Ministry of the Environment and the federal agencies that have in this government's opinion made Matacil acceptable to use. That is a very sad record, Mr. Speaker. I have raised the matter four times and, frankly, none of the answers to any of those questions have been satisfactory.

We assume, from the research we have been able to do, that Ontario's Matacil spray is made up of amino carbs as the active ingredient, nonylphenol as the solvent, and 585, the emulsifier or diluent. Interestingly enough, Agriculture Canada considers that confidential information to protect corporate responsibility and that is just nonsense. We have reports, but not confirmation, that red dye, which itself may be carcinogenic, has been added to the Ontario spray.

Three basic points need to be made. One, we have no evidence that Matacil effectively kills spruce budworm. Spraying simply cannot be 100 per cent effective. The minister said he hopes for an 80 per cent kill. Unfortunately, the New Brunswick experience, including DDT when they had a 99 per cent effective kill, indicates the remaining budworm simply survive as a healthier species and it therefore prolonged the epidemic and the problem.

Two, we know that Matacil is very harmful to bees, certain fish, marine life and some ground hens.

Three, Matacil potentially has severe toxic effects on humans. This is especially worth considering because of the drift factor in any aerial spraying, no matter how carefully done.

I would have sent a copy of Dr. William Thurlow's research report to the minister, but the other day he said he wouldn't be bothered to read it, or gave that impression. Dr. Thurlow's latest research shows that at subtoxic concentration—and I emphasize subtoxic concentration—Matacil and its solvent, nonylphenol, have definite viral enhancement effects: two times in the case of Matacil, and 2.3 times in the case of the solvent, nonylphenol.

Remember that viral enhancement is the mechanism that is at work in Reyes syndrome. This is the often-fatal children's ailment that has been traced in New Brunswick to the effects of the emulsifiers in the solvents—not the active ingredient but the emulsifiers in the solvents used in fenitrothion, and the emulsifiers in the solvents are the same in Matacil.

Although Dr. Thurlow's most recent experiments do not—and I emphasize that—establish a conclusive link between Matacil and Reyes syndrome, they do demonstrate the significant viral enhancement effect. Why take chances when the so-called benefits of Matacil spray are dubious at least?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Foulds: According to Dr. Thurlow, Maine and Newfoundland have cancelled their spray programs for 1979 at least partly because of his evidence. Why does Ontario not do the same? He must be absolutely certain he is doing no harm to the people of Ontario. He cannot avoid the responsibility; he is the minister.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member in his request for his time tonight based it on three points. The first one was the adverse effects of Matacil spraying. Matacil has been used to control spruce budworm in Canada since 1971. In that period the effectiveness, the toxicology, the effects on nontarget organisms and the persistence of Matacil have been investigated by scientists in government agencies, universities and private consulting firms. More than 200 published scientific reports document the results of these investigations. In fact, there are 233, and I will table a list of them in a moment.

Furthermore, a three-day conference in Moncton, New Brunswick, was held last August specifically to review the environmental impact of Matacil. The proceedings of that conference, as well as the latest evidence in the published reports, clearly indicate that the use of Matacil for control of spruce budworm in forestry does not pose a significant hazard to human health or the environment.

Countering this considerable body of evidence is that publication, the second copy of which the honourable member has sent me, entitled The Matacil Spray Report, William Pigelow, editor and chief author. Mr. Thurlow is a medical doctor, not a toxicologist or a research scientist. He is chairman of an organization called GAG and is said to be an avowed anti-spraying lobbyist. The book was published by GAG apparently without any review or comment by the scientific community, and it does not contain any original research. Those factors cast considerable doubt on the credibility or conclusions drawn from this book.

Scientists in the two lead agencies responsible for pesticide regulation in Canada, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Agriculture, have informed our ministry that their ongoing review of research has provided no indication that forestry spraying of Matacil presents a human health hazard.

The second point that the honourable member mentioned was the necessity of spruce budworm spray programs. Our ministry has guaranteed to provide 70,000 cunits of wood annually for 10 years to the new Normic Mill in Kirkland Lake. A major portion of this wood will come from Lamplugh and Elliott townships, where budworm spraying is now taking place. In these townships, balsam—which is the species most readily killed by budworm—represents almost 50 per cent of the cut for the next 10 years. There is no alternative wood supply available for this mill, and thus it is imperative to preserve this wood in a merchantable state until it can be harvested. This particular forest has already suffered four years of heavy damage because of budworm, and another year of heavy damage will result in mortality, decay and loss of commercial value. A similar situation prevails in the Geraldton district, where we are preserving a unique stand of white spruce for veneer production.

The third point that the honourable member mentioned was the so-called Reyes syndrome. In 1976 Dr. John Cocker in Halifax hypothesized that recent cases of the childhood disease Reyes syndrome in New Brunswick could be linked with the chemical used in budworm spraying.

Mr. M. Davidson: They're not using it any more, are they?

Mr. Warner: That's right. You're in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is fenitrothion and the emulsifier Atlox. There is no evidence that Matacil is a factor in the occurrence of this disease and those two emulsifiers are not used in Ontario's program.

Mr. M. Davidson: They're not using Matacil, are they?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would like to table a list of those 233 references on the subject of Matacil which have been studied by government staff in reaching the conclusions that I've outlined tonight and in previous statements.

Mr. M. Davidson: Are they using Matacil in New Brunswick today?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps after reading this material the honourable member may wish to comment as to whether Matacil is safe and useful. Just to give a little idea of what is involved, we are talking about—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister's time has expired.

The House adjourned at 10:36 p.m.

SERVICE OF SUBPOENA

Mr. J. A. Taylor: On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I wish to call to the attention of the House that last Tuesday, June 19, I was served with a subpoena in my office by a representative of the legal firm of Lockwood and Bellmore to appear as a witness in a Supreme Court case involving the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

I believe this to be a breach of my privileges as a member of this House, not only by a person invading my office in this building for such a purpose without your authority, Mr. Speaker, but, more important, I believe it to be a breach of the immunity provided by section 38 of the Legislative Assembly Act which prohibits the arrest, detention or molestation for any cause or matter whatever of a civil nature during a session of the Legislature or during the 20 days following the session.

With respect to the question of whether or not the service of a subpoena constitutes molestation under section 38, I refer the House to May's Parliamentary Practice, 19th edition, page 92 and following. It is not my intention at this time to move a motion to bring the offender before this House. I have no particular objection to acting as a witness in the matter at issue, but I would not like to be placed in the position of providing a precedent which would infringe the recognized privileges of this House and the members thereof.

Mr. Riddell: You have my full support.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: I thought I would.

Mr. Riddell: I will even get on the procedural affairs committee if you want to bring the matter before it.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has quoted the privilege of immunity that is enjoyed by all members of this House under those circumstances, but the initiative rests with the member, should he choose to pursue it further. I assume he does not, and that the purpose of making his statement was just to appraise the House of what had taken place.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

MANPOWER COMMISSION

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as members will recall, the speech from the throne on March 6 stated that my ministry would be given the mandate to guide and co-ordinate the government's manpower activities and that in recognition of this new responsibility the ministry would be renamed the Ministry of Labour and Manpower.

Much work has been done in the period since the throne speech to prepare for the assumption of this important assignment. A variety of manpower programs are now administered by the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. As well, the work and activities of a number of other ministries have implications for the labour market. In the broadest sense, the assignment given to me in the speech from the throne is to see that all such programs and initiatives are designed, implemented and co-ordinated so as to ensure that our manpower needs are adequately addressed, now and in the future.

After a careful study of the problem, including the assessment of a number of organizational options, I am convinced that something other than a mere realignment of program responsibilities is required.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, a new government.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Accordingly, the government has approved the creation of an Ontario Manpower Commission to be chaired by a full-time manpower commissioner reporting through me to the cabinet. The commission will be empowered to oversee all of the manpower programs and activities of the government and, subject to cabinet concurrence, to make policy and operational decisions concerning those programs.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't you have enough civil servants to do that?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You're a nice young man, but just hang on.

Thus, while the commission will be located in the Ministry of Labour and Manpower, its functional mandate is not limited by ministerial boundaries.

Mr. Eakins: There goes your leadership down the drain.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: This broad transministerial authority is, I believe, essential if we are to achieve the desired results.

Mr. Ruston: What's this all about?

Mr. Kerrio: It's time for a vacation.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: One of the commission's main and continuing tasks will be to evaluate all existing programs, measure their effectiveness in achieving results and, where appropriate, determine what changes in policy or delivery techniques may be desirable,

A second important function of the commission will be to mobilize community support and participation. I believe all the commissioners who have agreed to serve share the conviction that while central direction is important, successful manpower activities must be firmly rooted in the community. Through a variety of contacts across the province with organizations, associations and groups of interested persons, the commission will promote and encourage local and regional participation in training, counselling and placement, as well as the collection, analysis and communication of timely and accurate labour market data.

It will be obvious to members that the success of the commission will depend in large part upon the calibre of the permanent commissioner and his part-time associates. Therefore, I am particularly pleased to announce today that we have been successful in securing the services of one of the province's outstanding industrialists to chair the commission. Mr. R. Donald Pollock, president and chief operating executive of Canada Wire and Cable Company Limited, who is present this morning in the Speaker's gallery, has agreed to accept this challenging assignment for two years, commencing August 1.

Mr. Pollock is a native of Peterborough, and a graduate of Victoria College. He held important positions with Canadian General Electric and Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company before joining Canada Wire and Cable in 1966. He is a member of the Science Council of Canada, and recently chaired a labour-management sector task team established by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to analyse the electrical and electronics industry in Ontario.

Over the past few months I have had the privilege of working with Mr. Pollock and other representatives of industry, labour and the educational community in an informal advisory group dealing with the important manpower issues addressed at the Skills for Jobs conference held in June 1978.

I am therefore in a position to say that we have, as chairman, an unusually dedicated, talented and determined individual who believes, as I do, that we must do everything in our power to ensure that our labour force is properly trained and productively employed so as to achieve the growth and prosperity in the 1980s to which we all aspire.

Mr. S. Smith: That's the government's job.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: We also share the view that our prospects for success depend in large measure upon the co-operative involvement of labour, management and the educational community in this important and difficult endeavour. Accordingly, the commission which Mr. Pollock will chair will comprise persons from the constituencies which I have mentioned who are acknowledged to have wide experience in the manpower field.

Mr. S. Smith: Another commission.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am pleased to advise the House that the following individuals have agreed to serve as commissioners: Mr. Greg Murtagh, director of education, Ontario Federation of Labour; Mr. Peter Dawson, training specialist, the Procter and Gamble Company of Canada Limited; Mary Eady, director, women's bureau, Canadian Labour Congress; and Kenneth Hunter, president, Conestoga College of Applied Arts and Technology. The secretariat of the commission will be headed by John Kinley of my ministry, who has had broad experience in manpower matters, both in government and in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I should like to refer to a related initiative concerning manpower. It is recognized, I believe, that an essential precondition to effective manpower planning is accurate knowledge of industry's needs. We hear much about the shortage of skilled labour, but we need to have the best possible information about where shortages are likely to occur in the near, mid- and longer term so the appropriate training, guidance and placement planning decisions can be made. This in turn requires that industry share with us their demand forecasts.

Due in large part to Mr. Pollock's determined efforts, a comprehensive labour market information survey is about to be launched. The survey was designed by the labour market information unit in my ministry and is being distributed under the sponsorship of Mr. Pollock and four Ontario industrialists: Gerald Elford, president of Upper Canada Manufacturing Limited; Chester Fisher, executive vice-president, Fisher Gauge Limited; Gerald Heffernan, president, Co-Steel International Limited; and Sheldon Lush, chairman and chief executive officer, Supreme Aluminum Industries Limited.

The wide distribution of the survey, the first of its kind in Ontario, is made possible as a result of the co-operation of the Ontario division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, all of whose members will be canvassed.

I believe the support by Ontario employers and associations of this essential information-gathering endeavour is an encouraging example of the widespread and genuine concern about manpower matters and the co-operative spirit in which the community is prepared to address them. I think this co-operation augurs well for the work of the new commission.

I am sure that all members join with me in expressing the hope and conviction that the Ontario Manpower Commission will make a significant contribution to one of our most urgent social and economic issues.

CEMETERIES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the Legislature the fact that my ministry intends to amend the Cemeteries Act in the fall session. To ensure the opportunity for full consultation and consideration by all parties involved, a discussion draft will be sent to them for comment over the summer.

The first cemeteries legislation was passed in 1850 and has been revised from time to time since then. However, there have been no revisions for the past 11 years, in spite of the fact that business operations have changed substantially in that time. As part of the process of preparing the proposed bill we have held discussions with those directly involved, and I believe it will reflect the changes requested by the Ontario Association of Cemeteries.

We have also met with the joint steering committee on native affairs and have reached agreement in principle with them.

The discussion proposal clarifies the responsibilities of the municipalities with regard to the establishment and enlargement of cemeteries and related structures. This will enable municipalities to deal with cemeteries as an integral part of their land-use planning.

This provision is consistent as well with the Ontario government policy of deregulation.

By eliminating the need to pass trust fund accounts in surrogate courts, the act provides financial relief to the older, smaller cemeteries. Accounts will now be filed with the cemeteries branch of my ministry. I want to emphasize, however, that we have maintained the right of the family to ask for, and to receive, information about those accounts.

The cemeteries branch will also provide a watchdog function over any commercial operations regarding cemeteries in order to ensure that they operate in accordance with the law.

An expanded licensing provision is also included which would require all cemeteries in Ontario to be licensed. However, we intend to proclaim this section only if events so demand.

My staff has spent many months meeting with the organizations and people directly affected, and I am confident the discussion bill which will be sent out within the next few weeks will reflect the concerns of all involved. I would ask that comments be directed to the cemeteries branch of my ministry by the end of August in order that we may proceed with the necessary legislation as soon as the House resumes this fall.

FIREFIGHTING BY INMATES

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the Ministry of Correctional Services is assembling an emergency team of inmates to assist the Ministry of Natural Resources with firefighters duties in northern Ontario, should their services be required.

Yesterday, plans had progressed to the point where upwards of 60 inmates were to be deployed to the fire fronts from correctional institutions in Kenora, Thunder Bay and Monteith. Although rain within the last 12 hours has alleviated the immediate need, the emergency inmate team remains on standby and will respond within a couple of hours if necessary.

This service to the people of Ontario will be available throughout the fire season. If more manpower is required, other jails and correctional centres will provide help.

The inmates will assist with cleanup and other such duties as assigned by the Ministry of Natural Resources and will, of course, be under the custodial supervision of correctional officers. The emergency team will remain on duty for as long as there is a need.

The participating inmates will be volunteers. They are being carefully screened to ensure they pose no threat to community safety.

This response to a provincial emergency is in keeping with our philosophy of encouraging inmates to accept responsibility for civic duty. Last year, with the encouragement of the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), inmates provided 177,600 hours of community work to the citizens of Ontario. More than 1,300 inmate man-hours were spent clearing flooded land in Dover township this spring.

We do not believe inmates should sit idly in jail, at the taxpayers' expense, when there are so many opportunities for them to make repayment to society through useful community service. Work of this nature helps to instill a sense of responsibility. Time is spent positively and inmates learn firsthand that there are many people worse off than they are. The remedial benefits speak for themselves.

ORAL QUESTIONS

MANPOWER POLICY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour stemming from the statement he just made to the House. Does he recall that on October 28, 1974, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development stood and said the following, announcing the creation of a manpower secretariat: "The manpower secretariat is an outgrowth of the work within my secretariat which indicated the need for closer liaison among ministries regarding manpower policy. Some time ago, it became evident that there are special problems in co-ordinating requirements for skills with the effort of our education ministries and with the responsiveness of the labour market to changing circumstances."

These are very familiar words indeed, since we have just heard them again. Will the minister therefore admit that this secretariat, which still exists in this government and which was set up five years ago to do the necessary job, has been an abject failure? Will he admit that his statement today of a new, outside commission is an indication of a recognition of that failure? If he agrees with me, would he tell us whether he has analysed the reasons for the failure of the existing manpower secretariat and what assurance he has that the new commission will do a better job?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the statement the member referred to was made in 1974 there was an honest belief that those steps being proposed would indeed solve the problems then perceived. Clearly, in our view they have not progressed as rapidly as one would have hoped and it was felt that a new modality, a new concept, was required.

As to why we chose the suggestion of a manpower commission, I hope the member will agree there was a great variety of choices. All the other choices involved moving parts or the whole of programs into the Ministry of Labour. Frankly, it was my feeling we would spend so much time realigning programs and transferring and adjusting things that again there would be delays in getting down to dealing with the problem. I thought we would be far better off to approach it with the concept of a manpower commission headed by people who are separate and distinct from government and who have a definite, committed interest in the problem which goes beyond the interest of any of us, because they are involved in it and they know the specific needs.

It is my feeling that this semi-independent body, with the direct access it will have through me to the Executive Council, will be very influential in policy matters and in program matters. I see this as the correct approach and I trust members will agree with me.

Mr. S. Smith: May I ask two things? First of all, will the manpower co-ordinating committee secretariat, under the executive co-ordination of Mr. J. R. Kinley and with a number of other employees, be immediately disbanded? According to what the minister said, it obviously has been a disappointment. Furthermore, did the government not consult with people in labour and industry and so on during the past five years? If it did consult with these people, why were no results produced so that government has to start all over again by handing the job over to a new commission?

The basic question is, does the minister not recognize that this has been a serious failure on the part of the government and that handing the matter over to a new commission now, especially since rumour has it that the reason the old one failed was lack of interministerial co-operation, should have been preceded by an analysis of the existing failures?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: With regard to the manpower secretariat, as I have already indicated in my statement that secretariat and Mr. Kinley will remain in the Ministry of Labour but will serve the manpower commissioner and the commission. The Ontario manpower co-ordinating committee secretariat as a body per se will be dissolved. Frankly, I do not say it was a failure; I just say it was not acting rapidly enough and we were not achieving the results I see a commission such as this being able to achieve. I can't say it was a failure.

Mr. S. Smith: Five years and no results.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member well knows the problems and the complexity of the problems related in gathering the information and in getting an effective program going. I am convinced the approach we are taking is the correct one.

Mr. S. Smith: Will you take five years?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Let's hope the member is around to find out.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: One cannot help suspecting the government has done the minimum possible to carry out the promise made in the throne speech about turning this ministry into the Ministry of Labour and Manpower. Can the minister say what specific powers this new manpower commission or the minister himself will have if the community colleges cannot afford to expand manpower training because of shortages of funds? What specific powers will the new manpower commission have when high schools cannot offer up-to-date training because they can't afford new equipment? What specific powers will this new organization have if the selective placement service of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism is looking for skilled workers abroad rather than putting pressure on employers to make sure they train them here in this province? What specific powers will this ministry have, now that it is the Ministry of Labour and Manpower, if what is required is additional funding to ensure we get the skilled workers we need, but that funding is not available because of the cutback policy of this government?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I will comment on the member's concern about the effectiveness of a commission such as this. I can only reaffirm my own conviction that this is the right approach and will be the most successful approach that could have been taken by government.

As to the terms of reference, they are outlined partially in the statement I have given. They will oversee all of the manpower programs and activities of the government and, subject to cabinet concurrence, make policy and operational decisions concerning those programs. In other words, they will have an almost direct connection to the Executive Council so that the council can directly respond to their recommendation.

That is a pretty important linkage and an important commitment by the government regarding its concern on the manpower issue.

Mr. S. Smith: You're appointing Kinley all over again.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister tell us what authority will this new commissioner and this new commission have to direct—and I specifically choose that word—the post-secondary institutions and the adult training institutions in this province to carry out certain mandates?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the very matters the commission will have incredible input into. Naturally, the first role will be to see if the changes the commission feels are warranted can be achieved by negotiation. But the importance of the terms of reference is that if there is a failure of cooperation in any way, then there is direct access to the cabinet so that there can be a cabinet direction as to the direction that is to be taken. I think that is an important initiative.

Mr. S. Smith: You had it before.

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, why would the minister, which is quite uncharacteristic of him, want us to agree to a reorganization of his ministry, when the first initiative he takes is to shuffle off the very responsibility we have been asked to confer upon him?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that in one of my previous responses. There were a variety of options presented to us, as I am sure the member can appreciate.

Mr. Renwick: Why did you choose the wrong one?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: One option was a total realignment of programs bringing them under the Ministry of Labour. The second option was partial realignment of some programs.

Mr. Mackenzie: There is no realignment.

Mr. McClellan: It's going to be chaos as usual.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Frankly, we felt and I felt there was too much time spent in the realignment process and not enough time spent dealing with the issue. The programs are in place. They can be utilized while they are still in the place they are, and time need not be taken in the realignment process to achieve the goals we had in mind.

DISCOUNT PRACTICES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food regarding the food price inquiry. It has probably come to the minister's attention that Mr. Hull is now taking a slightly more aggressive line in his questioning, but he has been refused information with regard to the discounting and kickback practices by the president of Loblaws, Mr. Nichol.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You wanted him fired.

Mr. S. Smith: It is amazing how it got him going. He was alerted for the first time in this commission.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You wanted him fired.

Mr. Speaker: The question, please.

Mr. S. Smith: If the Premier insists on interjecting, I feel I should at least respond to these interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: It is hard to ignore the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's true. That's something you should learn.

Mr. S. Smith: I will attempt to. I will do my best.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's not good enough.

Mr. S. Smith: I can assure the Premier that this is a domestic matter. He is allowed to express an opinion on this matter.

Since Mr. Nichol refuses to give this information, does the minister not agree it is time the government expressed a view, before this matter goes any further, that all the information pertinent to the discounting practices, the size of the kickbacks and so on, must be obtained by the commission with subpoena, examining documents and with all means necessary to do so and must be made public? Isn't it time to express that view?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I never cease to be amazed at the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Just answer the question.

Hon. W. Newman: I will answer the question. You just be quiet.

Mr. Breaugh: We are just trying to help you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[10:30]

Hon. W. Newman: Both parties opposite wanted a royal commission and they have got a royal commission. The Leader of the Opposition wanted the lawyer fired the other day. The lawyer has come on very strong on Loblaws. I don't know how lawyers operate. I'm not a lawyer, and I never know how they operate, but they do have strategies, I guess, on how they work and how they do things.

If the honourable member is so concerned—and I understand he is going to make a presentation—he has the right to ask to have legal counsel down there. Why does he not have his own people there asking some questions if he is really showing concern about it? He could have one of his legal people down there. He just has to go down and ask. All he wants to do is talk. The honourable member has certain rights if he wants to use them and not for political purposes.

The judge has the right and has the power under the order in council over a wide range of things that he can do. It's up to him to decide what he is going to do, and I'm not going to tell the royal commission how they must conduct themselves.

Mr. S. Smith: Since it is perfectly evident that they don't have a leg to stand on in their contention that these discount matters must be kept confidential for the sake of the fear of competitive information being given out, why doesn't the minister, if he has any interest at all in the success of this commission—which I seriously doubt—at least express the opinion and the view, albeit that the judge will make the final decision, that the commission should take every means possible, including subpoena, to obtain the information on the kickback practices and, furthermore, to make it public? Express a view; have some courage.

Hon. W. Newman: The honourable member is asking me to tell the judge what to do. That's exactly what he is doing; he is asking me to tell the judge what to do. The judge knows how to get the facts; he knows the way to get them. In the final analysis, when this commission is finished, I think they will have all the facts and figures they want and need.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a twofold supplementary for the minister. What is the point of the minister asking either the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party or anybody else to have a counsel down there when the Ontario Federation of Agriculture counsel is cut off half the time when he tries to pursue questions? He is cut off by Rodney Hull. That's my first question.

Secondly, when Loblaws president Nichol came before the standing committee on resources development last year and he was asked questions on discounts, he answered them; in fact, he was very open and was going to tell us everything in a very grandiloquent way. Isn't his refusal to give that information now absolute stonewalling of the operation? If the commission isn't willing to do something about the stonewalling, will the minister not do something?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, taking these questions in reverse order: As far as Mr. Nichol or anyone else refusing to give information is concerned, I understand there was some information given by him at the hearing the other day, off the top of his head.

Mr. MacDonald: Why was it off the top of his head?

Hon. W. Newman: A document was filed, which I understand has been checked out by the commission. We have a legal counsel sitting at the commission also asking some questions. We are very interested in what goes on. As far as I am concerned, we want to make sure that everything is done correctly, but I refuse to tell the judge and the counsel what to do.

To answer the first part of the honourable member's question regarding the legal counsel for the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, if the member had the integrity or sent one of his people down to watch those hearings, he would know the reason counsel gets cut off is that he is out of order.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, is the minister, the man who is supposed to be standing up for the farmers and the consumers, saying to this House that he feels that he is legally precluded from expressing a view on the matter? We're not saying he should tell the judge what to do. Does he say he's legally precluded from expressing a view on the matter? If not, why doesn't he have the courage to express a view on the matter?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, that isn't what I said at all. I said a royal commission has been appointed and is looking into the matter. I am as interested in it as the member is or anybody else is—

Mr. MacDonald: Your procedures are phoney.

Hon. W. Newman:—and if he would stop trying to make politics out of it, as he did the other day, it would let them get on with their job.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact the judges' or commissioners' reports from past commissions have been rather predictable, would the minister not consider cancelling this inquiry to stop wasting more public funds?

An hon. member: It is a copout the way you are doing it.

Mr. Cassidy: Either make it work or don't do it at all.

Mr. S. Smith: Express a view.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, all I can say in answer to the members over there is, they asked for it, and now they want to cancel it. They never know where they are going.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you know where you are going?

Mr. Foulds: Nowhere.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Cassidy: Now that it is clear the Ontario Manpower Commission will work through other ministries rather than working on its own, Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Education regarding the very sharp decline in enrolments in a number of important technical subjects over the course of the last couple of years in the high schools of the province.

Can the minister explain why it is that there has been a 15 per cent drop in grade nine and 10 students in drafting over the course of the years 1976 to 1978? That is a drop of about 6,500 students. Since machinists are so vital in the province, can she explain why there has been a drop of nine per cent, or about 3,300 students, in machine shop practice in those early years of high school; since the aircraft industry is important, why there has been a drop of 67 per cent, or 360 students, in students taking courses in aircraft; or why there has been a drop of 1,800 students, or 22.5 per cent, in the grade nine and 10 students taking automobile servicing in order to start to become mechanics?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious there is an interest in the skills-related area which is evinced by the students who graduate from secondary schools in their applications to community colleges.

I would remind the honourable member that there has been a significant drop in the numbers of students attending secondary school. I am also aware that in some specific schools there has been a problem with the scheduling of the curriculum in a way that makes it possible for the students to participate at the kind of level that would be appropriate in certain of the technical areas.

I have been doing my best over the past 10 months to talk to headmasters, to school boards and to those responsible for the development of curriculum schedules, to modify the kind of programming that is done in order to ensure the appropriate arrangements are made to permit the students a kind of educational program that will encourage them to become involved in those kinds of subjects the honourable member is talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why it is students were involved in these courses two years ago, but there are far fewer of them in these courses today, particularly when the overall decline in secondary school enrolments between 1976 and 1978 was only one quarter of one per cent? Will the minister not agree that her ministry should be doing a great deal now to stimulate interest and involvement by students in these technical subjects in order that we have a supply of skilled manpower to fill Ontario's industrial needs over the course of the 1980s?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am just delighted to hear the honourable leader of the third party endorse the activity I have been actively involved in for the last six months.

Mr. Martel: You are so far behind the times.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: Given that one of the main reasons a lot of students are not taking these programs is that they have been told by the secondary school staff that they cannot guarantee they will be able to continue the program for the full four or five years, is the minister prepared to make any provisions to assist school boards to guarantee students that if they start a program they are going to be able to finish it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is the role of the school board to co-operate in this function, and it has been my role over the last several months to ensure the school boards are aware of the needs to ensure continuity of the programs and to attempt to assist them in making that assurance by providing some extra assistance in the area of technical education in the budget allocations for school boards this year. I have also been involved in many discussions with the technical directors, with technical teachers and with the teachers' federation, which is responsible for representing them, to alert them to the need for an emphasis on this kind of educational program which equals the kind of emphasis given to academic programs which have been traditional within the school system.

We are trying our best to ensure that the students who want to become involved in this kind of program will have that opportunity and, as a result, we have introduced eight new programs which will maintain continuity, not only within the secondary school program but in the post-secondary program as well, and we intend to expand that program within the next several months.

Mr. Bradley: Same old story.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, it isn't.

Mr. Cassidy: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If I can bring the minister's rhetoric down to specifics, what has the Ministry of Education done to restore the industrial arts program at the Chapleau High School, a matter I raised in this Legislature about six or seven weeks ago, in order that students in that particular isolated area of northern Ontario can have access to any form of technical courses at all? What has the Ministry of Education done in the case of a large number of technical high schools or composite high schools across the province, where the equipment they are using is becoming more and more out of date compared with what is used in industry outside and the school boards cannot afford to get decent equipment because of the cutbacks?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the specific problem of the Chapleau High School is being investigated by the northern regional office, and I presume that report will be coming to me in a very few days.

The problem the member raises regarding the kind of equipment that is present within the secondary school system is one we have attempted to make at least a step towards resolving by the additional funds which were provided for that purpose this year, and it is our intention to move further in succeeding years in that area.

There is also intensive activity taking place in a number of communities in the area of co-operative educational programs which will ensure that the equipment the students will be taught upon is the latest of equipment which most school boards could not possibly keep up with in any kind of a very generous delivery of funds to the school system.

The community colleges have the same kinds of problems. It is not possible to ensure that the latest generation of specific equipment is present within the educational institution. It is more important to make certain that the kind of equipment which provides the basic and generalist knowledge for the student is there, that it is in good condition and that the newer and more specialized equipment is available to the students through co-operative education programs with the co-operation of employers within the community. That is one of the directions in which we are working.

LIQUOR REGULATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Would the minister justify the 50-50 ratio under which dining lounges such as Willy's Wine Bar, in my riding of Ottawa Centre, have to sell as much food as liquor in each month in view of the recent massive increases in the price of wine? Isn't a result of those massive increases in the price of wine that an establishment like Willy's Wine Bar has no choice but to inflate the price of food to maintain the ministry's ratios?

Mr. Peterson: They are putting the price of food up. What are you worried about?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the honourable member—and I would have thought he would have known this—that the price of food is rising twice as fast as the price of wine. So, a 50-50 ratio, in terms of selling food, actually is a break.

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you bring them down?

Mr. Cassidy: Since Willy's Wine Bar opened up in November 1978, I think it is news to everyone in this House that the price of food has gone up as quickly as the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario wine prices over the course of those six months.

Is the minister aware that this particular licensee, who is now required to appear before the liquor licence board on July 26 here in Toronto, was told by a board inspector, "Things will go much better for you in Toronto if you do not talk to the press"? Will the minister step in to stop this kind of harassment and ensure that a small business that is trying to get established can get a decent break?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to make it extremely explicit that, number one, I think it would be highly improper, and I would never interfere with a proceeding of the liquor licence board.

Mr. MacDonald: What about your inspectors?

[10:45]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Will the member please calm himself down?

I am deeply disturbed by that type of allegation. I will look into the matter. At no time will I, as the minister responsible to this House for the liquor licence board, or any other part of my ministry, countenance an attempt at silencing a person, a small business or a corporation, from expressing free comment or from stating a case to the public in any way.

Mr. Swart: Will you examine their political affiliation?

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why it is that an establishment like Vine's Wine Bar in Toronto can advertise itself as being "truly reminiscent of a London wine bar"—that's an established wine bar—but an establishment like Willy's in Ottawa, which has been trying to get off the ground and is running into great difficulties with the ministry, should have its advertisements in the local press monitored on a regular basis by the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario inspectors and be sent letters telling the establishment it is not to use copy references to "a wine bar" and "a downstairs bar"?

Is it normal that high-priced inspectors of the LLBO should be monitoring the local press to see whether each apostrophe in each word of every advertisement is going to be correctly used or not?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The leader of the New Democratic Party knows perfectly well that one of the jurisdictions of the liquor licence board is control over advertising—not just advertising of the product but signs, public advertisements and so on.

About this wine place in Toronto the member speaks of in comparison with some wine bar in London, England, I don't know. I've never been in a wine bar. That must have been one that escaped me. I really don't know what the member is talking about. If he is complaining that the place in Ottawa is being harassed, I will look into it. But I will tell the member there are certain places in Ontario whose ads the minister monitors. They know what they can put in an advertisement; they know what they are specifically forbidden to put in an advertisement, and they are going to conform to the law.

Perhaps the leader of the third party is asking me to make a special dispensation for the Ottawa wine bar because it can not sell enough food. When it made an application—if I understand the member correctly, it opened last year—it was cautioned it might lose its licence if it did not conform to the 50-50 food ratio. Now, if I understand correctly, it says that because of the increase in the price of wine it cannot sell enough food. However, the price of food has been going up at twice the rate of alcohol price increases in the last year, and they are going to have to conform to the law.

[Later (11:22):]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, earlier in the question period the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations stated the price of food had gone up at twice the rate of the price of wine. The price of food—I have checked the figures—has gone up by 17 per cent in the past year, but we were unable yesterday to get any index on the increase in the price of wine from the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. I cannot see how the minister can make that claim, particularly when many wines doubled in price on April 30 of this year.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, from the time of the licensing of that establishment I will stand by the statement I made. It was licensed last year when there was a freeze on the price of wine. It operated for quite a considerable period of time with wine subsidized by the taxpayers of the province because of that fact. It is a well-known fact how much the price of food has gone up, particularly institutional food, because of the difficulty in obtaining fresh produce during the wintertime.

If the member wants statistics, his informant should give me her order. I want to know what wine she is buying. I presume she feels too good to buy Ontario wine. I could give her that off the top of my head. If she will provide me with a list of the particular brands of wines she has bought, I will send her a letter.

REVIEW OF BILL 100

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education arising out of the strike of secondary school teachers in Haldimand county in this school year. The students were out of school for a two-month period, and it came to light that the students did not have rights with regard to their education.

Can the minister tell us when she is going to make public the results of the long internal review of Bill 100?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the internal review of Bill 100 is now almost complete. I have discussed the potential activity following the internal review with members of the Council of School Trustees Associations, the Ontario Teachers' Federation and the Council of Home and School Federations of Ontario. It is possible we shall be establishing a multipartite external committee to examine the findings of Bill 100 results over the last several years to try to determine whether there should be major or even minor modifications of the act.

I should like to assure the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) that one of the problems related to the difficulty he has talked about, the dispute between the teachers and the board in that area, had its roots in a very long-standing attitude of confrontation without resolution of problems. The Education Relations Commission has informed both parties in this area that it would be delighted to participate in a preventive mediation activity, now that the strike is settled, to ensure that all those problems which seemed to be lighting the brush fires that caused the dispute to degenerate into a strike could be removed before the next set of negotiations begins. I am very hopeful that that activity will take place.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Is the minister reviewing the responsibilities of the Education Relations Commission with regard to the rights of the students? Will there be a closer connection there so that the rights will be protected?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That is a necessary activity in the review of Bill 100.

Mr. S. Smith: The government can't agree on human rights.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the minister how she can justify touring around the province with this internal report and not take it upon herself to table this report in the Legislature, where it belongs? She has discussed it with everybody else. Why can't she table it in the Legislature?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed the report with the other parties that I mentioned. I discussed with them the possibility of the establishment of a multipartite external committee to examine the report when it is ready. It is not as yet ready.

Mr. S. Smith: The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and you cannot agree.

CHEESE PRODUCTION

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food—if he will stall his departure for a minute—about the cheese industry in the province of Ontario. Is he aware of just how serious the decline in that industry is, in particular in cheddar cheese? In the past 25 years Ontario's share of Canadian production has dropped from 93 per cent to 33 per cent and there are now only about 65 cheese factories left in Ontario, compared with about 1,200 at the turn of the century. Does the minister agree that this is extremely serious, both in terms of the lost job opportunities in that industrial sector and in the very serious trade deficit of almost $60 million last year?

Mr. Riddell: Pull out one of your old speeches.

Mr. Nixon: Blame the feds.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer this question, because quite obviously the member has been around here for a few years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Too long.

Hon. W. Newman: Ever since I have been Minister of Agriculture and Food, we have seen this problem coming because of the industrial milk program across Canada and the allocation of industrial milk to the province of Ontario.

Mr. Kerrio: Federal government stuff.

Hon. W. Newman: Sure it is; I'm not changing my mind just because the government has done it. I know they will know how to handle it.

Mr. S. Smith: What have they done so far?

Mr. Swart: You will eat those words.

Hon. W. Newman: Coming back to cheddar cheese, I am very concerned about the industrial milk supply to the province of Ontario which goes to cheese production. The Ontario Milk Marketing Board takes the industrial milk that we have allocated to the province and puts it out on various kinds of cheese. For instance, for specialty cheese there is no quota, but for cheddar cheese they do have to have a quota on it.

We have had discussions with the Milk Marketing Board over a period of time. I have been fighting for more market share quota for this province for two and a half years because I feel we need it here in this province. We don't want to be greedy and take it away from everybody else, but we want our fair share. I have said I want a total dairy industry in this province, and I do not want the cheddar cheese industry to be out of business.

I have even asked for credit on MSQ from the government of Canada—that is market share quota, in case the member doesn't know. We can export cheddar cheese, we've got markets for it from this province, and yet we can't get the milk allocated to us from Ottawa to do it.

Mr. Laughren: And there you sit.

Hon. W. Newman: Sit? No.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The member knows nothing about it.

Mr. Riddell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Now that we have a new Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa, has the minister made any effort to contact him to recommend to him that we are going to have to take some of Quebec's allocation and some of Alberta's allocation away from them in order to give it to Ontario so that we can produce the cheese to meet the market that he says there is for it?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in the new Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa, and I know that he knows the problem. I have discussed it many times in advance of his taking over, because I knew he was going to take over. So he knows full well the problem. He knows—at least I think he knows—there has to be a better distribution of MSQ when there is one province not using its total allocation. I'm not picking on any one of our sister provinces, but I know and the member knows which one it is.

Mr. Bradley: But having said that.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We know which one it is.

Hon. W. Newman: When one province can ship all the milk it wants to ship and doesn't totally utilize its quotas, it's time there was some adjustment in the system. They should lose some of that quota if they're not going to utilize it, and give it to someone who can utilize it.

Here in Ontario we have gone through a very difficult time as far as the cheddar cheese people are concerned.

Mr. Nixon: We lost ours because we didn't utilize it. That's how we lost it.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Have the minister and his officials done any work at all on the potentially increased markets, particularly for cheddar cheese, with the European Economic Community as a result of the GATT negotiations which should give us increased opportunities for exports of cheddar cheese and which would enable us to easily wipe out the deficit we now face?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, it's quite obvious the member doesn't know the price of cheddar cheese in the European Economic Community, what it would sell for and the sort of tariff barriers in the agricultural community over there. If the member doesn't understand that, I'll explain it to him.

Mr. Laughren: I know a lot more about that than you do.

Hon. W. Newman: We could send a boatload of cheese over to the EEC market tomorrow and before that boatload would land in the EEC, they could have moved the tariff up to the point where it was almost impossible to deal with.

Mr. Laughren: As a result of GATT.

Hon. W. Newman: Just a minute. After the GATT negotiations they will allow so many million pounds in—

Mr. Breough: Why do you give up so easily?

Hon. W. Newman: —which we will have no trouble fulfilling at all.

Mr. Breough: Why don't you fight for it?

Hon. W. Newman: We'll have no trouble fulfilling that quota—and more, if they would let us do it.

Mr. Laughren: We don't have the factories.

Hon. W. Newman: We don't have them in the province of Ontario because we don't have the milk. The member knows where it is. It comes from Canada. It has to come from Canada.

Mr. Laughren: And you sit there. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a supplementary? I wonder if he could tell us, in his discussions with the new federal minister, what comments the new federal minister made as to what he was going to do to correct the problem?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, there is a federal-provincial conference which will be held in about three weeks' time. There also is a national supply and management committee working right now looking at the total picture of national supply and management of industrial milk. If the member reads Farm and Country, he'll see the Conservative policy, and I'm quite sure he will carry it out.

COURT FACILITIES

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. I wonder if I could ask him if he would have his officials investigate the shortage of criminal court facilities in the city of Belleville, in the Quinte area, where over the past few years the caseload in these courts has increased substantially, resulting in unnecessary delays, changes in scheduling and many other additional pressures?

I might also add space is available but funds have not been forthcoming for renovations and furniture.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, the caseloads have increased dramatically in almost every area of the province, but I will be very happy to look into the situation to which the member refers. I will get back to him as to what we are doing specifically in that area to relieve the caseload and in relation to any additional facilities that may be coming on-stream in the near future.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the Attorney General's officials are investigating the shortage of facilities, would he also consider the appointment of additional judges for both the provincial and criminal courts and an additional full-time assistant crown attorney and the staff to assist in these positions?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: These matters will be taken into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

CHEMICALS IN SCHOOLYARD

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of the Environment. The minister will recall a question I raised with him regarding soil contamination at Manchester Public School in Cambridge. Is the minister aware that blood tests have shown two pupils to have lead levels in excess of what is considered to be normal? That is two pupils out of a total of 22 children and teachers who have been tested in that school. Will he give us his assurance that, given these lead levels have in fact, been found to be excessive, further tests will be carried out on the other children in that school to ensure their health is protected?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, I will, Mr. Speaker. [11:00]

Mr. M. Davidson: A supplementary: Can the minister then tell us why it would be that his official in Cambridge, Mr. Mike Caranci, has indicated publicly that tests will be discontinued if readings do not show higher levels than they have done at the present time? Can he also tell us if the provincial government has an effective method of testing nickel content in human beings, given that nickel, which has also been found in the soil, is potentially more harmful than any of the other metals?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We took some tests a while back and the tests were within normal range. Subsequent tests were taken with more stringent controls and there was a slight elevation over normal standards. On that basis, we were prepared to do further testing.

As for the details of how we are able to test for nickel, I'm afraid I don't have that technical expertise. I'd be glad to give it to the member. I don't know whether we have the capabilities for testing for nickel; I suspect we do. I know we have great capabilities for testing for all heavy metal and, I suspect, nickel is included. But to make a yes or no answer I'll have to confirm that later.

LAURENTIAN HOSPITAL

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, last week the member for Sudbury brought to my attention a matter concerning Laurentian Hospital and one of its employees who was receiving workmen's compensation benefits and who, it is alleged, was subjected to surveillance by a private investigator engaged by the employer.

I've discussed the member's question with the Workmen's Compensation Board and I am advised by them it is very rare for evidence obtained by such investigators to be tendered at board hearings. Where such evidence is tendered, it is the board's obligation to rule on its admissibility, and if it is found by the board to be admissible, to give it only such weight as it sees fit.

It is important to realize that the board, as a quasi-judicial administrative tribunal, is obliged to act in its adjudication upon what is admissible as proper evidence, bearing in mind that in so doing its rulings may be subject to judicial review by the courts. I, therefore, don't believe it would be proper for me to attempt to instruct the board on my own personal views as to its right to accept evidence in any given case so long as the board subjects such evidence to careful scrutiny. I also do not believe any useful purpose can be served by expressing my personal view on the role of private investigators who are retained to gather evidence for use in litigation.

Mr. Warner: That board's out of control.

Mr. Laughren: The minister leads it around by the nose.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is well known that the use of such investigators is widespread in all forms of civil litigation and the courts have always made it clear that such evidence must be subjected to careful examination and scrutiny. If, in the course of gathering that evidence, investigators act in an unlawful manner, there is a legal remedy.

Whether evidence obtained under such circumstances is admissible, or is in some way tainted by the illegal conduct, would be a matter to be determined by the tribunal. I don't believe the member's question alleges any such illegal activity in the case, but if such an allegation is intended I can only repeat what I have said as to the possible legal consequences.

I might add that I know of no jurisdiction anywhere where the right of any party to a contested matter to rely upon evidence obtained by a private investigator has been outlawed.

Mr. Germa: A supplementary: Setting aside the activity of a private eye, as a minister of the crown would he care to make a statement as it relates to the use of public funds—Health dollars—for this kind of activity on behalf of the administrator of that hospital?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As I've tried to outline in my answer, I think there are three issues: The first is it's not illegal to retain a private investigator to do this sort of activity. The courts, in all jurisdictions, have clearly said so.

Second is the issue of what that evidence is worth. There the courts have clearly said they must make two decisions: it is admissible; and how much deference should we give to it, in view of the fact—

Mr. Warner: They're spending public funds to spy on workers.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: —it's evidence purchased for a particular purpose?

As to the question of whether or not a public body should use funds to retain such investigators, that's a difficult question. Certainly, funds are given to bodies such as hospitals to run their hospital efficiently. If they have an honest and reasonable belief that someone is trying to mislead them with regard to some aspects, the issue is whether they have the right to investigate it. It's a very difficult issue, I admit that. I would have to ask the Minister of Health whether or not he thinks it is appropriate for a hospital board to use that, but certainly the hospital boards are relatively independent bodies and do have decisions to make themselves.

Mr. Germa: Further supplementary: Is the minister saying the investigative branch of the Workmen's Compensation Board is not capable of doing a proper investigation into a claim and that it needs to be second-guessed by private eyes?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: No, I am not saying that at all. I'm saying that the Workmen's Compensation Board, at the appeal stage and at the adjudication stage, receives information from a variety of sources: one, from its own investigation; second, from remarks or evidence or information submitted by the employee or the worker; and other information submitted, if the claim is contested, by the employer. There is a variety of sources of information. That was what my comments related to.

MILK PRICES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, last Friday the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) asked some questions concerning the pricing of fluid milk during the conversion to metric cartons by the Borden Company Limited in Ottawa.

Mr. Conway: Elsie, the Borden cow. Frank, go easy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There were three questions involved in this. I can get rid of two of them right away.

One of the questions involved the fact that the two-litre container did not have an equivalent imperial measurement on it. Had the company done that it would have been contrary to the law.

The only time in metric conversion that a container or package is allowed to use both the imperial and the metric numbers is while the imperial sized package remains. That is called soft conversion. Once the metric container, for either liquids or solids, is on the market, only the metric measurement may remain on it. That is called hard conversion. That is the law of Canada.

I notice, by the way, the honourable member has his cartons on his desk. He forgot to give them to me last week.

Mr. Makarchuk: There's cheese in there now.

Mr. Conway: There's a terrible smell.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member was also apparently set up by the person who purported to give him the Borden wholesale prices. They are incorrect.

Mr. Warner: A clerical error.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have from the Borden company their wholesale milk prices in October, in January and in April. Somebody set up the dear honourable member because the prices he gave were not correct. The member said the conversion of the two-quart carton to a two-litre carton resulted in a four-cent drop in price. That is wrong. It resulted in a five-cent drop in price; he had the wrong figures.

Mr. McClellan: I think that clerk is a Tory.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The basis for that drop was that in January the price to dairies of two quarts of two per cent milk in its raw form was 58.9 cents. When converted to litres, the price of the raw milk dropped to 51.8 cents, a reduction of seven cents. The price scale-down was based only upon the raw material in the container, not the cost of container or other matters. Borden dropped the price by five cents at that time. Because of a new labour agreement with the Teamsters union signed on exactly the same day, there was a 1.1 cent additional increase put on each litre, or about two cents on the two-litre container.

It is a matter of record that when the general milk price increase came in at the end of April this year the Borden company would have been entitled to an almost eight cents increase on that two-litre container, had it followed the practice of the rest of the industry. It did not. It raised it only six cents.

To date the Borden company has passed on, to within a fraction of a penny, the exact reduction of the raw material, which is the milk, coming about from the conversion from imperial to metric measurements.

I would like to draw to the attention of the honourable member that the Metric Commission of Canada was consulted by the Borden company prior to the introduction of this new package. Secondly, the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, whose representatives sit on the metric commission, also knew about this.

In view of the fact that the words "price-gouge," "hoodwinked" and "gouge" appear in the record, I would certainly hope the honourable member, now that he has the facts, would put this matter into perspective.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, I will put it into perspective and say it is the minister who has been set up. Is he not aware the Milk Act specifically permits the province to determine the labelling, including, if they wish, to put on the content in both litres and quarts? May I quote the section of the act? Section 49: "The Ontario Milk Commission may make regulations respecting the advertising in respect of the labelling of containers for fluid milk product, or any class of fluid milk product." They may put the imperial measurement on.

I would also ask the minister, in his role as the apologist for Borden Company Limited and particularly justifying the 10 per cent increase—and it was a 10 per cent hike in milk prices because of the increase, which he says were because of their increased costs—can he explain why all three dairies in the Thunder Bay area have been able to change over with less than one half the price increase of Borden's in Ottawa?

Can the minister explain why the wholesale price of a two-litre carton in Thunder Bay charged by all of these local dairies is $1.21 compared to $1.31 for Borden's, even though they pay four per cent more for the milk in northern Ontario?

Finally, how can he justify the increase on the basis of additional packaging costs, because this two-litre container is slightly smaller than the old two-quart container, as he will agree?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a four-part question. I think that is enough for the moment. Does the honourable minister have a response?

Mr. Swart: Can I please finish?

Mr. Mackenzie: What's the matter? Are you afraid of the question?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, the approximate one cent increase per litre or two cents per two-litre package was not based on increased packaging cost, it was based on having to meet the increased cost negotiated by the Teamsters union in the contract at that time.

Mr. Swart: Why didn't the rest of the milk go up by the same amount? It was only the litre that went up.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is extremely difficult to keep track of the incoherent questions of the honourable member. I will try to answer them if he will only put them in order.

There are different milk prices in effect in northern Ontario, in Ottawa, in Toronto and a great number of areas in the province.

Will he send me over what he purports to be the wholesale prices? I caution him again before he gets extravagant, he may be facing a lawsuit on this. I am trying to be easy.

Mr. MacDonald: You may be facing a lawsuit on some things Frank. Wait until the transmission companies are finished with you.

Mr. Swart: Is that a threat through the company you are giving to me?

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you let their lawyers make their threats for them?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not from me. No, it is not.

Mr. Speaker: Just answer the question. Never mind the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple and fundamental case. In the metric conversion the company reduced the amount of milk in the container. On the conversion it passed on, in the first instance, all but one cent of the saving on the litre. When the general price increase came through at the end of April it passed on the rest, because it didn't take what it could have taken.

No matter how much the member tries to fudge this or camouflage this, or run it around the end or try to talk about Thunder Bay—he was dead wrong last week. If he wants me to look at Thunder Bay, I would be absolutely delighted to do so, but I suggest to him, before he uses the words price gouging, hoodwinking and some other things where he goes out deliberately, because of his certain type of mentality, to try and ruin a company's good name, he should be sure of his facts.

ONTARIO HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett).

At the present time an individual may have what is called an adjusted family income of no more than $12,500 to qualify for the Ontario Home Renewal Program. Since this qualification has not changed since the beginning of the program in 1974, would the Premier not agree that thousands of people who were eligible for the OHRP at its inception are now excluded since the eligible income level has not been raised for five years? If he does agree with that, would he assure the House he will take the necessary steps to immediately update this qualification?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member's former leader says "Certainly." Why didn't the member ask him? It's always easy to be more generous in opposition than in government.

Mr. Nixon: You are not generous at all.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, we are. We are so generous it is embarrassing on occasion. Listen, the member's leader has become so generous, I just noticed in the paper this morning, he's prepared to give a 30 or 40 per cent—
[11:15]

Mr. Speaker: Would you like to move over and have a nice little chat?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I guess we could, Mr. Speaker, it's that time of day.

Mr. Speaker: Then we can get on with the business of question period.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we haven't really done that totally in the past hour, why should I be any exception? I will try to answer the question; I understand.

Mr. Cunningham: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The qualification level has not altered. I think it really isn't as simplistic as that. The qualification level could change but, depending on the total amount of funding, that might not be as relevant as how much money is available. So, if the level of qualification were moved up and the funding were to remain the same it isn't necessarily the people who need it the most who will get it. With the level of funding that presently exists, probably the qualification level is logical at this moment, but I'm quite prepared to discuss it with the minister as long as the member understands that there are limitations on total amount of money available in this program.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Of course we understand that, but I guess I should ask, does he understand? The point we make is that the same number of people today would be eligible if that level were raised. Would the Premier give us some assurance that when he is discussing this with the Minister of Housing, at least the inflation rate in the last five years will be taken into account?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We always take into account many things, not just the inflation rate. I certainly will raise that with the minister, but I caution the honourable member not to raise his expectations in terms of the amount of funding that will be available for this particular program. We think it's excellent, but there are limitations on total dollars available.

BOISE CASCADE DISPUTE

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Attorney General, who I'm told is lurking in the precincts somewhere, I would like to address a question to the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

Is the minister aware that in the court cases currently being held in Kenora over the last few days, of the 34 charges heard up until 10 o'clock last night that had been laid by both the town and the provincial police for alleged incidents on the picket lines during the strike of Boise Cascade by the lumber and sawmill workers, 10 of those charges had been withdrawn, 16 charges dismissed, two charges resulted in conditional discharge and only six resulted in convictions the penalties for five of which were fines of less than $100? Does he not feel it is plainly evident that when four fifths of the charges laid have been found to be unjustified there was a clear harassment of the picketers by the OPP and the town police and they used frivolous charges to remove men from the picket lines for up to seven months? Does he not find that use of police as strike breakers an unfair thing to do and something that should not be condemned by this government?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think I would be wise to refer that matter to the Attorney General for a more detailed answer.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Can the minister, while he is consulting with the chief law officer of the crown, indicate why one of the strikers, one Robert Dale Lougheed, who was charged and during the course of the charge was kept from the precincts of Boise Cascade property but, when he decided to cross the picket line, even though the charge had not been withdrawn, it was suddenly all right for him to go near Boise property and work on it? Can he clarify that point in law?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will include that in my discussion with the Attorney General, yes.

ILLEGAL DUMPING OF LIQUID WASTE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'll ask your guidance on this. I believe there is a matter of privilege here. Three months ago, in this House I asked of the Minister of the Environment certain information, including copies of any inspection certificates of sites that had accepted hazardous waste and site inspection certificates for the Upper Ottawa Street dump. You will appreciate, sir, that the only way one can check on illegal dumping is by an actual inspection report by an inspector who actually looks at the place.

That question was repeated several times. Today, three months later, I have received from the minister some answers to various questions and, at the bottom, by way of answering the question on site inspection certificates, the minister says: "Response to this question will be forthcoming in due course."

Site inspection certificates exist, or they don't exist. They can be produced, I would imagine, for someone to look at, to see if there is illegality going on. For three months to go by with repeated demands and letters and questions and then to be told the day we are rising for the summer they will be forthcoming in due course, seems to me an abuse of the spirit of the idea of question and answer in this assembly, if not the actual regulation in law.

Of course, the question comes to mind as to what the ministry is hiding, but apart from that, the question is why does the minister not show more respect for us as elected representatives? I must answer to my constituents, who tell me arsenic and various things have gone into these dumps and I can't answer their questions if I can't look at those reports. I can't do my job properly if I am not given access to these matters.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to take into consideration the sort of answer we have been given, after three months of waiting for these certificates.

Mr. Speaker: It is really not a point of privilege. The minister can answer in any way he sees fit and deems proper and one can only assume he is still seeking the information or, conversely, he chooses not to answer. You have to draw your own conclusions from that. It is not within the purview of the Speaker to demand action from a minister of the crown.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Not speaking to the point of privilege, but I did send the information I now wish to table to the Leader of the Opposition earlier this morning. I want to put on the table, sir, the details of this material we have now in reply to the questions previously asked.

Mr. S. Smith: He is not speaking to the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In fact, what he is tabling is the information he sent me, which includes the offensive answer which I read to you, saying the information is coming in due course.

Mr. Speaker: What I said earlier still applies.

Mr. S. Smith: I understand, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTS

FOREIGN PURCHASES OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Hon. W. Newman presented the report on foreign ownership of agricultural land in Kent and Huron counties.

Hon. W. Newman: There has been a great deal of discussion in the Legislature on the alleged sale of Ontario agricultural land to foreign buyers. My ministry has prepared a report, as I promised, on Kent and Huron counties. We also assembled the figures for all other counties in Ontario, showing the amount of land held by owners nonresident in Canada. Today I would like to submit this report to the Legislature.

From the data, it appears very little Ontario agricultural land is owned by non-resident people.

Mr. Riddell: Over three per cent.

Hon. W. Newman: However, if the members have any additional information, now or in the future, I should appreciate their passing it along to me, and I will have it looked into.

The information in this report came from government records.

Mr. Gaunt: We will continue to do your work for you.

Hon. W. Newman: My ministry will continue to monitor this most important matter and will update the information regularly.

An hon. member: We will give you some of ours.

Hon. W. Newman: Why don't you give it to me then? I have asked you for it. Give it to me.

Mr. Nixon: We will give it to you, Bill.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Renwick from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr13, An Act respecting Massey Hall;

Bill Pr14, An Act to Revive the January School as Montcrest School;

Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the Trustees of the Windsor Grove Cemetery.

Your committee recommends that the fees less the actual cost of printing be remitted on the following bills:

Bill Pr13, An Act respecting Massey Hall;

Bill Pr14, An Act to revive the January School as Montcrest School.

Report adopted.

SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that when the House adjourns today it stand adjourned until Wednesday, October 10, on which day the committees will sit as scheduled. The House will sit in the chamber on Thursday, October 11, provided that if it appears to Mr. Speaker after advice from the government that the public interest requires the House to meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice. Should Mr. Speaker be unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House shall act in his stead for the purposes of this order.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that on the request of the standing resources development committee the committee while sitting during the summer recess to consider the Hydro matter referred to it may, if necessary, ask Mr. Speaker through the office of the clerk to issue his warrant or warrants for the attendance of a witness or witnesses.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the motion I think is a relatively important one since that committee has directed to it by the Legislature a review of the contracts between Hydro and the Babcock and Wilcox corporation having to do with the boilers that have been so much a subject of interest and importance in this House. It has been brought to my attention that while a Speaker's warrant for the compulsion of witnesses may be necessary, and therefore this motion would make it available, it is also quite possible that a Speaker's warrant may very well be necessary for certain "papers and things"—a phrase you know very well, sir—that is put out in the establishment of the committee by motion. With your permission, sir, I would move an amendment to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Nixon moves an amendment to the motion placed by the government House leader, to amend it by adding "and for the production of papers and things deemed necessary by the committee."

Hon. Mr. Welch: I don't have any objection to that. I thought, during the discussion prior to introducing the motion, we had cleared up that matter. I thought the motion establishing the standing committees gives them that authority now and that this is simply for purposes of clarification. I think it adds nothing to the authority which the committee already has as far as papers and other materials are concerned, but certainly if this helps to clarify it we have no objection.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTION

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that substitution be permitted on the standing procedural affairs committee during the summer recess.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Breaugh: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, might I point out that a change in the rules of this House requires unanimous consent.

[11:30]

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, this obviously is some indication of lack of communication. If the Speaker will allow it, perhaps later on today we can cover the specific substitutions we want to provide for now, which will be on majority rule rather than having a blanket substitution. I do apologize to the chairman of the committee. I thought this matter had been cleared.

Mr. Breaugh: No.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I ask for a ruling. It would seem the rules do require there be no substitution on the standing procedural affairs committee during the life of a parliament, except as agreed to by the House. I take it we can accomplish what we want to do, as long as we are specific. In other words, the House will by majority vote actually substitute members on the committee. We can do that without unanimous consent.

I suggest to my colleagues that we now be giving some thought to the preparation of a motion that would specifically make the substitutions before we adjourn some time today, rather than the blanket substitution previously requested.

Mr. Speaker: Without unanimous consent the motion is out of order.

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the following substitutions be made: On the standing resources development committee, Mr. J. A. Taylor for Mr. Yakabuski; on the standing administration of justice committee, Mr. Jones for Mr. Cureatz, Mr. Kennedy for Mr. Rotenberg, Mr. McCaffrey for Mr. Sterling, Mr. Ramsay for Mr. J. A. Taylor, Mr. Turner for Mr. Williams; on the select committee on company law, Mr. Handleman for Mr. Cureatz; and on the select committee on the Ombudsman, Mr. Isaacs for Mr. Grande.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BALLOT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Mr. Rotenberg be substituted for Mr. Rollins in the order of precedence for private members' public business and that all members of the Conservative caucus listed on the new ballot be advanced by one place in their turn.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTION

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Mr. Mancini be substituted for Mr. Haggerty on the standing procedural affairs committee.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the following standing committees be authorized to meet during the summer recess in accordance with the schedule of meetings agreed to by the three party whips to consider matters referred to them by the House: resources development committee, administration of justice committee, public accounts committee and procedural affairs committee.

Motion agreed to.

REDIRECTION OF BILL 100

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the order for third reading of Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound, be discharged and the bill referred back to committee of the whole House.

Mr. Nixon: I will defer to my colleague.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, we were given notice a few minutes ago that this was going to be done. I thought this House had dealt fairly adequately and completely with the various amendments that were before us the other day. I see no reason at this time why the bill should be referred back to the committee of the whole House.

The government had prided itself on having done six years of studies on this whole problem. It had every opportunity to bring in amendments. Now, in the dying hours of this session, it wants to introduce another amendment. As far as I am concerned, the government is not playing according to the way this House usually responds to the public will. I don't think there is anything to be gained by having this matter go back to committee of the whole.

This morning I received a telegram which conveniently was not raised in this House the other day by the government; I wish they had raised it. I will read it: "Please be reminded that our association has sent over 1,000 signatures of persons opposed to the proposed single archipelago municipality to Mr. Darcy McKeough together with a registered letter on June 29, 1978. We also informed Mr. Tom Wells of this in a registered letter of October 11, 1978. We can furnish copies as well as several hundred additional names. Please relate this in the debate on third reading of Bill 100." It was signed, "30,000 Islands Protection Association," which is in the Parry Sound area.

I think this is important to this House. As far as I am concerned this matter should receive third reading and royal assent.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, it has been indicated to us that third reading of this bill would not be proceeded with even though the wishes of the House have been expressed in committee of the whole and the committee had reported the bill for third reading.

We have come to an understanding that with the amendment that may be moved if the bill is returned to committee of the whole, the bill will be given third reading and that third reading will be given today.

We feel it is very important that a structure of local government be put in place in the unorganized territory located in the district of Parry Sound and that the other changes contained in this bill be proceeded with as expeditiously as possible. If this procedure assists in that, then we are prepared to support the motion.

Mr. Nixon: I have a feeling this matter may occupy us for a time—if not this motion then perhaps what might follow.

I was surprised when the committee work was completed by votes in this House. The honourable member who was about to rise and speak, the minister who is responsible for intergovernmental affairs, had not had the responsibility for carriage of the legislation. His legislative assistant was looking after it. By the government's perception of our rules the minister himself for some reason felt he had to be absent during that time.

I was also interested that the Premier, who is particularly interested in local government in that area, also was absent except for the vote itself. In the kind of informal exchange he sometimes participates in, he indicated his great displeasure with the way the debate had gone and the way it appeared to him the votes were going.

We pointed out to him that really it's his responsibility and the responsibility of the minister to be sure the members of the House on all sides know the people's views. We have canvassed the opinions of the local people. My colleague who has just spoken and the honourable member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) went up into the area and spoke to the people directly concerned. We brought forward amendments to the government legislation which were carried in this House in the proper way.

Some members were not pleased with it, just as occasionally when the members opposite bring in certain legislation, certain votes are taken that don't please everybody in this House. But that's the way democracy works. After all, the matter had come to a conclusion; a decision had been made; and the matter was then referred to the House for third reading. It now stands on the order paper for that purpose.

I would hope the House could go on with third reading of the bill so that the matter can be carried on as we would expect. It is quite possible for the government, if they choose—on proper notice—to make an amendment on third reading. The bill would then not be read a third time but be sent back to committee for further work.

This seems to be a strange way to discharge the business of the House, and really we can't support it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this motion. First of all, I really am surprised by my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. In his long history in this House he has always, I think, prided himself on listening to the wishes of the people. He represented the people of Brant township in the Brant-Brantford annexation problem very well, and in other matters has listened to the wishes of the local people.

We believe this is a very important piece of legislation. It was considered for over six years by various groups and studied in this House. It contains several parts, some having to do with the archipelago municipality, the new municipality being created out of unorganized areas. It also has some unrelated restructuring that will occur in the district of Parry Sound, all of them having been studied for a considerable length of time.

The House considered this the other day and in its wisdom by vote decided to create two new townships rather than one, as proposed in the bill and as proposed by all the experts who had studied this in the last year or so, and indeed as was wished by the local residents, permanent and summer, in the particular areas affected.

Mr. Epp: You're omitting the Martin report of 1975-76.

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend says I'm omitting the Martin report. He knows very well the man who wrote that report is my special assistant. If there's one thing I get good advice on it is the Martin report, from Mr. Dave Martin, who wrote the report. That report was written with certain things in mind and certain people have come forward since then to present their views.

I'm sure my friend has received a copy of the letter I'm going to read today, which I think justifies the action we're taking. I want to commend my friends in the third party because I think what we're trying to do is preserve out of this some semblance of recognizing the desires for the people in the local areas to decide. In other words, what we're saying is we're accepting the will of the House but we're also providing a mechanism whereby what is the express wish of the people in the archipelago area can be effected without—as my friend well knows, something we've been discussing ad infinitum in this House—long-protracted annexations.

Mr. Nixon: Did you have a referendum or something? What is the expressed wish?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The express wish is from the Georgian Bay Association.

I want to read the letter. It says: "Dear Mr. Wells:

"In the light of the amendments by the opposition critics of Bill 100 presently before the Legislature, it is my view that in the light of the design and work that has gone into this project the bill is so compromised that it is less than satisfactory.

"Our major concern in forming the new archipelago municipality was to provide efficient, responsible local government with major emphasis on planning and environment. In addition to this, we wish to ensure the participation of all the inhabitants in the formation of one municipality. As a result of the amendments, this will not be so.

"We wish to thank the government and its several ministries which have contributed so valiantly for the support of this project. It is with tragic regret that the opposition parties failed to recognize the significance of the proposed legislation and the overwhelming support of all the inhabitants in the area.

"For the following major reasons we would kindly ask that the government not proceed with the bill: (1) Six years of planning; (2) Professional advice ignored; (3) Ministry recommendations compromised; (4) Wishes of the inhabitants not recognized by the parties in the Legislature.

"I believe the government and the association do not wish to initiate legislation that has very little chance of success. Hopefully, we can continue to work towards the goals that have become recognized and supported by so many people throughout the province at another time under different circumstances.

"Yours sincerely,

"C. W. King, President, the Georgian Bay Association"

He also puts a postscript which is very important, Mr. Speaker: "As our mandate pertains to the islands and shoreline, the above remarks pertain to that part of the bill dealing with the archipelago municipality."

I considered that letter very seriously. I considered it because in the last 48 hours in that area a petition with over 1,000 names was presented to us supporting the legislation and one municipality for the archipelago.

However, I also weighed very carefully the wishes of this House because we cannot take frivolously and we cannot ignore the wishes of this House. The wishes of this House were that two municipalities be created.

I also considered the postscript in that letter very important. My colleague from the riding of Parry Sound has been working many years with the other municipalities to help them effect the annexations and amalgamations which they have been desirous of having. This also is in the bill. Therefore, it would be folly for us not to proceed with the bill.

[11:45]

Also, I believe it would be folly to ignore what seem to be and what I think are, in fact, the wishes of the people in that area; it would be folly to override and to run roughshod over their wishes and impose something which is completely new and different to municipalities. Incidentally, these are being created—at least one of them and, if my facts are right, both of them—with a fewer number of permanent residences than we've ever used as a basis for creating an organized municipality in any area in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: There aren't many organized townships that small.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I do not believe that there are any that have fewer than 500 permanent residences. So, weighing all these things, Mr. Speaker, we feel it is the prudent course of action, and we are asking the House's consideration of this, we're not trying to arbitrarily push anything through. That's why I discussed it with my friends on the other side; we're asking the House to look at what is a real people problem.

You have people up there who wanted something. They see their wishes frustrated down here. Let's live with their wishes and let's give them an opportunity and an easy and inexpensive way to decide, once the new council is elected, if they wish to be joined together. It's as simple as that. If they don't wish to be joined together they never will. In that case there would be two municipalities. But if they do wish, it will be a simple process.

Mr. Nixon: What about this telegram referring to the 1,000 signatures on the other side? What do you mean, the people want it? You don't have a referendum.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They won't have to go through an OMB hearing. The minister may, by order, amalgamate the areas. It's as simple as that. If the members opposite want to run roughshod over the wishes of the people and use as an excuse the fact that this Legislature has spoken and the positions taken in this Legislature, they are welcome to do so, but, I think we have a reasonable compromise here that I cannot see any reasonable person not accepting.

Mr. Nixon: A reasonable compromise is to do the best two out of three and do it your way.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Listen, of the people who have phoned me about this, a lot of them are Liberals.

Mr. Nixon: What about the 1,000 who have sent the telegram to my honourable colleague?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That telegram was well over a year ago. That was before all the discussions had gone on. The latest petition from people up there has been that they would like one municipality.

Mr. Epp: How could that be? The minister says they have been discussing it for six years and now he says that was before all the discussions have gone on.

Mr. Nixon: It doesn't sound right to me, Tom.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The discussions have gone on. Believe me, some of the people who have phoned are very good Liberals, too.

Mr. Ruston: The minister should have been in here and put them in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All I'm saying to the members on this Friday is that we have here a very reasonable compromise to help all to accept the wishes of the parties who would like to see two municipalities, but also to provide in the bill a mechanism where, if it is their own wish and, democratically, they do wish to amalgamate, we can save them the time and expense of a very costly and complicated OMB hearing.

Mr. Mancini: More regional government.

Hon. Mr. Wells: So, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this motion should be passed by this House and we have already given the critics of the two opposition parties a very simple amendment which could be proposed and could be inserted in the bill and which, I think, would serve the ends of all of us in this House.

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Welch's motion to redirect Bill 100, which was approved on the following vote:

POLLUTION COMPLAINT

Mr. Martel: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Might I ask if it is your intention to rule on the unpleasant business that occurred here last night, in view of the fact that today is the last day the Legislature will sit until October 10?

Mr. Speaker: I did undertake to review the record. The only thing that was available to me was Instant Hansard. The more I read it, the more confused I became. I fail to see where there was any specific allegation against any member of the House. The matter raised by the member for Wentworth was obviously reconciled as a result of the actions taken by the minister. It was raised again by the member for Carleton East and the minister said unequivocally that there was no reference to her personally.

I see no reference here to any member of the House having acted improperly. Had there been, the only recourse the Speaker has is "allegation against another member." I have looked very, very carefully and I fail to see any allegation against a member of this House or a group of members of this House. So really there is nothing for me to rule on.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The member for Sudbury East should sit down while he is ahead.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain if we are reading the same Hansard, but if you turn to page 1805-1 it says: "When mail is opened when it is clearly addressed to the solicitor for my ministry, I have to say to the NDP over there 'Where are your scruples?'"

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Where are they?

Mr. Pope: Where are they?

Mr. Speaker: Let's not confuse the issue now. You are dealing with a reference to page 1805-1 of Instant Hansard. The allegations contained in there were withdrawn by the minister quite clearly.

Mr. Martel: Where?

Mr. Speaker: The record will show that.

Mr. Martel: I read the record.

Hon. W. Newman: Why don't you open your eyes?

Mr. Speaker: I have read it too. The only other issue was as a result of the point of privilege raised by the member for Carleton East. The Minister of the Environment said: "I am not making any reference to the member for the Ottawa-Carleton area." So there is no allegation against any member of this House that I can see in here. Instant Hansard doesn't help me at all. Had there been, it would have constituted an allegation against a member. I fail to see it in here. There is really nothing for me to rule on.

Mr. Havrot: Let's stop the nitpicking and get on.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answer to question 256 standing on the Notice Paper and the answers to questions 228 to 234, inclusive, questions 241, 246, 252, 253, 255, 258, 259, 261, 262 and 270 and the interim answer to question 247. #### ORDERS OF THE DAY

RESIDENTIAL PREMISES RENT REVIEW AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 142, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

VILLAGE OF POINT EDWARD ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 131, An Act respecting the Village of Point Edward.

Mr. Rotenberg: This bill contains several provisions dealing with municipal taxation on real property of the Blue Water Bridge Authority located in the village of Point Edward in Lambton county.

Before describing its provisions, I would first like to provide some historical background. In 1940, legislation was enacted to make the portion of the bridge in Ontario exempt from taxation, including local improvement and school rates, except for a fixed annual tax payment of $5,000 per annum to the village. The village eventually became dissatisfied with the lack of tax revenues from the bridge and legislation was enacted in 1970 to make the property liable to assessment under section 27 of the Assessment Act.

This did not prove completely satisfactory, and after negotiations the bridge authority and the village agreed on a schedule of tax payments for the years 1971 to 1977. This was formalized by legislation passed here in 1972. When the agreement expired at the end of 1977, the authority and the village were unable to agree on new terms and as a result no payment was made in 1978.

This is not a satisfactory situation, especially in the light of the fact that the authority is acquiring additional property, thereby further reducing the tax base of the municipality. The bill proposes an appropriate long-term solution while allowing a four-year phase-in period.

Section 1 of the bill provides that the provisions of the Assessment Act will apply to the real property of the authority located in the village, except for the bridge structure.

Section 2 sets out a proposed new schedule of payments to the village for the years 1978 through 1982 in lieu of municipal taxes, including school taxes, on the bridge structure. This means that until the end of 1982 the authority will pay to the village the amounts set out in section 2(1) of the bill, plus local improvement rates, as well as full municipal taxes, including school taxes, on all of its real property except the bridge structure. Section 2(3) of the bill provides that starting in 1983 the authority will pay full municipal taxes, including school taxes, on the bridge structure as well.

The bridge authority is set up by the federal government but is not an authority in the normal sense. It is a private corporation set up by the federal government and is bound by this legislation. I commend the bill to the House.

Mr. Blundy: The haste with which the government is dealing with this bill simply amazes me, not only this morning here in the House, but since it was first suggested that the bill be passed.

I want to speak briefly on the bill. I support the intent of the bill, because I know the only source of funds for the municipality is the taxes on assessments. In Ontario that right to tax must be protected and that is the case in the village of Point Edward. The problem I find is the bill does not take into consideration certain things I believe will happen and which will have a poor effect. I would like to mention these very shortly.

The bridge commission is not set up to accumulate profits, and over the last several years it has had a deficit on operations. It is obvious they are not going to be able to pay the kind of taxes that will have to be paid at the end of 1982. I have checked with the assessment department in Chatham and find that the total assessment on the bridge is $578,645. I got these figures from the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) the other day. This is split in the following way: $342,565 on the structure of the bridge and $236,080 on the lands and buildings of the bridge in the village of Point Edward.

I wonder if anybody has given any consideration to the fact that the present toll on the bridge is 35 cents, whether one is coming from Michigan or Ontario. The Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) will recall that after the debentures on the centre span were paid off there were several years in which there were no tolls on the bridge at all. This was caused because the state of Michigan's highways department was responsible for their portion of the bridge to the international boundary line and they were not able to charge tolls or they would jeopardize certain grants from the US federal government.

Several years later a bill was introduced on their side which to some extent rectified that situation. However, the Michigan highways commission pays no taxes whatsoever to the city of Port Huron on the Michigan side and they are most reluctant to raise tolls. Even when the tolls were raised to the present 35 cents it was done after much discussion with the American side of the bridge, the Michigan highway department.

I can see the following scenario happening if, as I suspect, in 1983 the Blue Water Bridge Commission would be paying in the neighbourhood of $150,000 to $160,000 a year taxes. In order to pay those kinds of taxes, along with the other operating costs the authority has on the approach and the bridge to the international boundary line, they would have to raise tolls to 55, 65 cents or more, so we could have the situation where one may cross the St. Clair River from the Michigan side and pay 35 cents and cross from the Ontario side and pay 50, 55, 60 or 65 cents. This certainly would not be a very good situation.

I would like very much for the parliamentary assistant to think about that and give me his views on what he thinks will happen there.

The other matter that came to my attention when I searched this bill is that most of the bridge structure that goes from the land to the international boundary line is in the township of Sarnia. The pier for the main span stands in the lands of the village of Point Edward, but those lands, I am told, end at the waterline. So for the greatest proportion of the bridge structure the boundary line would be in the township of Sarnia. This bill makes no reference to the township of Sarnia.

There are a number of these situations I would like to have explained and which ought to be explained before we go further into this matter. I know the people of Sarnia-Lambton would want to have a proper explanation of any increase in bridge tolls that takes place. As I said initially, I believe the village of Point Edward must be protected as far as its taxes on assessment are concerned. I want to emphasize that and I do want some explanation for the matters which I have raised in conjunction with the details of this bill.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill about which one has to be fairly pragmatic. It is setting up a system for taxation of the Blue Water Bridge in the property tax system that we have before us today. We have some difficulty with property taxes as they are being levied in this province. But we have to recognize that the village of Point Edward is dependent for a substantial amount of its income on the Blue Water Bridge. This bill assists with a dispute that has been going on over a long period of time.

In addition, the bill puts the Blue Water Bridge in the same position as at least the majority and perhaps all the other international bridges that come into this province. Because of that, we're going to support the bill. There's one concern I want to raise, however. These payments the Blue Water Bridge Authority will be making to the village of Point Edward are an indirect tax on the motoring public that makes use of that bridge, both residents of this province and residents of the United States. It's another example of where hidden taxes are becoming a more and more significant part of the revenue that is provided either directly or indirectly to the government.

The funds being paid by the motorists are going to the village of Point Edward so the government of Ontario does not have to provide that village with compensatory grants. That concerns me a great deal. We will support it because it's convenient in the present tax structure, but if we had our druthers we would do it a different way.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to Bill 137, An Act respecting the Village of Point Edward. I wasn't going to enter into the debate until the member for Wentworth entered into it and indicated that this was another form of indirect taxing policy by the government or by local municipalities.

I happen to represent an area that is very much involved in this type of legislation. It relates to the international bridge at Fort Erie, Ontario, which has a bridge commission similar to the Blue Water Bridge Authority. Much of this bill is taken from a private bill of the town of Fort Erie as it relates to the schedule of fees.

I think the member for Wentworth should be well aware of the problems that are created in a municipality where there is an international bridge. It certainly does bring in a certain amount of revenue, but it also compounds certain problems within the municipality. There are other service roads and interconnecting roads that meet an international bridge, and much of their cost is borne by the municipality.

In the particular legislation relating to Fort Erie, under the former county of Welland system we knew at that time that we could not assess the bridge. It was not covered under the Assessment Act. In the explanatory notes of this bill it definitely states that: "Under this section the real property of the Blue Water Bridge Authority, except the structure known as the Blue Water Bridge, is made subject to the provisions of the Assessment Act. At the present time the Assessment Act does not apply to the real property of the bridge authority."

[12:30]

Members of county council, along with the council of the town of Fort Erie, have known full well the business generated at the bridge from tolls. In the Fort Erie area, for example, by the time they paid all their operating expenses, there was about $300,000 or $400,000 a year going to the federal government. The council thought, at that time, and the county did as well, that in no way should this amount of revenue go to Ottawa. They thought there should be some reimbursement to the town that had provided most of the services. A gentleman's agreement, made by the Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority, which included Buffalo, permitted the town to assess or tax certain portions of the bridge. In 1976, it generated $83,500 for the town of Fort Erie. That's quite a bit of revenue. I know they're now working an agreement for one year. I say this, and the member for Sarnia has mentioned it here, by looking at the pro-rated assessment value that's put on there that would generate revenue for the village of Point Edward, it was $57,000 in 1978; $65,000 in 1979; and will be $80,000 in 1982.

I hope the parliamentary assistant has given consideration to the question raised by the member for Sarnia that it should be based upon the tolls generated. It could mean there may be a substantial increase in tolls on that bridge if they go to the schedule established there.

I don't know what revenue is generated. The member mentioned they had run a deficit after paying all the operational costs, the bridge maintenance and so forth. I don't know how they're going to collect that money unless the toll is raised. I suggest to the member that perhaps he should consider that again. Perhaps the schedule he has is too high. For example, people say Fort Erie is the number one port of entry into Canada, the most used port of entry into Canada. Perhaps more revenue generated from this area could generate the $83,500 that's paid to the town in lieu of taxes. I suggest the $80,000 figure may have just been pulled out of mid air. It may be too high. I don't know, but if it is too high there is no need to increase the tolls on the bridge. If they have to generate that much money, the members can rest assured the tolls will probably go up to about 50 cents. I don't know. At Fort Erie it costs 35 cents to cross the bridge one way. I don't know what it is at the Blue Water Bridge.

Mr. Blundy: Thirty-five cents.

Mr. Haggerty: It's 35 cents, so they're the same.

The toll depends upon the flow of traffic coming across this particular bridge. Can they generate sufficient funds there? I hope the parliamentary assistant will take a look at that.

I support the bill in principle. The Fort Erie bill is usually passed in the Ontario Legislature as a private bill, a municipal bill, but it's done by agreement between the two parties; that is, the local municipality and the bridge authority. In this particular instance there seems to be no agreement between the two parties. If this bill is passed here today and becomes law they are dictating back to the local authorities this must be law. It's an international bridge. It's a federal matter in a sense.

Unless an amendment to the Assessment Act is brought in I suggest this to the minister, or to the parliamentary assistant, from my dealings and discussions with the town of Fort Erie while on county council a few years ago. If there is no gentlemen's agreement between the authority and the local council they may never be able to collect that tax. I think the bridge authority has a right to appeal it. How can they tax them under the Assessment Act, when it's not there? I suggest there should be a gentlemen's agreement between the two parties rather than bringing in legislation to say this is what it's going to be. There may be a court case involved in this.

I will tell the members, from my experience in dealing with it in the Fort Erie area this was always one of the problems council and the bridge authority had to consider; if there was no agreement between the two parties it would probably have to be settled in court—if it was pushed too far.

I bring that to the members' attention, but I support the principle of the bill. I think it is time all the bridges were assessed so the proper revenue can be generated to assist the municipalities.

I can say this much about the Fort Erie bridge, it is a healthy bridge. About $300,000 goes to the federal government of Canada and about the same amount goes to the Buffalo Port Authority. That money is used to support certain other things within that community in the city of Buffalo. In the past I think they have used it to help get their international airport under way. I suggest there is revenue there, but it has to be done in the right manner.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because we all want to get away and until the member for Erie spoke I hadn't intended to speak. The figures he gave for the Fort Erie area and the bridge there are correct, but I want to point out to him and to this House the position of this party. As explained by the member for Wentworth, we go along with this bill because this situation exists with other international bridges in this province, but we believe in principle that they should not be taxed. They should not be taxed for property tax purposes.

There is just something unacceptable about taxing bridges. We have bridges going across the Welland Canal. We have the Burlington bridge. If one says in principle bridges should be taxed, you are saying in effect that bridges in those communities should be taxed as well, because the same sort of situation exists. All we are saying here is that because it is done elsewhere, because it is at the present time a source of revenue for those municipalities and because the others which have a similar situation get it, we are supporting it very definitely at the present time. In the long run, there is something unacceptable to us about levying property taxes on bridges.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this bill this morning, first, I would like to inform the House that the member for Sarnia is, I believe, as aware of this bridge as anybody in Ontario, barring all. The member for Sarnia happened to be around on October 13, 1938, and walked across this bridge on the night it opened. The member for Lambton did the same thing. That's how long we have been associated with this bridge.

Mr. Haggerty: You were in your prime then.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We thought we were.

Mr. Blundy: We could walk across the bridge in those days.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I mention 1938 to bring on another subject, namely, that in 1940 a bill went through this Legislature that excluded this bridge from taxation. The reason I want to refer to that bill is that on February 24, 1940, this bill was assented to. On February 24, 1940, this House prorogued for the year. There have been some changes in 39 years.

Mr. Haggerty: You've been around for quite a while.

Mr. B. Newman: Those were the good old days.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. Then we advance to the next step. That bill permitted a grant in lieu of taxes of $5,000 per year to the village of Point Edward to apply towards the rates, county school boards, what have you. Shortly after that bill went through, the member for Sarnia and the member for Lambton went to work for $1.10 a day. We did get an advance to $1.30 a day, working for the government down through the years.

If we apply that $1.10 or $1.30 a day to the $5,000 grant, and then if we apply the salaries the member for Sarnia and I are getting today against the proposed grant, I would think that grant, instead of being some $57,000, going up to $80,000, might even be $300,000 to $400,000.

The member for Wentworth suggested that this was hidden tax to the province of Ontario. I would have to differ with the honourable member. I would have to tell him there is nothing hidden with respect to this tax.

The former member for Sarnia brought a private bill before the House back in the late 1960s similar to the bill which was passed in 1972, which did permit the schedule referred to earlier. It was supported by all sides of the House. This act does not give funds to the province of Ontario. This act gives funds to the school boards in Sarnia and Lambton, to the county of Lambton and to the village of Point Edward. It is shared on that basis. Again I differ with his thoughts that the province of Ontario is going to benefit.

The member for Sarnia brought out a point respecting this bridge passing over land under the jurisdiction of Sarnia township. When the bylaw passed by the county of Lambton set out Point Edward as a separate municipality with village status, it would appear those people drafting that bylaw did not include the water lots off the village of Point Edward and they still remain in Sarnia township.

When the government considered this legislation it was well aware of that problem existing down there. The chairman of the legislation committee of cabinet took the position that Sarnia township does not render any services to this area and the taxes should go to the village of Point Edward. So this bill does not permit Sarnia township any of these taxes and makes it quite clear the taxes are for the village of Point Edward.

The member for Welland brought up points which I believe I answered, and I believe I answered the member for Erie. We recognize they have an important point of entry but the member for Sarnia and I would argue that Sarnia is equally important. I believe I have answered all of the questions. If there are more, I would be very happy to answer them on behalf of the government.

Mr. Rotenberg: I believe the minister of Government Services answered the questions and summed up. I hope now we can take a vote on second reading.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

MONTCREST SCHOOL ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Mrs. Scrivener, moved second reading of Bill Pr14, An Act to revive the January School as Montcrest School.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

TRUSTEES OF WINDSOR GROVE CEMETERY ACT

Mr. B. Newman moved second reading of Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the Trustees of the Windsor Grove Cemetery.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I plan now to go into committee of the whole House, but before we do perhaps this would be the time to deal with Bill 100 and then we have a few other government bills to clear up. Rather than bringing the House back out of committee into House, I'm just wondering now about the time. We would normally adjourn at 1 o'clock. I'm wondering if we could have the agreement of the House now that we perhaps might finish our other work if we added an hour and go until 2 o'clock to see whether we can accommodate the remaining legislation.

Mr. Nixon: We have no objection. I just wonder if the House leader would indicate what on the list he wants to deal with?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That would mean that between now and 2 o'clock we might get Bill 100, then Bills 101, 95, 103, 104, 116, and 117.

Mr. Nixon: How about Bill 114?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I know we were hoping to get to Bill 114, so I'd add that to the list. If the House could agree to go until 2 o'clock—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Possibly then I should ask if the House would give unanimous agreement to sit past 1 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee of the whole.

DISTRICT OF PARRY SOUND LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound.

Sections 1 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Wells moves that Bill 100 be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"12(1) Upon application to the minister by the townships constructed under sections 3 and 4 that the townships be incorporated as one township municipality, the minister may by order effect the incorporation on the date specified in the order and in such order may provide for the name of the new township, the composition of the council of the new township and the election of the members of the council of the new township.

"(2) The provisions of this part apply with necessary modifications to a new township established under subsection 1."

He further moves that sections 12 to 25 as printed in the bill be renumbered accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think I had really indicated most of my comments on this when we had the motion to revert to committee of the whole House to consider this amendment. What, in effect, this does is add to that first part of the bill which deals with the archipelago municipalities, the bill which now creates Georgian Bay North Archipelago township and Georgian Bay South Archipelago township. It provides a section whereby if those townships, after they are constituted—and it in no way says they will not be constituted; it says that they must be constituted and they must be legally operating townships—both ask by bylaw, because that is how townships carry on business, that they be amalgamated together to form one township, the minister would have the power by order to cause that to happen. In so doing, he could set out the necessary arrangements for that, such as providing for the name, or the minister could in this case ask that a vote be taken on the name, provide the date upon which the amalgamation would take place, and also provide for such other necessary modifications to the bill to allow that to take place.

As I explained earlier, what this does is provide in the bill a mechanism for the achievement of the one township, which was the original idea many of the people in the area wanted. It provides for that achievement without a lengthy and expensive annexation or amalgamation battle before the Ontario Municipal Board, or some other such procedure. I think it is a very reasonable sort of thing to suggest it be added to this bill.

I appreciate and understand the feelings of the official opposition in this matter. They feel, having amended the bill, that it should stay exactly as it is. I think that having regard for the length of time this matter has been studied, that the real feelings on the part of many of the local residents is that they would like to have one municipality, and realizing that this House has decided that there should be two—something which, incidentally, was in the original Martin report. However, upon consideration and discussion and dialogue and a whole variety of processes that went on after its publication, the feeling was that one municipality would be better than two.

Mr. Nixon: It is the first time you have defended it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Defended what?

Mr. Nixon: The concept of one. You haven't even been here for the debate.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I have a parliamentary assistant who is quite capable of handling some of these things.

Mr. Nixon: Then why isn't he doing this?

Mr. Conway: This is a job for a diplomat; we know.

Mr. Ruston: You have the expertise. He just hasn't got it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am just adding a little extra today, since it is Friday morning and I want—

An hon. member: It's a good example of how somebody got into trouble.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No. As a matter of fact, he did a fantastic job in handling the bill and, in fact—

Mr. Ruston: That is why he is not doing it now.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No. But we are now just trying to—

Mr. Conway: Crombie never said that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —find a way of providing that the wishes of the people can be expressed and the wishes of the Legislature can be expressed, the two melded together and everyone can be happy. I think we have it here, and I want to thank my friends from the third party, who I think see that this provides the opportunity for—

Mr. Nixon: It's known as flip-flop.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, it isn't known as flip-flop. It provides the opportunity to have the two municipalities, but also it gives us an opportunity to provide an inexpensive and quick way to have an amalgamation, if such is necessary. It is very simple, as simple as that. I think that personally I would favour the one municipality, but it may be that once the municipalities are constructed, the two of them as are here, and they get going, that is what will remain. They may remain so for a good length of time and this section may never become operative, but it is there if it needs to be used, and I think it is a very wise and prudent thing to add that section to the bill.

Mr. Epp: I just want to say if this is so wise and prudent, I am surprised it wasn't added into the bill a few days ago when the government has had six years to study it. As I indicated earlier, they were priding themselves on how much studying they had done. Now, two or three days later, they admit publicly their study was not adequate at all and they now have to amend it. It is also a prime example of how the government, if it doesn't get its way the first time, is prepared to come back to the House as many times as necessary until it gets its way. It gets in bed together with the NDP and gets the kind of things it wants.

Mr. Bradley: Socialist allies.

Mr. Epp: We still have about eight or so bills to consider here and I suppose on any of those, if the government doesn't get its way, we may be here a little later today until it does get its way.

I want to draw the minister's attention to one important facet of that particular amendment which I am going to oppose but which I think is very important. As far as the minister is concerned, I think it leaves a loophole to have the reeve not elected by the people in the future. All it says is: "The composition of the council of the new township and the election of the members of council of the new township . . ." Taking into consideration the earlier bill we had, we know the government and some of the people in the area did not want the reeve elected by the people at large. They wanted the reeve to have the endorsement of only a few people on council.

Mr. Rotenberg: That was for the first council only.

Mr. Epp: The people would be denied the opportunity of having a say as to who that reeve was going to be. I see, on looking at this amendment it says, "The composition of the council of the new township and the election of the members of the council of the new township . . ." That would be by order of the minister, so it does not say the reeve would be elected at large. I wonder whether the minister could give assurance that in the future the reeve, as well as the whole council, will be elected by the council.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would agree to that and guarantee that. I feel that is the way it should be. I believe the reeve should be elected. I believe the phrase is, "and the election of the members of the council." I have always assumed the reeve was a member of a council. I would have assumed there would be no other way we would be doing it but by electing the reeve.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would not have raised it if it had not been in the earlier bill. I just wanted to make sure that was clear as far as this House was concerned and the people in the archipelago were concerned. I have no further comments.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, there appears to be a suggestion around that this amendment is some kind of compromise. I want to say if this amendment had been before us at the same time as all the other amendments, we would have supported it then as we are prepared to support it now. In fact, the principle of this amendment, that two townships can amalgamate if both the councils vote to do so, is a principle that might well be extended to other parts of the province and perhaps to all parts. Indeed, we might eliminate the need for extensive Ontario Municipal Board hearings when the elected representatives of the people within the municipality agree upon a merger. I have absolutely no problems with the principle of the amendment before us.

I think the situation that has arisen with regard to this bill is an indication of the problems that can arise when attempting to deal with a bill of this magnitude, setting up a new structure of local government, in committee of the whole House rather than in committee outside. We talked about that before on second reading and I must say I think it is unfortunate we have come to this. I hope that in future we will be in a situation where we can properly debate the merits of bills establishing new municipalities or restructuring municipalities so these kinds of problems can be avoided and so we are not forced to deal with things under time pressure and without as much information as we would like.

I also want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in continuing discussions with people who own property in the district of Parry Sound, and especially in the archipelago, although not necessarily in the archipelago township, I have continued to find incredible confusion as to exactly what it is Bill 100 does. I want to reiterate my earlier concerns that the process of public consultation doesn't seem to have worked properly for two reasons.

One is that the explanatory notes have not been adequate, so people who have received communications from the minister's staff have really not understood the import of those communications, and have not understood that the maps and other things that were sent out demonstrated that the archipelago municipality as originally proposed, before amendment, was split into two parts and did not take in the whole of the archipelago. There have been some real problems in communication, and I think we will all learn from those for the next time.

There have also been difficulties in terms of who to listen to. The people in the area are difficult to get to, there is no doubt about that, because of the water-based nature of the archipelago. They are difficult to communicate with, because many of them are only seasonal residents and there is the continuing problem of the weight one puts on the voice of permanent residents compared to seasonal residents.

The amendment before us now satisfies a need that, to be honest, I do not fully understand, but I am pleased it satisfies that need and that we will now be able to proceed to third reading of this bill. During the elections that are to take place this fall, I hope the people of the archipelago municipality will give very serious consideration to what is before them so we do not have a situation where the two councils immediately rush into amalgamation.

I know I don't really need to give them this advice, because I know the people will take it seriously. I think special efforts are going to have to be made, not only by the candidates, but also by the returning officers and enumerators in order to make sure the whole election process that is going to be going on this fall is well understood by the electors of the two archipelago municipalities.

I have just one question and it relates to subsection 2 of the amendment. I have read that a great number of times since we were handed this amendment earlier this morning, and I am still a little unclear as to the intent of subsection 2, given that subsection 1 relates to the amalgamation of the two municipalities and only the two archipelago municipalities. It doesn't deal with the others.

I don't understand how the provisions of the part apply with necessary modifications to the amalgamation of one municipality with itself. Perhaps there is some other intent that escapes me.

With those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, we will support the amendment. We hope the people of the district of Parry Sound, particularly of the archipelago, will learn about what has happened here today and during the past week so that they can get a full understanding of the import of the amendments that have been before us and of the bill that will have been dealt with by the end of the morning, I hope.

It is my impression that in the past they have only been given one side of the story. They have been told: "This is the way to do it. Do you accept that?" I don't think that is the way these things should be set up. They should have been given access to discussion about all the options available. With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, as time is pressing and although we may not get through the other bills, we will support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my small contribution to this particular debate. As the member representing the riding of Parry Sound, I have been involved in many of these discussions for the last five or six years. It is, as the member for Wentworth indicated, very difficult to get to all the people to explain what is happening in an area such as the one under debate today.

I believe the amendment as presented to the Legislature this afternoon will go a long way towards solving that very problem. We are respecting the view of the Legislature, the wishes of the Legislature, by forming the two municipalities as the bill indicates, but we are also providing a means for those local property taxpayers, both local and people who are cottagers, to have another discussion on this very important matter before any amalgamation takes place between those two municipalities.

We do not wish to saddle them with a proposition where they would perhaps have to apply to the Ontario Municipal Board for amalgamation at a later date for the cost of that is a great burden. All this amendment really does is simplify a means for those people, if after they have formed their councils and had discussions with their constituents they decide they want to amalgamate, to shorten the procedure for them to do so.

I believe if that decision comes—it may never come, as the minister has indicated; we don't know at this point—but if the decision is taken by the local councils who are elected by those local people to amalgamate, then I believe that it is not only necessary but reasonable to provide the vehicle to allow them to do that without an additional great expense.

I have been told from time to time that the Georgian Bay Association has spent upwards of $50,000 in studies on the archipelago. They are serious about this amalgamation, they are serious about the forming of the archipelago, and they really have done a lot of work towards it.

Among the local people there is a mixed feeling. Certainly the people in the township of Carling are against having one municipality known as the archipelago, and for reasons that in their minds are justified. I don't agree with their reasons. I met with the council of Carling as recently as a week ago Saturday and advised them I don't agree with their ideas on it.

I must say that many of the ideas they have have been stirred up by the former candidate in the Liberal Party by the name of Ed Fisher who has continuously gone around the riding stirring up these kinds of things. I think it's time that it was put on the record that until he has—

Mr. Nixon: You used to say there should be two municipalities; you've changed your mind.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm not saying there shouldn't still be. I have not changed my mind. I am supporting—

Mr. Nixon: Is there some law that says Mr. Fisher has to agree with you? What the devil are you talking about? Are you going to send the police after him for voicing another view?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, but I would suspect that it might be a good idea if he got elected first and represented a few people.

Mr. Nixon: He has every right as a citizen and taxpayer to express his views, the same as you.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He is not a taxpayer in the township of Carling.

Mr. Epp: On a point of order: Is the minister saying that because he is not elected he has not got an opportunity to voice his opinion in the Parry Sound area?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I didn't hear the minister say that and I don't really think it's a point of order.

Mr. Epp: He said he has got other people who shared his view.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I believe in the right of everyone to speak, so I didn't say that. However, I have to say that the viewpoints that we have been listening to, particularly from the official opposition, come mostly from the township of Carling. That's fine; they're entitled to their viewpoints too, as I indicated earlier in my remarks. I have listened to their viewpoints, I don't agree with them. If you people do, that's fine, there's no argument there, but I have not up to this point in time indicated that I was in favour of not having two municipalities.

What I have said is that probably it is the best way to go. The local people will decide later on whether or not they want to amalgamate and those are the people who should make the decisions. Therefore, I think that the amendment is probably the best solution to the whole thing.

Mr. Nixon: We all say we don't want to prolong this, but I don't know; it seems to me an objective observer of this situation would feel that it would require some extensive debate. There are so many things to comment on.

I would begin by saying that while the amendment is, according to the minister who just spoke, the solution to our problems, I don't have a copy; I believe my colleague does and that's proper. It's very difficult, I suppose, to comment with enough intelligence to impress the minister without knowing precisely what the government is doing, other than my understanding of the amendment is that it permits the elected councils to decide whether they will be amalgamated in the future.

I don't think that's such a marvellous idea. I'll tell you I wouldn't want a bill that allowed the councils of the municipalities in my county to decide on amalgamation, because that is certainly the responsibility either of the people or this House. If you were going to have an election in which a person stands as an amalgamationist or not, maybe democracy serves. But you've been saying time and again that you're not trying to impose some sort of a new kind of governmental structure on these people, but just what they want. The minister got up and said he had a petition signed by 1,000 people, and this was what the people wanted.

Now the other minister gets up and says, "Of course, the people in Carling don't want it, but I disagree with them." So, in fact, we're here in this House, as we should be, making up our minds as to what kind of municipal government is going to have the administrative responsibility in the area that the Minister of Revenue represents.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Carling isn't in the archipelago.

Mr. Nixon: All right. Having watched the ministrations of this government over a number of years, the people know that it tends to move toward regional government by all sorts of means. The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is afraid that the townships are not big enough to be viable. We know the kind of big townships the Conservative government likes. They like regionalized townships. That's the government's policy but it's not our policy.

My colleague, our critic, the member for Waterloo North and our mutual colleague, the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller), went up into the area. The member for Haldimand-Norfolk has been a councillor in a regionalized area and he knows what to look out for. The member for Waterloo North has been mayor of a regionalized town and he knows what to look out for.

It's true they couldn't go out there and call on all the islands. Some of your friends and supporters, cruising around here in their blue suits this morning, have been expressing their objections to the Liberal stand, saying they never even called on their people. I'm not objecting to that. But I do object to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs telling us that this is what the people want.

When we talk about the township of Carling, they say, "We don't mean that area. We mean another area." If it was so important to find out what the people want, you could have had a referendum. I am not saying that you should have. I don't really go for that approach. But we could have had a committee hearing here and asked those people down.

After all, we were told by the minister they came out in thunderstorms and hailstorms to put their name on some kind of a petition, saying that what the opposition had called for—and which, by the way, commanded the support of the majority in this House—was what they didn't want. They wanted something else.

If this amendment is such a marvellous solution why the devil wasn't it put in the bill, when the bill was put before us in the first instance? I have no objection to the member for Wilson Heights having the carriage of the bill. I'm not here to criticize him, but I do criticize the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You do?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I do. He is the Henry Kissinger of the north, the person who is supposed to be the great diplomat. I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, maybe it's a complex bill, but the number of people affected was relatively small. The people affected in a sense were the members of this House.

We had many arguments as to whether this was a step toward regionalizing the area. We were assured by moderate people in our caucus and outside that it was not. But we've all got a bigger stake in this than the minister perhaps realizes. The final solution is sort of dumped on our heads, and the poor old House leader, as usual, has to carry these ash cans around for the incompetence of his colleagues.

You could have very well dealt with this in a procedure that would not have ended up in this kind of a debate. I believe the government has handled this in a very awkward way indeed. As for the implication that they are now giving the people of that area just what they want, there is no indication that is so.

From our point of view on this side, we have done the research available to us. We have read the communications from the people from the area, and we have put forward amendments which have established what we consider to be a type of local government that will be in the best interests of the people concerned.

[1:15]

As for me, I suppose, I might have a slight bias in favour of the permanent residents. After all, the people who go into Georgian Bay, to that 30,000 Islands area, have access to the finest recreation area in the world in my view, bar none. For years they have used every measure available to them to see that it did not get too widely distributed. They've had many favourable aspects, giving some families for generations access to the best cottage and recreation country that I know of anywhere. So, while we want to be fair to them, I think our primary responsibility is to those who are permanent residents of the area. We don't want to differentiate between the two, and my colleague has very carefully put forward that our judgement in this means that it is fair to both sides. We have people from both sides commending us for our stance. The idea that you speak only for the people who are right, correct and honest—and maybe Conservative, I don't know—really is very difficult for us to accept.

I believe we have done the best we can with the information we could provide for ourselves. We, at that time, had the support of the NDP. They are now considering otherwise. This amendment is the sort of thing that looks like it's going to carry. It may very well carry, but we're not supporting it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Take your blinkers off.

Mr. Nixon: If you handle national unity the way you handled Parry Sound, the country is in peril.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I'll try to be brief on this, but after the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk spoke I do have to rise to make some comments. As my colleague from Wentworth has already said, we are supporting this bill.

I think it's no secret that in this party, from the beginning, we had real concern the people in the area, particularly the cottagers, did not have full knowledge that the one municipality was, in fact, two areas separated by the township of Carling. It was our view there would be some wisdom in sending this bill out of the House to a committee where there could be public input. Although this has gone on for six years, it wasn't until last fall that this proposal was made. It came in the bill last fall and then came again in the bill this spring.

Many of the people had not had the opportunity to determine whether they wanted those two separate areas combined into one area or whether they would like to have them separate. We felt that it should go out to a committee. However, because of the length of time taken in coming to this point and because we had some preference for the two municipalities instead of one, when they were physically separated by the distance which existed, we thought we would go along with the amendment put forward by the Liberal Party. There was only one of what is now two alternatives.

Now there is another alternative which we think meets our concerns and ought to meet the concerns of the Liberal Party. What is really happening now is that it is going to go back to the people in that area. It's going to meet our first view that it should go out to a committee. It's going to be established in two municipalities who will have the right to discuss it—and, believe me, the councils are not going to make an arbitrary decision. I know councils too. I've sat on them for a number of years. They're going to consult with the people and there will be lengthy debates within those municipalities on whether they should become one or two.

We in this party always supported the principle that where there is a community of interest, as there was, the community of interest should be in the municipality. The question was—when they are 15 miles apart or whatever the case is in that area—that maybe there should be two municipalities where the residents of those municipalities still have a single community of interest.

Quite frankly, although we are unhappy with the government coming to this position so late in the game—and you people to my right have a right to complain—nevertheless I can't understand the arguments put forward by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk when he says this is going to be an arbitrary decision. He was saying the minister would have the power to make it and there would be no—

Mr. Nixon: I didn't say that. I haven't even got a copy of the amendment.

Mr. Swart: The member may not have a copy of the amendment but he took 15 minutes speaking on it. Maybe that is the reason you didn't fully understand the amendment, because you hadn't seen a copy of it.

Mr. Ruston: Changing your mind now?

Mr. Epp: Flip-flopping, that's all you've done.

Mr. Swart: If the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is intimating, as he did, that it's going to be an arbitrary decision made by the minister—

Mr. Epp: In front of all these people you're flip-flopping.

Mr. Swart: —I recall that not long ago he was complaining bitterly about the costs of Ontario Municipal Board hearings and even commending the government for looking for some alternative. This may be the kind of alternative you were talking about, where you are giving the minister, which, of course, is the government, the power, after full consultation takes places there and councils pass bylaws, to make the decision on whether it should be amalgamated, so it would not have to go to Ontario Municipal Board hearings and there would be no cost to the public in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Do you want them to have that power in your area? I would think not.

Mr. Swart: I suggest, as the member for Wentworth has already said, that if this proposal had been in the original bill we would have supported the government on it then. We think it largely answers the matter of opposition we had to the bill and therefore we are going to support it. I guess I would just like to conclude by saying once again this rather indicates the value of minority government—

Mr. Epp: Because you can flip-flop.

Mr. Swart: —because I suggest this is about the best possible solution we could get for this problem.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I wasn't going to enter into the debate at this time because I felt we had covered it quite adequately, but since there has been more reference made to our going into the Parry Sound district at the request of some local groups I would like to clarify a couple of points.

There was reference made to the people of Carling township perhaps being the most concerned. I believe they are the most concerned because they do have archipelago land in front of their municipality. As the member is well aware, they have the most to lose, because they feel if those islands are taken away the municipality will move inland and take a considerable strip off of Carling township and it will not be a viable township at that point.

We went there to listen; we weren't there to take sides. But, as I pointed out in my opening remarks the other day, we wanted to make sure the people there are protected, that the islands are protected and improved and that the relationship between the two improves. As our House leader, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, indicated—and he covered the points very well—we are setting up an organization for future generations. The north is just organizing and the area of Parry Sound is organizing and we are going to have to live with this decision for many years. I think we want to take the right approach.

We were pointing out the fact that under a regional type of government—which maybe this isn't, but it could well lead to it—when you have an area 50 miles long where do you have your administration? How do you get in touch with the local representative? These facts all enter into it. Can you take part in the municipal election? Can you participate as a councillor? In many of the regional governments which have been established, many people have been eliminated from participating and giving their time. I think that is what we are really trying to point out.

Again, I would like to know what the member's stand is on Carling township. Do you feel that eventually that archipelago land will be put together and the whole area made into one township? I think that is really what the people there are afraid of. I don't think they want to see that happen. That should be clarified.

I would also point out the member for Wentworth said on Tuesday he didn't want one large, huge municipality, but today he supports facilitating it for the area and they are just trying to justify it.

Mr. Isaacs: We support local autonomy.

Mr. Epp: You said you did not support the whole municipality and now you are facilitating it. That's right, you stood right there—

Mr. Isaacs: We support saving money for the taxpayers.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Come back to the amendment, please.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think the member for Welland-Thorold is also trying to justify the change in the NDP position. We have been consistent from the very beginning. To bring this in, at this particular point in time at this particular sitting, is not justifiable and is not giving enough time for the people to participate.

However, we made our point clear. The government will have to stand on the decision made. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply quickly. We have had an interesting little exchange. I must say, in the last few days and in the last few months the one thing that has bothered me in this House is that the member for Brant-Oxford-

Norfolk increasingly resorts to personal attacks in his comments in debate, something few other members of this House do.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe because I said you didn't handle it well. You have not handled this well and that's a personal comment.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It does him no credit and he knows nothing about what has gone on over the past few weeks or the past few months in this bill. If he would leave it to his members who know something about local government, the whole cause of the debate of this bill would have been better served. I am not going to say any more. I just say it does him no credit.

Let me emphasize this bill is not regional government. Our stand on regional government is well known. I have stated it many times in this House.

Mr. Kerrio: I guess it is.

Mr. Nixon: It's well known in my riding, I will tell you.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This is a restructuring bill for the area.

Mr. Kerrio: This is a mini-regional government.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh, read the bill, then, read the bill.

In answer to the comment made by the member for Wentworth, the reason for subsection 2 is so those sections in part I that pertain to the operation, in this case now the two townships, can also then pertain to the one township if that came about. These sections apply to school taxes, local roads board matters, the planning area, the area where the meetings may be held and so forth. All those things are made by that section to apply if one municipality comes along.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Hon. Mr. Wells' amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

Sections 13 to 26, as renumbered, agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

[1:30]

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound.

PUBLIC UTILITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 101, An Act to amend the Public Utilities Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Very briefly, this bill contains four amendments affecting public utility and hydro-electric commissions in the province. One of these changes will permit the resale of water with the permission of municipalities. This will enable commercial water haulers to resell water from a waterworks to a person whose private water supply has been depleted. I would indicate that this is at the request of the Hamilton-Wentworth region mainly.

Another amendment clarifies the wording of the act's provision conferring a lien on land supplied by a large public utility for up to three months in arrears of utility charges in the same manner as municipal taxes. The bill also proposed to make clear that members of the commission are to be elected by a general vote of electors and that the term of office of the members will be the same as council under the Municipal Act, 1977.

Finally, the bill proposes to remove Ontario Hydro's responsibility to approve the salary of members of public utility or hydro-electric commissions. These salaries of members will continue to be fixed by municipal council. I commend the bill to the House.

Mr. Epp: I'll be brief on this. I just wanted to indicate that I wholeheartedly support some provisions in the bill, particularly the one where the elected PUC officials can determine their own salary. Until now, some bureaucrat in Ontario Hydro could sit up there and say, "Look, you people can't increase your honoraria by $15 or $100" or whatever, despite the fact that they were elected. This now provides that the bureaucrat at Ontario Hydro cannot have that veto over the increase of the salaries, but the people who are elected by the local citizens will have that particular power. I recommend that section. We will support the bill.

Mr. Isaacs: The provisions of this bill are relatively straightforward. The parliamentary assistant made reference to section 1 being there at the request of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth. That's certainly correct. That municipality has run into problems because of the large amount of water-trucking that's necessary to serve areas that cannot drill wells, for various reasons, and for which cisterns are the only appropriate method of providing water.

The third section, regarding the election of the public utilities commission, is very straightforward, and we are prepared to support it.

The second section does give us a little bit of concern. When we were dealing with the Line Fences Act a few weeks ago, the government made it clear that it felt that municipalities should not operate as collection agencies. Yet in this bill we're setting up that municipalities are going to be collection agencies for Ontario Hydro. We believe that's inconsistent and inappropriate.

Ontario Hydro is in a situation where it can use its own provisions for collecting overdue bills. Municipalities already have a very substantial burden of their own business. We accept that it's appropriate that they deal with their own outstanding bills and the bills for their hydro-electric or public utilities commissions themselves as if those were taxes; that makes sense because those are local enterprises. But we have great difficulty in understanding why the government wishes to make municipalities bill collectors for Ontario Hydro.

I hope that the parliamentary assistant will be able to give an adequate explanation of that before we proceed to committee stage or third reading on this bill. In other aspects, we see it as a good bill.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would thank the honourable member for his support. I would indicate, on the point brought up by the member for Wentworth, I raised a distinction in the Line Fences Act, and I raise it again, that I felt it was inappropriate for a municipality to be a collection agency for a private person as distinguished from a public utility or from a municipality. Of course, this allows the municipality, the local hydro commission or Ontario Hydro, to collect money in the same way as a municipality can a tax. There is quite a distinction between a public utility using this method and a private person, which is why we feel it is appropriate here and not in the other situation.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HALDIMAND-NORFOLK AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 95, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk Act, 1973.

Mr. Rotenberg: The requirement for this bill is simply that the present Haldimand-Norfolk regional act sets out that a quorum, among other things, shall consist of at least one member from every municipal council. This is different from most regional governments and it was never intended that that quorum provision should be used, in effect, to block the council from governing. Unfortunately, in recent times there has been a controversy in council, and one municipality has been boycotting the council, which makes it impossible for council to govern. However, at a recent meeting of the Haldimand-Norfolk regional council, a resolution was brought forward indicating that regional council does endorse and support Bill 95, and this, I think, is being done to solve a local problem. For that reason, I commend it to the House.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would just like to make a few brief comments on Bill 95. Originally, the provision was established back in 1973, under the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk Act and at that time it appeared to be a good clause to give protection to all municipalities, because the region of Haldimand-Norfolk does stretch over a wide area and with this provision being established as it was, one municipality could not be railroaded into accepting expenses that weren't justified. Subsequently, with the development of the new towns and townsite and the agreements that have been drawn up, I understand the township of Norfolk wasn't satisfied with the way the agreements were being developed with the province and they made comments to this effect. Unfortunately, they withdrew from the council on two occasions and the council, of course, was brought to a standstill. I think it did make recommendations, not from a legally constituted council, but through the chairman, which brought about Bill 95. When we dealt with it a week or so ago the opposition indicated it wasn't a legal motion from the council and perhaps it should be sent back with that in mind. Consequently, on June 15, that motion was brought forth from the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk recommending a change, and it was supported, not unanimously—I think it was 13 to six—that the change should come about and, of course, under those conditions I have no other alternative than to support the bill. It is to be hoped it won't leave a scar and that the regional council may continue to work successfully in the best interests of the region as a whole. Again, we do support the bill.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, my remarks will also be very brief. We support the principle of this bill, though we have some very grave concerns about the way it came before this House and about the fact that it is being dealt with in isolation. As the member for Haldimand-Norfolk has indicated, the bill was introduced for first reading prior to the motion being made in Haldimand-Norfolk regional council requesting the bill. We believe that is a very inappropriate way to go.

As was indicated here this morning by the minister, local councils work by bylaw, and unless the resolutions and the bylaws have been put in place I do not believe the government should be acting on requests from municipalities. I think there was a very serious flaw there and I am very pleased that Haldimand-Norfolk council has now accepted this bill; although it was not a unanimous vote, it was a 13 to six vote, and it is my understanding that in the case of at least one municipality both the representatives of that municipality voted against the resolution.

So we still have a situation where it is not the wish of the people, it is the wish of some of the people, and some of the municipalities in Haldimand-Norfolk are imposing their will on another municipality in that same region. That concerns me. It concerns me that we get into this kind of thing without an overview of what is going on in regional council and in regional government in Haldimand-Norfolk.

There have been some requests from people in that region for a review of the regional structure. We know that reviews of regions become very costly and are not necessarily as productive as they should be, but I think it would be appropriate for the government to assist the region in setting up some kind of review so that everything about that region can be looked at. It has been in operation for six years now and everything about the region should be looked at, rather than dealing with just one item as is contained in this bill.

We are concerned, too, about the statements that have been made that the provision that the quorum contain representatives from all municipalities was never intended to be used to block legislation. We have reviewed the reports that were done and the studies that were undertaken prior to the setting up of that regional municipality. We have reviewed the debates, the Hansard, of the time the two bills under which that regional council is set up came before this House and we cannot find any reference to the quorum provision as it relates to requiring all municipalities to be present.

But when one thinks about it, the only purpose for that provision is so that there can be protection for one municipality and that one municipality can block something that regional council wants to do that it disagrees with. There is no other conceivable purpose for such a quorum requirement. It seems to us very inappropriate that the first time one municipality decides to use that provision which was given to it in the bill and it decided to use it on a motion that may well have been of great concern to the government, then the government comes along and says: "We are taking away that provision. We are taking away your right to block a bill in regional council."

We agree that it is unrealistic to have a quorum requirement of the kind that is specified. Government could not work if, for example, we had a quorum here in this House that required that the member for a riding be present if something was being debated that affected his riding and a decision was to be made on something that affected his riding. Those kinds of things don't work and it is not a component of our democratic system.

We are very concerned about the way it came before us and we are very concerned that it appears to be yet another example of where, for one reason or another, someone has been attempting to apply some pressure or has realized that a mistake was made when the bill was originally set up, the bill incorporating the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk, and yet will not investigate the whole of that bill but will just deal with the one provision that is before us now. We support this reluctantly—reluctantly because of the way it came here.

Mr. Nixon: I am surprised the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) wouldn't understand why the resolution from the council supporting the change was not available. The fact is the council was out of commission for a substantial period of time because the representatives from the township of Norfolk would not attend because of the provisions of the requirement for a quorum, and the regional council was really put out of business and could do nothing but lobby on an individual basis.

I, too, regret the fact this amendment is necessary. I believe it was put in the bill in the first instance, and it was a special requirement, simply because the region is so huge and ungainly. It is 80 to 100 miles long, depending on whether you are moving on the back of a crow or trying to get from one end to the other by road. The requirements of the various communities vary tremendously.

The representatives of the township of Norfolk—which is right over by Tillsonburg, if it helps with the geography of any members who are paying attention—were simply objecting to the fact that the government of Ontario was urging and pressing to pursue its plan for the development of a new city, the city envisaged by former Treasurer John White, in the area presently known as the city of Nanticoke, which as everyone knows is a rural area.

The concept to go forward was objected to by Norfolk because it felt the provisions for the costing had not been pinned down sufficiently to safeguard the local taxpayers, and since they were many miles from the centre of the proposed new town they wanted to use all the powers within their command to safeguard their own ratepayers. In fact, I believe the process is now going forward, and I, too, regret the fact that this bill is before us.

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) is not in his place. I know he objects to my criticizing him, but I do criticize him, and if it is personal perhaps that's the way it should be. He is a man with large responsibilities. I do believe he might have done more to bring about an amicable settlement of the situation which finally led to the introduction of this bill. Perhaps he did all he could do, but once again, if that is so, in my view it was a failure. The regional municipality has been working as effectively as it could under the circumstances with the quorum provisions as they were before this bill came before us.

The minister chose to introduce the amendment, it has been approved by a majority of the council and it appears that it is now about to pass this House.

Mr. Rotenberg: I think the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has covered the criticism of how this bill came about. It came about not at the request of the council of the municipality—because the council, as the member has indicated, was unable to meet; it came about at the request of the chairman with the advice of a majority of council who asked for it, not in a formal way because it couldn't meet but they asked that this bill be brought forward. It was brought forward for first reading and the council went back and endorsed it. Had we waited until the council met, we might still be waiting.

It seems that no matter which way we do it some members criticize the way we bring in bills. This bill, and most of the bills we are dealing with today, are things that are done at the request of the municipalities. I think we have done the best we could under the circumstances to put this regional council back in business. I thank all the members for their support.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 103, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does any member wish to speak on this bill?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate we are prepared to make an amendment later on.

Mr. Rotenberg: On a point of order: I believe the member spoke on this bill already during the debate.

Mr. Epp: The Speaker wanted some speakers, so I thought I would oblige.

Mr. Speaker: That applied to members who hadn't already spoken. I can't be expected to remember who spoke to every bill. Does any other member wish to speak who hasn't already spoken?

Mr. Rotenberg: Very briefly, there were some questions raised by the member for Wentworth, and since the questions are on the record I think the answers will have to go on the record.

He asked, with reference to section 9, why ministerial approval would still be required to set up roads narrower than 30 metres. Requirement for ministerial approval of roads exceeding 30 metres is no longer there because other planning approval procedures exist which cover any such planned roads. However, while the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) will retain approval of roads less than 20 metres under the Planning Act, it provides him with the power to delegate responsibility for these roads to municipalities, including regional municipalities.

On section 15 of the bill, delegation of taxation appeals to a municipal council: as a result of consultation with the MLC this morning and other representations, I will be bringing in an amendment to delete section 15 at this time. We will have further consultations with the municipalities to find a way to solve this problem.

The member also raised a question on credit unions. I would point out that section 312 of the Municipal Act, as amended during the fall last year, enables municipalities to invest in credit unions and caisses populaires, as well as in trust companies and chartered banks. This amendment was proclaimed on January 31, 1979. On the same date, section 35 of the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act, 1976 was proclaimed, enabling a municipality to become a member of a credit union under terms and conditions described in the regulations. Amendments now before the House for all future municipalities will extend to them the ability to invest in credit unions.

The member for Wentworth will be making an amendment to section 12, the minimum tax bill. I will deal with that at the time we are in committee of the whole. The member raised the question on the last section of the bill, the minister's prescribing of French forms and local autonomy, wondering why the minister would prescribe rather than put them in the act. There is a commitment that the minister will prescribe these forms. It is simpler for forms to be prescribed rather than putting them in the act. In the event changes have to be made in the forms from time to time it is much easier to do it that way. There is no question but that these forms will be prescribed and the local municipalities will then have the alternative of using them.

I think that covers the questions raised. I would ask for approval of second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to face up to the clock at the moment. If it is considered wise to get this one finished, we could go into committee and do it, but I have some understanding that to attempt to do much more beyond two o'clock wouldn't meet with too much support or enthusiasm here at the moment.

The only thing to do would be perhaps to go into committee and do Bill 103 and defer consideration of the others for the fall, unless there are some second readings we could deal with quickly and leave this one. I am cognizant of the fact we only have authority to go to 2 p.m. Her Honour has to come in for royal assent. If there were some of these bills to which we could give quick reading through, fine; otherwise we have to complete by two o'clock.

Mr. Rotenberg: I don't know how the opposition critics feel, but Bill 104, and the Muskoka bill and the Waterloo bill are three bills which I think can be done fairly quickly and given second and third readings. I have no notice of amendments—unless the other members object.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There are amendments to Bill 114.

Mr. Rotenberg: On Bills 103, 104 and 116 I have no notice of amendments. We might as well get those done today if we can.

Mr. Epp: If we could stay and deal with these very quickly, I think we could deal with them in the next 20 or 25 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: There was unanimous agreement for this House to sit until two o'clock.

Mr. Rotenberg: The bills I am looking at are Bills 104, 116 and 117; if those bills have no amendments, we could carry those bills.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 104, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: If there is no reason for comment, I won't.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. Isaacs: I certainly won't delay passage of the bill through second reading, but I would have some very serious concerns about this bill receiving third reading and royal assent prior to our dealing with Bill 103, given that it contains some provisions which are similar to those in Bill 103. I would be very reluctant to have us give authority to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in certain areas before we have given it to other municipalities in the province. I will withhold unanimous consent until third reading.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

DISTRICT MUNICIPALITY OF MUSKOKA AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 116, An Act to amend the District Municipality of Muskoka Act.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

COUNTY OF OXFORD AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 117, An Act to amend the County of Oxford Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion. House in committee of the whole.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 103, An Act to amend the Municipal Act:

Sections 1 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Isaacs: I have an amendment to section 12, Mr. Chairman. I have sent copies to the critic for the Liberal Party and to the parliamentary assistant. I have additional copies here, and I can send those at this time.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 12 be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "12. Section 517(1) of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) The council of any municipality may by bylaw provide that where the sum of the taxes for which any person is chargeable in any year for municipal schools, local improvement and other purposes, upon any real property assessed in one parcel to the same owner, would according to the assessment thereon be less than $10 or such other amount as may be prescribed by bylaw, the sum of such taxes shall be deemed to be $10, or such other amount as determined by council and shall be so entered on the collector's roll, and the difference between the sum that would have been entered but for this section and the sum of $10 or such other amount as determined by council shall form part of the general funds of the municipality."

Mr. Isaacs: The purpose of this amendment is to permit local councils to decide the amount of the minimum tax bill. We feel the matter of property taxation is something that is now firmly within the purview of local councils. It seems to us to be quite inappropriate that the intervention of the minister is necessary in order to set the amount of the minimum tax bill that shall be levied in any municipality.

The situation does not arise very frequently, according to some checking I've done, but there are certain municipalities in which there are a multitude of owners of very small parcels of land. It's in that circumstance that a minimum administrative cost has to be recovered through the tax bill. The purpose of the amendment is to allow the municipality to determine the amount of that minimum administrative cost.

[2:00]

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, very briefly, as of now the municipality can set the minimum. The government has set the maximum of $6. We're saying the maximum minimum will be $10 and underneath that amount the municipality can do whatever they want. We do want to give the municipalities the right to set the minimum tax bill at $50 or $100 or whatever they might do.

The reason for the point of having the minister involved is that if at some future date because of inflation we want to raise the maximum minimum to $15 or $20, the minister can then do that by order without having to come back to the House. If that part is not acceptable I can withdraw that, but we do not want to give the municipalities the right to set a minimum tax bill as high as they want to. They can set it as low as they want and the bill sets the maximum the minimum can be. Therefore, I don't support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 12 agreed to.

Sections 13 and 14 agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that section 15 of the bill be struck out and that sections 16, 17 and 18 be numbered as sections 15, 16 and 17 respectively.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 15, 16 and 17, as renumbered, agreed to.

Bill 103, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion.

Bill 103, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answer to question 260 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix A, page 3278.)

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I have permission of the House to revert to motions very briefly?

MOTION

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing administration of justice committee, the standing resources development committee and the standing general government committee meet on the morning of October 10, 1979, for the purpose of considering estimates: The standing administration of justice committee, estimates of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations; the standing resources development committee, estimates of the Ministry of Natural Resources; the standing general government committee, estimates of the Office of the Assembly.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, there appears to be some confusion, but just before I go for the Lieutenant Governor, I don't wish people to feel under undue pressure but it was my understanding when I called second reading of Bill 104, the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) made it quite clear they wanted some opportunity to think about it and would deny us unanimous consent to go to third reading so they left it in committee of the whole. Is that now changed? Can we now carry Bill 104?

It's in committee, so we could just quickly go into committee of the whole House and come back and give it third reading; is that what members wish?

Agreed.

House in committee of the whole.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 104, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments to Bill 104?

Bill 104 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill without amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 104, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just before adjournment we would like to bring Her Honour into the House to consider royal assent for a number of bills.

Mr. Speaker: I would just like to remind the House that before I got here I got paid on a mileage basis.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps the Speaker would recognize some of the procedures today, being an old railroad man—or rather a railroad man.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the Legislative Assembly and took her seat upon the throne.

ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. Mrs. McGibbon: Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed certain bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said Legislative Assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's Assent is prayed:

Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act;

Bill 46, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act;

Bill 80, An Act to amend the Veterinarians Act;

Bill 81, An Act to amend the Hunter Damage Compensation Act;

Bill 82, An Act to amend the Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act;

Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act;

Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act;

Bill 95, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk Act, 1973;

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

TYNWALD MILLENNIUM

Mr. Speaker: Before leaving here for the summer recess, may I take this opportunity to thank all members for their co-operation and to thank the staff of the assembly on behalf of the members for their assistance during the first part of the session. I hope that everyone will have a pleasant summer and that we will all safely return to this chamber in October.

I am sure the House will be interested in a significant event which will take place on July 5. We often refer to the Parliament of Westminster as the Mother of Parliaments in respect for its long tradition. However, the grandmother of Parliaments, the Tynwald, on the Isle of Man, will on July 5 celebrate its 1,000th anniversary. The millennium will be marked by celebrations at which Speakers from all around the world will attend, and I am honoured to be able to join in these ceremonies. I know that I take the good wishes of this House to the people of Man on this significant occasion.

Once again, I wish all of you a very pleasant summer. This House stands adjourned until Thursday, October 11, at 2 p.m. pursuant to the order passed earlier today.

The House adjourned at 2:16 p.m.

APPENDIX A
(See page 3246)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

ECONOMIC IMPACT ANALYSES

228. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table a list of (a) new programs, (b) legislation, (c) regulations for which an economic impact analysis has been undertaken since the establishment early in 1978 of the cabinet policy requiring the production of such studies? Will the minister also indicate the approximate number of man-hours of work spent on each of these studies and the public costs incurred? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Henderson: All major policy proposals coming before cabinet and its committees have traditionally been analysed for their likely impact on the provincial consolidated revenue fund and the Ontario economy as a whole. In December 1977 cabinet decided that a more formal economic impact evaluation statement should be prepared for and incorporated into all submissions to cabinet.

The instructions with regard to the impact analysis have been given to all ministries in a publication issued by the cabinet office called Guidelines for Preparing Cabinet Submissions.

The government now provides compendia for proposed legislation and background information for estimates debates which to our knowledge constitutes more extensive briefing material than is provided in any other Canadian jurisdiction. However, as a matter of policy, based on the British parliamentary tradition, cabinet submissions are not distributed.

The number of man-hours spent on the preparation and review of these statements and the public costs related thereto is impossible to determine as it is so closely linked with the whole policy formulation and decision-making processes.

229. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry indicate whether or not economic impact analyses have been done, since the tabling of the budget on April 10, 1979, on major items such as the changes to the Mining Tax Act, abolition of succession duties, the raising of OHIP premiums, the creation of the Employment Development Fund, and small business development corporations? (Tabled June 4, 1979) and reviewed by the ministry as a matter of course. Other organizations such as the Ontario Economic Council may, from time to time, provide independent evaluations of aspects of provincial budget policy. In the past, the ministry has undertaken directly or has financially supported extensive economic impact analyses of major fiscal policy measures, for example, the exemption from retail sales tax of production machinery and equipment.

No extensive economic impact analyses have yet been undertaken on any items contained in the 1979 budget as such analyses would be premature.

230. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No formal economic impact analysis was done prior to the introduction of Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education.

The primary purpose of amalgamation of the two ministries was not cost-saving. It was, instead, to improve the interface between educational planning and implementation at the elementary/secondary level and the post-secondary level, to provide an educational policy continuum from kindergarten to post-graduate education, and to provide an efficient internal operation.

It is our view that the amalgamation will have no economic impact on the private sector but that some financial savings will accrue for the public sector through the increased operational efficiency of having one ministry. At this time, certain economies are being realized by virtue of having one minister and related staff heading up the two ministries. Further savings are being realized through the utilization of less physical space.

231. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 25, An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The government currently distributes a compendium of background information to the Clerk and representatives of the opposition parties when any bill is tabled. However, this collection of briefing material does not contain the cabinet submission that was considered prior to the specific piece of legislation appearing in the Legislature.

It has been an accepted practice that such cabinet documents are not circulated outside of the cabinet. Thus to distribute an economic impact study on Bill 25 (which formed a part of the cabinet submission), would violate this provision of confidentiality. For that reason the economic impact study cannot be provided.

232. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. F. S. Miller: All proposals contained in the provincial budget are subject to thorough review by the ministry concerning their potential economic and financial impact. This review is based on internal staff analysis as well as reports, submissions and briefs from various areas of government and the private sector.

In addition, the budget statement and accompanying budget papers spell out the rationale underlying each major budget proposal, although obviously they cannot and do not make reference to every piece of analyses and information that may have been available to facilitate the assessment of the economic and/or financial impact of policy proposals. As a matter of policy, based on the British parliamentary tradition, documents and other material developed for and used directly in the budget decision-making process are not distributed.

233. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Auld: As required by cabinet, an economic impact statement was completed prior to the introduction of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act. Consistent with government policy, this ministry does not release cabinet submissions.

234. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry table the economic impact analysis done prior to the introduction of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act? (Tabled June 4, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Snow: An economic impact analysis was performed as part of the cabinet review of the issues comprising Bill 89. Since, as a matter of policy, the contents of cabinet submissions are not distributed, the economic impact analysis will not be tabled.

I would note that a compendium was presented to the House at the time the bill was introduced which provided much supporting information on the substance and purpose of the bill.

WEIGHTING FACTORS

241. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry provide the precise detail requested in question 187 and omitted in its reply tabled on May 31, 1979, as well as providing further information regarding staffing, not requested at that time? Will the ministry for 1978 and 1979 estimated, provide the following table containing the following information on the language of instruction weighting factor: board name; number of full-time equivalent pupils; cash value of weighting factor; cash value for each full-time equivalent pupil enrolled in a language of instruction class; number of full-time equivalent teachers; number of consultants or administrators directly involved in the program? (Tabled June 8, 1979)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The answer is as follows:

LANGUAGE OF INSTRUCTION

Notes: The weighting factor is based on numbers of teachers in the program and recognizes that language instruction classes are one-third normal size. With average class sizes of 27 elementary and 24 secondary, the language instruction classes average nine pupils elementary and eight pupils secondary for each teacher. This is reflected in the "Cash Value for Each Full-Time Equivalent Pupil Enrolled in Language of Instruction Classes".

The weighting factor recognizes situations in excess of basic levels of four teachers per 10,000 elementary pupils; 2 teachers per 10,000 secondary pupils. The basic level is included in the regular per pupil grant ceilings.

Included under the heading "Number of Full-Time Equivalent Teachers—Language of Instruction Classes" are all those teachers in self-contained classes, and resource and itinerant teachers for boards which receive a weighting factor (those within the basic level plus those to which the weighting factor applies); number of consultants and administrators includes all consultants and co-ordinators for boards which receive a weighting factor (those within the basic level plus those to which the weighting factor applies). The cash value for each full-time pupil enrolled in language of instruction classes relates only to that part recognized by the weighting factor.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

246. Mr. Grande: Will the ministry clarify the situation outlined in my point of privilege on June 7, 1979, regarding the floor provision and the minister's assurance that the floor provision would not apply to the funding of heritage language programs in the Metropolitan Toronto School Board? (a) What was the estimated amount of transfer for the general legislative grant in 1979 to the Metropolitan School Board in accordance with regulations 97/79 tabled February 12, 1979? (b) Assuming heritage language enrollment is the same in September 1979 as it was in September 1978, what will the amount of transfer for 1979 to the Metropolitan Toronto School Board be in accordance with the minister's undertaking yesterday? (c) Assuming an additional 2,000 students are placed into 40 classes of 25 by the Metropolitan Toronto School Board, what will the amount of transfer for 1979 be in accordance with the minister's undertaking yesterday? If the ministry cannot fully answer this question until the regulation is approved, will the ministry, in order to aid school boards in planning for the future of the program, table an interim reply based on the minister's statement, the date we can expect the new regulation and a commitment to provide the information sought in this question at the time the regulation is filed? (Tabled June 8, 1979)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) Total general legislative grants in 1979 to the Metropolitan Toronto School Board (Elementary) in accordance with Ontario regulation 108/79 based on 1979 estimates submitted by the board, $84,643,016.

(b) Based on the same level of heritage language program with the amount recognized for grant for September to December 1979 increased to $21 per hour of classroom instruction and funded at 100 per cent, total GLG in 1979 would be $85,010,516.

Additional grant (b)-(a), $367,500.

(c1) Assuming an additional 1,000 students in 40 classes of 25 pupils receiving 40 hours of classroom instruction from September to December 1979, total GLG for 1979 would be $85,044,116.

Additional grant (c1)-(b), $33,600.

(c2) Assuming an additional 2,000 students in 80 classes of 25 pupils receiving 40 hours of classroom instruction from September to December 1979, total GLG for 1979 would be $85,077,716.

Additional grant (c2)-(b), $67,200.

252. Mr. Duksza: In view of the ministry's recent announced improvement of funding for heritage language programs, will the ministry indicate if it is considering amendments to the Education Act, as proposed in my private member's bill (Bill 55 of the second Session of the 31st Legislature) which provided: (a) heritage language classes as a right where numbers permitted; (b) the use of heritage languages as a subject of instruction; (c) the use of heritage languages as a language of transition while elementary school children are learning English; (b) the inclusion of heritage language classes in the regular school day? If the ministry is unwilling to proceed on these amendments so essential to a multicultural society, will the ministry fully state its reasons? (Tabled June 8, 1979)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The Ministry of Education is not considering amendments to the Education Act as proposed by Private Member's Bill 55 (second session, 31st Legislature), for the following reasons:

(a) The spirit of this proposal has been met by ministry procedures for implementation of the heritage languages program which comes under the continuing education provisions and is therefore authorized under regulation 704 and not by the Education Act. Classes are initiated and developed as a result of a co-operative decision of parents and elected school board officials, as provided by memo 1976-77: 46.

(b) This is already provided for by the heritage languages program. In the current school year there are, in the province of Ontario, a total of 65,126 students in 2,709 classes, learning 40 different heritage languages as subjects of instruction.

(c) The Education Act (229.(1)(f)(i)) already permits the transitional use of languages other than English or French while students are learning the new language. This provision applies to students at all levels of the school system.

(d) There are three alternatives for providing heritage language classes for elementary school students—namely, after school, on weekends, or by extending the regular school day. This arrangement makes it possible for school boards and parent groups to determine the kind of provision which is best able to meet the needs of specific situations. In view of the fact that there are many different school communities across the province, no useful purpose would be served by limiting the choice or by reducing the number of hours required for the regular school program.

Note: In addition to providing for students at the elementary level, it should be noted that secondary schools are free to offer credit courses in languages other than English and French for which there are ministry guidelines or by following the experimental course approval route.

LEGAL ACTIONS AGAINST BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

247. Mr. Isaacs: Will the ministry table a list of all legal actions brought against any provincial board or commission during the last three years? Will the ministry categorize these legal actions by their nature (e.g. denial of natural justice)? Will the ministry also include on the list the names of the plaintiff(s) bringing the action, the board or commission involved, the date when the action commenced, the date of any court decisions on each of the cases, and the final decision arrived at on each action? (Tabled June 8, 1979)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Attorney General has written to Mr. Isaacs requesting clarification of the question.

WINTARIO

253. Mr. Grande: Will the Ministry of Culture and Recreation indicate the amount of funds that have accumulated to Wintario since the government announced on November 23, 1978 that it was deferring all new capital applications? Will the ministry provide the information on a monthly basis starting with December 1978? (Tabled June 8, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The answer is as follows:

Month of:	Funds from Ont. Lottery Corporation	Capital Grants	Non-Capital Grants
December, 1978 .....	nil	$5,252,848.90	$ 996,307.58
January, 1979 .....	$4,000,000.00	4,339,184.54	1,355,112.36

Total .....	$26,000,000.00	$27,279,277.20	$6,630,576.31

VIOLENCE IN SCHOOLS

255. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry table the document concerning violence in the schools in North York referred to in the Globe and Mail of June 7, 1979? Will the ministry also table a list of all investigations it has made to study the matter of violence in the schools in Ontario? Will the ministry also provide a list of all action it has taken to prevent violence in Ontario schools? (Tabled June 8, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The document concerning violence in the schools of North York is a North York Board of Education document, and the ministry does not have a copy of it to table.

(b) Investigations by the ministry on the matter of violence in the schools of Ontario:

(i) The ministry, in conjunction with several teacher organizations, has studied the matter of intruders into schools and produced a report entitled, Unauthorized Persons in Schools.

(ii) A ministry representative attended a conference on school security to become aware of the problems and procedures in the USA.

(iii) The ministry consulted with two other provinces in this matter.

(iv) The ministry is reviewing the discussion paper on Trespass to Property issued by the Ministry of the Attorney General.

(c) Actions undertaken by the ministry to date:

(i) Copies of the report noted in (bi) above are being distributed to all schools in Ontario. This report contains a number of ideas and suggestions which will be helpful in reviewing school security. (Copy of report attached.)

(ii) Ministry officials have participated as leaders in workshop sessions on the topic at the recent conference of the Ontario Secondary School Headmasters' Council.

Memorandum to: Directors of education
Principals of schools re: Unauthorized persons in schools

The ministry has been aware of the concern expressed by a number of principals regarding the problem of coping with persons who enter upon school property uninvited. A report on this matter has been received, a copy of which is attached to this memorandum.

The ministry is reviewing the recommendations for legislative action contained in the report. The report also contains some guides which may be immediately helpful to you. Clearly, no one action will solve this problem. Rather it is one that will require considerable study and attention by each school community over a period of time.

The ministry, through its regional offices, would be pleased to receive any comments or suggestions for action that you would care to provide.

(Signed) H. K. Fisher,
Deputy Minister of Education.

May 31, 1979.

UNAUTHORIZED PERSONS IN SCHOOLS

Dr. H. K. Fisher
Deputy Minister of Education
Dear Sir:

The Committee on Unauthorized Persons in Schools herewith presents its report to you.

The following terms of reference have been addressed by the committee: (a) Legislative protection; (b) The enhancement of co-operation; (c) Public education; (d) Teacher/principal education.

The committee has grappled at length with a topic that is somewhat amorphous in nature, yet very real. Concern has been expressed by directors of education, principals of schools and teachers' federations. Investigations have satisfied us that the problem is one of very real concern to many educators across the province. Each term of reference is addressed below:

1. Legislation

There is a dual problem. The existing legislation is not adequately known to, or understood by, school administrators. Further, the legislation is inadequate to meet present day needs.

The existing legislation and its use have been addressed as a portion of section 4.

It is recommended that either a specific trespass section be placed within the Education Act, 1974, in order to focus attention upon this as a special offence, or a separate bill be enacted. There is precedent for the former in the Motorized Snow Vehicles Act, 1974. However, the majority of the committee prefers the second alternative as being the most effective. The alternatives and the rationale are shown as appendices A1(a), A1(b) and A2 to this report.

2. The Enhancement of Co-operation, or Liaison with Enforcement Officials

Two specific needs have been identified.

The primary need is at the level of school-police co-operation. School officials, possibly through concern for the sanctity of the academic setting, have shown a reluctance to call the police and provide them with the information required to investigate and prosecute an offence. At the same time, the police must be encouraged to arrest trespassers and to lay trespass charges. If strangers are regularly and expeditiously removed from the school, it is expected that other more serious offences would often be avoided.

The matter is best dealt with as a local matter in each jurisdiction and reference has been made to this in the material produced under section 4 of this report.

A secondary need is for a heightened awareness of the problem among officials responsible for the administration of justice.

It is recommended that the Ministry of the Solicitor General draw to the attention of police forces the seriousness of the problem and ask them to extend their full co-operation to school authorities, particularly with respect to the arrest and prosecution of trespassers.

It is also recommended that the Ministry of the Attorney General communicate with the crown attorneys in a similar vein.

3. Public Education

A resource outline on enlisting community support has been prepared and is presented as appendix B. A portion of it has been extracted and used in the guide described in section 4.

It is recommended that the full document be made available to the teachers' federations for use at workshops since this is an area that must be judiciously developed by each local area on a long-term basis.

It is further recommended that this material specifically, and this report in general, be used by the school business and finance branch in conjunction with its work on vandalism to produce a public awareness pamphlet for general distribution via the ministry's communications services unit.

4. Guidelines for Schools

This is the area for immediate action. A working guide for administrators has been drafted as appendix C. The objective was to make it a practical resource for immediate use. It is based upon present legislation and practice.

It is recommended that this material be duplicated by the ministry and distributed to all principals. The cost will be nominal as no typesetting, et cetera, is required. It is estimated at $2,000.

It is recommended that a numbered memorandum accompany the distribution of the material.

This report is respectfully submitted, April 4, 1979.

Ken Hills, Chairman, OSSHC.

Fred Burford, OSSHC.

John Butkovich, OSSTF.

Herb Cooney, OPSMTF.

John Ritchie, Ministry of Solicitor General.

Robert Copeland, QC, Ministry of Attorney General.

Jean McConnell, Ministry of Education.

Robert Hunter, Ministry of Education.

APPENDIX A1 (a)

The purpose is to re-enact subsection 1 of section 184 of the Education Act, 1974, and to amend that subsection by adding thereto further subsections to create additional offences and to control the intruder on school property.

At present, section 184(1) creates the offences of wilfully interrupting or disquieting the proceedings of a school or class. It is considered that in some circumstances a trespasser might commit such an offence, but that it is rather more likely that the disturbance is incidental to a trespass rather than the direct result of a wilful action.

It is proposed to create additional offences of:

(a) refusing to leave the school grounds or school building when requested so to do by the principal;

(b) immediately returning to the school grounds or school building having departed upon request; and

(c) misrepresentation of the status as a pupil for the purpose of trespassing.

It is further proposed that a police officer should be given the authority to arrest, without warrant, any person whom he finds committing such an offence or whom he reasonably believes has committed such an offence.

It may be desirable to clarify the relationship of the Petty Trespass Act to the provisions of this section by specifically permitting charges to be laid under either or both acts in respect of the same activity.

APPENDIX A1(b)

As an alternative to the amendments proposed to section 184 of the Education Act, 1974, it may be that a new act should be enacted to accomplish those objectives to be achieved in the proposed changes. The major advantages obtained by enacting a separate act would seem to be as follows:

1. The separate act seems to afford a more convenient method to set out the procedural steps that should be available for the guidance of both those persons who have no lawful purpose for being on the school property and the principal and his staff at the schools.

2. The somewhat singular purpose of the legislation might be better highlighted in its own act rather than buried in an act of over 270 sections. It presents a more convenient document for being handed out at schools for the information of the public.

3. The act could be titled as follows: An Act to Control the Entry of Unauthorized Persons to Schools.

APPENDIX A2

RATIONALE FOR LEGISLATION

There are a number of statutory provisions having a direct or indirect bearing on the problem. These provisions are impressive and afford considerable protection to the property owner, but there is some room for adjustment and improvement with regard to school property. It is recognized that legislation is not "the answer." At the same time, some modest changes to the law will be of assistance in improving the current situation.

The Criminal Code of Canada creates a number of offences in relation to trespassers and persons causing damage to property. Section 41 authorizes the use of force to prevent a trespass, so long as unnecessary force is not used. A trespasser who resists is deemed to have committed an assault without justification or provocation. Section 171 makes it an offence to cause a disturbance in or near a public place or to loiter or make an indecent exhibition in a public place. Section 387 deals with "mischief," which includes the wilful destruction or damage of property or obstruction or interference with the use of property. Section 389 and following deal with arson and other fires. Section 449 permits school employees to arrest without a warrant a person found committing a criminal offence in relation to school property. There are other provisions which are of some interest, but need not be mentioned here.

The Petty Trespass Act is provincial legislation which makes trespassing a summary conviction offence. Trespassers may be arrested by school employees without warrant. The penalty, which is a fine ranging from $10 to $100, would appear to be somewhat out-of-date.

The Education Act, 1974, section 184, makes it an offence to cause a disturbance at a school by "wilfully interrupting or disrupting the proceedings of a school or class." The provision is not of great significance, since it does not aim directly at trespassers. The maximum fine is $100 and there is no power of arrest. Section 230 deals with the duties of a principal of a school. It is the principal's duty to maintain proper order and discipline in the school, to refuse access to undesirable persons (subject to an appeal to the board) and to maintain a visitors book in the school (when so determined by the board).

It would be helpful to extend section 184 of the Education Act, 1974, to deal specifically with the problem of trespass. While the Petty Trespass Act is law of general application, there is precedent for the creation of special trespass provisions to deal with specific problems. Section 22 of the Motorized Snow Vehicles Act, 1974, makes it an offence to trespass on land while operating a motorized snow vehicle unless permission in writing is first obtained. The maximum fine on conviction is $500. It is believed that the Education Act, 1974, should contain a special provision relating to trespass upon school property, with a maximum fine of $2,000. Persons who refuse to leave the property or return to the property should be subject to arrest by a police officer or school employee. Where a board has determined that a visitors book should be maintained and there is proper signing to notify visitors of this requirement, non-compliance should be deemed to be a trespass.

Alternatively, a separate act would be more visible and could clearly identify the potential infractions and the penalty provisions. It could be produced in quantity and made easily available to schools for its deterrent value.

APPENDIX B RESOURCE OUTLINE

Enlisting Community Support

Premise: The community is (or will be) concerned about quality education; an educative atmosphere; safe classrooms and school facilities; the cost of vandalism.

Concern: To educate and inform, but not to scare, the community; positive versus negative actions.

Aim: To enlist the enlightened help of the community to support the school; support the police; support the municipality.

Suggestions

1. Pamphlet: Outlining the law; concept private-public property; concept community use of schools; problems of intruders and vandalism.

2. Home and School Meetings: police — youth bureaus; principals.

3. Community-School Involvement: school advisory councils; recreation department.

4. Meetings With Municipal Government(s): enlisting support for bylaws; liaison with police.

5. Report of Cost of Vandalism: report to local newspapers and non-print media.

6. School Newsletters: informing the community.

APPENDIX C

A WORKING GUIDE FOR ESTABLISHING AND MAINTAINING A SAFE SCHOOL ENVIRONMENT

This guide is designed to stimulate thinking and to offer ideas to school administrators who are concerned about maintaining the safety and security of the schools.

It is believed that schools should have an image as a "special" place dedicated to learning and further that action can be taken by administrators to enhance this image.

This guide is brief and in developmental form. It includes several suggested record forms that administrators have found helpful. It has been prepared by a small ad hoc committee of educators from the schools and from the Ministry of Education.

These topics should be considered:

1. Citizenship: Develop in both pupils and the community pride in school; collective responsibility.

2. Inter-agency Co-operation: Do you understand the services available? How do you assess the services? What is your share of the responsibility? Do you make it easy or hard for others to fulfill their duties?

3. Community Involvement: Uniqueness of each local school; information exchange mechanisms. What perceptions of the school are developed by those who use your facilities? How does your staff handle inquiries? Have you considered parent volunteers? (See the Education Act, 1974, s. 147(1) p. 3)—Ministry booklet, "Open Doors"; ministry assistance from designated education officers in each regional office; heritage language programs.

4. The Administrator: Role and duty (the Education Act, 1974, and Ontario regulation 704/78); sound procedures and explicit directions; the taking of initiative and leadership; school board support.

Policies and Procedures Awareness and Attitudes: Developing an accurate data base; communicating the requirements of the law and policies to students and the public; expectations set upon staff, swift reaction to intrusions; exhibit concern.

Bases for Policy Development: Tailored to needs and reviewed regularly; applications of relevant legislation; integration with other agencies; setting a tone in the community; training and development of staff relevant to law enforcement and inter-agency roles.

Just who is responsible in a school? Note the Education Act, 1974, s. 229(1)(e), s. 230(a) and (m), s. 184(1); note Ontario regulation 704/78—Elementary and Secondary Schools and Schools for Trainable Retarded Children—General, s. 12(1), 12(2) (c), (g) and (h), 17(1), 21(c) and 24(1) and 5; see the Petty Trespass Act.

PROCEDURES AND PREVENTION TECHNIQUES

1. Accurate assessment of your school's particular needs—what is the problem? What is the potential for problem? Preparation is anticipation with a plan.

2. Communication with staff and students about what is expected: "Did anybody ever tell you?"

3. Regular tour of building and grounds with maintenance personnel.

4. Establish good rapport with neighbours and service agencies.

5. Be aware of your board's policies and have them readily available to more than one person.

6. If necessary, have workshop sessions to discuss such things as: approaching unknown persons; avoiding confrontation; getting a good description; collecting the relevant data.

7. Keep your supervisory personnel informed and aware.

8. Encourage the involvement of students in developing school procedures and assisting in reaching school objectives.

9. Establish a visitors procedure.

10. Post appropriate signs directing visitors.

11. Establish a file of information on: when, who, where; action taken.

12. Know the law—your rights and theirs.

13. Cultivate the image that your school is a receptive place, but also one which is "on the alert" and reacts quickly to those who might disrupt the program.

14. Have the staff visible throughout the building.

15. The regular and friendly visits of police and community service officers should be encouraged.

16. Develop procedures for special areas: e.g., change rooms, resource centre, cafeteria.

17. React positively to community criticism and suggestions.

18. If necessary, provide both staff and students with school identification.

THE CRISIS SITUATION AND THE INTRUDER

1. Prevention of Confrontation and Maximum Co-operation: Introduce yourself; be courteous, calm and assured; ask the person to identify himself and state his business; do not touch the person; if possible, have a suitable witness with you; give clear direction to the person and offer assistance; isolate the situation, do not play to an audience—if possible, try to have the person come to the office area.

2. In Process: Let people know where you are going when you leave to intercept the person; have someone who can act as a runner; get a good description of the person; note the time of the incident.

3. Follow-up: Make notes and file immediately after the incident; use a tape recorder for your own account; keep your supervisory personnel informed; continuously monitor your procedures and process.

4. Possible Recourse to Police and Court for Assistance: Before proceeding to lay or request that someone lay charges, consult with the police and legal counsel for your board. Have a good knowledge of what information is required before proceeding and what appropriate action can be expected from those you expect to assist you.

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

256. Mr. di Santo: Would the Ministry of Environment table the full details of the reasons for the rejection under the "technical merit" consideration of Canadian Applied Technology's (Buttonville) bid to supply the air resources branch with a data acquisition and processing system to be used at Nanticoke? (Tabled June 8, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: See sessional paper 140.

ACCIDENT BLACK SPOTS

258. Mr. Philip: Will the Ministry of Transportation and Communications provide a listing of all improvements to the road environment undertaken as a result of its "black spot" improvement program since the tabling of the report of the select committee on highway safety in September 1977? Will the ministry detail this list by black spot location or number referenced to a map? Will the ministry further indicate the amount of money spent on each improvement and the resulting reductions, if any, in the frequency of accidents? Will the ministry further provide a detailed description of how priorities for the improvement of "black spots" are arrived at? (Tabled June 11, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Snow: The attached list represents the major locations and costs, when available, of "black spot" improvements made on the provincial highway system in the 1977-78 and 1978-79 fiscal years. These improvements were made where road-related problems had been identified by analysis of accidents. Since many of these projects were undertaken as part of major reconstruction work their cost could not be separated and, therefore, have not been identified.

In addition to the listed improvements, many other projects of a smaller nature such as minor channelization, warning signs, traffic signals and pavement markings were carried out. Because of the large number and wide diversity of these projects it is not possible to identify all of them. At this time the reduction in accidents resulting from these improvements cannot be identified.

"Black spots" or collision-prone locations on the provincial highways are identified by analysis of accident rates and accident types. These statistics are then compared with average rates for similar highways and situations. Where a road-related problem is thus identified possible solutions are reviewed and the most effective alternative is implemented.

CANADIAN FILM CASTING SERVICES

259. Mr. Mackenzie: Will the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations undertake an investigation of Canadian Film Casting Services, P.O. Box 561, Station J, Toronto, in order to determine its status as an employment agency and in order to assess the legality of the fee levy it applies to non-union registrants? Will the minister also investigate this company's practice of advising some applicants that they must purchase a $20 book which describes acting skills in order to be considered as a future job candidate through their service? (Tabled June 11, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Drea: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is investigating the matters raised by question 259, Order Paper 60.

RENT REVIEW STAFF

260. Mr. di Santo: Will the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations table information on: 1. the number of employees employed by the rent review office; 2. how many are on permanent staff; 3. how many are on temporary staff; 4. what is the length of employment for the temporary staff; 5. is it true that the temporary staff is employed through Office Overload; 6. what are the rates of the wages paid to Office Overload as opposed to what the employees receive; 7. does the minister have any plan to change the present situation once Bill 163 is passed? (Tabled June 12, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Drea: In reply to the above question, the following information is submitted as at May 31, 1979:

(1) Total number of employees employed by the rent review division: 156.

(2) Number of permanent staff: 1.

(3) Number on temporary staff: (a) on ministry contracts, 61; (b) employed through Office Overload, 94; (c) Total, 155.

(4) A number of the staff have been with the program since its inception. Others are replacements in key positions where there has been staff turnover.

(5) As indicated in (3)(b), since the inception of the rent review program, the clerical support staff has been employed through Office Overload.

(6) Generally speaking the rates of wages paid to the staff provided by Office Overload are approximately five per cent. below rates for equivalent classified positions. In addition, a service fee has been negotiated between Office Overload and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

(7) The present arrangements will not be continued in respect of staff of the Residential Tenancy Commission appointed following the passage of Bill 163.

AIR POLLUTION

261. Ms. Bryden: Will the Minister of the Environment provide an inventory of all point sources of emissions of benzo(a)pyrene and naphthalene in Ontario, along with the emission levels involved? What guidelines are used to determine acceptable levels of naphthalene and benzo(a)pyrene emissions in Ontario? (Tabled June 12, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: A complete inventory of point sources of atmospheric emissions of benzo(a)pyrene or naphthalene has not been carried out in Ontario. Partial source inventories and source emission test results are currently being prepared for publication.

Benzo(a)pyrene (BaP): BaP is only one of a family of several hundred so-called polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH) which have been identified in emissions from all fossil fuel-fired combustion sources. These sources include all residential furnaces in Ontario. The major categories of sources of BaP emissions and their estimated current total BaP emissions in Ontario are:

1. Forest fires: about two to 35 metric tons per year.
2. Metallurgical coke production: about three metric tons per year.
3. Motorcycles (two-cycle engines): about 0.2 metric tons per year.
4. Automobiles and trucks (gasoline): about 0.1 metric tons per year.
5. Heat and power generation: about 0.1 metric tons per year.

The major controllable sources in the list above are coke ovens—Stelco and Dofasco in Hamilton and Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie. Each of these sources is currently under a ministry control program under section 10 of the Environmental Protection Act. Current estimates are that the controls which have been instituted at the coke-oven facilities have reduced emissions of BaP and other polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons by about 80 per cent compared with the uncontrolled emissions and that the completion of the control programs will achieve about 90 per cent reduction in these emissions.

A major source testing survey for PAH has been under way in Ontario since 1976, which is expected to be completed by the end of 1979. Detailed test reports, from which emissions of PAH can be derived, are available for the following sources, which are selected as typical examples of their industrial category: Stelco (Hamilton), Dofasco (Hamilton), Union Carbide (graphite electrode manufacture, Welland), General Motors (industrial boiler, Oshawa), SWARU (refuse incinerator, Hamilton), and two drum-mix asphalt plants (Warren Bitulithic and Huron Construction). At the completion of this survey, a summary report interpreting the results will be prepared. This report should be available in mid-1980.

The best current information indicates that the most significant exposure to BaP and other PAH is cigarette smoking.

There are no environmental standards or guidelines in Ontario for BaP specifically at present because of the absence of medical criteria for human effects of ambient air levels of BaP (or any other PAH). Effort is currently being invested in the development of such standards, but at present, the most reasonable basis for controlling PAH emissions is the ambient air standard for airborne particulate matter: 100 ug m<sup>-3</sup> (30-minute average) at a point of impingement.

A comprehensive compilation of information on PAH as environmental contaminants is expected to be published by the Ministry by the end of September 1979.

Naphthalene (commonly encountered as "moth balls"): A recent comprehensive background report on naphthalene and other aromatic hydrocarbons has been distributed by the ministry through the hazardous contaminants program. A detailed inventory of emission sources and estimation of emissions from these sources is being carried out for the ministry by Acres Consulting Services Limited. The report on this study is expected by April 1980. Unlike BaP, naphthalene has not been shown to be carcinogenic or mutagenic, either in laboratory tests or in human exposure experience. To quote the background report mentioned previously, "No substantiated chronic toxic effects (of naphthalene) have been reported as a result of industrial (occupational or environmental) exposure. . ."

One of the major sources of emissions of naphthalene to the atmosphere is expected to be evaporation loss from gasoline, which contains up to one per cent naphthalene. Other sources of naphthalene emissions in Ontario—coke ovens and praphite electrode manufacturing—have undergone source testing recently. Detailed reports from which emissions may be calculated cover the same plants as referred to earlier for PAH. A summary of measured naphthalene emissions will be included in the summary report on PAH to be published in 1980.

NITROSAMINES

262. Ms. Bryden: Will the Minister of the Environment provide all the information available to his ministry on the extent and volume of point and non-point source pollution from nitrosamines in Ontario? In what herbicides used in Ontario are nitrosamines present? In what concentrations? What is the amount of each of these herbicides used annually in Ontario? (Tabled June 12, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Nitrosamines occur naturally in our environment. Nitrosamines are present in soil, water and air. The best known source of direct human exposure to nitrosamines is through fried bacon and tobacco smoke. Nitrosamines can be formed from reaction of nitrites with amines under a variety of conditions. Sufficient data is not available to characterize human exposure to nitrosamines through the environment or to distinguish between the influence of man-made and natural sources.

Nitrosamines are found as trace contaminants in two herbicides that are used in Ontario, namely, Treflan (trifluralin) and Cobex (dinitramine).

At one time, Treflan contained 160 ppm of the dipropylnitrosamine. In 1977, it was reduced to two to four ppm, it now contains less than one ppm. The dipropylnitrosamine found in Treflan (trifluralin) is volatile and readily metabolized by plants. No residues have been found in plants from Treflan (trifluralin) applications. The analysis is sensitive to 10 ppt. Treflan is used in Ontario as a pre-plant soil incorporated treatment. It is applied at rates of 0.5 to 1 pound per acre to soil three or more weeks prior to planting vegetables. It is also used on soil intended for ornamentals (woody nursery stock) and in the prevention of crab grass in lawns.

Cobex (dinitramine) contains up to 80 ppm diethylnitrosamine. It is used in Ontario as a pre-plant soil incorporated herbicide for transplanting cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, brussels sprouts, soya, snap and lima beans. Cobex is incorporated thoroughly to a depth of two to 2½ inches in the soil at rates of ¼ to ½ pound per acre prior to planting. Cobex is presently under review by Agriculture Canada to evaluate the levels and significance of nitrosamine.

These herbicides are not subject to permit and use records are therefore not available.

This group of compounds have not been researched intensively, primarily because they occur naturally. Herbicides represent a very small contribution to overall levels of nitrosamines. Dr. Phil Kearney, US Department of Agriculture, has studied nitrosamines in pesticides and has concluded that "the contribution to nitrosamine levels from pesticides is so small that it is insignificant."

SIDEWALK REPLACEMENT

270. Mr. Cunningham: Would the Minister of Government Services table any study indicating the necessity for the reconstruction of the cement sidewalk in front of the Legislative Building and at the same time table the tenders received? (Tabled June 15, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The staff of my ministry recently inspected the sidewalk in front of the Legislative Building and determined that approximately 50 per cent of the sidewalk was cracked and there were various raised portions which were potentially dangerous to pedestrian traffic. As a result, it was decided that the sidewalk should be replaced.

Tenders were invited from five construction firms, three of which submitted tenders. The three tenders received were as follows:

H. Faccini Construction, $10,500; Dufferin Construction, $13,265; Frank Pellegrino General Contracting, $19,980.

The contract was awarded to H. Faccini Construction, the lowest bidder.

MINISTRY HIRING

271. Mr. Eakins: Would the Minister of Industry and Tourism indicate the date at which a Mr. John Laschinger was hired by his ministry and what the terms of his contract were including his responsibilities, salary and concluding date of his contract? Would the minister also indicate when Mr. Laschinger will resume employment with his ministry and what the terms of his contract will be at that time? (Tabled June 15, 1979)

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The ministry hired Mr. John Laschinger on a contractual basis on February 6, 1979. The terms of the contract were to review the programs and operations of the small business division and to make recommendations for improvements of existing services as well as for future areas of initiative. The rate of pay was $833 per week. His contract terminated on May 25, 1979.

The studies provided data and information which served as a base for a review of the ministry structure and subsequent reorganization in this area.

Civil Service Commission competitions for the positions in the new organization were initiated with advertisements in the Globe and Mail and Topical/Job Mart on April 12 and 13 respectively. Mr. Laschinger applied for and was the successful applicant for the position of Director, Small Business, and he commenced employment as a civil servant with the ministry on June 19, 1979.
